1. The only question for decision is whether or not the amended petition substituted a new cause of action. The action stated in the original petition is for one year's rent for 125 acres of land described in the original petition at $3 per acre, the rent year beginning August 1, 1905, and ending August 1, 1906. The amended petition alleged that the lease was executed November 10, 1900, that it was lost and the dates were unknown to plaintiff until the day before the amended petition was filed, but that it is the same contract declared upon in the original petition. Both petitions are for the same year's rent for the use of the identical lands, and both allege the lease of this land was in writing and signed by the identical parties. To maintain her action on either petition plaintiff was bound to produce a written lease. The lease of December 16, 1902, did not correspond with the allegations in either of the petitions for the reason the lands described were not included in that lease. The amended petition states that the dates of the lease and the rent per acre upon which the suit is based are erroneously stated in the original petition, and states as an excuse for the error that the lease was lost and the knowledge of the true dates and rate of rent first came to plaintiff the day previous to filing the amended petition. We think this statement of facts clearly shows the amended petition was filed for the purpose of correcting errors as to dates, etc., contained in the original petition, and for the purpose of avoiding a like amendment at the trial on the offer of the lease of 1900 in evidence, which would likely have resulted in a continuance of the cause at plaintiff's cost. The gist of the action as stated in both petitions is to recover rent on the same lands for the same year. The same injury (refusal to pay a year's rent) is complained of in both petitions and both allege the breach of a written contract, and the mere fact that the date of this contract and the per acre rent erroneously stated in the original petition were corrected in the amended petition was not a substitution of a new cause of action, but a simple amendment to conform the allegations of the petition to the dates, etc., of the contract sued on. The amendment was permissible under the Code in furtherance of justice, and the trial court did not err in overruling defendant's motion to strike it out. Rippee v. Railway, 154 Mo. 353, 55

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

at his cost, and granted him ten days in which to plead. From the order of the court setting aside the judgment by default, plaintiff appealed.

1. Though Wolken could not read English, his evidence shows that his daughter, to whom the summons was delivered at his residence, could read English and that she acquainted him with its contents; that he then went to defendant Miller, who was his son-in-law, and inquired about the suit, and, on Miller's assurance that the suit did not concern him (Wolken), he paid no further attention to it until after judgment was rendered and execution issued and one of his tenants was served with process of garnishment. On this evidence the conclusion is irresistible that Wolken did not use due diligence, but, on the contrary, was grossly negligent in failing to answer the petition or to appear to the action until after final judgment had been rendered against him. In his motion to set aside the judgment, he states a good and valid defense, and in his examination he swore he did not sign the note sued on nor authorize any one to sign it for him. In these circumstances, did the trial court commit reversible error in sustaining Wolken's motion to set aside the judgment? The proceedings were not under the provisions of section 777, Rev. St. 1899 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 752), cited and relied on by plaintiff. This section provides for the filing of a petition for review after final judgment by default, in cases where the defendant was not personally served with process of summons and did not appear to the action. In such circumstances the petition may be filed at any time within three years after the judgment was rendered. Rev. St. 1899, § 779 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 753). The proceedings in the case in hand appear to have been regular and in conformity with law, but during the term at which the judgment was rendered it was within the breast of the court, and for good cause shown, or on its own motion for cause, it had the undoubted right to set aside the judgment and grant Wolken time to plead within a reasonable time. Robyn v. Chronicle Pub. Co., 127 Mo. 385, 30 S. W. 130; Rottmann v. Schmucker, 94 Mo. 144, 7 S. W. 117; Scott v. Smith, 133 Mo. 618, 34 S. W. 864; Aull v. St. Louis Trust Co., 149 Mo., loc. cit. 13, 14, 50 S. W. 289; Head v. Randolph, 83 Mo. App. 284. This power being inherent in the trial court, its discretion in setting aside its own judgment will not be reviewed, unless it affirmatively appears the court acted arbitrarily and oppressively. Scott v. Smith, supra; Harkness v. Jarvis, 182 Mo., loc. cit. 241, 242, 81 S. W. 446, and cases cited therein. Though Wolken was negligent, yet his testimony shows he has a good and valid defense to plaintiff's cause of action as against him. The cause may yet be tried and justice be done. In the circumstances we think the learned trial judge exercised a sound discretion in sustaining the motion to set aside the judgment by default. The judgment is affirmed. All concur.

ROBERTS v. MODERN WOODMEN OF AMERICA.

(St. Louis Court of Appeals. Missouri. Nov. 5, 1908.)

1. INSURANCE (§ 812*)—ACTIONS ON POLICIES—TIME WITHIN WHICH ACTION MUST BE BROUGHT—VALIDITY OF PROVISIONS.

Under Rev. St. 1899, § 890 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 832), making void all parts of a contract limiting the time in which an action may be instituted, the court in an action on a beneficiary certificate properly struck out an affirmative defense alleging in bar of the action that it was not commenced within one year after insured's death, as required by the certificate.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance. Cent. Dig. § 1903; Dec. Dig. § 812.*]

2. INSURANCE (§ 125*)—THE CONTRACT IN GENERAL—WHAT LAW GOVERNS—PLACE OF CONTRACT.

Where a beneficiary association and insured were both residents of the state of Illinois at the time the application for insurance was made, and the certificate was issued and delivered, the contract was an Illinois contract governed by the laws of that state.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance. Cent. Dig. §§ 173, 174; Dec. Dig. § 125.*]

3. INSURANCE (§ 125*)—ACTIONS ON POLICIES—TIME WITHIN WHICH ACTION MUST BE BROUGHT.

Where, in an action on a beneficiary certificate, defendant set up that the contract was made in Illinois, and that under the laws of that state a clause in the certificate, requiring suit thereon to be brought within one year after insured's death, was valid, and that the action was not so brought, it was entitled to show in bar of the action that the stipulation, though invalid under the laws of Missouri, was valid under the laws of Illinois.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance. Cent. Dig. §§ 173, 174; Dec. Dig. § 125.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Monroe County; David H. Eby, Judge.

Action by Matilda Roberts, etc., against the Modern Woodmen of America. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Benj. D. Smith and Tunnell & Hart, for appellant. Jas. H. Whitecotton and W. W. Barnes, for respondent.

BLAND, P. J. The defendant is a fraternal beneficiary association incorporated under the laws of the state of Illinois, and is authorized to do business as a fraternal beneficiary association in the state of Missouri. Its chief business office is at Rock Island, in the state of Illinois. On February 23, 1894, defendant issued and delivered to William White, then residing in the state of Illinois, and described as a member of Burnside Camp, No. 2163, its certificate of insurance, insuring the life of said White in a sum not to exceed $2,000, payable on his

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes and to show that it had not been paid; the case not being one of confession and avoidance, so as to give defendant an absolute right to open and close.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 47, 66; Dec. Dig. § 25.*]

2. TRIAL (§ 25*)—RIGHT TO OPEN AND CLOSE.

Ordinarily, where plaintiff must introduce some evidence to recover, he may open and close; but, if the burden is slight, and the real contest is confined to the defense, the trial court has a sound discretion to permit defendant to open and close.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 47; Dec. Dig. § 25.*]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1046*)—HARMLESS ERROR—DENIAL OF RIGHT TO OPEN AND CLOSE.

One sued on a note, who answered under oath, denying generally, and alleging that she was an indorser and not a maker, was not prejudiced by any error in denying her the right to open and close.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4130; Dec. Dig. § 1046.*]

4. BILLS AND NOTES (§ 538*)—ACTION ON NOTE—INSTRUCTIONS.

Where one sued on a note claimed to be an indorser, and not a maker, it was proper to instruct that it was not enough to defeat recovery that defendant, at or before delivery of the note, believed that she had signed as an indorser, but such must have been the payee's understanding.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Dec. Dig. § 538.*]

5. BILLS AND NOTES (§ 538*)—ACTION ON NOTE—INSTRUCTIONS.

Where one sued on a note claimed to be an indorser, and not a maker, it was proper to instruct that conversations between defendant and one of the makers regarding the indorsement did not bind the payee, unless he or his representative was present when or before the note was accepted, or unless he was informed of such conversations, so that he can be said to have known thereof or to have acquiesced therein.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Dec. Dig. § 538.*]

6. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 832*)—ERRORS—ESTOPPEL.

Appellant cannot complain of an instruction conforming to her position on the trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3602, 3604; Dec. Dig. § 832.*]

Appeal from St. Louis Circuit Court; Jas. E. Withrow, Judge.

Action by Michael Oexner against Fred Loehr, Jr., and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant Emilie Donck appeals. Affirmed.

See, also, 117 Mo. App. 698, 98 S. W. 333.

Harlan Jeffries and Wagner & Corum, for appellant. W. F. Carter, for respondent.

BLAND, P. J. The action is on the following promissory note: "$1000. Belleville, Ill., Jan 2, 1900. One year after date we promise to pay to the order of Michael Oexner, one thousand dollars for value received, negotiable and payable without defalcation or discount, and with interest from date at the rate of six per cent. per annum. [20 cent Revenue stamp, canceled.] Fred Loehr, Jr. Wendelin Oexner." The note was indorsed on the back as follows: "Emilie Donck. Josephin A. Loehr." The process was against Emilie Donck alone, who for answer stated, in substance, that she did not sign the note as a maker, but wrote her name across the back of it as an indorser, and that she was not notified that demand of payment had been made at the maturity of the note, and that it was not paid. The reply denied the new matter in the answer. Trial resulted in judgment for plaintiff, from which Mrs. Donck appealed.

The evidence is that Fred Loehr and Wendelin Oexner, desiring to go into the coal business, in the city of St. Louis, made application to plaintiff for a loan of $1,000: that plaintiff agreed to let them have that sum if they would get Mrs. Donck (Loehr's mother-in-law, with whom he resided at the time) as surety on a note for that amount. Plaintiff resided in Belleville, Ill., where the note was prepared and delivered to Loehr, who took it to St. Louis, where it was indorsed by Mrs. Donck. It was then taken back to Belleville, delivered to plaintiff, and the money handed over to Loehr and Oexner. Interest was paid on the note by Loehr and Oexner to January 12, 1902. Fred Loehr testified that he agreed with Mrs. Donck that plaintiff should notify her if the note was not paid at maturity, and that at the time he delivered the note to plaintiff he told him he should notify Mrs. Donck when the note matured, if it was not paid at maturity, and plaintiff agreed to give such notice, and took the note with that understanding. Mrs. Donck testified that she was at plaintiff's house a few weeks after the note was made, and that plaintiff told her he would notify her when the note was due, if it was not paid. Plaintiff testified that he asked security on the note, and Loehr asked him how his mother-in-law (Mrs. Donck) would do; that he said, "I guess it is all right"; that the note was brought back with her name across the back of it, and he accepted it; that not a word was said about any notice to Mrs. Donck. Plaintiff also testified that he did not at any time have any conversation with Mrs. Donck about giving her notice of nonpayment of the note.

The following instructions given by the court in behalf of plaintiff were objected to, to wit: "(2) The court instructs the jury that the burden of proof is on the defendant, Emilie Donck, to establish, by a preponderance of the evidence, that there was such an agreement or understanding between her and the plaintiff that she was to be treated or held as indorser. By the term 'preponderance of evidence,' as used in this instruction, is not meant the greater number of witnesses, but the greater weight of credible testimony in the case. * * * (4) The court further instructs you that it is not enough for you to find that said defendant, at or before the delivery of said note, understood or believed that she had signed the same as an 'indorser,' in its legal sense, but you must also find from the evidence that such was also the understanding and belief of the plaintiff at or before the delivery to him of said note; and, unless you do so find, your verdict must be for the plaintiff. * * *

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

(6) The court instructs you that conversations had by the defendant Emilie Donck with Fred Loehr, Jr., with reference to the indorsement of the note in question, are not binding on the plaintiff in this case, unless the plaintiff was present in person or by representative, or unless, before the note was accepted or received by him, he was informed of such conversations, so that he can be said to have acted with knowledge thereof, or to have acquiesced therein." Complaint is also made that the court refused to permit defendant to open and close the case.

1. The petition alleges that Mrs. Donck is a maker of the note sued on, and that it is overdue and unpaid. Mrs. Donck filed a verified answer, which was a general denial, and an allegation that she was not a maker of the note, but wrote her name on the back of it as an indorser. Therefore plaintiff could not recover without the introduction of essential evidence, to wit, the note, and evidence that it had not been paid. Hence, primarily, the burden of proof was on him. It is true the note itself showed prima facie that Mrs. Donck was liable as a maker, but it contained no inherent evidence of the other issue that it had not been paid. Therefore the case is not one of confession and avoidance, in which the burden in the first instance is on the defendant, and where he would have the undoubted right to open and close. Ordinarily, where the plaintiff is required to introduce some evidence to entitle him to recover, the burden of proof rests upon him, and he is entitled to open and close. But if the burden on the plaintiff is but slight, and his evidence when introduced is not controverted, and the real contest is confined to the matter set up as a defense, the trial court may, in the exercise of a sound discretion, permit the defendant to open and close, and the exercise of this discretion is not open to review on appeal. In recognition of this rule of practice the St. Louis circuit court adopted a rule which, so far as the same is pertinent here, reads as follows: "In those cases in which the court decides that the defendant has the affirmative of the issues, he shall have the opening and closing of the argument in like manner, and under the same restrictions as above laid down for the plaintiff. The court may in its discretion change the order of argument as above prescribed, in a particular case where the circumstances in the opinion of the court require it, and where it is so ordered before the argument begins." The right of counsel to commence or conclude an argument to a jury depends upon the practice and the discretion of the trial court, and such power and discretion will not be reversed or controlled by an appellate court, unless it affirmatively appears the discretion was abused and the opposite party prejudiced thereby. Wade v. Scott, 7 Mo. 509; Lucas v. Sullivan, 33 Mo., loc. cit. 390; Corbitt v. Mooney, 84 Mo. App. 645. The case of Grant Quarry Co. v. Lyons Construction Co., 72 Mo. App. 531, cited and relied on by defendant, was an action on a promissory note, the execution of which was admitted by the defendant. Defendant filed a counterclaim, and all the evidence and all the instructions were directed to the counterclaim. The defendant, therefore, as to the only issue of fact in the case, was, in effect, the plaintiff, and the burden of proof rested upon it. In these circumstances, it was held plaintiff had the right to open and close. And assuming, without saying so, that the defendant was prejudiced by a denial of this right, the judgment was reversed, and the cause remanded. Now, if we should concede (which we do not) that defendant had the right to open and close, there is nothing in the record to indicate that she was prejudiced by a denial of the right, and we rule this assignment of error against defendant.

2. Instructions Nos. 4 and 6, given for plaintiff, are in harmony with the opinion of this court on the second appeal. See 117 Mo. App. 698, 93 S. W. 333. Instruction No. 2 is in accord with the position taken by defendant on the trial that the burden was on her to establish her defense. Therefore she is in no position to complain of the instruction.

No reversible error appearing, the judgment is affirmed. All concur.

HEIBERGER v. MISSOURI & KANSAS TELEPHONE CO.

(Kansas City Court of Appeals. Missouri. Oct. 5, 1908. Rehearing Denied Nov. 16, 1908.)

1. EVIDENCE (§ 10*)—JUDICIAL NOTICE—NAVIGABLE RIVER.

Judicial notice will be taken that the Missouri river is a navigable stream, a public highway, which no one has the right to obstruct.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 13; Dec. Dig. § 10.*]

2. NAVIGABLE WATERS (§ 22*)—OBSTRUCTION BY TELEPHONE WIRES.

Though a telephone company maintaining a line over a navigable river is not an insurer of travelers on the river against injury from fallen wires, it is required to build the line at a height sufficient to permit the passage of boats, and to exercise reasonable care to prevent it from becoming an obstruction to navigation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Navigable Waters, Dec. Dig. § 22.*]

3. NAVIGABLE WATERS (§ 26*)—OBSTRUCTION—ACTIONS FOR INJURIES—EVIDENCE.

Evidence, in a personal injury action against a telephone company, that the injury was caused by the collision of the boat in which plaintiff was riding with a submerged wire, makes out a prima facie case of negligence against the telephone company.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Navigable Waters, Dec. Dig. § 26.*]

4. NAVIGABLE WATERS (§ 26*)—OBSTRUCTION—ACTIONS FOR DAMAGES—DEFENSES.

In an action against a telephone company for injuries due to the boat in which plaintiff was riding running against a submerged telephone wire and capsizing, it is immaterial that the wire might not have formed an obstruction to a larger boat, or to one equipped with a reversible engine.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Navigable Waters, Dec. Dig. § 26.*]

5. NAVIGABLE WATERS (§ 26*)—OBSTRUCTION—ACTIONS—PRESUMPTIONS AND BURDEN OF PROOF.

Where, in an action against a telephone company for injuries due to the boat in which plaintiff was riding running against a submerged telephone wire and capsizing, the negligence averred embraced all acts of negligence, whether of construction, repair, inspection, or diligence to discover and remedy the displacement of the wire, and did not set out any specific acts of negligence, the rule that if specific acts are averred the burden is assumed of proving them, was inapplicable, and plaintiff was not precluded by the averments of negligence in her petition from invoking the presumption of negligence arising from proof that her injury was due to a collision of the boat in which she was riding with a submerged telephone wire.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Navigable Waters, Dec. Dig. § 26.*]

6. NAVIGABLE WATERS (§ 26*)—OBSTRUCTION—ACTIONS FOR INJURY—QUESTIONS FOR JURY.

In an action against a telephone company for injuries due to the boat in which plaintiff was riding running against a submerged telephone wire and capsizing, whether the telephone company was negligent held for the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Navigable Waters, Dec. Dig. § 26.*]

7. DAMAGES (§ 49*)—MENTAL SUFFERING—PHYSICAL INJURY TO PERSON.

Where the infliction of physical injuries of a severe nature is shown, and it would be in the highest degree speculative to go into the question of whether a nervous shock came through the physical injuries or along with them, a recovery for the shock may be had, and it is not required to be shown that the shock was a consequence of the physical injuries.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Damages, Cent. Dig. § 100; Dec. Dig. § 49.*]

8. EVIDENCE (§ 119*)—RES GESTÆ.

In an action against a telephone company for injuries due to the boat in which plaintiff was riding running against a submerged telephone wire and capsizing, evidence of the number of persons in the boat and the number drowned was properly admitted as a part of the res gestæ.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Dec. Dig. § 119.*]

9. EVIDENCE (§ 127*)—EXCLAMATIONS OF PAIN.

Involuntary shrieks and exclamations of pain by an injured person while confined to her bed are competent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 381; Dec. Dig. § 127.*]

10. TRIAL (§ 105*)—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE—ERROR—WAIVER.

Notwithstanding it was incompetent to ask plaintiff's physician whether, in his opinion, the accident caused the condition in which he found plaintiff, the error was waived where no objection was interposed or exception saved.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 261, 263; Dec. Dig. § 105.*]

11. DAMAGES (§ 131*)—PERSONAL INJURIES—DAMAGES EXCESSIVE.

Where plaintiff, who was thrown into the river by the boat in which she was riding running against a submerged telephone wire and capsizing, in addition to being bruised on her arm and shoulder, took into her lungs a large quantity of muddy water which caused severe pain for several weeks, and she was unconscious for some time after her rescue, and for a long time her mental condition was most alarming, and she lost 24 pounds in weight, and for some months bore every indication of suffering severe physical as well as mental pain, a verdict for $2,500 was not excessive.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Damages, Dec. Dig. § 131.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Casper County; Wm. H. Martin, Judge.

Action by Katherine Heiberger against the Missouri & Kansas Telephone Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

W. M. Williams and Glead, Hunt, Palmer & Glead, for appellant. John & J. W. Coe-grove, for respondent.

JOHNSON, J. Action to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by the negligence of defendant. Verdict and judgment were for plaintiff in the sum of $2,500, and defendant appealed.

Plaintiff was injured in the evening of August 10, 1905, on the Missouri river near Boonville, where she lived. She had spent the day at Choteau Springs, and, together with nine other persons, attempted to return home in a gasoline launch of somewhat crude construction. The way pursued by the boat was downstream and along the main required by the plainest principles of law, first, to build the line at a height above the water sufficient to permit the free passage under it of river boats, and then to exercise at least reasonable care to prevent it from becoming an obstruction and menace to navigation. Though not an insurer of travelers on the highway against danger of injury from fallen wires, defendant owed them the duty we have defined, and a negligent breach of such duty would afford a person injured thereby an action for the damages sustained. Webb's Pollock on Torts, 489; Omslear v. Phil. Co. (D. C.) 31 Fed. 354; Railroad v. Brooks, 39 Ark. 403, 43 Am. Rep. 277.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

Though the cause of action asserted by plaintiff is grounded in negligence, and it devolved on her to prove that her injury was the direct result of the negligence averred, we think she fully discharged her burden by showing that her injury was caused by the collision of the boat, in which she was riding, with a submerged telephone wire owned by defendant which constituted an obstruction to the free passage of such small river boats.

Plaintiff is not charged in the answer with contributory negligence, nor is there anything in the evidence to accuse her of such negligence. It is immaterial that the wire might not have formed an obstruction to a larger boat, nor to one equipped with a reversible engine. Defendant was required to anticipate the presence of small craft on the river, and plaintiff was justified in relying on the presumption that defendant would throw no dangerous obstacle in the way of her boat, however small or crude it might be. Therefore, in showing that a wire owned by defendant did obstruct the passage of the boat and injured her without any fault on her part, she made out a prima facie case of negligence against defendant which, if not rebutted, would raise a conclusive presumption of negligence. The burden of proof shifted to defendant to explain the presence of the wire at that place. The very fact that it was there bespoke want of care either in the construction of the line, its repair, or in the discovery and correction of an accidental displacement of the wire. Since defendant had exclusive control of the wire, and, in the ordinary course of things, an accident such as this could not happen if proper care were exercised, it accords better with the dictates of reason and justice to require defendant to exculpate itself from the imputation of negligence than to require plaintiff in her pleading and proof to put her finger on the specific act of negligence that caused her injury. Gannon v. Gas Light Co., 145 Mo. 502, 46 S. W. 968, 47 S. W. 907, 43 L. R. A. 505; Mowry v. Norman, 204 Mo. 191, 103 S. W. 15; Redmond v. Railroad, 185 Mo. 13, 84 S. W. 26, 105 Am. St. Rep. 558; Young v. Oil Co., 185 Mo. 634, 84 S. W. 929; Brown v. Consolidated Co. (Mo. App.) 109 S. W. 1032.

Plaintiff did not disabie herself from invoking the presumption under discussion by the allegation of negligence in her petition. In Hamilton v. Railroad, 114 Mo. App., loc. cit. 509, 89 S. W. 893, where plaintiff was a passenger of defendant carrier, and was injured in a collision, we held that it would have been sufficient for him to allege in his petition, in general terms, that he was injured while being carried as a passenger as a result of the negligence of the carrier; "but when the plaintiff chooses to allege in his petition the specific acts of negligence of which he complains, he assumes the burden of proving them, and, as in other cases, must recover, if at all, upon the negligence pleaded."

In the petition before us the negligence averred covers the widest possible scope. It embraces any and all acts of negligence, whether of construction, repair, inspection, or diligence to discover and remedy a fortuitous displacement of the wire. Obviously, the rule followed in the Hamilton Case is without application to a cause thus pleaded, and the conclusion necessarily follows that the facts adduced by plaintiff placed upon defendant the burden of rebutting the presumption that the obstruction caused by the wire was not due to its negligence. This presumption might be overcome by the showing that the falling of the wire was not the result of negligence in the construction and maintenance of the line, and that defendant had neither actual nor implied notice of the fact that it had fallen in time to have removed the obstruction by the exercise of reasonable care. The most that might be said in favor of defendant is that the facts and circumstances in evidence present the issue of its negligence as one of fact for the solution of the jury. On the hypothesis presented by the testimony of the construction foreman that the wires all were tightly strung and in good condition when he left the work at 4:30 o'clock, and conceding, arguendo, that the message sent to the telephone office at 6 o'clock was not given in time for defendant to remove the obstruction, nor to a proper agent or servant of defendant, still the conclusion is most reasonable that defendant has failed completely to exculpate itself from the charge of negligence, because it has failed to furnish any reasonable evidentiary explanation of the cause of the fall of the wire. Its foreman had notice that morning that the wires were out of order. He did not know, nor does defendant attempt to show, what the workmen did to them after he departed. It was within the power of defendant in discharging its burden of proof to show by evidence the condition in which the workmen left the wires, and, in the absence of a showing to the contrary, the jury were entitled to the inference, either that the wire was down in the water when the work was stopped that evening, or that it fell afterwards on account of negligence in repair work done that day. It goes without saying that the jury was not bound to believe the testimony of the foreman, but had a right to reject his statement that the wires had been properly repaired before he left, and to infer, from the physical fact that the wire was down, the further fact that the repair work had not been properly done. It follows from what has been said that no error was committed in overruling the demurrer to the evidence, nor is error to be found in the instructions relating to the issue of negligence. They submitted that issue in substantial conformity to the views of the law just expressed.

Objection is made to the following portion of the first instruction given at the instance of plaintiff: "And that plaintiff was thereby physically injured, bruised, and made sore, and her nervous system greatly shocked and impaired, and that such physical injuries and nervous shock, if any, caused plaintiff bodily suffering and mental pain and anguish," etc. The point advanced is that, as the evidence does not show any relation between the nervous shock suffered by plaintiff and any physical injury received, she is not entitled to recover damages on account of such shock. The evidence shows the infliction of physical injuries of a severe nature. In addition to being bruised on her arm and shoulder, plaintiff took into her lungs a large quantity of muddy water which caused her to have severe pain in her lungs for several weeks. She was unconscious for some time after her rescue, and for a long time her mental condition was most alarming. She lost 24 pounds in weight, and for months bore every indication of suffering severe physical as well as mental pain. The rule is well settled in this state that there can be no recovery for nervous shock, fright, terror, alarm, anxiety, or distress of mind if these are unaccompanied by some physical injury. Crutcher v. Railroad (not yet officially reported) 111 S. W. 891, and cases cited. But as was said by the Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts in Homan v. Railway, 180 Mass. 456, 62 N. E. 737, 57 L. R. A. 291, 91 Am. St. Rep. 324, the rule is an "arbitrary exception based upon a notion of what is practicable, and should not obtain in cases where physical injuries and nervous shock concurrently result from the same battery." In most cases, as in the one before us, it would be in the highest degree speculative to go into the question of whether the nervous shock came through the battery or along with it, and we agree with the Massachusetts court that, "when the reality of the cause is guaranteed by proof of a substantial battery of the person, there is no occasion to press further the exception to the general rule."

Objections are made to rulings of the court on the admission of evidence, but they are not well founded. The number of persons in the boat and the number drowned were facts belonging to the res gestæ, and to admit proof of them was not reversible error. Estes v. Railway, 110 Mo. App. 731, 85 S. W. 627. The testimony relating to the involuntary shrieks and exclamations of pain and suffering emitted by plaintiff while confined to her bed also was competent. Estes v. Railway, supra.

It was incompetent to ask plaintiff's physician to state whether, in his opinion, the accident caused the condition in which he found plaintiff, but as no objection was interposed by defendant nor exception saved, the error was waived. We do not regard the verdict as excessive. The record shows the cause was fairly tried and properly submitted in the instructions given to the jury, and, in our opinion, the verdict was for the right party.

The judgment is affirmed. All concur.

ANDERSON v. NORVELL-SHAPLEIGH HARDWARE CO. et al.

(St. Louis Court of Appeals. Missouri. Nov. 17, 1908.)

1. DIVORCE (§ 231*)—"ALIMONY."

Alimony in its origin was the method whereby the spiritual courts of England enforced the duty of maintenance owed by husband to wife during their legal separation, and, in modern jurisprudence, is the allowance made to a woman on divorce for support out of her husband's estate.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. § 658; Dec. Dig. § 231.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 1, pp. 307-311; vol. 8, pp. 7571, 7572.]

2. EXEMPTIONS (§ 76*) — JUDGMENTS — ALIMONY.

Under Rev. St. 1899, § 3162, as amended in 1903 (Laws 1903, p. 196 [Ann. St. 1906, p. 1797]), a head of a family may hold certain wages exempt from execution. Section 4327a, enacted in 1903 (Laws 1903, p. 240 [Ann. St. 1906, p. 2376]), provides that no property shall be exempt from attachment or execution in a proceeding by a married woman for maintenance or upon a judgment or order to enforce a decree for alimony, and makes all wages due defendant subject to garnishment or execution in any proceeding mentioned in the section. Held, that section 4327a takes away the exemption right granted by section 3162 as against an execution for alimony.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Exemptions, Cent. Dig. § 100; Dec. Dig. § 76.*]

3. STATUTES (§ 159*)—IMPLIED REPEAL—CONSISTENCY—EXEMPTIONS.

The statutes are not inconsistent, and hence Rev. St. 1899, § 4327a, enacted in 1903 (Laws 1903, p. 240 [Ann. St. 1906, p. 2376]), was not impliedly repealed by section 3162 (Ann. St.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes 1906, p. 1797), because its enactment was approved at a prior date.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. § 229, Dec. Dig. § 159.*]

4. EXEMPTIONS (§ 76*)—WAGES—ALIMONY.

The hardship imposed by Rev. St. 1899, § 4327a, enacted in 1903 (Laws 1903, p. 240 [Ann. St. 1906, p. 2376]), upon one remarrying after a divorce and award of alimony in requiring him to support two families, is immaterial on a judicial construction of the section, being self-invited by breach of his obligation to support his first wife and by remarriage.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Exemptions, Dec. Dig. § 76.*]

Appeal from St. Louis Circuit Court; Jas. E. Withrow, Judge.

Garnishment proceeding by Hulda Schilling Anderson against the Norvell-Shapleigh Hardware Company, garnishee; Miles M. Anderson interpleading. From a judgment for plaintiff, intervener appeals. Affirmed.

W. G. Schofield, for appellant. Erwin Osing, for respondent.

BLAND, P. J. On June 21, 1906, plaintiff obtained a decree divorcing her from the bonds of matrimony theretofore contracted with defendant, Miles M. Anderson, custody of their minor child, and on allowance of $25 per month as alimony, payable on the 15th day of each and every month thereafter. Defendant defaulted in the payment of alimony for the months of February and March, 1907, and execution was issued. The Norvell-Shapleigh Hardware Company was summoned as garnishee. The garnishee appeared and in answer to interrogatories stated defendant was in its employ at a wage of $75 per month, and that it was indebted to him as follows: "$37.50 on April 15th for wages or salary due him from April 1st to April 15th, 1907; $37.50 due him on April 30, 1907; for wages or salary due him from April 15th to April 30, 1907; $37.50 due him May 15th, for wages or salary due him from May 1, 1907, to May 15, 1907; $37.50 due him on May 31, 1907, for wages or salary due him from May 15th to May 31st; and $16.32 due him from June 1st to and including June 7, 1907." And then set up that defendant was a married man, the head of a family, and a resident of the state of Missouri, and that the wages due him, except 10 per cent. thereof, were exempt from execution. The court on the answer ordered the garnishee to pay into court $100, installments of alimony due plaintiff for the months of February, March, April, and May, 1907, and $6.75 costs. The garnishee complied with the order of the court, wherefore Miles M. Anderson interpleaded for the sum, less $16.73, 10 per cent. of the amount of wages owing him by the garnishee, alleging that he was a resident of the state of Missouri, a married man, and the head of a family. A verbal demurrer was interposed to the interplea which was sustained, and judgment entered that defendant take nothing by his interplea, from which judgment he appealed.

On the record as thus presented the sole question for decision is whether a married man, the head of a family, and a resident of this state is entitled to claim exemptions allowed under the provisions of section 3162, Rev. St. 1899, as amended in 1903 (Laws 1903, p. 195 [Ann. St. 1906, p. 1797]), against an execution issued on a judgment for alimony. The section as amended reads as follows: "Each head of a family, at his election, in lieu of the property mentioned in the first and second subdivision of section 3159, may select and hold, exempt from execution, any other property, real, personal or mixed, or debts and wages, not exceeding in value the amount of $300, except 10 per cent. of any debt, income, salary or wages due such head of a family." The section is general and contains no exceptions. But section 4327a, enacted in 1903 (Laws 1903, p. 240 [Ann. St. 1906, p. 2376]), as a new section to chapter 51 (entitled "Married Women"), provides as follows: "No property shall be exempt from attachment or execution in a proceeding instituted by a married woman for maintenance, nor from attachment or execution upon a judgment or order issued to enforce a decree for alimony. And all wages due to the defendant shall be subject to garnishment on attachment or execution in any proceedings mentioned in this section, whether said wages are due from the garnishee to the defendant for the last thirty days' service or not."

1. It is conceded by defendant that this section takes away the exemption right as granted by section 3162 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1797), where the proceedings are brought under the provisions of section 4327, c. 51, Rev. St. 1899 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 2375), and the wife has recovered a judgment against her husband for support. But defendant contends that the section does not extend the exception to an execution for alimony allowed in a divorce suit. The first clause of the section is sufficient to enact the exception to exemptions on any attachment or execution on an order or judgment against the husband for the maintenance of his wife: hence the second clause is redundant and is surplus matter, unless it was the intention of the lawmakers to embrace in the exception executions on orders and judgments for alimony. Alimony, in its origin, was the method by which the spiritual courts of England forced the duty of maintenance owed by the husband to the wife during such time as they were legally separated. Manby v. Scott, 2 Sm. Lead. Cas. 502. In modern jurisprudence it is that allowance which is made to a woman on a decree of divorce for her support out of the estate of her husband. Adams v. Storey, 135 Ill. 448, 26 N.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes.

E. 582, 11 L. R. A. 790, 25 Am. St. Rep. 392; In re Le Claire, 124 Fed. 654; Sheafe v. Sheafe, 24 N. H. 564. Under the Missouri statute alimony may also be awarded the wife pending the suit for divorce. Mo. Ann. St. 1906, § 2926. Nowhere in the chapter (51) providing for and regulating the proceedings by a wife for support against her husband who has abandoned her without good cause and refused to support her is the order or judgment designated as alimony, nor is the term used anywhere in our statutes, except in chapter 20, entitled "Divorce, Alimony and Custody of Children." There is therefore no room to otherwise construe the second clause of the section than as applying to attachments and executions on orders and judgments for alimony in divorce suits. In the case of Long v. Long, 78 Mo. App. 32, cited and relied on by defendant, it was held that in a suit by the wife against the husband for maintenance it was proper to allow the wife a sum for temporary maintenance pending the suit, and, quoting from Harding v. Harding, 144 Ill. 588, 32 N. E. 206, 21 L. R. A. 310, the court said: "To refuse to allow her (the wife) a reasonable support pendente lite would in many cases be to deny her the right to prosecute her suit altogether." Further on, at page 37 of 78 Mo. App., the court said: "The cases uniformly hold that temporary support will be provided whether the action be for separate maintenance or for absolute divorce." Nowhere in the opinion is a temporary allowance in a suit for maintenance called or designated as alimony, and, we repeat, to give the second clause of the statute any force or effect, it must be construed as excepting the operation of the general statute of exemptions on attachments, or executions for alimony in a divorce suit.

2. The exemption statute was approved April 6, 1903. Section 4327a was approved on a prior date, to wit, March 24, 1903. For the reason the exemption statute was approved at a date subsequent to the approval of section 4327a, it is contended that this section was repealed by the subsequent act. Under the Constitution (article 4, § 36) both acts took effect at the same time, to wit, 90 days after the day on which the General Assembly that enacted them finally adjourned. Whether this has any bearing on the question or not, the fact remains that the two acts are not repugnant. The one is not inconsistent with the other and both may therefore stand, and should stand. State ex rel. v. Stratton, 136 Mo. 423, 38 S. W. 83; Manker v. Faulhaber, 94 Mo. 430, 6 S. W. 372; Curtwright v. Crow, 44 Mo. App. 563.

3. The argument of the hardship that section 4327a imposes upon defendant and others similarly situated might be of some force, if addressed to the legislative department. It is of no persuasive force when addressed to a court called upon to construe the statute of which he complains. The hardship, if any, was not created by the law, but was brought upon defendant by his own voluntary acts and conduct, and the conduct which brought about the decree of divorce and judgment for alimony against him was wrongful. For this reason he is in no position to complain that the law denies him the exemptions accorded to ordinary debtors. Nor ought he be heard to complain of the burden he has brought upon himself by his misconduct—a violation of his marriage vows. His marital pledge to his wife was that he would support and maintain her so long as they both should live. Why should he be relieved of that burden when his wife has been guilty of no misconduct? His answer is because he has married another woman, and ought not be required to support two families. Why assume the burden of supporting two families, if he was not able or was unwilling to discharge it? To use a homely phrase, "he has made his bed[s] and on it he must lie."

The judgment is affirmed. All concur.

YOUNG v. GAUS et al.

(St. Louis Court of Appeals. Missouri. Nov. 17, 1908. Rehearing Denied Dec. 1, 1908.)

CORPORATIONS (§ 659*)—FOREIGN CORPORATIONS—CONTRACTS—ACTIONS ON NOTES—DEFENSES.

Where officers and stockholders of a foreign corporation, doing business in the state in violation of Rev. St. 1899, § 1025, as amended by Laws 1903, p. 121 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 883), requiring certain steps to be taken by such corporations, precedent to obtaining a license to do business, made a note to the corporation, and then, acting as officers and agents of the corporation, assigned the note to an innocent holder for value in the name of the corporation, they were estopped, when sued on the note, to assert as a defense, their violation of section 1025 and the consequent invalidity of the note, or the corporation's lack of legal right to assign it to an innocent holder for value, both at common law and under Laws 1903, p. 250, § 60 (Ann. St. 1906, § 463-60) declaratory of the law of negotiable paper, which provides that the maker of a negotiable instrument by making it engages that he will pay it according to its tenor, and admits the existence of the payee and his then capacity to indorse.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 2561, 2562; Dec. Dig. § 659.*]

Appeal from St. Louis Circuit Court; Jas. E. Withrow, Judge.

Action by Fred Young against H. Gaus and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and certain defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Harlan, Jeffries & Wagner, for appellants. A. A. Paxson, for respondent.

BLAND, P. J. The action is on the following promissory note: "$1000. St. Louis,

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

Mo., April 15, 1907. Four months after date we promise to pay to the order of the Rio Grande Land, Water & Power Company one thousand and 00/100 ——— dollars. Payable at the office of the Rio Grande Land, Water & Power Co. For value received negotiable and payable without defalcation or discount and with interest from date at the rate of six per cent. per annum. No. ———. Due Aug. 15th. E. M. Shutt, John Sehart, A. W. Hoffman, H. S. Whitener, H. Gaus." The note was indorsed as follows: "The Rio Grande Land, Water & Power Co., per B. W. Magin, Asst. Treas.," and before maturity, for a valuable consideration, was indorsed and delivered by the payee therein to plaintiff. It was admitted on the trial "that E. M. Shutt was president, and A. W. Hoffman vice president and treasurer, of defendant corporation, the Rio Grande Land, Water & Power Company, and that the defendants John Sehart and H. Gaus were directors of the company at that time, and are yet, and that H. S. Whitener was a stockholder in the company, but not a director, and is yet." The evidence further shows that the appellants, other than the corporation, made and delivered the note to the corporation for its accommodation. At maturity the note was protested for non-payment, and notice thereof was duly served on all the defendants. On the trial the following stipulation was filed: "It is hereby stipulated and agreed by and between the parties hereto, through their respective attorneys, that for the purposes of this cause it is admitted that the defendant the Rio Grande Land, Water & Power Company, payee in the note sued on in this cause, is a corporation organized for the purpose of gain, and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the territory of New Mexico: that at the time the note sued on in this cause was made and delivered to the defendant the Rio Grande Land, Water & Power Company, and at the time of its indorsement and delivery to plaintiff, the defendant the Rio Grande Land, Water & Power Company had not filed in the office of the Secretary of State of the state of Missouri, a copy of its charter or articles of association, and had not in any respect complied with section 1025 of the Revised Statutes of Missouri of 1899, enacted in 1903 (Laws 1903, p. 121 [Ann. St. 1906, p. 888]), relating to foreign corporations doing business in this state. It is further admitted that the note sued on in this case was made, executed, and delivered in the city of St. Louis, Mo., and that the defendant the Rio Grande Land, Water & Power Company was, at the time of the execution and delivery of said note, and at the time of its indorsement and delivery to plaintiff, doing and carrying on within this state the business for which it was organized, and that said Rio Grande Land, Water & Power Company took out a license to do business in this state on August 15, 1907 Plaintiff, however, reserves the right to object, and does hereby object, to the facts above mentioned, as not being relative to the issues in this cause, and as not constituting a defense to plaintiff's cause of action." It was also admitted that the makers of the note did not receive anything for signing it. The defense pleaded and relied upon is that the payee of the note, the Rio Grande Land, Water & Power Company, is a foreign corporation, and had not at the time the note was made, or at the time it was assigned to plaintiff, complied with section 1025, Rev. St. 1899, as amended in 1903 (Laws 1903, p. 121), and therefore was unauthorized to do business in this state. The issues were submitted to the court without the intervention of a jury. No declarations of law were asked or given. The court found the issues for plaintiff, and rendered judgment in his favor for the face of the note with interest. After an unsuccessful motion for new trial, defendants Gaus, Sehart, and Whitener appealed.

The question presented by the record for decision is this: Can appellants, who are officers and stockholders of a foreign corporation, doing business in this state in violation of section 1025 (Laws 1903, p. 121), make a negotiable promissory note to the corporation, and then, acting as officers and agents of the corporation, assign the note to an innocent holder for value, in the name of the corporation, and, when sued on the note, set up their own wrong and fraud as a defense thereto? We unhesitatingly answer this question in the negative. A corporation can only act by and through its officers and agents, and the business done by the Rio Grande Land, Water & Power Company in this state was through the agency of at least two of these appellants. It would be a travesty upon justice and a reproach to the law of the state if, in these circumstances, the appellants could shelter themselves behind the unlawful act of the corporation, and thus indirectly set up their own wrong and fraud to escape a liability they voluntarily contracted. It has never been held in this state that a foreign corporation, unlawfully doing business herein, by failing to comply with section 1025, supra, may set up its own wrong as a defense when sued by a citizen of the state, in the courts of this state, to recover an honest debt due him from the corporation. To hold that the statute was enacted for the purpose of enabling foreign corporations, unlawfully doing business in this state, to shelter themselves behind it for the purpose of evading their honest debts to citizens of this state, contracted in good faith, and in ignorance of the fact that the corporation was a foreign one, or, if foreign, that it had failed to comply with the requirements of the statute, would be to stultify the Legislature that enacted it. The Legislature had no such purpose in view. One purpose of the statute is to bring revenue into the treasury of the state; the other is to protect citizens of the state dealing with foreign corporations by compelling them, as a condition to the right to do business in the state, to submit to the jurisdiction of the courts of the state.

It is held in the following cases that all contracts, made in this state by foreign corporations doing business in violation of section 1025, are void: Tri-State Amus. Co. v. Amusement Co., 192 Mo. 404, 90 S. W. 1020, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 668, 111 Am. St. Rep. 511; Mill & Lumber Co. v. Sims, 197 Mo. 507, 95 S. W. 344; Roeder v. Robertson, 202 Mo. 522, 100 S. W. 1086; United Shoe Machinery Co. v. Ramlose (Mo.) 109 S. W. 567; Ehrhardt v. Robertson Bros., 78 Mo. App. 404. In the cases of Tri-State Amus. Co. v. Amusement Co., Mill & Lumber Co. v. Sims, and United Shoe Machinery Co. v. Ramlose, the suits were by foreign corporations to enforce their void contracts. In Ehrhardt v. Robertson Bros. the Kansas City Court of Appeals held that the indorsee of a note, made to a foreign corporation unauthorized to do business in this state, was a mere transferee of a void contract, and could no more maintain an action thereon than could the corporation. In this case the note sued on expressed upon its face that it was payable to a New York corporation, and was indorsed to plaintiff without recourse. Therefore, plaintiff took the note as dishonored paper, and with knowledge of facts that would have prompted a reasonably prudent person to make inquiries as to whether or not the corporation payee in the note had complied with the laws of this state. Plaintiff was therefore not an innocent holder of the note for value, and the question of estoppel was not in the case. Briefly stated, the facts in the case of Roeder v. Robertson are as follows: A New York corporation, which had not complied with section 1025, sold defendant a threshing outfit for $2,500, upon which defendant had paid about $900. The balance of the purchase price was represented by his notes, one of which was the note sued on in the case of Ehrhardt v. Robertson Bros., supra. After the decision in this case the corporation, learning that it could not recover upon the other notes, made a bill of sale of the threshing outfit to Roeder, its agent, who had sold the outfit to the defendant. Roeder sued to recover the value of the threshing outfit, alleging that it belonged to him, and that defendant had wrongfully converted it to his own use. The judgment was for defendant in the circuit court, which on appeal was affirmed by the Supreme Court. In discussing the case Woodson, J., writing the opinion for the court, at page 533 of 202 Mo., at page 1088 of 100 S. W., said: "He [the plaintiff] cannot successfully contend that he was a bona fide purchaser of the property. He acquired just such title and interest in and to the property as his vendor had, and nothing more. We do not decide what would have been the effect had the appellant been an innocent purchaser." Further on (at pages 534, 535 of 202 Mo., at pages 1088, 1089 of 100 S. W.) the court said: "No corporation or citizen of this state would be permitted to repudiate a void contract of sale of merchandise, and, while retaining the purchase price, come into court, and recover the possession of the property sold, or recover the value thereof. Upon the broad principles of equity and justice restitution of the ill-gotten gains should be made before the unjust prayer for relief should be granted. The other party to the transaction should, according to natural justice, be restored to his 'status quo' before he should be commanded by the court to return the property which had been partially or fully paid for. Otherwise the vendor would have both the property sold and the purchase price, while the vendee would have only a doubtful cause of action against a foreign corporation, perhaps far away. Such a condition should not, and does not, exist under the laws of this state. Appellant cannot maintain this action without first returning, or offering to return, the payments received by A. W. Stevens & Son. Vanstandt v. Hobbs, 84 Mo. App. 633; Chemical Co. v. Nickells, 66 Mo. App. 690; Poplin v. Clausen, 1 Ind. T. 157, 38 S. W. 974; Mechem on Sales, §§ 912, 914, 1053; Daniels v. Tearney, 102 U. S. 415, 28 L. Ed. 187; City of St. Louis v. Davidson, 102 Mo., loc. cit. 155, 14 S. W. 825, 22 Am. St. Rep. 764; O'Brien v. Wheelock, 184 U. S. 450, 22 Sup. Ct. 354, 46 L. Ed. 636."

These principles of equity and justice apply to the facts of the case at bar. The corporation could not retain plaintiff's money and successfully assert a violation of the laws of the state as a defense against the note. By its conduct it is estopped to make such a defense against an innocent holder of the note for value, though the note be void as a contract. By assigning the note, and delivering it to the corporation to be negotiated, the appellants represented to any one to whom the note might be offered for sale that it was a valid obligation, and the corporation was the legal holder thereof, and authorized to negotiate it. It is admitted that plaintiff was an innocent purchaser of the note for value, and the record shows conclusively that that was done which the appellants expected would be done, namely, that the corporation would sell the note for a valuable consideration to an innocent purchaser. On this state of facts it would be grossly inequitable, and a gross perversion of the purpose of section 1025, to permit appellants to avail themselves of the provisions of said section as a defense to the suit; and the law is that they are estopped by their conduct to deny the validity of the note, or the legal right of the corporation to assign it to an innocent holder for value. Garnhart v. Finney, 40 Mo. 449, 93 Am. Dec. 303; Acton v. Dooley, 74 Mo. 63; State Bank of St. Louis v. Frame, 112 Mo. 502, 20 S. W. 620; Johnson-Brinkman Com. Co. v. Railway, 128 Mo., loc. cit. 353, 28 S. W. 870, 26 L. R. A. 840, 47 Am. St. Rep. 675; De Berry v. Wheeler, 128 Mo. 84, 30 S. W. 338, 49 Am. St. Rep. 538; Reynolds v. Kroff, 144 Mo. 433, 46 S. W. 424; State ex rel. v. Branch, 151 Mo. 622, 52 S. W. 390; Layson v. Cooper, 174 Mo. 211, 78 S. W. 472, 97 Am. St. Rep. 545; Henderson v. Koenig, 192 Mo. 690, 91 S. W. 88; Evans v. Evans, 196 Mo. 1, 93 S. W. 969; Midland Lumber Co. v. Kreeger, 52 Mo. App. 418; Cornwall v. Ganser, 85 Mo. App. 678; Fowler v. Carr, 63 Mo. App. 486; Dry Goods Co. v. Bank, 81 Mo. App. 46. The statute (section 60, p. 250, Laws, 1905 [Ann. St. 1906, § 463-60]) declaratory of the law of negotiable paper clearly estops appellants from pleading section 1025 as a defense to the action. This section reads as follows: "The maker of an negotiable instrument by making it engages that he will pay it according to its tenor, and admits the existence of the payee and his then capacity to indorse." See, also, First National Bank of Trenton v. Gillilan, 72 Mo. 77; St. Joseph Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Hauck, 71 Mo. 465; Higginbotham v. McGready, 183 Mo. 96, 81 S. W. 883, 105 Am. St. Rep. 461; Mayer v. Old, 57 Mo. App. 639.

The judgment is clearly for the right party, and is affirmed. All concur.

THOMSON v. GAUS et al.

(St. Louis Court of Appeals. Missouri. Nov. 17, 1908. Rehearing Denied Dec. 1, 1908.)

Appeal from St. Louis Circuit Court; Jas. E. Withrow, Judge.

Action by John Thomson against Henry Gaus and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Harlan, Jeffries & Wagner, for appellants. Wm. F. Smith, for respondent.

BLAND, P. J. This case is on all fours with the case of Young v. Gaus et al., 113 S. W. 735, and for the reasons stated in the opinion in that case, the judgment herein is affirmed. All concur.

MOSS & RALEY v. WREN.

(Supreme Court of Texas. Dec. 2, 1908.)

1. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE (§ 58*)—CONTRACTS ENFORCEABLE.

A vendor may enforce specific performance of a contract for the purchase of real estate, though it stipulates that the purchaser, failing to comply with the terms thereof as to payment and as to securing the price, shall forfeit the amount paid, and the vendor shall accept the same for liquidated damages for nonperformance by the purchaser.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Specific Performance, Cent. Dig. §§ 179, 180; Dec. Dig. § 58.*]

2. BROKERS (§ 54*)—COMMISSIONS—WHEN EARNED.

A broker, employed to procure a purchaser of real estate, who procures a purchaser, who enters into a contract for the purchase with the vendor, which contract the vendor may specifically enforce, is entitled to his commissions.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Brokers, Cent. Dig. §§ 75-81; Dec. Dig. § 54.*]

Certified Questions from Court of Civil Appeals of Second Supreme Judicial District. Action by D. T. Wren against Moss & Raley. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal to the Court of Civil Appeals, which certifies a question to the Supreme Court. Question answered.

C. C. Fredericks, for appellants. F. P. Powell, for appellee.

GAINES, C. J. This is a certified question from the Court of Civil Appeals of the Second District, and, in order to save copying a long statement, we undertake to state the point in the case.

The appellee, D. T. Wren, was employed as a real estate broker to make sale of certain land belonging to appellants, and, having effected, as he claimed, a sale to one Clark, brought suit for his commission. In the contract for the conveyance of the land, after specifying the price, consideration, etc., the following stipulation was inserted: "And it is further mutually agreed, in case purchaser fails to comply with the terms hereof relating to the payment and securing of the purchase price as above mentioned and by the time herein designated, purchaser shall forfeit the amount paid hereon to seller, and the same shall be paid to seller by said trustees and accepted by said seller as and for liquidated damages for such injury and damage as the seller may suffer by reason of the nonperformance of this contract on the part of the purchaser." The question certified for our determination is whether upon this contract a sale was effected, so as to entitle the appellee to his commission.

We have numerous decisions holding that, although there is a stipulation in the contract of this character, payment of a fixed sum of money as liquidated damages does not affect the contract for sale of the land, but that the seller can enforce specific performance. Hemming v. Zimmerschitte, 4 Tex. 159; Williams v. Talbot, 16 Tex. 1; Vardeman v. Lawson, 17 Tex. 11; Bullion v. Campbell, 27 Tex. 653; Gregory v. Hughes, 20 Tex. 345. It seems to us that these decisions are decisive of the case. If the vendor of the land can enforce a specific performance of the contract to pay for it, then the broker has effected a sale, valid in law, and is entitled to his compensation. We have also examined the authorities cited in the certificate upon the same proposition and find it is amply supported by them. Lyman v. Gedney, 29 N. E. 282; Hull v. Sturdivant, 46 Me. 84; Hooker v. Pyncheon, 74 Mass. 550; Ewins v. Gordon, 49 N. H. 444; O'Connor v. Tyrrell, 53 N. J. Eq. 15, 30 Atl. 1061; Palmer v. Bowen, 138 N. Y. 608, 34 N. E. 291, affirming 68 Hun, 636, 18 N. Y. Supp. 638; Kettering v. Eastlack, 130 Iowa, 498, 107 N. W. 177.

We therefore answer the question submitted in the affirmative, and say that the contract is such that appellants are entitled to have it specifically enforced, and that therefore the appellee is entitled to his commission for making the sale.

P. E. SCHOW & BROS. v. McCLOSKEY.

(Supreme Court of Texas. Dec. 2, 1908.)

1. TRIAL (§ 260*)—INSTRUCTIONS—INSTRUCTIONS ALREADY GIVEN—ISSUES.

A party is not entitled to the further submission of an issue already distinctly submitted.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 651-659; Dec. Dig. § 260.*]

2. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 295*)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—ACTIONS—INSTRUCTIONS.

In an action for injuries to an employé, based on defendant's negligence in failing to provide a safe machine and to warn plaintiff of the danger of operating it, an instruction that, if the room in which plaintiff was working was dark, that if the injuries were the direct result of handling the shucks in such dark room, and that if plaintiff knew of the danger of handling the shucks in such dark room, he assumed the risk of injury was properly refused as misleading, and as making the case depend wholly on the darkness of the room.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Dec. Dig. § 295.*]

3. TRIAL (§ 260*)—INSTRUCTIONS ALREADY GIVEN.

In an action for injuries to an employé, the court having instructed that, if plaintiff was injured by the breaking of the belt of a cornshucking machine, and he did not know of the danger resulting from such accident, he could recover, an instruction that, if plaintiff knew that the belt had slipped or become broken, and continued thereafter to pull out the shucks, and if a person of ordinary prudence would not have done as plaintiff did, and his action was the proximate cause of his injury, he could not recover was properly refused.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 651-659; Dec. Dig. § 260.*]

Error to Court of Civil Appeals of Second Supreme Judicial District.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

Action by John McCloskey against P. E. Schow & Bros. A judgment for plaintiff was affirmed on defendants' appeal by the Court of Civil Appeals, and defendants bring error. Judgments of district court and of the Court of Civil Appeals both affirmed.

For prior report, see 109 S. W. 386.

Baker & Thomas and Jas. M. Robertson, for plaintiffs in error. Cureton & Cureton and E. B. Robertson, for defendant in error.

GAINES, C. J. This was an action for damages for personal injuries, alleged to have been received by the defendant in error by reason of the negligence of the plaintiffs in error. Plaintiffs were large mill owners in the town of Clifton, engaged, among other things, in crushing corn cobs into meal. The apparatus for this purpose was situated in a large building four stories in height and 75 feet wide by 100 feet in length. The machine which the defendant in error was working was on the second story of the building, and he was injured in attempting to remove the shucks from the machine by having his hand drawn between the coupler of the roller, and having his right hand crushed so that it had to be amputated above the wrist. He had been employed about two months by the plaintiffs in error, but it was not his business, as a rule, to run the machine by which he was injured. The machine consisted of two rollers operating very near each other, one revolving at a speed of about 450 revolutions to the minute, and the other, when properly adjusted, at a speed of about 150 revolutions to the minute. Each of said rollers, when properly in operation, turned toward the other. They were both run by bands, but when the band of the lower roller became loose, so as not to perform its office, that roller ran about the same speed as the other. When the rollers were running at their properly designated speed, they would cut up the cobs and shucks and grind them up so that there was no trouble, but if they ran at the same speed, the shucks would accumulate in there, and it would become necessary to remove them. The defendant in error testified that he had never run the machine, except for about half an hour on three or four occasions, and, on the day on which the accident happened he was called by the foreman to take his place and run the machine while he went to dinner. As the foreman was leaving for dinner, the plaintiff discovered that the belt on the lower roller was broken, and called to the foreman and notified him of it. The foreman not coming immediately to his assistance, he went ahead with the machine, and saw some shucks collecting in it, and thought it was necessary to taken them out, as he had been instructed to do, and put his hand in for that purpose, and it was drawn in between the rollers and crushed, as before stated. When he went to work for plaintiffs in error the foreman took him all over the house in which this machine was situated, and instructed him as to the dangers of the work. The only danger he pointed out was a screw on a shaft. He told him, when they came to the machine in question, that it was a perfectly safe machine to operate, and there was no danger in it; that he was advised of no danger, neither did he apprehend any. A careful reading of the statement of facts indicates that there is no conflict in the evidence upon these matters. The place where the injury was inflicted was dark, especially if the day was at all cloudy, and the plaintiff so pleaded in his petition. He also testified: "During the different times I attended the rolls I always found it dark. Yes, I knew that it was dark. I should think that the darkness had something to do with my getting caught." The case having been submitted to the jury, they found a verdict in favor of the plaintiff for $5,100, which was affirmed by the Court of Civil Appeals.

When we granted the writ of error in this case we were under the impression that there was error pointed out in the fifth and sixth specifications in the application for the writ. These specifications complain, respectively, of the refusal of the court to grant a special instruction in reference to the darkness of the building, and also in regard to his knowledge that the belt was broken, and sought to deny to plaintiff a right of recovery in the event that he knew of the danger of either defect and assumed the risk resulting from it. The charge in the fifth assignment of error, the refusal of which is complained of by the defendants, reads as follows: "If you believe from the undisputed evidence that the room in which the plaintiff, McCloskey, was at work was dark, as you may find from the evidence, and you believe that the injuries received by him were the direct result of handling the shucks in question in said dark room, and that a person of ordinary prudence, of the experience and discretion of the plaintiff, would not have so handled said shucks in said dark room, as you may find from the evidence, and that the plaintiff knew, or must necessarily have known, of the danger, if any, of handling said shucks in said dark room, as you may find it, you are instructed that the plaintiff assumed the risk of injury while working in a dark room, and you will find for the defendants." We incline to think that the defendants were entitled to have the issue of the risk arising from the darkness of the room submitted to the jury, but we think it was submitted in more than one paragraph of the court's charge, and a further submission of the issue was unnecessary. A defendant is never entitled to have the court argue his case for him, and when the issue is once distinctly submitted upon a question, it is all he has a right to demand in regard thereto. Besides, we think that the charge refused was calculated to mislead the jury, and to make the case depend wholly upon the question of the darkness of the room in which the plaintiff was working when he was injured. The charge in the sixth assignment of error, the refusal of which is complained of by the defendants, is as follows: "If you believe from the evidence in this case that the plaintiff knew that the belt that operated one of the rolls in question had slipped off or become broken, and you believe that the plaintiff, John McCloskey, continued to pull said shucks out after he discovered the condition of said belt, and you believe that a person of ordinary prudence, of the plaintiff's discretion, must necessarily have known of the danger, if any, incident thereto, and you believe that a person of ordinary prudence, under the same or similar circumstances, would not have done as did John McCloskey in this, and it was the proximate cause of his injury, you will find for the defendants." We think the same remarks are applicable to this charge as was to the foregoing. The jury were distinctly told that, if the plaintiff was injured by the breaking of the belt, and he didn't know of the danger resulting from such accident, he could recover.

We find no other error pointed out in the application for the writ of error. Therefore the judgments of the district court and Court of Civil Appeals are both affirmed.

GULF, C. & S. F. RY. CO. et al. v. RAILROAD COMMISSION OF TEXAS.

(Supreme Court of Texas. Dec. 2, 1908.)

1. CARRIERS (§ 18*)—REGULATION—RAILROAD COMMISSION—FIXING RATES—REMEDY OF RAILROAD COMPANY—STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

Rev. St. 1895, art. 4565, provides that a railroad company dissatisfied with the decision of any rate, etc., adopted by the Railroad Commission, may file a petition setting forth the particular cause of objection to the decision, rate, etc., or to either or all of them, in certain courts. Held, that a railroad company in such an action is not required to attack all the rates prescribed, but may attack one rate only.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Dec. Dig. § 18.*]

2. CARRIERS (§ 18*)—REGULATION—RAILROAD COMMISSION—FIXING RATES—REMEDY OF RAILROAD COMPANY—STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

Rev. St. 1895, art. 4566, provides that, in actions by railroad companies to test the reasonableness and justice of rates prescribed by the Railroad Commission, the burden is on plaintiff to show by clear and satisfactory evidence that the rates complained of are unreasonable and unjust. Held, that it is not necessary, to show the unreasonableness or injustice of a rate attacked, to prove that the operation of the road under the rates prescribed would not produce a reasonable and just compensation for services rendered and a reasonable return upon the investment made and money expended in carrying on the business.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Dec. Dig. § 18.*]

3. CARRIERS (§ 18*)—REGULATION—RAILROAD COMMISSION—FIXING RATES—ACTION TO TEST REASONABLENESS—SUFFICIENCY OF PETITION.

The company attacking the reasonableness and justice of a prescribed rate being required to show by clear and satisfactory proof that the rate is "unjust and unreasonable," the petition must allege facts and circumstances that would, if true, authorize the court to adjudge the rate unjust and unreasonable as matter of law.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Dec. Dig. § 18.*]

4. CARRIERS (§ 18*)—REGULATION—RAILROAD COMMISSION—FIXING RATES—ACTION TO TEST REASONABLENESS—SUFFICIENCY OF PETITION.

A petition which alleged that the hauling of lumber over the portion of the complaining company's road designated in the petition at the rate specified by the Railroad Commission would not yield sufficient revenue to pay cost of transportation, but did not state the earnings of the railroad in hauling lumber over the remainder of its road nor the amount of lumber traffic from points beyond the stations from which the objectionable traffics were prescribed, was insufficient, since the company could not select one rate and a particular part of its road for the application of the rate, and establish therefrom that the rate was not reasonable, as the rate, when applied to hauls over the entire road, might afford a profit.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Dec. Dig. § 18.*]

Certified Questions from Court of Civil Appeals of Third Supreme Judicial District.

Suit by the Gulf, Colorado & Santa Fé Railway Company and others against the Railroad Commission of Texas to set aside certain orders of the commission establishing lumber rates. A demurrer to the amended petition was sustained, and plaintiffs appealed to the Court of Civil Appeals which certified questions to the Supreme Court. Questions answered.

Terry, Cavin & Mills, for appellants. R. V. Davidson, Atty. Gen., Claude Pollard, Asst. Atty. Gen., and Andrews, Ball & Streetman, for appellee.

BROWN, J. Certified question from the Court of Civil Appeals for the Third Supreme Judicial District as follows:

"The above styled and numbered cause is now pending in the Court of Civil Appeals of the Third Supreme Judicial District, and, as preliminary to certifying the questions hereinafter propounded, we make the following statement:

"This is a suit filed by the Gulf, Colorado & Santa Fé Railway Company, the Gulf, Beaumont & Kansas City Railway Company and the Gulf, Beaumont & Great Northern Railway Company in the district court of Travis county to set aside certain orders of the Railroad Commission of Texas concerning lumber rates to Port Arthur and Sabine

Pass, Tex. The district court sustained a general demurrer to plaintiff's amended petition, and, they declining to amend, judgment was entered for the defendant, and from this judgment the appellants have perfected an appeal to this court. The amended petition to which the general demurrer was sustained is as follows:

"The State of Texas, County of Travis.

"In the District Court of Travis County, Texas, 26th Judicial District.

"To the Honorable Chas. A. Wilcox, Judge of said Court:

"Your petitioners, the Gulf, Colorado & Santa Fé Railway Company, the Gulf, Beaumont & Kansas City Railway Company, and the Gulf, Beaumont & Great Northern Railway Company, with leave of the court first had, file this their first amended original petition, in lieu of their original petition, filed on May 24th, 1906, and, complaining of the Railroad Commission of Texas, as defendant, respectfully aver:

"(1) That your petitioners, hereinafter called the plaintiffs, are each railroad corporations, duly incorporated and organized under the laws of the state of Texas, and were such at all times hereinafter mentioned. That plaintiff the Gulf, Colorado & Santa Fé Railway Company is the lessee of and operating the railroad lines of the other plaintiffs under leases executed on or about the 1st day of December, 1903, there being a separate lease between the Gulf, Colorado & Santa Fé Railway Company and each of the other plaintiffs. That each of said leases are for a term beginning December 1, 1903, and ending the 30th day of June, 1913, subject, however, to the tenth paragraph of each of said leases, which reads: "Tenth. If either of the parties hereto at any time during the continuance of the term of this lease shall give to the other party written notice that it, the party giving such notice, elects to terminate this lease on the last day of the third month after the month during which such notice shall be given, then this lease shall terminate on the last day of such third month after the month in which such written notice shall be given, anything herein contained to the contrary notwithstanding."

"That under the terms of said leases the said Gulf, Colorado & Santa Fé Railway Company is entitled to operate the railroads and exercise all of the franchises and rights of each of the other plaintiffs. That a copy of one of said leases is filed herewith, marked "Exhibit B" and made a part hereof. That the other lease is in identically the same language, except the description of the property leased. That the Gulf, Beaumont & Kansas City Railway Company and the Gulf, Beaumont & Great Northern Railway Company join as plaintiffs herein, because the rates and orders of the said Railroad Commission of Texas hereinafter complained of affect the value of their respective properties.

That the railroad of the said Gulf, Beaumont & Kansas City Railway Company extends from Beaumont, in Jefferson county, Tex., to Rogan, in Jasper county, Tex., and that the railroad of the Gulf, Beaumont & Great Northern Railway Company extends from said Rogan, in Jasper county, to Center, in Shelby county, state of Texas. That the distance from Beaumont to said Rogan is 62.44 miles, and the distance from said Rogan to Center is 77.7 miles. That there is a spur track of the Gulf, Beaumont & Kansas City Railway extending from Call Junction, in Jasper county, Tex., to Call, in Newton county, Tex. That Kirbyville, a station on the Gulf, Beaumont & Kansas City Railway, is 52.4 miles from Beaumont. That the distance from Beaumont to Port Arthur, via the Texarkana & Ft. Smith Railway, is 19.9 miles. That the distance from Beaumont to Sabine Pass, via the Texas & New Orleans Railroad, formerly the Sabine & East Texas Railroad, is 30 miles. That on April 1, 1899, or some time prior thereto, the plaintiff the Gulf, Beaumont & Kansas City Railway Company and the Texarkana & Ft. Smith Railway Company, acting together, established a through rate of four cents per 100 pounds on lumber from Kirbyville and points between Kirbyville and Beaumont to Port Arthur, said rate, however, applying only to lumber in car loaded to a minimum of 50,000 pounds. That in the division of said rate between the Gulf, Beaumont & Kansas City Railway Company and the Texarkana & Ft. Smith Railway Company each company was allowed or was entitled to two cents. That the said rate was improvidently established in the nature of an experiment by the said Gulf, Beaumont & Kansas City Railway Company, and turned out, as hereinafter more specifically alleged, to be wholly unremunerative, unreasonable, and unjust to it, the said Gulf, Beaumont & Kansas City Railway Company. That thereafter, on or about the 18th day of March, 1900, the said Railroad Commission made an order putting in effect said rate of four cents per 100 pounds from Rogan and points between Rogan and Beaumont to Sabine Pass, with a minimum weight of only 30,000 pounds of lumber to the car, and that said order was so made against the protest and without the consent of your petitioners or any of them. That on or before the 28th day of February, 1903, the said Railroad Commission, without the consent of any of your petitioners, and over their objection and protest, made an order applying said four-cent rate to Port Arthur on car loads of lumber with a minimum weight of only 30,000 pounds to the car. That at all times herein mentioned the cars used by your petitioners and by the other railroads mentioned herein could have been safely loaded with 50,000 pounds of lumber to the car, and can be so loaded hereafter. That your petitioner, the Gulf, Beaumont & Kansas City Railway Company, applied to the said Railroad Commission for permission and authority to cancel said four-cent rate, both to Port Arthur and Sabine Pass, and that such petition to cancel such rate was denied by said Commission on April 7, 1900, and that another petition of said Gulf, Beaumont & Kansas City Railway Company to cancel said rate was denied on December 27, 1900. That on May 16, 1903, the said Railroad Commission, by its chairman, advised in writing the general freight agent of the Gulf, Beaumont & Kansas City Railway Company that no specific authority was granted by the said Railroad Commission for said rate of four cents per 100 pounds from Kirbyville and points south thereof to Port Arthur, but that, as it was applied, the said Railroad Commission had declined to authorize its cancellation, the position of the said Railroad Commission apparently being that because the railroad company had once made a mistake in putting in a rate which was too low and unremunerative that it should be compelled to continue such rate in effect unto the end of time. That on or about the 8th day of April, 1904, the said Railroad Commission, without the consent of any of your petitioners, and over their objection and protest, by an order made on the 18th day of March, 1904, put said rate of four cents per 100 pounds in effect from Rogan and points between Rogan and Kirbyville to Sabine Pass and Port Arthur. That Rogan is distant from Beaumont 62.44 miles. That on March 18, 1904, the said Railroad Commission made and served on your petitioner the following order:

““Office of Railroad Commission of Texas.

““Circular No. 2028.

““Amending Commodity Tariff No. 34.

““Rates on Lumber from G., C. & S. F. Points North of Beaumont to Sabine Pass and Port Arthur.

““(Notice, Circular No. 2015. Hearing No. 462, March 15, 1904.)

““Austin, Texas, March 18, 1904.

““It is hereby ordered by the Railroad Commission of Texas that Commodity Tariff No. 34, issued by this Commission to apply on lumber and articles taking lumber rates, in car loads, transported by railroads between points in Texas and effective May 24th, 1901, be amended by adding thereto the following item:

““Effective April 8, 1904. Rates on lumber and articles taking same rates, in car loads, from stations on the Gulf, Colorado & Santa Fé Railway north of Beaumont to Sabine Pass and Port Arthur, shall be as follows:

From Rogan and south.....4 cents
From North of Rogan to Center, inclusive 6 cents

““L. J. Storey, Chairman,

““Allison Mayfield,

““O. B. Colquitt,

““Commissioners.

““Attest: E. R. McLean, Secretary.”

““Said order was so made by said Railroad Commission without the consent and against the objection and protest of your petitioners. That on September 16, 1904, your petitioners filed with said Railroad Commission a petition protesting against the continuance of said rate of four cents per 100 pounds from Rogan and points south thereof to Sabine Pass and Port Arthur, and of said rate of six cents per 100 pounds from points north of Rogan to Sabine Pass and Port Arthur, which said petition concluded with the following prayer:

““Premises considered, your petitioners pray they be allowed to establish rates on lumber and other forest products from points of origin hereinabove referred to, to Port Arthur and Sabine Pass, which will yield your petitioners, the Gulf, Colorado & Santa Fé Railway Company, to Beaumont, not less than the Kansas City Southern Railway realizes for equal distances, viz.:

5	cents	per	hundred	pounds	for	45	to	67	miles.
6	“	“	“	“	“	67	to	110	“
7	“	“	“	“	“	110	to	153	“
8½	“	“	“	“	“	153	to	182	“

—a true copy of which petition is hereto annexed, marked “Exhibit A” and made a part hereof. That after due notice given by the said Railroad Commission a hearing was had upon said petition by said Railroad Commission, and, after having heard evidence and argument, the said Commission on May 13, 1905, made the following order:

““Hearing No. 521.

““Austin, Texas, May 13, 1905.

““Application of GC&SF Ry. Co. for increase in rates on lumber from points north of Beaumont to Sabine Pass and Port Arthur.

““The above numbered and entitled cause having been called for trial in its regular order at the February term, and the applicant and other interested parties appearing before the Commission, and the Commission having heard the evidence offered, and upon the conclusion thereof, and in pursuance of request of the parties, decision was postponed until filing of written argument upon the subject-matter of said application, and said written argument of the application having now been filed herein, and the Commission having given said application due consideration, it is of the opinion that the same should be refused.

““It is therefore hereby ordered that said application be, and the same is hereby refused and this cause dismissed.

““[Signed] L. J. Storey, Chairman,

““Allison Mayfield,

““O. B. Colquitt,

““Commissioners.

““Attest: E. R. McLean, Secretary.”

““That after due notice on January 16, 1906, the said Railroad Commission had a hearing at its office in the city of Austin on all lumber rates prevailing in Texas, and at said hearing your petitioners again protested against the continuance of said rates hereinbefore described to Port Arthur and Sabine Pass. That on February 12, 1906, the said Railroad Commission again refused to cancel, amend, or increase the said rates, but continued the same in full force and effect. That said rates and each and all of them are unreasonable and unjust to your petitioners, and to each of your petitioners. That as aforesaid, the division of said four-cent rate only allows to your petitioners the sum of two cents per 100 pounds with a minimum of only 30,000 pounds to the car for the haul from Rogan and points south of Rogan to Beaumont, and that the division of said six-cent rate only allows to your petitioner for the haul from points north of Rogan to and including Center to Beaumont the sum of four cents per 100 pounds. That the said two and four cents per 100 pounds, respectively, are wholly insufficient to compensate your petitioners for the service performed. That the same, not only do not adequately compensate your petitioners for the service rendered in the transportation of such lumber, but that the said rates are insufficient to pay the actual expense of performing the service, and that the services under such rates are rendered by your petitioners at an actual loss. That the said rates are wholly insufficient to compensate your petitioners for the cost of the service, and the same do not enable your petitioners to earn enough for the transportation of lumber under such rates to contribute anything towards the payment of the value of the use of the said railroads, or to contribute anything towards a fair return on the value of the said railroads or the cost thereof, and are not, have not been, and will not be sufficient to pay the actual cost of transporting the lumber, without contributing anything towards the expense of the repair or maintenance of said railroads, the taxes thereon, or the interest on the value thereof, but that the effect of the said rates is, has been, and will be, to require your petitioners to give the use of the said railroads to shippers of lumber on said rates free and without any compensation, and without reasonable compensation, or any compensation whatever for the use of said railroads, either to the owners thereof or to the said lessee thereof, and at an actual loss on each car of lumber shipped on such rates, and your petitioners aver that the earnings remaining after paying operating expenses (not including in operating spurs, taxes, rentals, interest on bonds, or other indebtedness or dividend on capital stock) of said railroads at the end of each week, month, and year would have been greater during all the times mentioned herein had the lumber shipped to Port Arthur and Sabine Pass on such rates never been shipped at all, and that such will continue to be the case as long as such rates are in effect.

"That the rates herein complained of are, have been, and will be in the future, much lower than necessary to freely move the shipments of lumber. That under the rates which your petitioners so requested the Railroad Commission of Texas to permit them to charge the manufacturers of lumber and the shippers of lumber could have in the past freely shipped their lumber, and can in the future freely ship their lumber, from all stations on said lines of railroad from Center to and inclusive of the first station north of Beaumont to Sabine Pass and Port Arthur, and there sold the same heretofore shipped and can sell the same hereafter shipped at a profit of more than 25 per cent., being a much higher profit than they obtained in the past on lumber shipped to and sold at any other place or places in the state of Texas or elsewhere, and can obtain in the future by shipping lumber to and selling lumber at any other place or places in the state of Texas or elsewhere. That the manufacturers of lumber in the territory north of Beaumont to Center, inclusive of the latter place, adjacent to and tributary to said lines of railroad, could have in the past, and can in the future, manufacture and ship lumber, paying the rates thereon which your petitioners asked the Railroad Commission of Texas to establish to Sabine Pass and Port Arthur, and there have sold or sell the said lumber at a profit of at least 25 per cent., being a much higher profit than they could have realized in the past or can realize in the future by shipping lumber to and selling lumber at any other place or places in the state of Texas or elsewhere. That the effect of the unreasonably low rates complained of herein was, and is, to enable the manufacturers of lumber in said territory to ship lumber therefrom to Sabine Pass and Port Arthur, and there sell lumber at a higher rate of profit than can be obtained by shipping lumber (from the same places) to and selling lumber at any other place or places in the state of Texas or elsewhere, and have sold and to hereafter sell said lumber at Port Arthur and Sabine Pass for less prices than they sold or hereafter can sell similar lumber for at any other place or places in the state of Texas or elsewhere. That the towns or cities of Port Arthur and Sabine Pass, and the citizens thereof have been in the past, are now, and will be in the future, more wealthy, owners of more property in value per capita, and have enjoyed and will enjoy larger profits from their respective occupations and greater prosperity than any other towns or cities or the citizens thereof of similar population in the state of Texas; that is, not now and has not been since the low rates herein complained of were in effect, any pestilence, flood, storm, fire, or other calamity in said towns or cities or either of them or any fact which would justify, call for, or even suggest lower rates on lumber or other freights for the same service or distances to such towns or either of them than to other places in the state of Texas.

"That the distance between stations north of Beaumont on said lines of railroad and Beaumont are as follows; the distance set opposite each station being the distance from said station to Beaumont:

Stations.	No. of Miles.
Helbig	4
Treadway	7
Funston	8.2
Loeb	9.3
Lumberton	13.8
Fletcher	15.8
Silsbee	21
Lillard	23.8
Fords Bluff	28.7
Quinn	30.3
Buna	36.1
Bessmay	38.4
Call Junction	48
Kirbyville	52.5
Leeton	56.1
Zierath	60
Rogan	62.5
Heywood	65.5
Jasper	73.6
Horton	84.3
Browndell	87.4
Brookeland	90.7
Bronson	104.8
Venable	115
San Augustine	120.5
Duff	128.5
Neuville	131.4
Center	139.9

"That the rates on lumber established by the Railroad Commission of Texas from the above-named stations to Beaumont are as follows; said rates being in cents per 100 pounds, and the number of cents or cents and fractions thereof stated opposite each station being the rate from said station to Beaumont:

Station.	Rate.
Helbig	2 1/2
Treadway	3 1/2
Funston	3 1/2
Loeb	3 1/2
Lumberton	3 1/2
Fletcher	5
Silsbee	6
Lillard	6
Fords Bluff	7
Quinn	7 1/2
Buna	7 1/2
Bessmay	7 1/2
Call Junction	7 1/2
Kirbyville	8
Leeton	8 3/4
Zierath	8 3/4
Rogan	8 3/4
Heywood	8 3/4
Jasper	8 3/4
Horton	8 3/4
Browndell	8 3/4
Brookeland	8 3/4
Bronson	8 3/4
Venable	8 3/4
San Augustine	8 3/4
Duff	10
Neuville	11 1/4
Center	11 1/4

"That said rates so shown from said stations to Beaumont, or higher rates, have been established by the Railroad Commission of Texas and in effect during all the times mentioned herein. That all shipments of lumber to which the rates herein last above stated are applicable are hauled by your petitioners from point of origin at Center or south thereof to Beaumont, and that the service performed by your petitioners in hauling such shipments is exactly the same as the service performed by them in hauling shipments to Beaumont that are destined to Port Arthur and Sabine Pass, and that the cost of such service is the same; that is to say, that from a given station north of Beaumont it costs your petitioners the same to haul a given quantity of lumber to Beaumont, to be delivered there to consignee, as it does to haul the same quantity of lumber from the same station to Beaumont, to be delivered to the connecting line for transportation from Beaumont to Sabine Pass or Port Arthur.

"That the said rates to Port Arthur and Sabine Pass are greatly lower than the rates established by the said Railroad Commission for similar service in the transportation of lumber in other directions and to and between other parts of the state, except the rate established by said Railroad Commission to Port Bolivar, which rate was established over the protest of your petitioners, but, as no considerable business has moved thereunder, your petitioners have not been very materially injured thereby to date. That under such low, unreasonable, and unjust rates to Port Arthur and Beaumont numerous shipments have been made in the past and are continuing to be made, and that the loss resulting to your petitioners, particularly to your petitioner the Gulf, Colorado & Santa Fé Railway Company, from having to haul lumber on such rates, amounts and will amount to at least the sum of $1,000 per month. That if said low rates to Port Arthur and Beaumont, which are in the nature of special rates, are canceled, that the following rates established by the Railroad Commission of Texas for transportation for similar distances over two or more lines of railroad will apply, to wit:

"Through joint rates on lumber to Port Arthur and Sabine Pass:

Distance.	Rates.
24 miles and less.....	8 cents
30 " " and over 24 miles.....	9 "
36 " " " 30 "	10 "
42 " " " 36 "	11 "
48 " " " 42 "	12 "
54 " " " 48 "	13 "
60 " " " 54 "	14 "
72 " " " 60 "	15 "
84 " " " 72 "	16 "
90 " " " 84 "	17 "
Over	90 " 17 1/2 "

"That the distance from the stations on the said Gulf, Beaumont & Kansas City Railway and the said Gulf, Beaumont & Great Northern Railway to Port Arthur and Sabine Pass are as follows:

Station.	Miles to Port Arthur.	Sabine Pass.
Center	160.6.	170.7
Neville	152.1.	162.2
Duff	149.2.	159.3
San Augustine	141.2.	151.3
Bronson	124.5.	134.6
Brookeland	113.	123.1
Browndell	110.4.	120.5
Horton	104.2.	114.3
Jasper	93.4.	103.3
Rogan	82.3.	92.4
Leeton	76.	86.1
Kirbyville	72.3.	82.4
Call Junction	67.7.	77.8
Bessmay	58.2.	68.3
Buna	55.9.	66.
Quinn	49.5.	59.6
Fords Bluffs	46.3.	56.4
Lillard	43.5.	53.6
Silsbee	43.5.	53.6
Silsbee Junction ..	40.8.	50.9
Fletcher	35.7.	45.7
Lumberton	33.6.	43.7
Funston	27.9.	38.
Beaumont	19.9.	30.

"That out of said rates, if so applied, your petitioner, the Gulf, Colorado & Santa Fé Railway Company, would receive as a division or as its rate for the haul to Beaumont, to wit, 50 per cent. to 75 per cent. of said rates.

"That, under such division of rates to Beaumont which it will so receive if said low rates now in effect, are canceled, your petitioner, the Gulf, Colorado & Santa Fé Railway Company, will earn at least the sum of $3,000 per month on shipments of lumber to Port Arthur and Sabine Pass more than it will earn if said present low rates are continued in effect. That all of the places hereinbefore mentioned are in the state of Texas.

"That the enforcement of said low rates to Beaumont and Port Arthur has pro tanto taken the property of your petitioners, said railroads, and donated or devoted the same to the use of the shippers of said lumber or Beaumont and Port Arthur without compensation, contrary to the Constitution of the United States and of the state of Texas, and the enforcement thereof in the future will have like effect, and the enforcement thereof has pro tanto deprived your petitioners of their property without due process of law, contrary to the Constitution of the state of Texas, and contrary to section 1 of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, and the enforcement thereof in the future will pro tanto deprive your petitioners of their said property without due process of law, contrary to the Constitution of the state of Texas and to section 1 of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

"That all of the facts herein alleged were proven by evidence properly submitted to the said Railroad Commission in the hearings before said Railroad Commission hereinbefore mentioned.

"Premises considered, your petitioners pray that the Railroad Commission of Texas be cited in accordance with law to appear and answer herein, and that on a hearing of this cause judgment be entered annulling and canceling each and all of the rates to Port Arthur and Beaumont hereinbefore described and complained of, and each and all of the orders of said Railroad Commission of Texas hereinbefore described and complained of, and annulling and canceling any and all action of the said Railroad Commission of Texas hereinbefore complained of, and that your petitioners have judgment for their costs in this behalf expended, and for such other and further relief as they may be entitled to in law and in equity."

"In view of the importance to the public and the railway companies of this state of the questions certified, and on account of the importance of determining the jurisdiction and authority of the Railroad Commission in such matters, and on account of the fact that we have not fully agreed as to a determination of the questions certified, we certify to your honorable court the following questions:

"(1) Did the trial court err in sustaining the general demurrer to plaintiffs' petition? To reduce this general question to those that we especially desire the court to answer, we propound the following additional questions:

"(2) Was it necessary for the plaintiffs, in attacking the order of the Railroad Commission fixing the rates in question on lumber between the points named in the petition, as unjust and unreasonable, to allege that the entire body of rates on other commodities was unjust and unreasonable? Or, in other words, that the rates on other commodities transported would not furnish the railway companies a reasonable earning or profit on the investment, considering as embraced in the term 'investment' all matters upon and for which the railroads would be entitled to an earning or profit?

"(3) Repeating this last question in a different form, we suggest that as the plaintiffs' petition alleges that, by reason of the order of the Commission, the railway companies were required to transport lumber under the rates in question without some compensation for such services, or at a loss of $1,000 a month, was it necessary, in order to show that such order was unreasonable and unjust, to further allege and show that from other commodities transported by the railroads there would not result a reasonable profit or earning?

"(4) Would an order of the Railroad Commission fixing rates for transportation of a commodity which would result in a loss for such services to the railway companies of a sum alleged in plaintiffs' petition, or that would not furnish the railway companies for such services performed some compensation therefor, have the effect of depriving the railway companies of their property without due process of law?

"(5) Would it be just and reasonable to the railway companies, or would it be a fair and just discrimination, or would it be in effect class legislation, to require the railway companies to transport commodities of a certain class of shippers at a loss to the railway companies, or at a fixed rate that would not furnish to the railway companies some compensation for the services rendered?

"(6) Would it be lawful, just, and reasonable for the Railroad Commission by its order to permit a shipper or class of shippers to have his or their traffic transported for less than the cost of carriage, and without any compensation to the carrier for the services performed, or the value of the property devoted to the use thereof, expecting the carrier to obtain a fair compensation for the general use of its property from other shippers?

"We desire to explain that, in using the expressions 'traffic,' 'commodity,' and 'shipment' in the foregoing questions, we merely intend to apply these terms to domestic shipments within this state, and do not intend that they shall be considered in connection with interstate traffic. The court's attention is called to this in view of the rule announced in Smyth v. Ames, 169 U. S. 66, 18 Sup. Ct. 418 42 L. Ed. 819, and Minneapolis & St. Louis R. R. Co. v. Minnesota Railroad & Warehouse Commission, 186 U. S. 260, 22 Sup. Ct. 900, 46 L. Ed. 1155.

"These questions, in our opinion, are all raised by the appellants in their briefs."

The first question propounded presents the whole case, to which we answer, the court did not err in sustaining the general demurrer to plaintiff's petition.

This action is authorized by the following sections of the Revised Statutes of 1895:

"Art. 4565. If any railroad company or other party at interest be dissatisfied with the decision of any rate, classification, rule, charge, order, act or regulation adopted by the Commission, such dissatisfied company or party may file a petition setting forth the particular cause or causes of objection to such decision, act, rate, rule, charge, classification or order, or to either or all of them, in a court of competent jurisdiction in Travis county, Texas, against said Commission as defendant. Said action shall have precedence over all other causes on the docket of a different nature, and shall be tried and determined as other civil causes in said court. Either party to said action may appeal to the appellate court having jurisdiction of said cause, and said appeal shall be at once returnable to said appellate court, at either of its terms, and said action so appealed shall have precedence in said appellate court of all causes of a different character therein pending; provided, that if the court be in session at the time such right of action accrues, the suit may be filed during such term and stand ready for trial after ten days' notice.

"Art. 4566. In all trials under the foregoing article the burden of proof shall rest upon the plaintiff, who must show by clear and satisfactory evidence that the rates, regulations, orders, classifications, acts or charges complained of are unreasonable and unjust to it or them."

It will be observed that the railroad company under these sections had the right to attack any rate, or it might have attacked any number or all of the rates prescribed for it by the Railroad Commission as being unreasonable and unjust. It is plain from the terms of the law that the railroad company was not required to attack all of the rates prescribed, nor it is necessary in order to show the unreasonableness or injustice of the rate attacked to prove that the operation of the road under the rates prescribed will not produce a reasonable and just compensation for services rendered by the company to shippers and a reasonable return upon the investment made and the money expended in carrying on the business. R. R. Commission v. H. & T. C. Ry. Co., 90 Tex. 352, 38 S. W. 750; Same v. Weld & Neville, 96 Tex. 403, 73 S. W. 529. While the railroad company had the right to call in question the one rate, it was required to show by clear and satisfactory evidence that the rate so attacked was "unjust and unreasonable." It follows that the petition must contain allegations of such facts and circumstances as would, if true, authorize the court to adjudge the rate to be unjust and unreasonable as a matter of law. The petition in this case alleges that in hauling lumber over that portion of its road, designated in the petition, at the rate specified by the Commission, will not yield a sufficient revenue to pay the cost of transportation. There is nothing in the petition to show what were the earnings of the railroad in hauling lumber over the remainder of its said railroad. It does not show the amount of lumber traffic carried over that road from points beyond the stations designated from which the objectionable tariffs are prescribed. It may be, and doubtless is a fact, that trains which start from points beyond the specified stations take up and carry as a part thereof cars loaded with lumber destined to Beaumont or Port Arthur, thus the operation of that train may yield a sufficient profit to make the rates reasonable, whereas, taken separately, the rate from any one of the points, if carried by separate trains, would not be reasonable. It may be true that such freight, though not remunerative, considered alone, would, when thus carried, contribute to the cost of such train to a degree that would be reasonable compensation. Therefore it cannot be held upon the facts stated unreasonable and unjust as a matter of law. The railroad company cannot select one rate and a particular part of its road for the application of that rate, showing thereby the deficiency in profit, and from that establish that the rate is not reasonable. St. L. & San Francisco Ry. Co. v. Gill, 156 U. S. 665, 15 Sup. Ct. 484, 39 L. Ed. 567. In the case cited the court said: "The company cannot claim the right to earn a net profit from every mile, section, or other part into which the road might be divided, nor attack as unjust a regulation which fixed a rate at which some such part would be unremunerative; that it would be practically impossible to ascertain in what proportion the several parts should share with others in the expenses and receipts in which they participated."

We think it unnecessary to discuss the other questions submitted.

AUTRY et al. v. REASOR et al.

(Supreme Court of Texas. Dec. 2, 1908.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1012*)—REVIEW—FINDINGS OF FACT—CONCLUSIVENESS.

Where evidence on a question was such that the trial court was not bound to give it credence, its finding of fact thereon is conclusive on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3990-3992; Dec. Dig. § 1012.*]

2. HOMESTEAD (§ 60*)—PROPERTY CONSTITUTION—USE AS HOME.

Under Const. art. 16, § 51, providing that a rural homestead may be one or more parcels, but that it shall be used for a home, or as a place to exercise the calling or business of the head of a family, to constitute rural land a homestead it must be used for some one purpose of a home, either by cultivating it, using it directly for raising family supplies, or for cutting firewood and the like.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homestead, Cent. Dig. § 88; Dec. Dig. § 60.*]

3. HOMESTEAD (§ 168*)—FORFEITURE—RENTING PREMISES.

The renting of a portion of a rural homestead deprives the rented part of its homestead character.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homestead, Cent. Dig. §§ 333, 334; Dec. Dig. § 168.*]

On rehearing. Former opinion reversed, judgments of lower courts reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

For former opinion, see 108 S. W. 1162.

GAINES, C. J. At the last term of this court opinion was rendered in this case, affirming the judgments of the lower courts. A motion for a rehearing has since been filed, in which it is pointed out that we overlooked the findings of fact as found by the trial court and Court of Civil Appeals. The criticism of the opinion is correct. The trial court distinctly found that "John J. Reasor never cultivated the 39 acres of land, or any part of it, by himself or through any one else, but rented the same from time of the purchase to the time of his death to yearly tenants, who paid for the use of the same the usual rental of one-third and one-fourth of the crop. John J. Reasor occasionally hauled his part of the crop to his residence on 90 acres, and he used the same for the support of his family. This use of the 39 acres by John J. Reasor, renting it and using the rents for the support of himself and family, made it a part of the homestead." There was, however, evidence in the record that Reasor was seen cultivating the land, and following this, and not having in mind the finding of the trial judge, we so stated the facts in our opinion. The evidence to which we refer, while undisputed in a certain sense, is of such a character that we do not feel that the trial judge was bound to give it credence. Therefore his finding upon the facts must be conclusive upon us, and the circumstances of cultivation by the defendant upon which the former opinion relied in part cannot be considered. Under these circumstances we are of opinion that the facts established by the evidence are not sufficient to show that the 39 acres of land was a part of the homestead of the father of the defendants in error.

In defining what shall constitute a homestead, section 51 of article 16 of the Constitution expressly provides that the rural homestead may be one or more parcels, but at the same time provides "that the same shall be used for the purposes of a home, or as a place to exercise the calling or business of the head of a family." It is clear, therefore, we think, before a homestead can be claimed upon land, it must be used for some one purpose of a home, either by cultivating it, using it directly for the purpose of raising family supplies, or for cutting firewood and such like. The alleged fact that the father of the defendants in error cultivated the tract in question, having been found against the defendants in error by the trial judge, we find no evidence that the land was used for the purpose of a home, other than that the proceeds were probably used in support of the family. In the case of Blum v. Rogers, 78 Tex. 530, 15 S. W. 115, we held that the building of a house within a town on a certain lot and renting it deprives it of its homestead character. We see no reason why the same rule should not apply to a rural homestead. Any expressions in our former opinion to the contrary are now withdrawn.

We accordingly reverse the judgment, and remand the cause for a new trial.

HONAKER et al. v. JONES.

(Supreme Court of Texas. Dec. 2, 1908.)

1. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 253*) — VENDOR'S LIEN—EFFECT OF INCLUSION OF PERSONAL PROPERTY.

Where land and chattels are sold for a gross amount, the reservation of a vendor's lien in the deed and purchase-money notes for the entire amount creates a contract lien, which binds the land for the whole amount of the notes, with interest and attorney's fees provided for therein.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Dec. Dig. § 253.*]

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes.

2. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 257*) — VENDOR'S LIEN—ABSOLUTE DEED AS MORTGAGE.

A deed reserving a vendor's lien has the effect of a mortgage, and renders the transaction executory.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Dec. Dig. § 257.*]

Certified Questions from Court of Civil Appeals of Fifth Supreme Judicial District.

Action by J. E. Jones against J. N. Shelton and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants W. B. Honaker and another appeal to the Court of Civil Appeals. On certified questions from the Court of Civil Appeals.

Garnett & Hughston, Smith & Wilcox, and D. P. Johnson, for appellants. Wm. M. Jones, for appellee.

BROWN, J. This is on certified questions from the Court of Civil Appeals of the Fifth Supreme Judicial District. The statement and questions are as follows:

"This suit was instituted by the appellee, Jones, to recover of J. N. Shelton the amount of three promissory notes, and to foreclose as against the said Shelton and the appellants, Honaker and Herrin, the vendor's lien, claimed as security for the payment of said notes, upon two lots of land situated in Farmersville, Collin county, Tex. Two of said notes bore date December 14, 1893. They were for the sum of $1,000 each, and payable, respectively, on the 14th day of December, 1895 and 1896, with interest at the rate of 10 per cent, per annum, payable annually, and provided for 10 per cent. thereof additional as attorney's fees, if placed in the hands of an attorney for collection. Each of said notes recited that it was for purchase money of a 'livery stable and outfit with two lots of land situated in Farmersville, Collin county, * * * upon which the vendor's lien is expressly retained to secure the payment hereof.' The other of said notes is for the sum of $260.75, bears date June 10, 1903, and was given for a balance of interest that was due and payable on said first-named notes, on the 10th day of June, 1903. This note also bore interest at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum, and provided for 10 per cent. as attorney's fees if placed in the hands of an attorney for collection, but it did not expressly give or recite any lien on the 'livery stable and outfit' or upon the lots of land mentioned in the other notes. Upon the back of each of the two first notes referred to above was the following indorsement: 'I hereby acknowledge that there is due on this note the sum of one thousand ($1,000.00) dollars, and I agree to pay the same, together with 10 per cent. interest per annum from this, the 10th day of June, 1903. J. N. Shelton.' In their amended answer, filed in lieu of the original answer, and upon which the case went to trial, the defendants did not plead the statute of limitations. It also appears that a deed was executed by appellee, Jones, on the 14th day of December, 1893, by which the two lots mentioned in the $1,000 notes described were conveyed to J. N. Shelton. This deed recites said two notes as a part of its consideration and that a vendor's lien is expressly reserved to secure their payment. In the notes sued on, as stated, it appears upon the face of each of the $1,000 notes, that it was given for a 'livery stable outfit' and two lots of land, and by parol evidence it was shown without contradiction that the 'livery stable outfit' consisted of horses, harness, buggies, and other vehicles. The whole property, real and personal, was sold for the aggregate sum of $6,500, and it does not appear what proportion of said sum was for the land; nor was the reasonable value of the land, or of the personal property, at the time of the sale or at the time of the trial, shown. In other words, the evidence simply shows that the land and the 'livery stable outfit,' consisting of horses, harness, buggies, and other personal property, were sold for the lump sum of $6,500, and the notes sued on taken as a part of the consideration therefor. The trial court instructed the jury to return a verdict in favor of the plaintiff for the amount of the notes (less the attorney's fees claimed on the two $1,000 notes), together with a foreclosure of the vendor's lien on the land, and the appellants have appealed. The record shows that the court correctly directed the verdict of foreclosure if the lien existed upon the land for the full amount due on the notes.

"Question 1. Did the trial court, under the facts stated, err in directing a foreclosure of the vendor's lien on the land?"

"Question 2. When a vendor seeks to enforce his lien for the collection of a note, which was given in part for land and in part for chattels or personal property, where such lien is expressly reserved in the note and the deed conveying the land, is it incumbent upon him, in order to have a foreclosure of such lien upon the land, to show how much of the note was given for the land?"

"Question 3. If in such case there was no agreement between the parties, at the time of the sale, fixing the value of the land or of the personal property, will the vendor be allowed to show by proper evidence what proportion the value of the land bore to the whole value of the property sold, and have his foreclosure on the land, for such proportionate amount?"

"Question 4. Does the transaction constitute a contract lien upon the real estate for the payment of the full amount due on the notes?"

To the first and fourth questions we answer: The reservation of the lien upon the land in the deed and notes constituted a contract lien, which is equivalent in its effect to a mortgage upon the land, and binds the land for the whole amount of the two notes, with interest and attorney's fees. 3 Pomeroy's Eq. Jur. §§ 1256, 1257; Helm v. Weaver, 69 Tex. 143, 6 S. W. 420; Bergman v. Blackwell (Tex. Civ. App.) 23 S. W. 243; Baker v. Collins, 4 Tex. Civ. App. 520, 23 S. W. 493; Lippencott v. York, 86 Tex. 276, 24 S. W. 275. In section 1257 of Pomeroy's Equity, above cited, this language is used: "This peculiar species of lien differs essentially from that which equity raises by implication in favor of the grantor, since it is based upon and created by express contract. It is in all essential elements a mortgage. The deed is made to embody an informal mortgage or defeasance, and is thus prevented from being absolute so long as the price remains unpaid." This principle has been recognized and enforced by a long line of decisions of this court, wherein it has been held that the reservation of a lien on the face of the deed or notes has the effect of a mortgage and makes the transaction executory. In Lippencott v. York, cited above, a husband and wife entered into a written contract for improvements to be made upon their homestead, which was executed according to the statute, and fixed a mechanic's lien on the homestead. The contractor transferred that contract to another, and the owners of the homestead took up the mechanic's lien contract and executed in lieu thereof new notes and a deed of trust on the homestead. The statute then in force required suit to enforce the mechanic's lien to be instituted within one year, which was not done in this case, and it was claimed that the lien was discharged. This court held that, although the mechanic's lien could not be enforced, the notes and deed of trust constituted a contract lien on the homestead that was valid. This is analogous to the question we have. The notes, as a whole, may not have been for the purchase money of the land, and therefore would not have a vendor's lien, strictly speaking, except for a portion; yet the contract lien is valid for the entire amount. Helm v. Weaver, cited above.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

The lien being reserved in the deed and notes, and all of the other facts being established necessary to entitle the plaintiff to a foreclosure, the court did not err in instructing the jury to return a verdict in favor of the plaintiff for a foreclosure of the lien.

LINDLY v. LINDLY et al.

(Supreme Court of Texas. Dec. 2, 1908.)

1. INSANE PERSONS (§ 94*)—ACTIONS—APPOINTMENT OF GUARDIAN AD LITEM.
Independent of Rev. St. 1895, art. 1211, requiring the appointment of guardians ad litem for defendants who are minors, lunatics, idiots, or persons non compos mentis, the court may permit a next friend to file an answer for a defendant who, by reason of mental or bodily infirmity, is incapable of caring for his interests in the litigation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insane Persons, Cent. Dig. § 164; Dec. Dig. § 94.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 919*)—REVIEW—PRESUMPTIONS.

Where S., a defendant in partition, answered disclaiming interest in the land to be partitioned, and thereafter another of the defendants filed an answer as next friend for S., alleging that she had an interest in the property, that she was 88 years of age, and was infirm in mind and body, and that her disclaimer was procured by plaintiff by fraud and undue influence, the action of the court in denying plaintiff's motion to strike the answer of the next friend will not be reversed on appeal by plaintiff, where the record fails to show that the ruling of the court was not based on evidence adduced on such motion, since it will be presumed that the court made proper inquiry.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3713; Dec. Dig. § 919.*]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 900*)—REVIEW—BURDEN OF SHOWING ERROR.

All presumptions consistent with the record are in favor of conclusions of the trial court, and parties claiming error must make it appear by the record.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3667; Dec. Dig. § 900.*]

4. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1042*)—REVIEW—HARMLESS ERROR—PARTIES.

S., a defendant in partition, answered, disclaiming interest in the property, whereupon another defendant filed an answer as next friend for S., alleging that S. was old and infirm, and that plaintiff had procured the disclaimer by fraud and undue influence. Held, that the action of the court in overruling plaintiff's motion to strike the answer of the next friend will not be reviewed on appeal, on the ground that the interests of the next friend, according to the pleadings, were adverse to those of S., where the record shows that the next friend in fact had no interest in the property, and so admitted on the trial, and it does not appear that such admission was not brought to the attention of the court on the hearing of such motion.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4112; Dec. Dig. § 1042.*]

5. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 877*)—REVIEW—PERSONS ENTITLED TO ALLEGE ERROR.

Where S., a defendant in partition, answered, disclaiming interest in the property, and another defendant, as next friend, filed an answer on behalf of S., alleging that S. was old and infirm, and that such disclaimer was procured by plaintiff by fraud and undue influence, plaintiff could not complain, on appeal, of the denial of his motion to strike the answer filed by such friend.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3560; Dec. Dig. § 877.*]

6. HUSBAND AND WIFE (§ 266*)—COMMUNITY PROPERTY—CONVEYANCE BY HUSBAND.

A husband may convey a life estate in community property to his wife, with remainder to their children.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Cent. Dig. § 926; Dec. Dig. § 266.*]

Error to Court of Civil Appeals of Fifth Supreme Judicial District.

Suit for partition by J. M. Lindly against Harlin Lindly and others. From a judgment for defendants (109 S. W. 467), plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

H. C. Connor, Bennett & Jones and Thompson & Manning, for plaintiff in error. Looney & Clark, T. D. Starnes, and Mulkey & Hamilton, for defendants in error.

WILLIAMS, J. This suit was brought by plaintiff in error for partition of several tracts of land, of which he alleged he was the owner of one half and the defendants of the other half. The defendants were his mother, Mrs. Sallie Lindly, and other children and descendants of herself and Jahu Lindly, her deceased husband. An answer was filed in the name of Mrs. Sallie Lindly on February 4, 1907, alleging that she had conveyed all her interest in the land to plaintiff, reserving only the rent for the year 1906; that she did not claim any part of her deceased husband's interest therein; that her husband had died in 1906, leaving her in possession of all of the land, and that she had collected the rents for that year, for the balance of which, after deducting expenses, debts, and taxes, she offered to account. She also asked that the lands be partitioned between plaintiff and her codefendants, and that she be relieved of further responsibility, claiming nothing for herself. This answer was signed by Mrs. Lindly in person. Among the defendants were Mrs. Mellie Jernigan, a daughter of Jahu and Sallie Lindly, and her husband, Asa Jernigan. On February 12, 1907, an answer was filed for Mrs. Sallie Lindly by Asa Jernigan, as her next friend, seeking, upon allegations which would be sufficient, if properly set up by Mrs. Lindly or in her behalf, to authorize the cancellation of deeds executed by her to plaintiff on the 6th day of April, 1906, purporting to convey her community interest in the property in controversy, on the ground that they were procured by fraud and undue influence on the part of plaintiff. It was also alleged in the answer that Mrs. Lindly was entitled to a life estate in the property, the reason for which is not given, but appears from the answers of the defendants other than Mrs. Lindly. As the reason for the appearance of the next friend, it was alleged that Mrs. Lindly was 88 years of age, and so weak and infirm in mind and body that she was unable to comprehend her rights of property or to manage her affairs, and that the answer previously filed in her name had been procured by fraud and undue influence of plaintiff. The answer prayed for the cancellation of the deeds and for the appointment of a receiver to take charge of and manage the farms. On the 6th day of May, 1907, two motions were filed to strike out the answer just stated, one by the plaintiff, and one in the name of Mrs. Sallie Lindly, signed by an attorney for her. The ground stated in the motion of plaintiff is that "neither Jernigan nor any one has authority on his own motion to represent her as next friend," if she is of weak mind, which is denied. The reasons assigned in Mrs. Lindly's motion are that Jernigan had no authority to act as her next friend; that she was in court by herself and by counsel of her own choice, and was able and competent to look after her own interests, and Jernigan was not authorized by her to file the answer. On the same day the defendants other than Mrs. Lindly, including Jernigan and wife, filed answers, in which they alleged, in substance, that prior to January 28, 1899, Jahu Lindly and wife had conveyed to plaintiff, as gifts, lands out of their community estate, and that on that day Jahu Lindly executed and delivered a deed, which was accepted by Mrs. Sallie Lindly and the other grantees, by which he conveyed, in consideration of love and affection, a life estate in the lands in controversy to Mrs. Sallie Lindly, and the remainder in fee to be equally divided between them at her death to those of their children to whom land had not previously been conveyed as gifts; that Mrs. Lindly had claimed the land under this deed until her husband's death, which occurred March 19, 1906, and for some time thereafter; that these defendants had never received any gifts as referred to in the deed, and that therefore the land belonged to Mrs. Lindly for life, and to them in fee after her death, and plaintiff had no interest in it. On the same day Mrs. Lindly, by attorney, filed a supplemental answer, in which she excepted to the answer filed by Jernigan as next friend because it showed no authority in him so to act, and in which she denied the allegations of that answer, and specially alleged that, while she is aged and infirm in body, she is, and has at all times been, of strong mind and memory, competent to transact business, and capable of understanding her property rights and of dealing with reference thereto; that she understood the answer filed by her and the deed which she made to her son which was done of her free will and accord without undue influence or persuasion on part of plaintiff or any one else; and that it was and is her desire that he have her undivided interest in the land. At the same time the plaintiff filed a reply to the plea of Jernigan as next friend, denying all of its allegations, and also filed a reply to the answer of the defendants, setting up the deed from Jahu Lindly, and alleging that it conveyed only his half of the land, but that, if it purported to convey all, Mrs. Lindly understood it to convey only her husband's half, and, if she ever accepted or acted on it, she did so in that belief, and in ignorance of the fact that it affected her interest, and without any intention of giving up her interest; that she and her husband at the date of the deed were over 80 years of age, and her life expectancy so short that a life interest was of but little value, while her community interest was worth $15,000, and that Jahu Lindly and his wife continued thereafter to live together as husband and wife in the possession and use of the land for 6 or 7 years, and until his death. On the 7th day of May, 1907, the motions to strike out the answer of Jernigan as next friend were overruled, and exceptions were reserved. The record contains nothing showing affirmatively what was or was not done by the court, in acting on the motion, to ascertain the facts upon which might depend the propriety of allowing Jernigan to act in the capacity of next friend for Mrs. Lindly. The cause was tried by jury, and was submitted to them upon special issues, one of which directed them to find whether or not, at the date of the deed from her to plaintiff, April 6, 1906, she was incapable of understanding and appreciating her property rights to such an extent as to render her unable to exercise her free and unbiassed will with respect to same, and another of which stated this question: "At the time of the execution of the deeds by Sallie Lindly to John Lindly, on the 6th day of April, 1906, did Sallie Lindly have sufficient mental capacity to understand and appreciate her property rights and the nature and effect of said deeds"—both of which were answered by the jury in the negative. Issues were also submitted intended to determine the effect of the deed of Jahu Lindly to Sallie Lindly and certain of their children. The facts found by the jury concerning that deed were, in substance, that it was delivered and assented to by all of the grantees, and that Mrs. Lindly accepted it and claimed the land under it, but that she did not know or believe that the acceptance of it would in any way affect her community interest in the land.

The plaintiff in error complains of the overruling of his motion to strike out the plea of Asa Jernigan wherein, as next friend, he attempted to represent Mrs. Lindly. The facts set up in the plea undoubtedly were such as to make it proper for the court, if it found them to be true, to see that her interests were properly protected by some fit person. Article 1211, Rev. St. 1895, requires the appointment of guardians ad litem for minors, lunatics, idiots, or persons non compos mentis where they are defendants. Mrs. Lindly was neither, unless, by a liberal interpretation of the words "non compos mentis," they could be held to embrace a person whose mental condition is such as hers was alleged to be. It is unnecessary that this be definitely determined, for reasons which will be stated later. But we may say that the rules of practice in courts of equity permit the representation by next friend of parties to suits who, though not non compos mentis, are, by reason of mental or bodily infirmity, incapable of properly caring for their own interests in the litigation (Lamb v. Lamb [N. J.] 23 Atl. 1009; Owings' Case, 1 Bland [Md.] 370, 17 Am. Dec. 311; Howard v. How- ard, 87 Ky. 616, 9 S. W. 411, 1 L. R. A. 610; Isle v. Cranby, 199 Ill. 39, 64 N. E. 1063, 64 L. R. A. 513, and authorities cited in note to last case); and it would seem that, where the court permits this to be done, and there is no other objection to the proceeding but that the representative was not expressly appointed as guardian ad litem, this ought not to furnish sufficient reason for disturbing the judgment.

It is urged that it was not competent for the court, upon the mere allegation of the incapacity of Mrs. Lindly, which was controverted by her, to take from her the management of her own affairs without inquiry into the truth of the allegation. If she were the party complaining, and the record showed that which is assumed in the contention, that the court made no such inquiry, it may be that it would have to be sustained. In the cases of Howard v. Howard and Isle v. Cranby, supra, conditions very similar to those in this record were presented. In the first case Mat Howard, as next friend of Elijah Howard, brought suit against John Howard for the purpose of setting aside a deed executed to him by Elijah Howard, on the ground that the latter when he made it was, from age and disease, too weak in mind to understand its nature and to resist the arts of the grantee, who exercised them for the purpose of defrauding the grantor into making it. Elijah Howard filed an affidavit that he was not of weak or unsound mind; that he understood the nature of the deed; that it was for a valuable consideration, and he wished it to stand; that the suit was instituted without his authority, and he wished it dismissed. He accordingly moved the court to dismiss it, but the court overruled his motion. He then tendered and asked leave to file an answer, in which he set up the same facts, but the court overruled the motion to file it. In the other case Isle, as next friend of Henrietta Sackman, presented a bill against Cranby to compel the latter to account for property in her possession belonging to Sackman, which bill was accompanied by a motion for the appointment of Isle as next friend to represent Sackman, on the ground that the latter, because of unsoundness of mind, was incapable of caring for her estate. The appointment was made and the bill was filed, and thereupon Sackman appeared by solicitor and moved the court to dismiss it. Isle, the next friend, then moved the court to set the motion to dismiss down for a hearing, for the purpose of determining the mental condition of Sackman. The court refused to do this, and dismissed the bill. Upon appeal the action taken in each case was held to be erroneous. In the first case by the Court of Appeals of Kentucky, and in the second by the Supreme Court of Illinois. Each court held that the jurisdiction of the trial court to entertain the suit by next friend was not ousted by the objection of the person represented, and both held that inquiry into the mental condition of that party should have been made in order to determine the propriety of allowing the next friend, rather than the person he assumed to represent, to control the proceeding. The Kentucky court used this language, which, in most part, was quoted with approval by the Illinois court: "The law presumes an adult person to be of sound mind and capable of managing his own affairs; and the mere fact that it is alleged, in a petition by a person styling himself 'next friend,' that a particular individual, who is an adult, is of weak or unsound mind, and not capable of taking care of his own affairs, does not destroy that presumption. Such petitions are brought in the name of the person alleged to be of weak or unsound mind, by his next friend; and it is to be presumed, in the absence of anything appearing to the contrary, that whatever consent to the bringing of the suit such person is capable of giving has been obtained, and that it is in fact his suit—for it is really in his name—and that he has obtained the consent of a friend as the most competent person, by whom he wishes his case to be conducted in order that his rights may be the better protected. But he makes known to the court that it is not his suit; that he is competent to take care of his own affairs; that the supposed friend is in fact an intermeddler. The court, in such a state of the case, is presented with the question, What is the proper course to pursue? The individual liberty of the person is involved. His right to dispose, by himself (provided he does not interfere with the rights of others), of his property, by sale, gift, or otherwise, as he pleases is at once recognized as an absolute right, which he cannot be deprived of by any court of the land—not even the highest—unless it be made to appear that he by age, disease, or other cause has ceased to be a man, by so far losing his mind as to be incapable of taking care of his property, and has become the victim of shrewd and designing persons. But when he puts in issue the fact that he has thus ceased to be a man, and has become a mere hulk, how is the fact to be determined? It seems to us that the issue which thus involves his personal liberty should be settled by his peers—a jury of his country, or for that purpose the chancellor should issue his writ out of chancery, directing an inquiry by a jury into the fact as to whether the mind of the person was so impaired by age, disease, or otherwise as to render him incapable of understanding and appreciating his property rights to such an extent as to render him unable to protect himself against designing persons; and, upon the verdict of the jury if in the affirmative, the chancellor should appoint a committee for the person, and allow him to prosecute the suit in his name; but, if the verdict should be in the negative, then the suit should be dismissed, unless the court, from the evidence before the jury, should deem it proper to take other steps in reference to the matter. It will be readily seen from what has been said that the chancellor erred in not, upon the issue raised by Elijah Howard, taking the course above indicated." The Illinois court reached the same conclusion as to the necessity of an inquiry, but held that it was permissible, either for the judge, acting as chancellor, to make it, or for the question as to mental capacity to be submitted to a jury. This would seem to be correct under the equity practice (Smith v. Carll, 5 Johns. Ch. [N. Y.] 118), but whether the right of trial by jury upon such an issue would exist under our law is a question of importance which we are not now called upon to decide.

If Mrs. Lindly herself were now before this court complaining of the action taken below, we should have difficulty in finding in the record affirmative evidence of error. All presumptions consistent with the record are in favor of right action on the part of the trial court, and parties claiming error must make it appear by the record. It does not appear that other action was invoked upon the question of Mrs. Lindly's mental condition, than that taken upon the motions to strike out Jernigan's plea, and, as to them, it only appears that they were overruled. It might be presumed that the court sufficiently inquired to inform itself of Mrs. Lindly's ability to act for herself. It is said that Jernigan was adversely interested, and it is true that, as the pleadings stood, he appeared to have interests through his wife adverse to the claims of Mrs. Lindly, and it is also true that courts should not allow the representation of parties to suits by those adversely interested, but should see that such representatives are not only disinterested, but are fit and competent. But it appears that Mrs. Jernigan in fact had no interest in the property in litigation, and admitted the fact in the course of the trial, having received her portion of her parents' estate before any of these controversies arose; and, for all the record discloses, this may have been brought to the attention of the court before it acted on the motions. But we are of the opinion that the plaintiff in error has no right to complain of the action taken in reference to Mrs. Lindly. This question also was decided in Howard v. Howard, before referred to. In that case Elijah Howard appealed, but died, and his heirs became parties in his stead before the appeal was decided, and asked that the judgment setting his deed aside be affirmed. The court held that John Howard, the grantee in the deed, could not complain of the error committed against Elijah, and that the only question remaining was as to the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the judgment annulling the deed. Since Mrs. Lindly did not appeal in this case, it may be assumed that she is satisfied with the judgment, and we cannot agree with the contention that there was no evidence to justify the cancellation of the deed from her to plaintiff in error. There was evidence to justify the submission of all of the special issues passed upon by the jury involving the validity of that deed.

The remaining contentions of plaintiff in error raise questions affecting the validity of the deed from Jahu Lindly to Sallie Lindly and others. The mere reading of the deed makes it evident, that it undertook to convey the entire title to the several tracts of land, and not merely the half interest of Jahu Lindly therein. It speaks for itself, and must operate according to its terms. There being no pleadings or evidence that it was executed in fraud of the rights of Mrs. Lindly, or that she was incapable of understanding its terms when it was delivered to and accepted by her, her testimony and the finding of the jury that she did not understand that it affected her community interest cannot be allowed to limit its effect.

It is further contended that such a deed between husband and wife is invalid in law. To this we do not assent. It must be admitted that the husband has power to convey to the wife community property and thereby make it her separate property. It must likewise be admitted that parents have power to make advancements or gifts to their children out of their community estate. When the property so advanced or given is land, the only person who can convey it is the husband. Hence, if Jahu Lindly had conveyed the entire estate in these lands to either the wife or the children, the deed could not be questioned on the ground merely of want of power in him to convey. In what way does the fact that with the consent of all parties such estate was divided into a particular estate for life and a remainder affect his power to convey it? It may be answered that, while the wife, because of her capacity to acquire and hold property in her separate right, has capacity to accept a deed from her husband which merely conveys to her, she has not capacity to agree to one by which the husband undertakes to convert her half interest in community property into a life estate in the whole and to convey the remainder to others. But this leaves out of sight the unquestioned power of the husband to convey to the children. Certainly that power includes the one to limit the grant to the children so that it will vest in them only the remainder preceded by the particular life estate vested in the wife. This power of conveyance in the husband is, of course, subject to a limitation that will restrain him from defrauding the wife of her rights in the community estate, but no case is made to defeat this deed upon such a ground. If there is any limitation but this upon his power to dispose of community lands, it is not found in the principle which denies the capacity of the wife to contract generally. The capacity which she has to take title through conveyances from the husband, which capacity is fully established by the decisions of this court, includes that to contract with him so far as it is involved in consenting to and accepting the deeds. We have no question in this case as to the power of the husband to divest her interest in community lands otherwise than by deed consented to and accepted by her, through which they have exercised their right to make provision for her and at the same time for their children. We can entertain no doubt of the existence of that power.

Finding no error which entitles plaintiff in error to a reversal, the judgment will be affirmed.

Affirmed.

HOLCOMB v. STATE.

(Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. Nov. 11, 1908.)

1. HOMICIDE (§ 49*)—"MANSLAUGHTER"—ACTS CONSTITUTING.

If, when he killed decedent, accused was incapable of cool reflection because of decedent's insulting language and conduct toward accused's wife, knowledge of which had just come to him, or if the unwarranted ejection of accused from decedent's house, accompanied by kicks from decedent, infuriated accused beyond cool reflection, resulting in the killing, the killing was "manslaughter."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. § 73; Dec. Dig. § 49.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 5, pp. 4338-4342; vol. 8, p. 7715.]

2. HOMICIDE (§ 116*)—SELF-DEFENSE—FACTS CONSTITUTING.

If, in addition to unwarrantedly ejecting accused from decedent's house, accompanied by kicks, decedent made a movement to draw a pistol just before accused killed him, the killing was in self-defense.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 158-162; Dec. Dig. § 116.*]

3. HOMICIDE (§ 300*)—INSTRUCTIONS.

In a trial for homicide, committed while decedent was ejecting accused from decedent's home, to which he had been invited, it was improper, after instructing that decedent could eject accused, using only such force as was reasonably necessary, to fail to submit the law applicable, if the ejection was unwarranted, where accused merely said to his wife, when she desired to go home, that he was not going away, whereupon decedent, without requesting accused to leave, told him he must not raise any trouble, and then immediately ejected him violently.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. § 623; Dec. Dig. § 300.*]

4. HOMICIDE (§ 49*)—MANSLAUGHTER—COMMUNICATED INSULTS.

One accused of homicide could rely upon decedent's insults to accused's wife, communicated to accused just before the homicide, as showing that the killing was only manslaughter.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. § 73; Dec. Dig. § 49.*]

5. HOMICIDE (§ 40*)—DEFENSES—INSULTS.

One relying upon decedent's insulting conduct to mitigate a homicide charge, must show that the killing happened immediately upon the giving of the insults, or as soon as accused met decedent after being informed of his conduct.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. § 73; Dec. Dig. § 40.*]

6. HOMICIDE (§ 295*)—INSTRUCTIONS—INSULTS TO WIFE.

In a prosecution for murder, where the defense was insulting remarks to defendant's wife, an instruction that any testimony as to statements or insinuations as to defendant's wife, by witnesses named, as to what deceased said to them, which were not communicated to defendant, was admissible only to show the credibility of the statement of defendant that his wife informed him that she had been insulted by decedent; and that defendant cannot predicate a defense of manslaughter on communicated insults is erroneous in limiting the purpose of this testimony, and as depriving defendant of his defense of manslaughter on communicated insults.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. § 609; Dec. Dig. § 295.*]

Appeal from District Court, Fannin County; Ben H. Denton, Judge.

J. H. Holcomb was convicted of manslaughter, and he appeals. Reversed and remanded.

F. J. McCord, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

DAVIDSON, P. J. Appellant was convicted of manslaughter, his punishment being assessed at three years and six months confinement in the penitentiary.

In substance, the facts disclose that appellant and deceased lived neighbors within 300 or 400 yards of each other, that their families were on very friendly and rather intimate terms, and visited each other almost daily. The day preceding the homicide at night defendant and his wife took dinner with the family of deceased, and were at the residence of the deceased on the night of the homicide, in pursuance of an invitation to attend a social function at the residence of deceased, and that it was during this social gathering the homicide occurred. Prior to the homicide, for some time, the deceased had been making remarks of a very insulting nature in regard to appellant's wife, to the effect that he had been having carnal intercourse with her. These remarks had not been brought to the attention of appellant prior to the homicide. On the night of the homicide, shortly before it occurred, the wife of the deceased called appellant off in one of the rooms of the house, and informed him of the fact that there was something wrong between her husband and his (appellant's) wife; that she had written evidence of that fact, in the form of a note or letter written by deceased to appellant's wife, or by appellant's wife to the deceased. The record does not seem very clear which wrote the note or letter. Appellant refused to believe this, and informed the wife of the deceased that he would have to be shown evidence of this fact, and turned away and left her. After leaving the wife of deceased he went into the room north of where the dancing was in progress. The deceased came into the room where appellant was, or at least they seemed to have entered the room about the same time, the deceased having just finished dancing a set with appellant's wife in the adjoining room. Appellant's wife came to him while he was standing in the room a few feet away from the deceased, and insisted on their going home. He declined, saying he was not in a hurry about it; that they would go after a while. She made a statement to appellant to the effect that deceased had insulted her. The deceased was sitting on the bed, noticing the fact that appellant and his wife were talking. Then came up a conversation between appellant and deceased. Several witnesses testified to this conversation. They did not altogether present it in the same language. We will take the following evidence as fairly illustrative of this conversation: One of the witnesses, while on the stand, after going over this matter a time or two, in examination and cross-examination, was asked by the county attorney this question: "Now, I want to get it clear before this jury, what was the first word that was spoken by Mrs. Holcomb, the defendant, or the deceased that you heard that began this conversation? A. Well, I can commence and tell you just like I heard it, and just like they spoke it. Mr. Holcomb's wife came up to him and said, 'Let's go home,' and Jim said, 'Don't be in any hurry; it is early yet.' She said something else that I cannot recall right now what it was. He said, 'I never come here, and I hain't going away,' and Mr. Williams (deceased) said to him, 'Jim, you are welcome here.' Jim said, 'I know it, if I had not known it, I would not have been here,' and then something else was said. His wife said something else to him, and he made this remark that he never come here, and was not going away, the second time, and Ben said to him, 'Jim, you hain't going to start anything here,' and Jim said, 'No; I don't know that I am. I could if I wanted to,' and Williams (deceased) looked up at him, and got up and started over to him, and said, 'I will show you what you can do,' and took hold of him (appellant) and put him out of the house." Some of this conversation between appellant, who was called Jim, and his wife is not narrated by this witness, but was brought out by the defendant. It shows his (appellant's) wife, at the time deceased interfered with their conversation, or rather began his conversation with appellant, had just told her husband of the insult by deceased to her. The deceased put appellant out of the house, kicking him, perhaps, as many as three times as he put him out. The evidence seems to indicate that appellant did not resist. Upon reaching the door, deceased shoved appellant out, and kicked him again, whereupon appellant fired at deceased, which resulted fatally. There were two shots fired, the second shot striking deceased in the right shoulder. There are quite a number of facts and circumstances in the case which show there had never been any previous difficulty between the parties, but on the contrary the families had been on very intimate terms, which we deem unnecessary now to recapitulate. Appellant's testimony goes further, in regard to the transaction occurring at the door at the time the shot was fired, and is to the effect that, when deceased pushed him out of the door and kicked him, he (deceased) threw his right hand to his side as if to get a pistol, stating that he intended to kill him, and that it was then he (appellant) fired the shot at deceased. Appellant testified that he had the utmost confidence in his wife and in her loyalty to him, as well as in her chastity, and that the communication from Mrs. Williams, wife of deceased, worried him, and while thinking over this, his wife came to him in a few moments with the statement that deceased had just insulted her, with language which we deem unnecessary here to state. This is a sufficient statement of the case.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

The evidence, as we understand it, presents manslaughter from two standpoints, and self-defense. If appellant's mind was agitated so that it was incapable of cool reflection on account of the insulting language, conduct, etc., that had just been communicated to him by Mrs. Williams and his wife, and this was the cause of the killing, it would be manslaughter, or if, under the circumstances, the seizure of appellant by deceased and putting him out of his house and inflicting the kicks upon him infuriated his mind beyond cool reflection, and the killing occurred, it would be manslaughter. If, in addition to the ejection from the house, accompanied with the kicks, and followed by a demonstration or movement to draw a pistol, appellant fired, it would be self-defense. The two issues in regard to manslaughter should have been affirmatively presented to the jury. The court instructed the jury that an assault and battery causing pain or insulting words, etc., would constitute manslaughter, with the other elements being present. The charge, then, is fairly full in regard to insulting conduct, and the court, in further charging on the question of manslaughter, said that any other and all other circumstances, etc., might be taken into consideration in arriving at the condition of defendant's mind, in connection with all the facts and circumstances, etc. We think upon another trial the court should affirmatively present these matters to the jury, to the effect that they may understand that either provocation was sufficient to reduce to manslaughter, the sudden passion being present in appellant's mind.

The court charged the jury as follows: "You are further instructed that the deceased would have the right to put the defendant out of his (deceased's) house, but he would have the right to use only such force, and no more, as was reasonably necessary in doing so, and in this connection you are instructed that, if the deceased used more force than was reasonably necessary in putting the defendant out of the house, if he did put him out, then the defendant would have the right to defend himself, and to use whatever force was necessary to prevent such ejection." The testimony, if any there be, that a condition had arisen that justified deceased in putting appellant out of his house, was very slender. We have stated practically the matter as it arose, and the provocation, if any there was, arousing the deceased's anger and upon which he acted in ejecting appellant. Appellant and appellant's wife were invited guests of deceased and his wife to enjoy the festivity of the evening and the little dance. Appellant himself did not dance, but his wife did, and she had danced that evening in one or two sets with deceased, and had just finished dancing a set with deceased only a moment or two before the fatal transaction. On this close line of testimony it may be doubted whether appellant had done anything which justified or authorized deceased in becoming angry and ejecting appellant from the house, yet the court informs the jury that deceased had the right to put appellant out of his house, and could use legitimate or necessary force to do so. If appellant had done nothing that would authorize or justify the deceased in making the attack upon him and ejecting him from the house, then deceased would not be justified in his course of conduct, but the court instructs the jury that deceased had the right, and of course this means the legal right. This is predicated upon the fact that appellant was doing something that authorized the deceased to demand and require that he vacate his (deceased's) residence. Now this is assuming a fact against appellant, and basing a charge upon it detrimental to him before the jury, and this is emphasized especially, we think, in this case by reason of the fact that it is exceedingly doubtful if appellant had done anything which justified deceased in his attack upon him. As the court has seen proper to submit this issue to the jury, then he should have gone further, and submitted the law of the case where deceased was in the wrong in regard to the matter, on the theory if they should find appellant had not done anything justifying such assault and ejection. Appellant certainly was not an intruder. He was the guest of the deceased, and had done nothing, up to the very moment of the difficulty, and not even then, unless it be the statement to his wife that he did not come there, and he was not going away. Deceased had not requested appellant to leave, but said to him, "You must not raise any trouble here," and then immediately got up, making a remark indicating his purpose to do so, and ejected appellant violently from the house. Appellant seems not to have resisted. We think upon another trial, if this phase of the case is given in charge to the jury, then appellant's side of it, as made by the facts should also be submitted. Exception was reserved to the charge we have been discussing as being erroneous, and we are of opinion, under the facts, that it was, and hurtful. If deceased had the right to put appellant out of the house and use more force than was necessary, and hurt him, as appellant says, by kicking him in the stomach and knocking the breath out of him, this bore sharply, under this particular charge, on the issue of manslaughter; and the assumption on the part of the court that deceased had the right to eject appellant may, to some extent, account for the fact that the punishment is a year and a half in excess of the minimum punishment for manslaughter.

Another charge was given to which exception was reserved, which is as follows: "If you believe there is any testimony before you as to any declarations, statements, or insinuations about the infidelity or unchastity of the defendant's wife, by the witnesses John Littrell, Tom Berryhill, R. J. Harroll, J. N. McFarland, and Chris Roberts, as to what the deceased said to them, or either of them, and the same was not communicated to the defendant, then if you so believe, I instruct you that the only purpose for which such testimony was allowed to go before you was to show the credibility of the statement of the defendant, and to indicate the probable truth of the defendant's statement wherein he says that his wife informed him that she had been insulted by the deceased, and you are further instructed that the defendant cannot predicate a defense of manslaughter upon communicated insults." We are of opinion this charge was erroneous, first in limiting the purpose of this testimony, as was done; and, second, that it deprived appellant of his defense, or sought to do so, of manslaughter on "communicated insults." The court in the latter clause expressly instructed the jury that defendant could not predicate a defense of manslaughter upon communicated insults. The insults testified by these witnesses had not been communicated to appellant prior to the homicide. He knew nothing of them; had never heard of them. The only communicated insult of which appellant was aware at the time of the homicide was conveyed to his mind a few moments before the killing, first, by the wife of deceased; and, second, by his own wife. If appellant had any reason to be enraged on account of deceased's conduct towards and about his wife, it was upon communicated insults as above stated, first, by Mrs. Williams, wife of deceased, and, second, by his own wife. Motive could not be imputed to appellant on account of facts of which he was ignorant. The communication from his wife occurred at the very inception of the difficulty that terminated fatally, that with Mrs. Williams only a few moments before. Now, the court instructs the jury that appellant cannot defend for manslaughter on the ground of communicated insults. On the contrary, the statute expressly provides that he can kill under those circumstances, and be guilty of no higher offense than manslaughter. Where insulting conduct is relied upon by the accused, the evidence must show that the killing happened immediately upon giving the insults, or as soon as the accused meets with the slain party after he is informed of the conduct of the deceased. In the first instance, he may have heard the insulting words or witnessed the insulting conduct; in the second, which provides for the killing upon the first meeting, it would necessarily be on communicated insults. There is no contention in the case that the remarks made by deceased to Littrell and others were ever communicated to appellant until after the death of deceased. This charge is erroneous, first, in limiting the purpose of the testimony, as was done; and, second, in informing the jury that appellant could not rely upon communicated insults.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause is remanded.

PATE v. STATE.

(Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. Nov. 11, 1908.)

1. FENCES (§ 28*)—INDICTMENT—VARIANCE BETWEEN ALLEGATION AND PROOF.

Where a widow has legally qualified as the survivor in the community estate, she has absolute management thereof, under Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 2227, relating to the control of community property by the survivor; and hence, under Code Cr. Proc. 1896, art. 445, providing that, when property belongs to a decedent's estate, the ownership in a criminal action may be alleged in the executor, administrator, or heirs, in a prosecution for breaking and injuring a fence on the community property, there was no variance between an allegation of ownership in the widow and proof that the fence belonged to her jointly with children and grandchildren of decedent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fences, Dec. Dig. § 28.*]

2. FENCES (§ 28*)—BREAKING AND INJURING—EVIDENCE—CONSENT OF OWNER.

Evidence in a prosecution for breaking and injuring a fence held to show lack of consent of the owners.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fences, Dec. Dig. § 28.*]

Appeal from Williamson County Court; Chas. A. Wilcox, Judge.

M. Pate was convicted of unlawfully breaking and injuring a fence, and appeals. Affirmed.

Dan S. Chessher, D. W. Wilcox, John Dowell, and J. F. Taulbee, for appellant. F. J. McCord, Asst. Atty. Gen., and J. E. Neal, Co. Atty., for the State.

RAMSEY, J. Appellant was charged by information in the county court of Williamson county with unlawfully breaking and injuring the fence of one Mrs. M. L. Dimmitt, which was averred to be under the management and control of Wm. Wood under a lease contract, without the consent of Mrs. Dimmitt or of Wood, or either of them. On trial he was convicted, and his punishment assessed at a fine of $10. The opinion of the court on a former appeal will be found in 46 Tex. Cr. R. 483, 81 S. W. 787. There are a number of questions raised on the appeal; but only two are treated in appellant's brief, and these are the only substantial issues arising in the case.

1. It is claimed that the verdict of the jury was contrary to the law and the evidence, in that the fence in controversy was alleged to be the property of Mrs. M. L. Dimmitt, while from the statement of facts it appears that the fence in question belonged to her and other parties jointly, and that before a conviction could be had it was necessary to allege all the owners of the property and their lack of consent to the breaking. To sustain this proposition, the following authorities are submitted: Tanner v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 50 S. W. 347; Keizewether v. State, 34 Tex. Cr. R. 513, 81 S. W. 395; Anderson v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 29 S. W. 786; Govitt v. State, 25 Tex. App. 420, 8 S. W. 478; Brumley v. State, 12 Tex. Cr. App. 609. The testimony shows that on November 27, 1879, a tract of land on which the fence in controversy stood, consisting of 532 acres, was conveyed by L. D. Puckett and wife to John J. Dimmitt, who was the husband of Mrs. M. L. Dimmitt, and who had died many years before the commission of the offense alleged in this case. It was further shown by the testimony of Mrs. Dimmitt that at the date of her husband's death he left surviving him seven children, two of whom were alive at the date of the trial, as well as several grandchildren. There are many authorities sustaining the general proposition contended for by appellant, and the authorities cited by him and above referred to undoubtedly do sustain his position in respect to the general rule that, where an offense such as this is charged, the ownership of the property must be accurately alleged and the want of consent of all the owners negatived in the indictment. We do not believe, however, as applied to the facts in this case, that there was any error in the action of the court in holding the proof sufficient. Article 445 of the Code of Criminal Procedure of 1895, among other things, contains the following provision: "When the property belongs to the estate of a deceased person, the ownership may be alleged to be in the executor, administrator or heirs of such deceased person, or in any one of such heirs." In this case the record showed that Mrs. Dimmitt had in due time and in accordance with law qualified as the survivor in the community estate of herself and husband. This, therefore, clothed her with absolute management of the estate as fully and completely as she would have been if made by will the independent executor of her husband's estate, with full power and management. She was, so far as control, management, lease, or sale, the sole owner of the estate, and no one, not even the heirs of the deceased husband, could control or affect her acts of ownership over the property. See Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 2227; Watkins v. Hall, 57 Tex. 8. We think, on reason and authority, that the ownership in Mrs. Dimmitt was properly alleged, and that there was no such variance as to affect the validity of the judgment of conviction.

2. It is urged that the proof did not show the lack of consent of the breaking on the part of Wood. In this counsel for appellant are in error. Among other things, Mr. Wood, in his testimony, says: "The west string of the fence of the pasture which I have leased, which is the fence that separates this pasture from defendant's pasture, has been cut or pulled down a number of times since I first leased this pasture, and without my consent." There are other facts testified to by him, such as a conference and a protest to appellant, from which a lack of consent is a necessary and inevitable inference.

There are no other questions arising on the appeal requiring discussion.

Finding no error in the judgment of conviction, it is ordered that the judgment of the court be, and the same is hereby, in all things affirmed.

WHEELER v. STATE.

(Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. Nov. 18, 1908.)

CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1182*)—APPEAL—RECORD—REVIEW.

Where no error is presented by the record containing no statement of facts or bill of exceptions, the judgment will be affirmed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 3205; Dec. Dig. § 1182.*]

Appeal from Criminal District Court, Dallas County; W. W. Nelms, Judge.

Kid Wheeler, alias Black Chalk, was convicted of theft, and he appeals. Affirmed.

F. J. McCord, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

BROOKS, J. Appellant was convicted of theft, and his punishment assessed at two years' confinement in the penitentiary.

The record before us contains neither statement of facts nor bill of exceptions. No error is presented by the record, and the judgment is affirmed.

PATE v. STATE.

(Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. Nov. 11, 1908.)

1. STATUTES (§ 93*)—LOCAL LAWS—"GENERAL LAW."

Acts 30th Leg. (Laws 1907) p. 269, c. 139, providing for the drawing of jurors in counties having a city or cities of 20,000 population according to a certain census in a manner different from that provided for drawing jurors in other counties not similarly situated, was a general law, within the constitutional prohibition against the passage of any local or special law regulating the summoning of jurors.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Dec. Dig. § 93.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 4, pp. 3065-3071; vol. 8, pp. 7609, 7670.]

2. HOMICIDE (§ 190*)—EVIDENCE—THREATS.

In general, in every case of homicide, threats, whether communicated or uncommunicated, are admissible; and this is especially true where the issue is self-defense and the testimony leaves it doubtful as to who began the difficulty.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 399-413; Dec. Dig. § 190.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 940*)—NEW TRIAL—NEWLY DISCOVERED EVIDENCE.

Where, in a prosecution for homicide, the evidence was sharply conflicting as to how the difficulty originated, defendant claiming that he shot deceased as he was advancing with a knife, and a state's witness testified that deceased's knife was in her trunk at the time, newly discovered evidence of uncommunicated threats by deceased against defendant two days prior to the killing, and of a statement of the state's witness that as soon as defendant shot deceased she picked up the knife, was sufficient to entitle defendant to a new trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 940.*]

Appeal from Criminal District Court, Dallas County; W. W. Nelms, Judge.

El C. Pate was convicted of manslaughter, and he appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Thomas & Sewell and Crawford & Crawford, for appellant. F. J. McCord, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

DAVIDSON, P. J. Appellant filed a motion to quash the special venire, alleging that the law under which it was drawn was unconstitutional. The law referred to is the act of the Thirtieth Legislature (Laws 1907, p. 269, c. 139), which provides that those counties containing a city or cities having 20,000 inhabitants or more should draw grand and petit jurors differently from the manner of drawing them in other counties not similarly situated, to be determined by the census of 1900. This contention was held to be not well taken in the opinion of the majority of the court in the Bob Smith Case, 113 S. W. 289, decided at our recent Austin term, and in which a motion for rehearing was overruled at the present term. The writer dissented in that case, and is of the opinion still that this point is well taken; but, under the opinion of the majority of the court in the Bob Smith Case, the question must be decided adversely to appellant.

One of the grounds of the motion for a new trial is newly discovered testimony. Without going into a detailed statement of the evidence, the issue was sharply drawn on the trial as to who brought about or began the difficulty which ended in the death of the deceased. The witness Nettie Young fairly puts appellant in the wrong. The testimony of Hill and appellant makes it a case of self-defense on the part of appellant. We make this brief statement without going into the details of the testimony, because the evidence does present the issue sharply as to how the difficulty originated; that is, whether appellant was to blame for it, or the deceased, Lonnie Hall. The court charged murder in the first and second degree and manslaughter and self-defense. The jury convicted of manslaughter, allotting five years as a punishment. Among other affidavits setting up the newly discovered evidence is that of Sam Young, who states that he was acquainted with the deceased in his lifetime, and also knew appellant prior to the date of the homicide. The killing occurred on the 25th of April. On the previous 23d day of the same month, this witness swears, he overheard a conversation between the deceased and a person unknown to the affiant; that this happened on the corner of Main and Ervay streets, in the city of Dallas, Tex., and while Hall was talking he exhibited a knife, stating at the time, "There are two here against me, and, by God, I will get one or the other of them before Saturday night;" that the deceased further stated, in answer to a question addressed to him by his companion, that these two parties were Sam Young and El. C. Pate, appellant. Proper affidavits are also in the record showing that Sam Young did not communicate these statements and threats to the accused, and that, so far as he was concerned, neither appellant nor his counsel knew of these facts; and proper affidavits are presented in the record by the accused and his counsel that they knew nothing of these facts until after the conviction. There are affidavits of newly discovered testimony in the record from Mrs. Susan Tally, which is brought squarely within the rule of newly discovered evidence so far as diligence is concerned and want of knowledge on the part of appellant and his counsel. There may be some objection, perhaps, to the testimony of Mrs. Tally upon the ground that it would be impeaching in its nature. It is in respect to statements made by Nettie Young, the principal state's witness, to Mrs. Tally, a day or two after the killing. However, under the view we take of the case, it will be unnecessary to discuss this phase of the case, and the presence of Mrs. Tally can be secured upon another trial.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

We are of opinion that the motion for a new trial should have been granted upon the newly discovered testimony of Sam Young. These threats were uncommunicated. If they had been communicated prior to the homicide of course, it would not be newly discovered evidence; but it is shown by the affidavits to be newly discovered clearly and unequivocally. The rule is well settled that threats made by an injured party, accompanied by an act showing intent to execute them, will justify all necessary resistance by the party threatened. "Where the issue is of self-defense, and the testimony leaves it doubtful as to who began the difficulty, threats of the alleged injured party, made against the accused, are legitimate evidence, and may become of a most material character in assisting the jury to arrive at a correct conclusion as to who in fact did begin the difficulty, 'because the fact that such threats had been made would tend to show an attempt to execute them probable if the opportunity was offered,' 'and the more ready belief of the accused would be justified to the precise extent of this probability.'" Tankersley v. State, 31 Tex. Cr. R. 505, 21 S. W. 767; Stokes v. People, 53 N. Y. 164, 13 Am. Rep. 492; Keener v. State, 18 Ga. 194, 63 Am. Dec. 269; Pritchett v. State, 22 Ala. 39, 58 Am. Dec. 250; Campbell v. State, 16 Ill. 17, 61 Am. Dec. 49; Cornellus v. Commonwealth, 15 B. Mon. (Ky.) 539. It is also stated as a general proposition, with but few exceptions, in every case of homicide, threats, communicated or uncommunicated, are admissible in evidence, though in certain character of cases, where their exclusion could not possibly injure the rights of the defendant, it would not be error for the court to reject them. Stewart v. State, 36 Tex. Cr. R. 130, 35 S. W. 985. The same case lays down the proposition that in a case of homicide, whenever the evidence leaves it doubtful as to who began the difficulty or made the first hostile demonstration, evidence of uncommunicated threats, made by the deceased, is relevant as evidence tending to show which of the parties most likely began the difficulty. It was also further held in the same case that on a trial for homicide, where the testimony of the eyewitnesses was conflicting as to which of the parties, deceased or defendant, made the first hostile demonstration, it would be error to exclude evidence of uncommunicated threats made by the deceased. This rule seems to be practically universal. At least it is supported by an unbroken array of authorities in Texas. In addition to the authorities already cited, see Reeves v. State, 34 Tex. Cr. R. 488, 31 S. W. 382; Pitts v.

State, 29 Tex. App. 374, 16 S. W. 189; Stapp v. State, 1 Tex. App. 784. In his notes Judge White, in his Annotated Penal Code, thus states the rule: "When the evidence leaves it in doubt as to who began the difficulty, threats, whether communicated or not, may become evidence of the most material character, because the fact that they had been made would tend to show an intent to execute them probable, if opportunity offered."

Meeting another emergency or contention that might arise upon the trial, where there are two theories, the rule is again thus stated: "Where the case presented two theories—one of unprovoked murder; the other, self-defense—a second application for continuance to prove communicated threats made by the deceased should have been granted on the motion for new trial, though the evidence sought by the continuance was somewhat cumulative." Gilcrease v. State, 33 Tex. Cr. R. 619, 28 S. W. 531. So, from the rules enunciated under the decisions, we are of opinion that the court should have granted a new trial on account of the newly discovered evidence. The reasons in the case suggested by the testimony are cogent why this should have occurred. The state's witness Nettie Young makes it apparent that the deceased was her lover; that she had separated from more than one husband while she was yet under 20 years of age; that the last one from whom she had separated was Sam Young; that the deceased was her lover, to whom she would be married as soon as a divorce could be obtained from Sam Young; that the deceased had bought the dirk knife mentioned by her and other witnesses shortly before the homicide; and some of the facts go to show, in our judgment, that some of the animosity of the deceased was directed pointedly at the appellant. They were boarding at the same house; appellant taking his meals there and sleeping at another place, and the deceased taking his meals and sleeping in the house where the homicide occurred. The contention in the difficulty was in regard to the woman Nettie Young. Nettie Young makes a case that would have justified the jury in finding that appellant was in the wrong, while the testimony of Hill and appellant makes it clear that the deceased was in the wrong, and that he had drawn a dirk and was approaching appellant with the view of killing him at the time appellant fired the fatal shot, there being but one shot fired. Nettie Young testifies that appellant's knife was in her trunk at the time of the difficulty. Appellant testified that the deceased was approaching him with the knife at the time he shot. The witness Hill testified in substance that the deceased provoked the difficulty, or was in the wrong in bringing it on, and that when the shot was fired he heard something drop on the floor. The newly discovered testimony of Mrs. Tally is to the effect that Nettie Young told her in substance, as soon as appellant shot deceased, she picked up the knife. So under all the circumstances, under our authorities, we are of opinion that the newly discovered evidence of Sam Young was very material and was sufficient to require the award of the motion for a new trial.

There is another question presented for reversal that will not require discussion; that is, in regard to the misconduct of the jury in discussing the frequency of homicide cases in Dallas county, as well as reference to the Brown homicide case, and what ought to or would be done with him. This will not arise upon another trial, as it occurred in this case, and therefore a discussion of that question is pretermitted.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded.

JONES v. STATE.

(Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. Nov. 11, 1908.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 889*)—TRIAL—VERDICT.

Code Cr. Proc. 1895, art. 753, provides that, if a verdict is informal, with the consent of the jury the verdict may be reduced to proper form; and article 754 provides that, if the jury refuse to have the verdict altered, they shall retire and deliberate, unless the verdict is intended as an acquittal. The jury returned a verdict of guilty of murder in the first degree, assessing the punishment at 99 years in the penitentiary, and the court instructed that, there being no such punishment for murder in the first degree, they should further consider the verdict, after which they returned a verdict assessing the punishment at life imprisonment. Held no error.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2109-2112; Dec. Dig. § 889.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 730*)—TRIAL—ARGUMENT.

The state's attorney in argument stated that defendant not only murdered decedent, but also his wife, and the court instructed the jury not to consider the remarks, to which the state's attorney replied that he thought the state had proved that she also was killed, to which accused also objected. Defendant never asked that the matter be further withdrawn from the jury. Held, that the statements, under the circumstances, were not reversible error.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1693; Dec. Dig. § 730.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1059*)—APPEAL AND ERROR—EXCEPTIONS—SUFFICIENCY.

Exceptions which are stated generally, so that it would be necessary to go through the entire statement of facts to ascertain their relation to any supposed error, need not be considered on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2671; Dec. Dig. § 1059.*]

Appeal from Criminal District Court, Dallas County; A. S. Baskett, Special Judge.

Jim Jones was convicted of murder in the first degree, and he appeals. Affirmed.

F. J. McCord, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

DAVIDSON, P. J. A report of the former appeal of this case will be found in 51 Tex. Cr. R. 472, 101 S. W. 993. The punishment is the same, as shown by this record, as in the former appeal. Appellant reserved three bills of exceptions.

Contention is made in the first bill of exceptions that the court erred in overruling his challenge to the array in the special venire. The proceedings with reference to the selection of this jury were had in accordance with the act of the Thirtieth Legislature (Laws 1907, p. 289, c. 139). Practically the same contentions are made here as in Bob Smith's Case (recently decided by this court) 113 S. W. 289. On the authority of the opinion in that case, appellant's challenge to the array is not well taken.

The jury agreed upon and returned the following verdict: "We, the jury, find the defendant, Jim Jones, guilty of murder in the first degree as charged in the indictment, and assess his punishment at 99 years in the state penitentiary. W. L. Arant, Foreman." The court on his own motion instructed the jury that their verdict did not conform to the charge of the court, there being no such punishment, as found by them, for murder in the first degree, and directed their retirement and further consideration of the verdict. Appellant urged several objections to this: (1) That the court should have received the verdict as returned; (2) that he had no authority to further instruct the jury; (3) that he had no authority to retire the jury to further consider of their verdict, as they had already returned one; (4) that the verdict as returned was a legal finding of murder in the second degree, and was an acquittal of murder in the first degree; (5) that the said verdict constituted former jeopardy as against any subsequent or further verdict. It is further recited in the bill that a short time after the jury had retired, as directed by the court, they again returned into court with the following verdict: "We, the jury, find the defendant, Jim Jones, guilty of murder in the first degree as charged in the indictment, and assess his punishment at life imprisonment in the state penitentiary. W. L. Arant, Foreman." Subsequently the bill shows that appellant filed a motion in arrest of judgment as follows: (1) That the verdict of the jury originally and as first returned by the jury should be made the basis of the judgment in this cause; (2) that the last verdict of the jury returned assesses against the defendant a punishment unknown to the law. This was overruled by the court.

The action of the court was in compliance with the statute and decisions in this state. Article 753, Code Cr. Proc. 1895, reads as follows: "If the jury find a verdict which is informal, their attention shall be called to it, and with their consent the verdict may, under the direction of the court, be reduced to the proper form." Article 754 provides: "If the jury refuse to have the verdict altered, they shall again retire to their room to deliberate, unless it manifestly appear that the verdict is intended as an acquittal, and in that case the judgment shall be rendered accordingly, discharging the defendant." So it will be seen by the reading of these statutes that express authority is conferred upon the court to call the attention of the jury to any informality in the verdict, and have it, with their consent, reduced to the proper form. Such has been the ruling of the courts in Texas from the beginning in construing these statutes. It has been held that it is within the power of the court to have even a second verdict corrected by the insertion of a proper word; the jury of course, consenting. Taylor v. State, 14 Tex. App. 340. In Taylor's Case, which was a conviction of murder, the verdict found the accused guilty of murder in the first degree and assessed his punishment at 99 years in the penitentiary. The court in that instance had, with the consent of the jury, the verdict corrected, and the court upon appeal held that the verdict, being informal as to punishment, but contrary to the charge of the court, and not such finding as the court could receive, it was not only proper, but it was the duty of the court, to reject their verdict, call the attention of the jury to the charge, and send them out to consider again of their verdict. For a collation of authorities, see White's Ann. Code Cr. Proc. § 913. Without discussing this question further, we hold that there was not only no error, and the court was not only justified in ruling as he did, but it was proper and right that he should have done so.

Another bill recites that one of the state's attorneys in argument stated to the jury that defendant not only murdered Bob Lyles, but that he at the same time murdered Bob Lyles' wife, an innocent woman. The court instructed the jury that there was no evidence that defendant killed deceased's wife, and not to consider said remarks of counsel, to which counsel for the state replied that he thought the state had proved that she was killed. Appellant also objected to this. The court explains this bill by stating that, "when the remarks complained of were made and objected to by defendant's counsel, the court instructed the jury orally that they should pay no attention to the remarks, as there was no evidence before them that Bob Lyles' wife had been killed. The defendant never presented any written charge asking that the matter be any further withdrawn from the consideration of the jury." As we recall this record, there was no evidence before the jury that Mrs. Lyles was in fact killed. There is some evidence to the effect that she was shot at the same time and by the same discharge of the gun that killed her husband; but the record does not show that she died from it. Be this as it may, as the matter is presented, we are of opinion that it is not of sufficient importance to require a reversal of the judgment.

We have reviewed the bills presented by the record. There are some exceptions in a general way stated in the statement of facts, but in such a manner that the court is not called upon to go through the entire statement of facts and ascertain their relation to or bearing upon any supposed error. We have not reviewed the facts, or made a statement of the case, deeming it unnecessary. So far as the statement of the case is concerned, it is sufficiently stated in the report of the former appeal.

As the record is presented, we find no such error as requires a reversal of the judgment. It is therefore ordered that it be affirmed.

LARD v. STATE.

(Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. Nov. 18, 1908.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 686*) — TRIAL — RECEPTION OF EVIDENCE — COMPELLING CALLING OF EYEWITNESSES.

It was not error to refuse to force the prosecution to call eyewitnesses to testify, since it cannot be forced to call any particular witnesses in proving its case.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1570; Dec. Dig. § 686.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1170½*) — APPEAL — HARMLESS ERROR.

The admission of testimony to impeach a witness, even if it were incompetent, because too remote, was not reversible error, where the witness' testimony was immaterial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 3137; Dec. Dig. § 1170½.*]

Appeal from District Court, Falls County; Richard I. Munroe, Judge.

Tom Jack Lard was convicted of manslaughter, and he appeals. Affirmed.

F. J. McCord, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

BROOKS, J. Appellant was convicted of manslaughter, and his punishment assessed at two years' confinement in the state penitentiary.

Bill of exceptions No. 1 shows that after the state placed various witnesses on the stand it rested its case. Appellant complains, however, that none of the witnesses were present at the scene of the shooting, nor where they could have seen the shooting or could have heard what was said, and refers to the statement of facts for full testimony of these witnesses, and complains that the court erred in not forcing the state to put Robert Travis and Harry Miles, two eyewitnesses, upon the stand, who had seen all that occurred. There was no error in the ruling of the court. The state cannot be forced to introduce any particular witnesses in the proof of its case. The proof shows that appellant placed these same witnesses upon the stand himself.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

Bill of exceptions No. 2 shows that when Oscar Wright, a witness for appellant, was on the stand, the state sought to prove, and did prove, that the said Oscar Wright had been in the penitentiary for murder, sent from Van Zandt county. Appellant objected to the introduction of said testimony on the ground that the same had been more than 18 years ago, when the witness was a mere boy, and that since said time he had lived a blameless life, and the state had no right to go into this old offense for the purpose of impeaching the witness. The bill shows, however, that witness was released from the penitentiary in February following the flood, in 1899 or 1900. The trial took place in August, 1908. Even conceding, which we do not, that the testimony was too remote, yet the record shows that the testimony of the witness Wright was of such an immaterial character as not to constitute reversible error.

The charge, taken as a whole, is a proper presentation of the law applicable to the facts of this case. The evidence, though quite conflicting, justifies the verdict of the jury.

Finding no error in the record, the judgment is affirmed.

ROBINSON v. STATE.

(Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. Nov. 18, 1908.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1181*)—APPEAL—DISMISSAL—LACK OF SENTENCE.

An appeal from a conviction will be dismissed, where there was no sentence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1181.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1023*)—APPEAL—DECISIONS REVIEWABLE.

Under the statute the Court of Criminal Appeals is not authorized to affirm or reverse a judgment in a criminal case, except in death penalties, without sentence having been passed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2596; Dec. Dig. § 1023.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 979*)—TRIAL—SENTENCE—JURISDICTION.

Where, on conviction for an offense, no sentence was pronounced, the court could pronounce sentence at a subsequent term, notwithstanding an affirmance of the judgment on an intervening appeal; such affirmance being illegal for want of sentence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2490; Dec. Dig. § 979.*]

Appeal from District Court, Brazos County; J. C. Scott, Judge.

Jim Robinson was convicted of an offense, and he appeals. Affirmed.

See, also, 105 S. W. 500.

F. J. McCord, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

DAVIDSON, P. J. During the Tyler term, 1907, the judgment in this case was affirmed, 105 S. W. 500. The mandate was issued on the 29th of November, 1907. It was subsequently discovered that there had not been a sentence. At the next term of the district court of Brazos county this was called to the attention of the court, and appellant was sentenced.

There are several contentions by appellant that this could not be done. The judgment had been affirmed by this court. It was not discovered or noticed on the former appeal that sentence had not been included in the transcript of the record, and the judgment was affirmed. Had the want of sentence been called to the attention of the court, or if it had been discovered, the appeal would have been dismissed for want of sentence. An inspection of the record on the former appeal discloses that the index shows that the sentence had been entered. No point having been made at the time in regard to the matter, it was not noticed. However, inasmuch as the jurisdiction of the court had not attached on former appeal, that affirmance is not legal. Under this state of case appellant could not complain. As we understand our statutes, this court would not be authorized to affirm or reverse a judgment, except in death penalties, without the sentence having been passed upon appellant. We are therefore of opinion that the trial court was correct under our statute in passing the sentence at the subsequent term. The statute expressly authorizes this character of proceeding, where sentence has for any reason not been pronounced at the term of conviction.

So far as the merits of the case are concerned, and the questions involved, we are of opinion that, as stated in the former opinion, there are no errors requiring a reversal of the judgment, and adopt now what we said in the former opinion, and order that the judgment be affirmed.

FARRIER v. STATE.

(Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. Nov. 18, 1908.)

HIGHWAYS (§ 164*)—OBSTRUCTION—CRIMINAL RESPONSIBILITY—EVIDENCE.

Evidence considered, and held insufficient to support a conviction of willfully obstructing a public road.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Highways, Cent. Dig. § 451; Dec. Dig. § 164.*]

Appeal from Bowie County Court; Sam H. Smelser, Judge.

J. W. Farrier was convicted of willfully obstructing a public road, and appeals. Reversed and remanded.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

Hart, Mahaffey & Thomas, for appellant.
F. J. McCord, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

DAVIDSON, P. J. Appellant was convicted of willfully obstructing a public road; his punishment being assessed at a fine of $25.

It is shown, substantially, by the facts, that the jury of review made a report to the commissioners' court, showing where they had located a road in accordance with an order issued to them by said court. The county surveyor, Johnson, was with them and surveyed the land. It is a question of fact between Johnson on one side and the jury of review to some extent, on the other, that he (Johnson) informed them, at the time he surveyed the land for the proposed line of road, that the field notes he had in regard to locations of appellant's lines were not correct. Subsequently he got correct field notes and resurveyed the land, and told Mr. Bassett, one of the jury of view, that the later surveyed line was the correct one, and to so inform the other members of the jury. Appellant sold to the county land immediately south and running parallel with his north boundary line. Mr. Bassett, on the north, gave 15 feet on his side of the division line between himself and appellant; appellant selling to the county 15 feet on the south side of his north line, which was the division line between himself and Bassett. The field notes show that the land runs along this division line and calls for appellants line. The jury, in awarding damages, made the following report:

Name of Landowner.	Description of Land.	Damages.
J. W. Farrier	15 feet on the north side $\frac{24}{100}$ on an acre on the north line	\$10
R. A. Dalby	15 feet on the north side $\frac{35}{100}$ of an acre on the north line.....	\$10
Total damages.....		$20

This report is in accord with the field notes, and it shows that the jury of review were paying appellant $10 for the 15 feet along and parallel with his north boundary line. Appellant complained, in regard to the location of the road, that it was not laid out on the land he sold to the county, and before the road was "cut out" Mr. Johnson, the surveyor of the county, upon inquiry made by appellant of him, indicated to him (appellant) the ground where he could place his north fence without interfering in any way with the land that he had sold the county, or in any way obstructing the proposed public road. This seems not to have been controverted, and under the location pointed out to him by the surveyor appellant placed his line of fence, which is shown by Johnson to be clearly outside of and south of the 15 feet sold the county for the road. It does not seem to be clearly indicated when the road was "cut out." The report was made by the jury on the 28th of June, 1906. The obstruction is charged to have occurred on the 6th day of March, 1907. Appellant himself testified that he had no intention of obstructing the public road; that he had sold land to the county, and he took the advice of the county surveyor as to where the dividing line between himself and the county land was situate, and followed the instructions and advice of the county surveyor.

Without going into a discussion of how far the county might be bound to confine itself to the land sold, we are of opinion that the evidence does not indicate with sufficient cogency that appellant willfully obstructed the road. The evidence shows, by the report of the commissioners, setting out the field notes, as well as their allowance of $10, that appellant had sold to the county 15 feet of his land lying contiguous to and adjoining his north boundary line. It is not controverted, as we understand the record, that appellant's fence is more than 15 feet away from his north boundary line, and that he used all necessary caution in the location of his fence, so that he might avoid coming in contact with the county road or in any way obstructing it. We further believe this testimony excludes the idea of willfulness.

Because we are of opinion that the evidence is not sufficient to justify this conviction, the judgment is reversed, and the cause is remanded.

YOUNG v. STATE.

(Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. Nov. 18, 1908.)

BURGLARY (§ 46*)—INSTRUCTIONS—APPLICABILITY TO EVIDENCE.

Where, in a prosecution for burglary to commit theft, there was no explanation of defendant's possession of the stolen property, and the case did not rest alone on such possession, the court was not required to charge specifically as to the recent possession of stolen property.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Burglary, Cent. Dig. § 118; Dec. Dig. § 46.*]

Appeal from District Court, Smith County; R. W. Simpson, Judge.

Jim Young was convicted of burglary, and he appeals. Affirmed.

F. J. McCord, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

RAMSEY, J. Appellant was indicted in the district court of Smith county on a charge of burglary. The indictment alleges, in substance, that he broke and entered a house owned by one Joel Eaton with intent to commit the crime of theft. The evidence in brief shows that about the time alleged in the indictment Joel Eaton, with his family and with most of the other white neighbors near him, went fishing; that at the time the door of the house entered, which was a little log house, was fastened with an iron hasp over a staple and with a lock over the staple; that on his return the fastening was broken, and among other things three middlings of meat had been stolen. Some time after this he made application for a search warrant, under authority of which he searched the house and premises of appellant, without at the time finding anything he could identify. Subsequently, on information received, he made another search, and found in defendant's house a part of one middling of meat, which he identified by the string by which it had been tied and by certain other marks on it, leaving little or no doubt of the accuracy of the identification. There are numerous other circumstances in the case tending to connect appellant with the transaction which we deem unnecessary to state.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

Appellant relies, among other things, upon an alibi and the suggestion that the meat had been stolen by one Prior Knight. The court submitted all these issues to the jury very fully and fairly, instructing the jury, among other things, that if they believed that Knight had entered the house, or if they had a reasonable doubt thereof, they would acquit appellant. It was also claimed by the appellant that the piece of meat in question had been left by Knight and in his absence. The court instructed the jury that if they found from the evidence that Knight carried the piece of meat to appellant's house, or if they had a reasonable doubt as to this fact, they would acquit appellant. He also submitted the issue of alibi in an unexceptionable charge, and in connection with the whole case gave a correct charge on the law of circumstantial evidence. Indeed, there is little or no objection to the charge made in the motion for a new trial. The objection was made that the court failed to give to the jury a plain and specific charge on the possession of recently stolen property, explaining the law applicable to evidence of possession. There was no explanation given by appellant of his possession of the stolen property, nor did the case rest alone upon his possession thereof, and there was no occasion for the court to charge in respect to this testimony. The case is essentially one of fact.

Reading the record carefully, as we have done, we are strongly impressed with the fact that appellant is guilty. In any event it cannot be said that there was no evidence to justify the judgment of conviction. So believing, it is ordered that the judgment be, and the same is hereby, in all things affirmed.

FRENCH v. PROVIDENT DRUG CO.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Nov. 11, 1908.)

CONTRACTS (§ 245*)—CONTRACT IN LIEU OF ORIGINAL CONTRACT—EFFECT.

A new contract, entered into in settlement and in lieu of a prior contract, precludes an action to cancel the prior contract on the ground that it was procured by fraud or mistake.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. § 1129; Dec. Dig. § 245.*]

Appeal from Brown County Court; A. M. Brumfield, Judge.

Action by Robert French against the Provident Drug Company. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Arch Grinnan, for appellant.

KEY, J. Appellant brought this suit to cancel a contract and recover the consideration paid by him to the defendant. After hearing all the testimony, the trial court instructed a verdict for the defendant, and the plaintiff has appealed.

We have considered all the assignments presented, and find no reversible error. If the original contract was procured by fraud or mistake, which we need not decide, the uncontroverted proof coming from the plaintiff himself clearly sustained the defendant's answer alleging a new contract as a settlement and in lieu of the original contract. Such being the case, the plaintiff had no cause of action, and the court properly directed a verdict for the defendant.

Judgment affirmed.

FAULKNER v. TEXAS & N. O. RY. CO.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Nov. 11, 1908.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 177*)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—NEGLIGENCE OF FELLOW SERVANT—LIABILITY OF MASTER.

A master is not liable for injuries to a servant caused by the negligence of a fellow servant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 352; Dec. Dig. § 177.*]

2. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 101*)—FAILURE TO FURNISH SAFE APPLIANCES—LIABILITY.

A master, failing to furnish a reasonably safe appliance for his servant, is liable for injuries to the servant caused thereby.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 171, 172; Dec. Dig. § 101.*]

3. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 286*)—FAILURE TO FURNISH SAFE APPLIANCES—LIABILITY.

Where there was evidence that a bar with which a servant was to do his work was defective, and that by reason thereof it slipped, resulting in injury to the servant, the question whether the master was negligent in furnishing a defective bar was for the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 1010-1031; Dec. Dig. § 286.*]

Error from District Court, Harris County; W. P. Hamblen, Judge.

Action by H. Faulkner against the Texas & New Orleans Railway Company. There was a judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Reversed and remanded.

Breeding, Lewis & Norton, for plaintiff in error. Lane, Jackson, Kelley & Wolters and Baker, Botts, Parker & Garwood, for defendant in error.

FISHER, C. J. The court erred in not submitting to the jury the issue as to whether or not the defendant in error was guilty of negligence in furnishing the plaintiff with a defective bar with which to do the work he was then engaged in. There is evidence tending to show that the bar was defective, and by reason of the defect it slipped, which resulted in the accident from which the plaintiff sustained injuries.

We are inclined to the opinion that the plaintiff and the helper were fellow servants, and for the negligence of the latter he could not recover; but for the failure to furnish a reasonably safe appliance the master could be held liable, and for the error in not submitting that question the judgment will be reversed and the cause remanded.

It is unnecessary for us to pass upon the form of charge submitted by plaintiff in his brief, because on another trial the court will doubtless correctly instruct the jury on the issue to be decided.

Reversed and remanded.

WESTERN UNION TELEGRAPH CO. v. SMITH.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Oct. 28, 1908. Rehearing Denied Nov. 25, 1908.)

1. TRIAL (§ 125*)—MISCONDUCT OF ATTORNEY—ARGUMENT.

In an action for delay of a telegram, argument of plaintiff's counsel that the jury should punish the telegraph company, as that was the only way to make it do right, and that the damages sued for were not to pay plaintiff so much for his suffering as to punish the telegraph company and make it more careful, was prejudicial error.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 303-307; Dec. Dig. § 125.*]

2. EVIDENCE (§ 471*)—CONCLUSIONS.

Where a witness stated the facts on which he relied to show that he exercised ordinary diligence to reach his father as soon as he learned of his illness, it was error to permit him also to state his conclusion that he made the trip to reach his father before his death as quickly as he could.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 2149-2152; Dec. Dig. § 471.*]

Appeal from District Court, Colorado County; Munford Kennon, Judge.

Action by Jeff Smith against the Western Union Telegraph Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Geo. H. Fearons, Lewis & Austin, and Brown, Carothers & Brown, for appellant. Townsend, Ayers & Townsend and Adkins & Green, for appellee.

FISHER, C. J. This is a suit by Smith against the telegraph company for damages for failure to promptly deliver a message announcing the fact that his father was dangerously sick and in a critical condition. Verdict and judgment below went in favor of the plaintiff for $500, from which judgment the telegraph company has appealed.

The sixth assignment presents reversible error. It complains of the following argument made by counsel for plaintiff to the jury: "When these telegraph companies fail to deliver messages in time, you ought to punish them with your verdict. That is the only way to make them do right—to punish them. These damages sued for are not to pay plaintiff so much for his suffering, but to punish the telegraph company and make it more careful." Unless it can be said that the jury understood this argument as merely "buncombe," and an effort to tickle the ear of the audience, it must be assumed that it was intended to accomplish some purpose in influencing the jury. It was a direct appeal to the jury to return a verdict for damages as an infliction of punishment upon the telegraph company for failure to perform a duty that it owed to the plaintiff. Of course, this is not the law. In a case of this character, where the recovery is for actual damages, there should be allowed no appeal to the jury that the wrongdoer should be punished by awarding damages to the plaintiff. The question is merely one of compensation, and this the attorney who indulged in the argument must be presumed to have known. What effect the argument had upon the jury we have no means of ascertaining; but it is clear that it was calculated to have the effect which was evidently intended by the attorney who made it. That effect, of course, was to influence the jury to punish the telegraph company by a verdict for damages in favor of the plaintiff. The language is susceptible of no other construction.

As the case will be reversed for the reasons just stated, we call attention to the question raised in the seventh assignment of error. The witness, who stated that he made the trip to reach his father before his death as quickly as he could, detailed all the facts upon which that conclusion was based; and we suggest that upon another trial the witness be confined to a statement of the facts that he relied upon to show that he exercised ordinary diligence in his effort to reach his father, leaving the jury to determine the effect of these facts, and whether they are sufficient to show that he reached the bedside of his father as quickly as he could. We do not make this last question ground of reversal; but, having reversed the case, we think the court should guard the admission of the testimony in the way pointed out.

The remaining assignments present no reversible error; but for the error pointed out the judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded.

Reversed and remanded.

GULF, C. & S. F. RY. CO. et al. v. CUNNINGHAM et al.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. June 17, 1908. On Rehearing, Nov. 25, 1908.)

1. TRIAL (§ 169*)—DIRECTION OF VERDICT—CARRIAGE OF FREIGHT—INJURY.

Where, in an action against the initial and connecting carriers for injury to horses transported under a contract limiting the liability of each carrier to injury on its own line, there was no evidence that a connecting carrier was negligent or that the horses were injured while in its possession, and the shipper testified that no injury occurred while they were in the possession of the connecting carrier, the court properly directed a verdict in its favor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 381-384; Dec. Dig. § 169.*]

2. CARRIERS (§ 219*)—CONNECTING CARRIERS—CARRIAGE OF FREIGHT—LIABILITY.

In an interstate shipment of horses under a contract limiting the liability of each carrier to injuries on its own line, a connecting carrier is not responsible for any injuries to the horses before they were received by it nor for damages for injuries to them after they were received by it which was the direct result of their having been weakened or injured while in the custody of the initial carrier, though such damage did not develop until after delivery to the connecting carrier.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 950, 951; Dec. Dig. § 219.*]

3. TRIAL (§ 252*)—INSTRUCTIONS—APPLICABILITY.

It is not error to refuse to give a charge submitting an issue not raised by the evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 596; Dec. Dig. § 252.*]

4. TRIAL (§ 260*)—REQUESTED INSTRUCTIONS—INSTRUCTIONS COVERED BY CHARGE.

Where, in an action against a carrier for injury to a shipment of horses, the court charged that it was not responsible for injuries to live stock while in its custody caused by delays, unless the same were due to negligence, and that it was not responsible for delays reasonably necessary, the refusal to charge that damages for delays could not be recovered unless the delays were unreasonable and negligent was not erroneous, the request being substantially covered by the charge given.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 651; Dec. Dig. § 260.*]

5. TRIAL (§ 260*)—REQUESTED INSTRUCTIONS—INSTRUCTIONS COVERED BY CHARGE.

Where, in an action for injury to a shipment of horses, the court charged that it was the duty of the carrier to use ordinary care to furnish a reasonably safe and suitable car for the transportation of horses, and that a failure to do so was negligence, the refusal to charge that the carrier was not required to furnish a stable car, but only required to furnish a reasonably safe car, was not erroneous.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 651; Dec. Dig. § 260.*]

6. TRIAL (§ 260*)—REQUESTED INSTRUCTIONS—INSTRUCTIONS COVERED BY CHARGE.

Where, in an action against a carrier for injury to a shipment of horses, the court charged that for plaintiff to recover the jury must find that the carrier was negligent and that the horses were injured as the proximate result thereof, the refusal to charge that, unless the jury believed that rough handling of the horses was due to negligence which was the proximate cause of the injury, no damages could be awarded on account of rough handling, was not erroneous.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 651; Dec. Dig. § 260.*]

7. CARRIERS (§ 227*)—CARRIAGE OF FREIGHT—CONTRACTS—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

Where the petition in an action against a carrier for injuries to a shipment of horses alleged that the contract of shipment was made with station agents of the carrier and was ratified by a superior officer, it was permissible to show what the contract made with the station agents was, and that the same was ratified by a superior officer.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Dec. Dig. § 227.*]

8. TRIAL (§ 84*)—EVIDENCE—OBJECTIONS.

An objection to evidence which goes rather to its sufficiency than to its admissibility does not raise the question of the admissibility thereof.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Dec. Dig. § 84.*]

9. EVIDENCE (§ 543*)—OPINION EVIDENCE—COMPETENCY OF WITNESSES.

In an action against a carrier for injuries to a shipment of horses, witnesses testifying that they saw the horses on their arrival at their destination, and were acquainted with the market value of horses at such point, may testify as to what would have been the reasonable value of the horses had they arrived in a reasonably good condition, though the witnesses did not accompany the shipment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 2356; Dec. Dig. § 543.*]

10. CARRIERS (§ 182*)—CARRIAGE OF FREIGHT—INJURIES—ACTIONS—VENUE.

Under Acts 1890, p. 214, c. 125, as amended by Acts 1905, p. 29, c. 25, providing that, where freight has been transported by two or more railroad companies doing business or having an agent in the state, a suit for damages may be brought against all the carriers in any county in which either does business or has an agent, etc., an action against the initial and connecting carriers for injury to freight transported under a joint contract is properly brought in the county through which the road of the initial carrier extends and in which the connecting carrier, a foreign corporation, has an agent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Dec. Dig. § 182.*]

11. CARRIERS (§ 184*)—CARRIAGE OF FREIGHT—INJURIES TO FREIGHT—ACTION—PETITION.

A petition, in an action against the initial and connecting carriers for injuries to a shipment of horses, which alleges that the contract of shipment bound the carriers to transport the horses with reasonable care and to deliver the same to the shipper within a reasonable time, in reasonably good condition, that the horses were delayed in transit and roughly handled, and that inadequate facilities were furnished for feeding and watering en route, resulting in injury to the horses, is sufficient as against the objection of a connecting carrier that it does not show which carrier furnished the cars, or on what line the injuries occurred, or which carrier was guilty of the negligent acts.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. § 832; Dec. Dig. § 184.*]

12. CARRIERS (§ 184*)—CARRIAGE OF FREIGHT—INJURIES TO FREIGHT—ACTION—PETITION.

A petition, in an action against the initial and connecting carriers for injury to a shipment of horses, which alleges that the feed and watering pens of the connecting carrier were without troughs and water, and were in such a muddy condition that the horses could not be fed in them, and that as a result the horses suffered injuries, shows that the injury to the horses was caused by the negligence of the connecting carrier.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. § 834; Dec. Dig. § 184.*]

13. CARRIERS (§ 229*)—CARRIAGE OF FREIGHT—INJURIES—ACTIONS—DAMAGES.

Where a connecting carrier, when making the contract of carriage of horses, knew that the ultimate destination of the horses was a point beyond its line, it will be presumed that the contract was made in view of the market at the destination, and that it was contemplated by the parties that in the event of a breach the measure of the shipper's recovery would be controlled by such market.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Dec. Dig. § 229.*]

14. EVIDENCE (§ 417*)—PAROL EVIDENCE—MATTERS NOT PROVIDED FOR IN CONTRACT—CARRIAGE OF FREIGHT—INJURIES—ACTIONS—EVIDENCE.

Where a connecting carrier, when making a contract of carriage of horses, knew that the ultimate destination of the horses was a point beyond its line, in an action against it for injuries to the horses evidence of its knowledge of the final destination of the horses was admissible as against the objection that it varied the terms of the contract of shipment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 1893; Dec. Dig. § 417.*]

15. EVIDENCE (§ 543*)—OPINION EVIDENCE—WITNESSES—COMPETENCY.

Experienced shippers of horses, acquainted with the market value of horses at a designated point at the time of the arrival of a shipment of horses there, may testify as to the value of the shipment at such point, though they may have had knowledge of the average value of the horses at such point.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Dec. Dig. § 543.*]

16. CARRIERS (§ 211*)—CARRIAGE OF LIVE STOCK—CONTRACTS.

Where a carrier of live stock failed to furnish adequate facilities to feed and water the stock, the shipper, who had undertaken to procure feed and water for the stock, was not required to procure feed and water elsewhere.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. § 928; Dec. Dig. § 211.*]

17. CARRIERS (§ 211*)—CARRIAGE OF LIVE STOCK—CONTRACTS.

A stipulation, in a contract for an interstate shipment of live stock, which requires the shipper to feed and water the stock, is only reasonable and valid so long as the carrier furnishes reasonable facilities for so doing, and where no reasonable facilities are furnished at a place the provision is void as to that place, and the carrier must feed and water the stock, and it is liable for its failure so to do.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. § 928; Dec. Dig. § 211.*]

18. CARRIERS (§ 209*)—CARRIAGE OF LIVE STOCK—CARS—DUTY TO FURNISH SUITABLE CARS.

A carrier is bound to furnish a safe and suitable car for the transportation of live stock and is not relieved from liability for not doing so, though the shipper examined the car and did not object to its fitness.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. § 925; Dec. Dig. § 209.*]

On Rehearing.

19. EVIDENCE (§ 244*)—DECLARATIONS OF EMPLOYEES—ADMISSIBILITY.

The declarations of a railroad yard policeman, in the employ of the railroad company and in charge of a shipment of horses in the yard, directing and controlling their movements, as to the condition of the yard, made during the performance of his duties, are admissible and binding on the company.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 925; Dec. Dig. § 244.*]

20. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT (§ 22*)—PROOF OF AGENCY—EVIDENCE.

While agency cannot be proved by the declaration of the agent, such declaration is a circumstance in connection with other facts to prove agency.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Principal and Agent, Cent. Dig. § 40; Dec. Dig. § 22.*]

21. EVIDENCE (§ 258*)—DECLARATIONS—DECLARATIONS OF AGENT—ADMISSIBILITY.

Where there is evidence from which a jury may find agency, the declarations of the agent, made during the agency, in regard to the transaction connected therewith, are admissible as the declarations of the principal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 1006; Dec. Dig. § 258.*]

22. EVIDENCE (§ 258*)—DECLARATIONS OF AGENT—ADMISSIBILITY.

Where the fact of the existence of the agency was shown at the instance of the principal on his cross-examination of witnesses, the principal could not complain of admission in evidence of declarations of the agent made during the agency in regard to the transaction connected therewith.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 1006, 1007; Dec. Dig. § 258.*]

23. EVIDENCE (§ 241*)—DECLARATIONS OF AGENT—ADMISSIBILITY.

Statements of an agent, made at the time of the transaction, or as soon thereafter as to come within the rule of the res gestæ, are admissible.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 887; Dec. Dig. § 241.*]

24. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1051*)—HARMLESS ERROR—ERRONEOUS ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

The error, if any, in admitting evidence to establish a fact otherwise established, is not prejudicial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4161; Dec. Dig. § 1051.*]

25. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 877*)—DIRECTING VERDICT FOR CODEFENDANT.

Where, in an action against the initial and connecting carriers, the court charged that no damages could be awarded the shipper against any carrier except that which occurred on its own lines, the error, if any, in directing a verdict for one of the connecting carriers, was not prejudicial to another carrier.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 8568; Dec. Dig. § 877.*]

Appeal from Brown County Court; A. M. Brumfield, Judge.

Action by J. F. Cunningham and another against the Gulf, Colorado & Santa Fé Railway Company and others. From a judgment for plaintiffs against certain of the defendants, the latter appeal. Affirmed.

Baker, Botts, Parker & Garwood, C. L. McCartney, J. W. Terry, and A. H. Culwell,

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes for appellants. Oscar Calloway and Wilkinson & Lee, for appellees.

RICE, J. Appellees instituted this suit in the county court of Brown county against the Gulf, Colorado & Santa Fé Railway Company, the Texas & New Orleans Railway Company, the Louisiana & Western Railway Company, Morgan's Louisiana & Texas Railroad & Steamship Company, and the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company, to recover damages growing out of a shipment of 28 head of horses from Mullen, Tex., to Brewton, Ala., in February, 1905, alleging that all of said defendants were corporations, with agents or officers in this state; that the Gulf, Colorado & Santa Fé Railway Company had an agent in Brown county, Tex.; that the T. & N. O. Railway Company had its principal office in Harris county, Tex.; that the said Louisiana & Western Railway Company and Morgan's Louisiana & Texas Railroad & Steamship Company were foreign corporations, incorporated under the laws of Louisiana, but that each had agents representing them in the city of Houston, Harris county, Tex.; and that the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company was also a foreign corporation, incorporated under the laws of Kentucky, with an agent in Dallas county, Tex.; that at the date of said shipment said several lines of railway were operating their respective roads, giving the terminals of each, extending from Mullen, in Mills county, Tex., the initial point of said shipment, to Brewton, Ala., its ultimate destination, but that at said time each of said lines of railway connected at its point of origin directly with the terminus of the other, so that they together formed a continuous line of road from Mullen, Tex., to Brewton, Ala., and were then engaged in operating railroad trains over their respective lines of road for transportation of freight thereon; that on the 20th of February, 1905, plaintiffs entered into a contract with said Gulf, Colorado & Santa Fé Railway Company, by the terms of which it agreed to furnish plaintiffs at Mullen, Tex., with a reasonably safe stable car for the transportation of one car load of horses from Mullen to Brewton, Ala., to which place said defendant and its several connecting lines, by the terms of said contract, bound themselves to carry said horses; it was further agreed that the freight charges on said horses from Mullen to New Orleans was $126.50, which was paid by plaintiffs, and that the charge from New Orleans to Brewton, Ala., was $40 additional; that it was agreed that said horses were to be billed through to Brewton from Mullen; all of which facts were known to and approved by the superior officers of said Gulf, Colorado & Santa Fé Railway Company having authority and control over said matter, whose names were to plaintiffs unknown; that said shipment of horses was tendered to, received and transported by each of said several defendant companies over their respective lines of railway with full knowledge of the facts of said contract, and with full knowledge of their destination, and that they were designed for sale upon their arrival at Brewton, Ala., whereby they all became bound to transport said horses with reasonable care, speed, and diligence, and to deliver the same to appellees within a reasonable time thereafter, in a reasonably good condition, at their ultimate destination, notwithstanding which said shipment of horses was delayed in transit, roughly handled, inadequate facilities furnished for feeding and watering them en route, the feeding pens being allowed to become muddy and unfit for use, as well as a failure to furnish feed, by reason of all of which said horses were injured and greatly damaged.

The appellant Gulf, Colorado & Santa Fé Railway Company answered by general and special exceptions, general denial, and specially pleaded the provisions of the live-stock contract under which the horses were shipped and those provisions which limited the liability of the carrier to such loss or injury as occurred on its own line, and charged that there was no loss or injury while said stock was in its possession, and that the same were promptly delivered to the Texas & New Orleans Railway Company at Beaumont. It likewise pleaded under its contract that said stock were not to be transported in any specific time or delivered at destination at any particular hour for any particular market, and that the shippers contracted to take care of said stock en route, and that ample opportunity was afforded for this purpose.

The Texas & New Orleans Railway Company and the Louisiana & Western Railway Company answered by general and special exceptions and general denial, and specially pleaded the provisions of the live-stock contract under which the horses were shipped, which, among other things, limited the liability of the carrier to such loss or injury as occurred on its own line, and such as was due to its own negligence, charging that there was no loss or injury while the stock was in their possession, and that the same were promptly carried and delivered, after being received from the Gulf, Colorado & Santa Fé Railway Company at Beaumont, to New Orleans, La., and delivered in good condition to its connecting carrier at said point, and that the shippers agreed to take care of said stock en route; denied partnership with other lines, and that they were bound to transport said shipment to its final destination, but only over its own line.

Morgan's Louisiana & Texas Railroad & Steamship Company, and Louisiana & Western Railway Company, each filed their pleas of privilege to be sued in Harris county, which were overruled, and each answered by adopting the answer of their codefendant, the Texas & New Orleans Railway Company, except as to some immaterial matters.

The Louisville & Nashville Railway Company answered by general demurrer, general denial, and by special answer alleging, in substance, that they received said shipment from their codefendants at New Orleans, and transported the same carefully, and without delay, delivering the same to consignees at Brewton, Ala., in the same condition as when received by it; and likewise pleaded the benefit inuring to them under the contract originally made with the plaintiffs by the Gulf, Colorado & Santa Fé Railway Company, wherein their liability was limited to injuries occurring on their own line.

There was a jury trial and verdict in favor of the appellees as follows: $500 against the Gulf, Colorado & Santa Fé Railway Company, $267 against the Texas & New Orleans Railway Company, and $100 against the Louisiana & Western Railway Company, with 6 per cent. interest from date of judgment. Verdict was likewise rendered in favor of Morgan's Louisiana & Texas Railroad & Steamship Company and Louisiana & Nashville Railway Company, being as to the latter in response to a peremptory charge, and judgment rendered in accordance therewith, from which this appeal is prosecuted by the Gulf, Colorado & Santa Fé Railway Company, the Texas & New Orleans Railway Company and the Louisiana & Western Railway Company.

We will first discuss the errors assigned by the Gulf, Colorado & Santa Fé Railway Company, the other two appellants having filed a joint brief.

By its first assignment of error this appellant urges that the court erred to its prejudice in instructing a verdict in favor of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company, contending that the charge therein was on the weight of the evidence and usurped the province of the jury, because the liability of said company under the evidence raised an issue of fact, which should have been submitted to the jury. We have carefully examined the record, and find no evidence showing or tending to show that the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company was negligent in and about said shipment, or that the horses were injured while in its hands; but it appears from the testimony of one of the plaintiffs who accompanied said shipment to New Orleans, and who was present at Brewton, Ala., when it arrived, and who received and unloaded the horses there, that their condition at the time they arrived was not materially different from what it was at New Orleans; that they changed cars at New Orleans, and that the car used in their shipment from New Orleans to Brewton was a 36-foot car. It was shown by the employés of said company handling said shipment between New Orleans and Brewton that there was no delay and no rough handling, and there was no evidence contravening this testimony. It was therefore the duty of the court to instruct a verdict in behalf of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company.

By its second assignment of error, this appellant insists that the court erred in its charge wherein it instructed the jury that the Texas & New Orleans Railway Company was not responsible for any injuries resulting to plaintiffs' horses before they were received by said company, nor for any injuries resulting to said horses after they were received by it which was the direct result of their having been weakened or otherwise injured, if at all, while in the custody of the Gulf, Colorado & Santa Fé Railway Company, provided they believed they had received any injuries or were weakened while in the custody of said Gulf, Colorado & Santa Fé Railway Company, and that said injuries did not develop or become manifest until after they were delivered to the Texas & New Orleans Railway Company, contending that said charge was on the weight of the evidence. We do not think the charge is subject to the complaint made against it, and, in our judgment, announced a correct proposition of law. The same being an interstate shipment, with limitation of liability on the part of each company to injuries occurring on its own line, it certainly cannot be contended that it was error to instruct the jury, as was done in this case, that the Texas & New Orleans was not liable for injuries that may have occurred on the line of the Gulf, Colorado & Santa Fé Railway Company. This assignment is therefore overruled.

The court did not err in refusing to give to the jury special charge No. 3, requested by the Gulf, Colorado & Santa Fé Railway Company, to the effect that they should not assess damages against it on account of muddy stock pens at Silsbee, nor in refusing to give special charge No. 7, relating to insufficient stock pens at Somerville, because the evidence did not raise any issues as to damages at said places.

We do not think there was any error in the refusal of the court to give special charge No. 4, as requested by this appellant, to the effect that even though they should find that the horses were delayed at various places along its line, and that said delays resulted in damage to them, still, such damages could not form the basis of a verdict against it, unless they further found that said delays were unreasonable or negligent, because, at the instance of said appellant, the court had instructed the jury that a railway company was not responsible for injuries resulting to live stock while in its custody caused by delays, unless the same were due to the negligence of such company; and further, that it would not be responsible for delays that were reasonably necessary in the handling of its trains and making changes at division points.

By its fifth assignment of error, this appellant complains that the court erred in refusing to give its special charge No. 5, to the effect that it was not required to furnish plaintiffs a stable car, even though the jury should find from the evidence that the plaintiffs requested said company's agent to furnish such a car, but that said company was only required by law to furnish a reasonably safe car. By its general charge the court had instructed the jury that it was the duty of defendants respectively, while said horses were in their custody and control, to use ordinary care to furnish a reasonably safe and suitable car for their transportation, and that a failure so to do would be negligence, and to find a verdict for plaintiffs if said horses were injured and impaired in their market value by reason of such failure. We think the general charge of the court was sufficient upon this subject, and that it was not error, on account thereof, to refuse said special charge.

There was no error in refusing to give charge No. 6, requested by this appellant, as shown by its sixth assignment of error, to the effect that the company would not be responsible for injuries sustained by reason of the inherent nature and vicious propensities of the horses, for the reason that the trial court gave a charge substantially covering this phase of the case.

By its eighth assignment of error this appellant claims that the court erred in refusing to give its special charge No. 14, which, in effect, instructed the jury that even though they may find from the evidence that the horses in question received the injuries, as alleged, on account of rough handling, "still you must believe from the evidence that such rough handling was due to negligence of defendants as defined in the charge, and, further, that said rough handling, if any, was the direct and proximate cause of such injuries, and unless you do so believe, you cannot find any damages on account of said rough handling against this appellant." This charge was refused, and we think properly, because special charge No. 9 requested by appellant covered this phase of the case, which, in effect, told the jury that "you are instructed that, before plaintiffs can recover against it, you must find from the evidence that appellant was negligent, and that plaintiffs received some injuries to their horses, and that the negligence of the defendant, if any, was the proximate cause of such injury."

By its ninth assignment of error this appellant insists that the court erred in allowing K. F. Cunningham, one of the plaintiffs, to testify to a conversation had by him over the phone with Johnson, the agent of defendant's company at Brownwood, relative to this shipment, in which it was claimed that Johnson made a contract with him by which he agreed that appellant would transport said horses from Mullen, Tex., to Brewton, Ala., and would furnish a stable car, suitable for said purpose, within which to convey them, contending by its proposition under this assignment that it was incompetent in this case to prove any contract made between appellees and appellant's agent at Brownwood, since it appeared from the evidence that the horses were shipped under a written contract executed by appellant's agent at Mullen. It will be recalled that the plaintiffs charge in their petition that the contract of shipment was made with the agents at Brownwood and at Mullen, both stations on this appellant's road, setting out the contract in detail; and they further alleged that the contract was known to the superior officers of said company, and, with a knowledge thereof, the same was ratified by them. It is further charged that, in accordance with said contract so made, the car was furnished to plaintiffs at Mullen and shipment of the horses made therein. It was in evidence by said Johnson that he recalled the telephone conversation with plaintiff with reference to said car, at which time he was station agent at Brownwood; that the car was to be furnished at Mullen; that he did not remember to what point the horses were to be shipped, but he thought beyond the state; that he placed plaintiffs' order with the train office at Temple, which office handles the transportation of cars upon said road; that he did not send the car from Brownwood. Plaintiff testified that when he arrived at Mullen with the horses the agent at that place met him and asked if it was Cunningham; that he answered "Yes," whereupon he told me that our car was there." The trial court in its charge to the jury upon this subject instructed them that it was the duty of defendants, while said horses were in their control and custody, to use ordinary care to furnish a reasonably safe and suitable car for their transportation. Since there were allegations in the pleading, as we have seen, to the effect that the contract of shipment, claimed to have been made with the agents at Brownwood and Mullen, was known to and ratified by the superior officers of the defendant company, we think it was permissible to show, first, what the contract was, if any, made between appellees and the company's agents, and then to show that the same was ratified and acted upon by the superior officers of the company. Therefore, in our judgment, this evidence was admissible. We do not believe that this ruling contravenes the doctrine announced in M. K. & T. Ry. Co. v. Belcher, 88 Tex. 549, 32 S. W. 518, G., C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Dinwiddle, 21 Tex. Civ. App. 344, 51 S. W. 353, and G., C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Jackson & Edwards, 99 Tex. 343, 89 S. W. 969, 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 100, cited by appellant.

In the first case cited it was held that where it was sought to hold the company liable for delay in the shipment of cotton seed products from Sherman to Gainesville, by reason of notice of the importance of the shipment given to the Gainesville agent, which he failed to communicate to the Sherman agent, that the company not be held liable for his default, by reason of the fact that there was no authority in the Gainesville agent to act for the company relative to said shipment from Sherman; and further, because there was no duty devolving upon the station agent at Gainesville, who received said notice, to convey the same to the agent at Sherman.

In the case of G. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Dinwiddle, supra, it was held that the railway company was not bound by the contract of its agent at one station to furnish cars for shipping cordwood at another station, in the absence of authority on the part of the agent to make such contract, or in the absence of notice to and ratification by the company; it clearly appearing inferentially from said last authority that if the company had had notice of said contract and had ratified the same, then it would have been held liable for its failure to furnish the cars by reason thereof. We think this case is distinguishable from the cases above cited, because here notice and ratification on the part of the company of the acts of the Brownwood agent were pleaded, and that therefore the evidence objected to was clearly admissible under said allegations.

The tenth assignment of error is overruled for the reasons stated in disposing of the third and seventh assignments.

We do not believe there is any merit in the question raised by appellants' eleventh assignment of error, concerning the admissibility of the testimony of the witness Weems. The objection, we think, goes rather to the sufficiency than to the admissibility of said evidence.

We overrule the thirteenth assignment of error, complaining of the action of the court in permitting witnesses Nelson, Blake, and Barnhill to testify relative to what in their judgment would have been the reasonable value of said horses if they had arrived at Brewton in reasonably good condition, because these witnesses all testified that they saw said horses upon their arrival, and were acquainted with the market value of horses at Brewton, and it was not necessary that said witnesses should have accompanied the shipment in order to express an opinion as to what said horses would have been worth had they arrived at their destination in a reasonably good condition.

The Louisiana & Western Railway Company, by its first assignment of error, urges that the court erred in sustaining an exception of plaintiffs to its plea of privilege to the jurisdiction of the court. The petition alleged a joint contract of shipment, and that all of the defendants had agents in the state, which was also admitted by the plea, and it was also alleged that the shipment passed over the lines of all the defendants, and that a part of the injuries occurred on the line of the Gulf, Colorado & Santa Fé Railway Company, the initial carrier, which extends through Brown county. The plea was otherwise full, negating the exceptions of the venue statute, but not the facts above set out. Under the Acts of 1905, p. 29, c. 23, amending the Act of 1890, p. 214, c. 125, we think the judgment of the court overruling this plea of privilege was correct. The act in question states that: "Whenever any passenger, freight, baggage or other property has been transported by two or more railroad companies, express companies, steamship or steamboat companies, transportation companies or common carriers of any kind or name whatsoever, or by any assignee, lessee, trustee or receiver thereof, or partly by one or more of such companies, or common carriers, and partly by one or more assignees, lessees, trustees, or receivers thereof, operating or doing business as such common carriers in this state, or having an agent or representative in this state, suit for damages or loss, or for any other cause of action arising out of such carriage, transportation or contract in relation thereto may be brought against any one or all of such common carriers, assignees, lessees, trustees or receivers operating or doing business in this state, or having an agent or representative in this state, in any court of competent jurisdiction in any county in which either of such common carriers, assignees, lessees, trustees or receivers operate or does business, or has an agent or representative;" further providing for the apportionment of damages recovered in such suits between defendants not shown to be partners, on the request of either, etc. It was alleged and proven that this appellant had an agent in Brown county, hence the suit as against all of the defendants was properly brought there. See, also, Ry. Co. v. Williams, 38 Tex. Civ. App. 405, 86 S. W. 38, and authorities cited under the statute above quoted, in McIlwaine's Ann. Dig. of Texas, p. 228.

The other appellants, the Texas & New Orleans Railway Company and the Louisiana & Western Railway Company, by their second assignment of error, say that the court erred in overruling their second special exception to plaintiffs' petition, which was addressed to the insufficiency thereof, on the ground that it did not show which road or roads furnished said car or cars, did not state on what line or what road the injuries occurred, and that it failed to show with sufficient clearness which defendant or defendants were guilty of the negligent acts charged against it, by reason of which want of particularity in said allegations it was unable to tell wherein it was sought to be held liable, and unable to answer thereto. In International & Great Northern Railroad Com- pany v. Jones, 41 Tex. Civ. App. 327, 91 S. W. 611, in which a writ of error was denied by the Supreme Court, it was held that a petition in an action against the initial connecting and terminal carriers for injuries to a shipment of cattle, which charged the carriers with negligence generally in transporting said cattle, and which alleged the damages resulting therefrom, was sufficient, without alleging what effect the negligence of each carrier had on the cattle, though the shipper's agent accompanied the shipment. The same doctrine was recently reaffirmed in S. A. & A. P. Ry. Co. et al. v. T. O. Martin et al. (Tex. Civ. App.) 108 S. W. 981, and in which a writ of error was likewise denied. We therefore hold that it was not necessary for plaintiffs to have been more specific in their allegations in this respect. But the petition does show that the car was ordered from the Gulf, Colorado & Santa Fe Railway Company to be furnished at Mullen; that the horses were loaded in it at said point and carried in it from that point to New Orleans. It states the names of the stations where the delays occurred, the length of the delays, the names of the stations where defendant unloaded plaintiffs' horses for feed and rest, and at what points they failed to provide facilities for such purpose. They state in detail the injury to the horses, and added that they were unable to state at just what particular places the acts of rough handling occurred, owing to the fact that a part of said shipment occurred at night, and that plaintiffs were not sufficiently acquainted with the places where such rough handling occurred to identify and designate them, but they allege that such rough handling was frequent and continuous between the town of Mullen and the city of New Orleans.

Said appellants claim there was error in overruling their fifth special exception to the claim of $50 damages to said horses on account of alleged shrinkage in market value thereof, due to improper and unsuitable pens at Beaumont, claiming that the same was insufficient and stated no cause of action, in that it failed to allege any act of negligence on the part of defendant causing said injuries, and failed to allege what the market value of said horses would have been but for said injuries. The petition did allege that defendant's pens at Beaumont were without troughs and water, were in such muddy and sloppy condition that said horses could not be fed in them, and that on this account, as well as for other reasons pleaded, said horses suffered injuries and were damaged, all of which things were alleged to be due to the negligence of the defendants. It seems to us that the allegations of the petition in this respect were sufficient to show that the muddy condition of said pens caused damages and injury to said horses, and was owing to the negligence of the defendants. We therefore overrule said assignment.

Appellants' sixth, seventh, and eighth assignments of error are overruled for the reasons stated in overruling their second assignment.

It was not error, as contended by appellants' tenth assignment of error, for the court to permit the witness Cunningham to testify what a policeman at Beaumont said about the company's having no feed for his stock, because it appeared that said party was a yard policeman at Beaumont, in the service of appellant Texas & New Orleans Railway Company, and that he was working with appellants' crew in loading and unloading the horses, and was in charge of said crew; and, therefore, evidence of what he said while in the performance of his duties was admissible and binding upon appellants.

There was no error in overruling appellants' eleventh and twelfth assignments of error, complaining of the action of the court in permitting the plaintiff Cunningham to testify that he told the agent of the Texas & New Orleans Railway before his horses left Beaumont that they were going to Brewton, Ala., and the purpose for which they were being shipped to said point, because, as appellees contend, while appellant had contracted to carry the horses only to New Orleans, yet if they knew at the time the contract was entered into that the ultimate destination of said horses was Brewton, Ala., it will be presumed that the contract was made in view of the market at the last-named place, and that it was contemplated by the parties to said contract that in the event of a breach thereof the measure of plaintiffs' recovery would be controlled by that market. Such being the case, it was proper to admit evidence of appellants' knowledge of the final destination of the horses. Such evidence would not vary the terms of the contract of shipment, and would not require appellants to carry the horses beyond New Orleans. The evidence disclosed that the agent who made the contract with the plaintiffs knew that Brewton was the final destination of the horses, and agreed to bill them through to said point, collecting freight therefor to New Orleans, stating that the horses would be unloaded at New Orleans and delivered to the Louisville & Nashville Road. The plaintiff likewise testified that he told the Texas & New Orleans agent at Beaumont that he was going to Brewton with the horses. G. C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Eddins, 7 Tex. Civ. App. 116, 26 S. W. 161; Reeves v. T. & P. Ry. Co., 11 Tex. Civ. App. 514, 32 S. W. 920; S. L. I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. De Shong, 63 Ark. 443, 39 S. W. 260; T. & P. Ry. Co. v. White (Tex. Civ. App.) 80 S. W. 641; C. R. I. & T. Ry. Co. v. Carroll (Tex. Civ. App.) 81 S. W. 1020; T. & P. Ry. Co. v. Dishman, 41 Tex. Civ. App. 250, 91 S. W. 828; 6 Ency. Law & Prac. 631.

We overrule the thirteenth and fourteenth assignments of error, the first of which complains of the action of the court in permitting the witness Weems to testify over the objection of the defendants relative to the market value of the horses at Brewton, Ala., and the second of which complains of the action of the court in refusing to give special charge No. 6, to the effect that the defendants, not having undertaken to carry plaintiffs' stock to their ultimate destination, and there being no evidence of market value at New Orleans, they should find a verdict in favor of appellants, for the same reasons set forth in disposing of the eleventh and twelfth assignments.

The fifteenth, sixteenth, seventeenth, and eighteenth assignments of error are overruled, because it was permissible for said witnesses to have shown the value of the horses at Brewton, it appearing that they were experienced shippers, well acquainted with the market value of horses at Brewton at the time of their arrival there, and the fact that they stated that they knew their average value at Brewton would not affect the admissibility of their evidence in this respect.

For the reasons stated in overruling the first assignment presented by the Gulf, Colorado & Santa Fé Railway Company, appellants' nineteenth assignment is overruled.

We overrule the twentieth, twenty-first, twenty-fourth, and twenty-fifth assignments of error, as presented by appellants, because we do not believe that plaintiffs were precluded from recovery, as contended by appellants, because they did not undertake to procure feed and water for their stock at Beaumont upon the failure of appellants to furnish adequate facilities therefor, because, under the conditions surrounding plaintiffs at the time, as shown by the record, it was unreasonable to require them to procure feed and water elsewhere; nor were they barred from recovery by reason of the fact that they permitted appellants to unload their horses in muddy pens, because, while said shipment was made under a special contract requiring plaintiffs to feed, water, and care for their horses en route, still the same was only reasonable and valid so long as defendants furnished plaintiffs with reasonable facilities for doing so; and, no reasonable facilities having been furnished at Beaumont, said provision of said contract was unreasonable and void as to that place, and the duty then devolved upon appellants to feed, water, and care for said stock, and they were liable for failure so to do. F. W. & D. C. Ry. Co. v. Daggett, 87 Tex. 322, 28 S. W. 525; G., C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Dunn (Tex. Civ. App.) 78 S. W. 1080; 2 Hutch. on Carriers (3d Ed.) § 641. In the Daggett Case, supra, the Supreme Court say: "We are further of the opinion that the special contract, as well as said act of Congress, relieved the carrier of the duty in the first instance of feeding and watering at such points at which it furnished reasonable facilities to the shipper to do so, but that, in the absence of such facilities at any point, the contract would be unreasonable at such point, and the carrier would be liable for any damages resulting from the failure to feed and water at such point."

The court did not err, as complained of in the appellants' twenty-third assignment of error, in refusing to give appellants' special charge No. 4, to the effect that if Cunningham knew the defective condition of the car before loading his horses thereon, and that they would necessarily receive injuries while in transit, then, as a matter of law, he was guilty of contributory negligence in shipping said horses therein, and could not recover.

We think appellees are correct in their contention that the railway company is bound to furnish a safe and suitable car for the transportation of freight, and is not relieved from liability for not so doing, even if the shipper examined the car and did not object to its fitness. This disposes of appellants' twenty-fourth and twenty-fifth assignments of error, as they raise the same question. It appears from the testimony of Cunningham that he objected to said car, both at Mullen and at Beaumont. G., H. & S. A. Ry. Co. v. Silegman (Tex. Civ. App.) 23 S. W. 298; Hunt v. Nutt et al. (Tex. Civ. App.) 27 S. W. 1031; S. A. & A. P. Ry. Co. v. Dolan (Tex. Civ. App.) 85 S. W. 303; St. L., I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Marshall, 74 Ark. 597, 86 S. W. 802; St. Louis & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Brosius et al. (Tex. Civ. App.) 105 S. W. 1131; 2 Hutch. on Carriers (3d Ed.) §§ 498, 499.

After a full and careful review of all the questions presented by appellants, we are constrained to believe that no reversible error is shown. The judgment of the court below is, therefore, in all things affirmed.

Affirmed.

On Rehearing.

This case was affirmed at the last term of this court, since which time a motion for rehearing has been filed by and on behalf alone of the Texas & New Orleans Railway Company and the Louisiana & Western Railway Company; the Gulf, Colorado & Santa Fé Railway Company, against whom judgment was likewise rendered, not joining therein.

In addition to what was said in the original opinion, we think the testimony of K. F. Cunningham as to what the policeman said to him at Beaumont was admissible, because it clearly appeared from the record that at the time said statement was made to Cunningham said policeman was in fact in charge of the horses in the company's yards, directing and controlling their movements. Besides this, it appeared on cross-examination of this witness by the defendants themselves that he was acting for and on behalf of the company in the matter in which he was then engaged. While, as a rule, we understand that agency cannot be proven by the declarations of the agent, still the same has been held to be a circumstance, in connection with other facts, that will tend to prove that he was in fact an agent. Texas Compress Co. v. Mitchell, 7 Tex. Civ. App. 234, 28 S. W. 45; Wheeler & Wilson Mfg. Co. v. Crossland, 2 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 63; book 5, Rose's Notes, p. 1453; M. P. Ry. Co. v. Rountree, 2 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 387; White & Wilson, § 339. Where there is evidence from which a jury could find agency, the declarations or admissions made during agency in regard to the transaction connected therewith are those of the principal. White v. San Antonio Waterworks Co., 9 Tex. Civ. App. 465, 29 S. W. 252. And the agency of the policeman having been shown at the instance of the defendant on cross-examination, it is in no attitude to complain. This case does not fall within the rule announced by Judge Connor in St. Louis & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Easley (Tex. Civ. App.) 94 S. W. 207, because the chief reason for which the evidence in that case was excluded was because the statement made by the conductor did not accompany the act then being done; nor did it fall within the rule announced by Chief Justice Fisher in G., C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Batte (Tex. Civ. App.) 107 S. W. 633, for the reason that in that case there was no evidence whatever to show that the party making the declaration was in the employ of the company or acting for it, nor was there any other proof of agency offered. In Mechem on Agency, § 714, it is stated, in effect, that where the statements or declarations of the agent are made at the time of the transaction, or so soon thereafter as to come within the rule of res gestæ, the same are admissible. Here the declarations were made at the very time of the occurrence to which they related. Apart from this, we do not believe, if there was error in the admission of this testimony, it could have been hurtful to appellants, for the reason that it had been abundantly shown by the uncontradicted evidence of the plaintiffs themselves that the yards were very muddy and sloppy, and that there were no troughs within which to feed said horses.

Nor do we believe that there was any error in permitting the plaintiff to testify that he told the agent of the Texas & New Orleans Company, before his horses left Beaumont, that they were going to Brewton, Ala., as contended by appellant. The only objection made to the introduction of said testimony, as shown by appellants' brief, was that said evidence would vary and contradict the terms of the contract. There was no objection made that the company had had no notice of the ultimate destination of this shipment. Besides, it was alleged in plaintiffs' pleading that a contract was made with the Gulf, Colorado & Santa Fé, by which said horses were to be shipped from Mullen, Tex., by way of defendants' several railways, their ultimate destination being Brewton, Ala.; and it was alleged that said Texas & New Orleans Railway Company, with full knowledge of the aforesaid contract, and with full knowledge that the destination of said horses was the town of Brewton, Ala., and that they were designed for market upon their arrival there, accepted the same to be so transported. We therefore think this evidence was admissible under the pleadings.

Relative to appellants' contention that it was not permissible to allow plaintiff K. F. Cunningham to testify what he received for certain of the horses sold by him after reaching Brewton, we desire to say that, even if this were error, appellants are not in a position to complain thereof, because other witnesses were allowed to testify, and did testify, without objection, substantially to the same thing, to wit, C. M. Barnhill testified that Howard Nelson and himself bought several head of the horses subsequent to the time of their arrival, stating the amounts that he paid plaintiffs therefor. Defendants themselves, on cross-examination of the witness Black, proved that the horses after their arrival at Brewton were sold for an average price of $25 each; and by another witness, Joe Barnhill, the Texas & New Orleans Railway, on cross-examination, showed that plaintiffs sold certain of the horses during the month of March after their arrival there, and the prices received for them; so that if it was error, as complained of by appellants, the same was rendered harmless by their own subsequent proof of the same facts.

We cannot believe that there was any error, in the court's peremptorily instructing a verdict in behalf of the Louisville & Nashville Road, because there was no evidence in the record to warrant a judgment against said road, and the plaintiffs themselves admitted that their horses had suffered no injury or damage while in transit upon said road. Besides this, we cannot see how appellants are in an attitude to complain of this action of the court, even if it were error to have so charged the jury, because the jury were specifically charged that in the event there was a verdict for plaintiffs, no damages could be assessed against any defendant except that which occurred on its own line, etc. The plaintiffs, it seems to us, would alone have been the parties entitled to complain, and no complaint is made by them; they having expressly testified, as above said, that no material injury to the horses occurred during their transit over said Louisville & Nashville Railway.

Believing that no such error has been pointed out in appellants' motion for rehearing as would justify a change in our opinion, said motion for rehearing is in all things overruled.

Motion overruled.

GREEN v. COOK et al.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Nov. 14, 1908.)

APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1183*)—RECORD—REVIEW.

Where there is no fundamental error apparent in the record, containing no statement of facts or bill of exceptions, and the assignments of error relate to rulings not reviewable without a statement of facts and bill of exceptions, the judgment must be affirmed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4450-4453; Dec. Dig. § 1133.*]

Appeal from District Court, Hunt County; R. L. Porter, Judge.

Action between Little Jimmie Green and D. L. Cook and others. From a judgment for the latter, the former appeals. Affirmed.

Looney & Clark, for appellees.

TALBOT, J. Appellant has failed to file briefs and prepare this cause for submission as required by the rules of this court; nor is there a statement of facts or bill of exception found in the record. By briefs filed by the appellees our attention has been called to this condition of the record, and the proposition made that in such case there is nothing for the appellate court to pass upon, and the judgment should be affirmed. This proposition is correct, where there is no fundamental error apparent of record and the assignments of error related to matters and rulings of the court that cannot be revised without a statement of the facts and bill of exceptions. We have examined the record before us far enough to ascertain that such is the status in this court of the present case.

The assignment of error found in the transcript that appellant has been deprived of a statement of facts through no fault or negligence of appellant or his attorney, but by reason of the acts in bad faith done and committed by attorneys for appellee Cook, if it should be considered at all, is not, in our opinion, sustained by the record. It follows that the judgment of the lower court must be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

Affirmed.

HARRISON, County Judge, v. DICKINSON.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Oct. 28, 1908.)

INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 74*)—COMPELLING ISSUANCE OF LIQUOR LICENSE—GROUNDS.

To entitle one to mandamus to compel the county judge to grant him a liquor license, under Acts 30th Leg. p. 260, c. 138, § 10, he must show the existence of all the facts essential to his right; and where the petition alleged that the place in which the applicant sought to do business was not in a local option district, and that on the hearing of his application the county judge found that the place was in a local option district, and the county judge in his answer alleged that the place was in local option territory, the court, before issuing the writ, must find that the place was not in local option territory.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Cent. Dig. §§ 74, 75; Dec. Dig. § 74.*]

Appeal from District Court, Jefferson County; W. H. Pope, Judge.

Mandamus by E. A. Dickinson against James Harrison, County Judge. From a judgment granting the writ, defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Blain & Howth, for appellant. Teagle & Conley and V. A. Collins, for appellee.

REESE, J. Appellee made application for liquor license to appellant, county judge of Jefferson county, under the provisions of section 10, c. 138, p. 260, Acts of the 30th Legislature. His application contained all the requirements of the statute. Due notice was given, and on the hearing the county judge (who is appellant here) found that all the allegations of the petition were true, but further found as a fact that the place where the applicant proposed to carry on his business was within territory where the sale of intoxicating liquors was prohibited under the local option laws, and on this ground refused to grant the application. Appellee thereupon brought this suit in the district court wherein he seeks a writ of mandamus to compel appellant, as county judge, to grant his application for license as prayed for. Upon hearing, the district court granted the writ as prayed for, from which judgment the county judge appeals.

It is alleged in appellee's petition in the district court, among other things, that the place at which he sought to do business was not in a local option district. It is also alleged that upon the hearing of his application the county judge had found that such place was in a local option district, and had refused it on that ground. Appellant in his answer alleged that the place was in local option territory. In seeking, by the use of the extraordinary remedy of a writ of mandamus, to compel the county judge to grant him the license prayed for, it was incumbent upon appellee to show the existence of all the facts essential to his right and that there was no impediment to the granting of the license as prayed for. Arberry v. Beavers, 6 Tex. 473, 55 Am. Dec. 791. By the terms of the act of the Legislature referred to the right of any person to a license to sell liquor was expressly limited to such locality as was not in local option territory. The issue as to whether the place at which appellee desired to pursue his calling was within such territory was clearly raised by the finding of the county judge and by the pleadings of the parties. In such case appellee, to entitle himself to the benefit of the law, was required to show, by proper evidence, that this locality was not in a local option territory. This was a fact essential to his right. The trial court did not inquire into this at all, but held that, inasmuch as the statute did not expressly require the applicant for license to set out in his application to the county judge this negative fact and prove it, it was immaterial in the mandamus proceeding. In this we think the court was in error. The issue as to whether the locality referred to in the application was in local option territory should have been first determined in appellee's favor before the writ of mandamus was ordered.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded for another trial in accordance with this opinion.

Reversed and remanded.

HOUSTON & T. C. R. CO. v. CHEATHAM.†

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Oct. 23, 1908. Rehearing Denied Nov. 25, 1908.)

1. CARRIERS (§ 320*)—INJURY TO PASSENGER—NEGLIGENCE — EVIDENCE — QUESTIONS FOR JURY.

Where a passenger was injured by derailment of the train, and there was evidence that the ties at the place of derailment were so rotten that they would not hold the spikes, etc., and that the train was operated over the place at from eighteen to twenty miles an hour, the court properly submitted the issues of negligence, both as to the condition of the track and the operation of the train.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. § 1315; Dec. Dig. § 320.*]

2. CARRIERS (§ 297*)—INJURY TO PASSENGER—CONDITION OF TRACK—KNOWLEDGE OF SERVANTS.

The servants of a carrier are charged with knowledge of the condition of the carrier's railroad track at a point where excessive speed would be likely to cause derailment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. § 1204; Dec. Dig. § 297.*]

3. CARRIERS (§ 316*)—INJURY TO PASSENGER—DERAILMENT—RES IPSA LOQUITUR.

Where derailment was shown as the cause of an accident in which a passenger was injured, negligence of the carrier is presumed, and the burden is on it to rebut such presumption.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. § 1283; Dec. Dig. § 316.*]

4. DAMAGES (§ 216*)—PERSONAL INJURIES.

An instruction that, if the jury found for plaintiff, they should assess her damages at the sum which if paid in cash in hand at this time would under the evidence justly compensate her for the injuries directly and proximately resulting from defendant's negligence, if any, and in computing such damages the jury should consider any physical pain and suffering, mental suffering, and anguish plaintiff sustained by reason of the injury and any reasonable charges for medical treatment and medicines which she paid or became responsible for by reason of the injuries, was correct, and not objectionable as authorizing an award of such damages as the jury might think would properly compensate her for her injuries unlimited by any legal rule or by the items specified.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Damages, Cent. Dig. § 548; Dec. Dig. § 216.*]

5. DAMAGES (§ 43*)—PERSONAL INJURIES — PHYSICIANS' BILLS—MEDICINES.

A person injured cannot recover expenditures made for physicians' bills and medicines, in the absence of proof that the charges were reasonable.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Damages, Cent. Dig. § 243; Dec. Dig. § 43.*]

6. TRIAL (§ 62*)—RECEPTION OF EVIDENCE — REBUTTAL.

Where, in an action for injuries to a passenger by derailment at a point 100 yards south of a bridge, defendant's witnesses testified that all the ties used on the road between certain stations, including the point of derailment, were creosoted when the road was constructed, with the exception of three or four miles where the ties had been replaced by creosoted ties, and denied plaintiff's claim of negligence that the wreck was caused by rotten ties, evidence of a witness that she had walked along the track north of the bridge and within 100 yards from the place of the accident and had seen a good many rotten ties, some of which were soft and would not hold the spikes, was admissible in rebuttal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 149; Dec. Dig. § 62.*]

7. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1051*) — REVIEW — HARMLESS ERROR.

The admission of immaterial evidence is not ground for reversal when there are other facts and circumstances sufficient to support the verdict.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4161; Dec. Dig. § 1051.*]

8. TRIAL (§ 114*)—MISCONDUCT OF COUNSEL—ARGUMENT.

Where, in an action for injuries to a passenger on a mixed train by derailment, defendant's testimony showed that freight cars often left the track without any cause that could be discovered, plaintiff's counsel was not guilty of misconduct in arguing that defendant was negligent in attaching passenger coaches to the rear of freight trains for the carriage of passengers, which was alone sufficient to entitle plaintiff to recover all the damages she had sustained.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 275; Dec. Dig. § 114.*]

9. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 972*) — REVIEW — MATTERS OF DISCRETION.

Whether counsel in argument has been permitted to direct an erroneous and hurtful deduction from the evidence over objection is a matter largely within the discretion of the trial court, the exercise of which will not be interfered with on appeal in the absence of abuse.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3847; Dec. Dig. § 972.*]

10. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1140*) — REVIEW — AMOUNT OF RECOVERY—REMISSION—CURING ERROR.

Where a judgment appealed from was erroneous only in so far as it allowed plaintiff a recovery for physicians' bills and medicines, the error was cured by plaintiff's agreement that the amount so erroneously included should be deducted and the judgment as reformed should be affirmed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4472; Dec. Dig. § 1140.*]

Appeal from District Court, Lampasas County; John M. Furman, Judge.

Action by Ellen Cheatham against the Houston & Texas Central Railroad Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reformed and affirmed.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes † Writ of error denied by Supreme Court.

S. R. Fisher, J. H. Tallichet, S. W. Fisher, and Baker, Botts, Parker & Garwood, for appellant. T. E. Hammond, Ike D. White, and W. H. Browning, for appellee.

RICE, J. This is a suit by Ellen Cheatham, a feme sole, against the Houston & Texas Central Railroad Company, to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been sustained by her while a passenger on said road by the derailment of defendant's mixed train between Burnet and Lampasas, Tex., on April 28, 1907. The defendant in answer to said suit filed a general demurrer and general denial. A jury trial resulted in a verdict and judgment for plaintiff for $1,750, from which this appeal is prosecuted.

By appellant's first assignment of error it is urged that the court erred in stating the issues in his charge to the jury, because said charge was on the weight of evidence, and in its proposition thereunder insists that said charge states and finds as a fact that defendant was guilty of negligence, as alleged by plaintiff, and gave undue prominence to the plaintiff's case by setting out her allegations, and, in addition, referring the jury to her petition. It seems that the court in stating the issues substantially copied the petition of plaintiff, wherein the acts of negligence are relied upon, but in doing so we fail to find from the record that there was any assumption on the part of the court that the acts complained of were true, as charged, or any statement which could be construed as such. We think there is no merit, therefore, in this assignment, and overrule the same.

By its second assignment appellant urges that the court erred in the third paragraph of its charge on the law of the case, in that it submitted to the jury issues not raised by the evidence, and by its proposition thereunder urges that the court erred in submitting the issue of negligence on the part of appellant in running and operating its train at the place of the accident, because it appeared from the evidence that the same was carefully and properly operated at the time. The petition in this case alleged negligence on the part of appellant both as to the condition of the track at the place of the injury and the manner of operating the train at the time of the accident. There was ample evidence to show that at the place of derailment the track was in bad condition and out of repair, its ties being rotten, in so much so that they would not hold the spikes, etc.; and there is evidence that the train was being operated at the time of the accident at a speed of from 18 to 20 miles per hour. We think this evidence would justify the court in submitting both issues, because the jury had the right to infer from the evidence that the operation of its train along said track at such high rate of speed was in itself negligence; the appellant and its servants being charged with a knowledge of the condition of its track at said place. 2 Hutch. on Carriers, p. 1046, § 926; Railway v. Lewis, 145 Ill. 67, 33 N. E. 960. Apart from this the derailment being shown, as a matter of law negligence is presumed, and it devolves upon appellant to rebut the same. 3 Hutch. on Carriers, § 1413, p. 1700 et seq. We do not think any error was committed, under the circumstances, in the submission of both issues by the charge to the jury, and overrule this assignment.

By its third assignment of error, appellant complains that the court erred in the fifth paragraph of its charge on the measure of damages, in that it authorized the jury to award plaintiff such damages as in their judgment would fairly and justly compensate her for such injuries as they might find were the direct and proximate result of defendant's negligence, unlimited by any legal rule by which such damages could properly be measured, stating that, in connection with such inquiry, they might take into consideration physical pain and suffering, as well as mental suffering and anguish, and reasonable charges for medical treatment and medicine, in that it did not limit the jury to a consideration of such items only. The charge complained of is as follows: "If you find for plaintiff, you will so say by your verdict, and you will assess her damages at such sum as if paid in cash in hand at this time would under the evidence in your judgment fairly and justly compensate her for such injuries as you may find are the direct and proximate result of defendant's negligence, if any, and in computing such damages, you may take into account any physical pain and suffering and mental suffering and anguish you may find she has sustained by reason of such injuries, and any reasonable charges for medical treatment and medicines which she has paid or become responsible for by reason of such injuries." This charge announces a correct principle of law relative to the measure of damages, and is not in our opinion subject to the objection urged against it, and we therefore overrule this assignment.

The fourth and fifth assignments of error complain of the action of the court in submitting to the jury any charge upon the subject of plaintiff's right to recover for medical treatment and medicine, because there was no evidence that said charges were reasonable. It appears from the evidence that plaintiff paid out $50 doctors' bills and as much as $8 for medicine; but, as appellant contends there is nothing in evidence to show that either of said items were reasonable charges, the court was therefore in error in submitting a charge thereon, but appellee has filed a remittitur of said amount and asks that in the event judgment is affirmed that these items be deducted therefrom and the judgment be made to conform thereto. Wherefore the error complained of is harmless, and these assignments are overruled.

The sixth assignment complains of the action of the court below in admitting and refusing to strike from the record the testimony of Ophelia Gilmore. By its proposition under said assignment it is urged that, said witness having testified to having seen rotten and defective ties in defendant's track about 100 yards north of the bridge at the south end of which the derailment occurred, such evidence was irrelevant, immaterial, and prejudicial, and had a tendency to confuse the jury, and might cause them to believe that they could hold defendant liable for any defects in its track. By reference to the bill of exception it appears that, after all the witnesses offered by plaintiff had testified except the witness Ophelia Gilmore, plaintiff announced through her counsel in open court that she had one witness coming on the train, and that, until she arrived, plaintiff would rest, reserving, however, the right to put said witness on the stand when she came; the witness referred to being Miss Ophelia Gilmore. After the defendant had concluded its testimony, this witness having arrived, she was introduced, and testified that she remembered the occasion of the wreck on the road, and knew where it occurred; that just prior to that time she had walked along the railroad track near this point, within 100 yards thereof, and had frequently passed said point at which she noticed a good many rotten ties, some of which, when she stepped on them, were soft, some were splintered apart, and that the spikes looked like they were loose, and that they were raised up. On cross-examination of this witness by appellant it appeared that the point where she saw the ties in this condition was between the bridge and Lake Victor, and that she had no occasion to walk on the other side of the bridge, where the wreck occurred; that Lake Victor is north of the bridge; and that the wreck occurred at the south end of the bridge. The train was going north at the time of the derailment. Thereupon counsel for appellant moved to strike out said testimony, because the same referred to conditions in the track existing at least 100 yards from the place where the accident occurred. The court overruled said motion, and appended to said bill an explanation to the effect that L. Phillipi, D. McCall, and other witnesses for the defendant had testified that all the ties used on the road from Burnet to Lampasas were creosoted ties at the time of the construction of the road, except for three or four miles from Burnet, and that they had been replaced by creosoted ties, and that at the time the testimony of Miss Gilmore was offered and objected to that counsel for plaintiff stated that said testimony was offered in rebuttal and so admitted by the court. It is argued by appellee that as there was abundant testimony to establish the fact that the wreck was caused by rotten ties in appellant's roadbed, as shown by the plaintiff's witnesses, which fact was controverted by appellant in attempting to show that its roadbed was in good condition, that its ties had been "doctored" by saturating them with creosote, which gave them long life, and that this condition existed, not only at the place where the car was wrecked, but along its whole line, except some four or five miles out from the town of Burnet, and that other witnesses for appellant testified that its track was absolutely all right and safe for a speed of 18 to 20 miles per hour, and that this testimony relative to the condition of the track by appellant was not confined to the place of the wreck alone, but was offered to show the general condition of the road; hence that it was proper for appellee to rebut this evidence by its witness Miss Gilmore, who testified as above shown. We think the evidence was properly admitted in rebuttal, but, even if this was error, it is not ground for reversal, because it is frequently held that the admission of immaterial evidence is no ground for reversal when there are other facts and circumstances in evidence sufficient to support the verdict, as is the case here. Commercial Bank v. Jones, 18 Tex. 830; Wilson et al. v. Lucas, 78 Tex. 292, 14 S. W. 690.

By its seventh assignment of error it is urged that the court erred in overruling defendant's objection to the closing argument of counsel for plaintiff. It is shown by a bill of exceptions that on the trial, while counsel for plaintiff was making his closing address to the jury, he stated that the testimony of the defendant tended, and did, show that freight cars often left the track without any cause whatever that could be discovered or detected, and that, this fact being known to the defendant, it was carelessness and negligence on its part to attach passenger coaches to the rear end of freight trains and invite passengers to ride thereon, urging before the jury that the fact that defendant's train, which was wrecked, was a mixed train, carrying freight in front of the passenger coach, was in itself alone sufficient to constitute negligence; and to render the defendant liable to plaintiff for all damages she may have sustained. This argument was objected to by counsel for appellant, but counsel was permitted to proceed, notwithstanding said objection, and the court did not instruct the jury to disregard such argument. The court explained its ruling by stating that the conductor and engineer of appellant's train both testified that freight cars often left the track without any cause whatever that could be detected or discovered.

Counsel for appellee insist that no error has been committed on this score, because they had a right to discuss the evidence and draw their own deductions and inferences therefrom, and, if counsel should draw an erroneous and hurtful conclusion from the evidence submitted, it is contended by them that it would have been the duty of appellant to have controlled the same both by seasonable objection and a special charge to disregard same, which was not done in this case. We are inclined to agree with appellee in her contention. It is true that counsel had no right to go outside the record and discuss matters not in evidence, but this was not done. Here the matter under discussion was in evidence and the only objection is that counsel in using it was drawing an erroneous and hurtful deduction therefrom. These matters are so largely within the discretion of the trial court that appellate courts do not usually interfere in the absence of some abuse thereof. Here none is shown, and the assignment is overruled.

Finding no reversible error in the record, we conclude that the judgment of the court below should be reformed and affirmed. It is therefore ordered that the sum of $50, as found by the jury for medicine and medical attention, be deducted therefrom, in accordance with the remittitur of the plaintiff on file, and that the judgment for $1,700 be in all things affirmed, but that the cost of this appeal shall be taxed against appellee.

Reformed and affirmed.

INTERNATIONAL & G. N. R. CO. v. WELBOURNE

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Nov. 11, 1908.)

1. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE (§ 100*)—ACTION AGAINST CARRIER—INJURY TO GOODS—PLEADINGS AND ISSUES.

Where, in an action before a justice of the peace, against a carrier for injury to cabbages in transit, the pleadings were oral, and the claim for damages was thus summarized by the court: "That defendant company failed to ice said cabbage properly, and failed to carry said cabbage in a proper manner, whereby same were lost to plaintiff"—no issue was presented as to delay or improper handling of the car in which the cabbages were shipped.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Justices of the Peace, Dec. Dig. § 100.*]

2. CARRIERS (§ 117*)—INJURY TO GOODS SHIPPED—PERISHABLE GOODS—MODE OF TRANSPORTATION.

Though a carrier does not expressly contract to furnish a refrigerator car for perishable commodities, if it accepts such commodities for transportation, and in fact furnishes a refrigerator car, it impliedly undertakes to exercise the diligence that that class of goods requires.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 508-516; Dec. Dig. § 117.*]

3. CARRIERS (§ 180*)—CARRIAGE OF GOODS—CONNECTING CARRIERS—LIMITATION OF LIABILITY.

A connecting carrier may limit its liability for goods received for transportation to loss or injury which may occur on its own line.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 815-828; Dec. Dig. § 180.*]

4. CARRIERS (§ 185*)—CARRIAGE OF GOODS—CONNECTING CARRIERS—INJURY TO GOODS—PRESUMPTION.

Where freight transported by successive carriers is damaged after its delivery to the initial carrier, and the evidence fails to show on what line the injury occurred, a presumption arises that the damage occurred through the fault of the last carrier.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 835-842; Dec. Dig. § 185.*]

5. CARRIERS (§ 177*)—CARRIAGE OF GOODS—CONNECTING CARRIERS—INJURY TO GOODS.

Where the decay of cabbages, transported by successive carriers, began on the line of the initial carrier, it was liable, though the decay continued on the lines of the succeeding carriers.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 775-803; Dec. Dig. § 177.*]

6. TRIAL (§ 251*)—INSTRUCTIONS—ISSUES TO SUSTAIN.

In an action against a carrier for injury to goods in transit, an instruction as to inherent defects in the goods shipped was properly refused, where defendant did not raise that issue in its pleading or proof.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 587-595; Dec. Dig. § 251.*]

7. CARRIERS (§ 185*)—CARRIAGE OF GOODS—INJURY TO GOODS—EVIDENCE.

In an action against an initial carrier for injury to cabbages shipped from Texas to Kansas City, Mo., testimony as to the market value of cabbages in Kansas City was admissible.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Dec. Dig. § 185.*]

8. CARRIERS (§ 185*)—CARRIAGE OF GOODS—CONNECTING CARRIERS—INJURY TO GOODS—ACTIONS—EVIDENCE.

In an action against the initial carrier for injury to cabbages in transit, testimony that plaintiff received less for the cabbages than the freight and commission was inadmissible.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Dec. Dig. § 185.*]

9. EVIDENCE (§ 519*)—OPINION EVIDENCE—SUBJECTS OF EXPERT TESTIMONY.

In an action against a carrier for injury to cabbages in transit, testimony of a witness that yellow leaves on cabbages indicate decay should not be received until such witness qualifies himself as an expert as to decay of cabbages.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 2328; Dec. Dig. § 519.*]

Appeal from Montgomery County Court; B. A. McCall, Judge.

Action by W. S. Welbourne against the International & Great Northern Railroad Company and another. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant International & Great Northern Railroad Company appeals. Reversed and remanded.

John M. King and W. M. Williams, for appellant. B. A. Crawford, for appellee.

FLY, J. This is a suit for $110.74, for damages to 53 crates of cabbages, which accrued by reason of the failure of appellant and its codefendant, the American Refrigerator & Transit Company, to properly ice the refrigerator car in which the cabbages were stored for transportation. The suit was instituted in the justice's court, and was dismissed as to the refrigerator company on its plea of privilege. Judgment was rendered in favor of appellee in the justice's court, and on appeal to the county court the cause was tried by jury, and resulted in a verdict and judgment in favor of appellee.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

The pleadings on the part of appellee were oral, and the grounds for damages presented by them are thus summarized by the court: "That defendant company failed to ice said cabbage properly, and failed to carry said cabbage in a proper manner, whereby same were lost to plaintiff." We think it clear that the only issue presented by appellee's pleading is as to the negligence of appellant in failing to keep the car in which the cabbages were stored properly iced. There was no claim of delay or improper handling of the car. The evidence showed that the cabbages were in excellent condition when loaded, and were properly loaded. There is nothing to show that the car was not iced at that time; but, on the other hand, it was loaded by appellee, and he found nothing to object to with it. It is the reasonable inference that the car had a sufficient quantity of ice, because appellee did not ask for more ice, and he swore that it was "the custom at any and all times at loading stations, in case ice becomes exhausted in the bunkers, for the loader and shipper to notify the agent" of the railroad company, and appellee did not pursue that course. While there is no evidence tending to show that there was an express contract, on the part of appellant, to furnish a refrigerator car for the carriage of perishable commodities, and to keep it properly refrigerated, still it accepted a perishable commodity in a refrigerator car, and it impliedly undertook to exercise such care and diligence as that class of goods requires, although the care and diligence may be greater than that required in the transportation of ordinary commodities. Railway v. Davis, 159 Ill. 53, 42 N. E. 882, 50 Am. St. Rep. 143.

This was an interstate shipment, and there was a clause in the contract restricting liability for damages to the line of railroad on which the damage occurred. It was shown that appellant's line ended at Longview, Tex., and that the car containing the cabbages was delivered there to a connecting carrier. The only evidence as to where the cabbages were injured is the testimony of a witness, who stated that he re-iced the car in the yards of the Iron Mountain Southern Railroad Company, at Van Buren, Ark., and noticed that some of the cabbages were beginning to turn yellow. That was at least a day after they had left appellant's line. Being an interstate shipment, appellant had the right to restrict its liability to its own line, and no presumption of negligence would arise as to the initial carrier unless it was based on the fact that the damage occurred on its line. It is the settled law in Texas that, when "freight transported by successive carriers has been damaged subsequent to its shipment, and the evidence fails to show on what particular line the injury occurred, there exists a presumption that it was through the fault of the last carrier." Railway v. Adams, 78 Tex. 372, 14 S. W. 666, 22 Am. St. Rep. 56; Railway v. Edloff, 89 Tex. 454, 34 S. W.

414, 35 S. W. 144; Railway v. Cushney, 95 Tex. 309, 67 S. W. 77; Railway v. Mazzie, 29 Tex. Civ. App. 295, 68 S. W. 56. It follows that the court erred when it instructed the jury that the burden was on appellant, the initial carrier, to show that the damage was caused by a connecting carrier. There was, in the absence of proof of circumstances tending to show that the causes operating to produce decay of the fruit were put in operation on its line, no presumption of negligence against it. It would not be necessary to prove that the whole of the decay took place on its line, but the case would be met by proof that negligent acts on the part of the initial carrier had put in operation causes which resulted in the decay of the cabbages before they reached Kansas City.

This court has fully considered the question under consideration in the case of Cane Hill Cold Storage Co. v. Railway, 95 S. W. 751, and it was there held: "The rule is not, as urged by appellant, that the receipt of goods in good condition, to be shipped by connecting carriers, and the delivery of them by the last carrier in bad condition, establish a prima facie case against all the carriers. The proper rule is that, where goods are delivered to a common carrier to be carried, by a series of connecting lines, to the point of destination, and the goods are delivered in good condition to the initial carrier, the presumption is that they were delivered to each successive carrier in the same condition." The shipment in that case was an interstate one, and the rule is applicable to that class of shipments alone, because the statutes of Texas prohibit carriers from restricting their liability as at common law in regard to shipments within the state. Rev. St. 1895, art. 320. Appellee cites the case of Railway v. China Mfg. Co., 79 Tex. 26, 14 S. W. 785, as authority sustaining the proposition, embodied in the charge of the court, that the burden is on the initial carrier, in an interstate shipment, to show that connecting carriers caused the damage to the shipper. It is not authority for any such proposition. In that case a car load of cotton was burned, while standing on the track of the railway that was sued, and the court merely held that, when it was proved that the cotton was destroyed while in possession of the carrier, the burden rested on it of showing that it had not been guilty of negligence. So in this case, if it had appeared that the cabbages had been damaged while in possession of appellant, or that there had been acts of commission or omission on its part which set in motion causes which afterwards resulted in damage to the property, then the burden would have rested upon appellant to show that it had not been guilty of negligence. The same doctrine was announced in Railway v. Richmond, 94 Tex. 571, 63 S. W. 619.

There is no merit in the first and second assignments of error, and in connection with the third it may be stated that there was no evidence raising any issue as to inherent defects in the commodity causing the damage. That was a matter of defense, and the court, in the absence of pleading or proof on that issue, properly ignored it in his charge. The reference to the act of God and a public enemy added nothing whatever to the force and effect of the charge, as no such question presented itself.

The charge complained of in the sixth assignment of error is erroneous. It devolved upon appellee to show that the cause of the damage occurred on the line of appellant's railway; and, unless that was done, appellee had no cause of action. There was no burden resting upon appellant whatever until it reasonably appeared from the evidence that it had caused the damage. Under the charge of the court it was not only necessary for appellant to prove, by a preponderance of the evidence, that it had not been guilty of negligence, but also that the loss occurred on a connecting line. No such onerous duty rested on the carrier.

The special charge, whose refusal is complained of in the seventh assignment of error, embodied the law as hereinbefore stated, and should have been given.

The eighth assignment is without merit. The testimony as to the market value of cabbages in Kansas City was properly admitted.

The testimony as to appellee having received $17.99 less for the cabbages than the freight and commission should have been excluded. It did not tend to prove any issue in the case.

Appellee should on another trial qualify himself as an expert in regard to the decay of cabbages before he is permitted to testify that yellow leaves indicate decay.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded.

BURNHAM-HANNA-MUNGER DRY GOODS CO. v. CARTER.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Nov. 18, 1908.)

HUSBAND AND WIFE (§ 85*)—PRIVILEGES OF COVERTURE—BILLS AND NOTES—NOTE FOR HUSBAND'S DEBT.

A married woman is not liable on a note executed by her, where the consideration was a previous debt due the payee from her husband.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Cent. Dig. § 841; Dec. Dig. § 85.*]

Appeal from Bowie County Court; Sam H. Smelser, Judge.

Action by the Burnham-Hanna-Munger Dry Goods Company against Mrs. Nannie Tyson Carter. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Todd & Hurley and Webber & Webber, for appellant. Glass, Estes & King, for appellee.

HODGES, J. This suit was instituted by the appellant to recover the sum of $407.50 due upon a promissory note signed by the appellee. The facts show that the consideration for the note was a previous debt due to the appellant from the husband of the appellee, and for the payment of which this note was given. The testimony also shows that the appellee, at the time of the execution of the note, was a married woman residing in Bowie county, Tex. We think, under her plea and proof of coverture, she is amply protected against any liability upon the note. There was no dispute as to those facts, and there can be no doubt as to the application of the law.

The judgment is affirmed.

BOEHRENS v. BRICE et al.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Nov. 4, 1908.)

1. JUDGMENT (§ 17*)—DEFAULT JUDGMENT—NONRESIDENTS.

No personal judgment can be rendered against a nonresident defendant, served without the state, upon his failure to appear and answer, unless he owns property within the state.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. § 26; Dec. Dig. § 17.*]

2. CORPORATIONS (§ 503*)—ACTIONS—VENUE—NONRESIDENTS.

Since no one can be sued out of the county of his residence, excepting in special instances enumerated in Rev. St. 1896, art. 1194, a plea of privilege by a company sued for tort committed in another county was properly sustained, where it appeared that its domicile was in a third county, that it had no representative or agency in the county of suit, and was not a joint tort-feasor with the other defendants.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 1935; Dec. Dig. § 503.*]

3. EVIDENCE (§ 317*)—DECLARATIONS BY THIRD PERSONS—ADMISSIBILITY.

In an action against several defendants for wrongful death of an employé, a statement as to what one of defendant's agents said to decedent on employing him about the work not being dangerous was properly excluded, where none of the other defendants were present when the statement was made, and where, when the testimony was offered, such defendant was no longer a party.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Dec. Dig. § 317.*]

4. NEGLIGENCE (§ 136*)—SUBMISSION OF ISSUES.

Where, in a negligence action, there is any evidence from which the jury might find for plaintiff, or from which they might draw a different conclusion as to the issue of negligence, the issue must be submitted to them.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Negligence, Cent. Dig. § 298; Dec. Dig. § 136.*]

5. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 286*)—DEATH OF SERVANT—ESCAPE OF GAS—NEGLIGENCE—JURY QUESTION.

Under the evidence, held a jury question whether defendants so negligently permitted gas to escape from oil tanks as to cause an employé's death.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Dec. Dig. § 286.*]

Appeal from District Court, Harris County; Norman G. Kittrell, Judge.

Action by Nancy A. Boehrens against W. E. Brice and others. From the judgment, plaintiff appeals. Partly affirmed, and partly reversed.

W. A. Fred Cook, for appellant. L. A. Carlton and Spotts & Matthews, for appellees.

RICE, J. This suit was brought by appellant, plaintiff below, against W. E. Brice, Howard R. Hughes, W. B. Sharp, and the Heywood Oil Company, for the recovery of damages sustained by her on account of the death of her son, Andrew J. Hennigan, Jr., whose death was alleged to be due to poisonous gases inhaled by him, negligently permitted to escape from defendants' oil wells and tanks. It was alleged that at the time of his death, to wit, August 15, 1903, each and all of the defendants were oil producers, being owners of oil wells and tanks located in the Shoestring district of the Sour Lake oil field. It was further alleged that, when oil was pumped from the wells, a large amount of gas permeated the same and passed through the pipes into what are termed "settling tanks," and, if not prevented from escaping therefrom, that the same settles down at and near the ground, and is of such poisonous and deadly nature as to jeopardize the health and lives of persons near thereto. It was further alleged that plaintiff's son, just before his death, together with one Williams, had been employed by said Brice to aid in running an engine and boiler, used in operating one of said pumping plants, or in keeping the pumps running that were used in drilling a well at said place, and that while so engaged defendants unlawfully and negligently permitted the gas to escape from their several wells and settling tanks in such great volume as to poison the air which was inhaled by deceased, thereby causing his death. It was also alleged that the work in said oil field was very dangerous by reason of the escaping gas, and that the two boys were unaccustomed to such work and unacquainted with the danger pertaining thereto; that it was the duty of said defendants, by the use of certain methods, fully set out in plaintiff's petition, to have prevented the escape of said gas, which defendants had wholly failed to do, by reason of which negligence on their part her said son lost his life. It was further alleged that said wells and tanks were separately owned and used by said defendants, except Hughes and Sharp, whom it was alleged conjointly owned and operated certain wells in said oil field. The defendants, except Brice, answered by general denial, general and special exceptions, pleas of not guilty, contributory negligence, and assumed risk; and the Heywood Oil Company, in addition to said pleas, interposed its plea of personal privilege to be sued in the county of its residence, to wit, in Jefferson county. The defendant Brice filed no answer, but made default. The court sustained the plea of personal privilege urged by the Heywood Oil Company, refused to permit judgment by default to be taken by the plaintiff as against Brice, but dismissed him from the case, and at the request of the defendants Hughes and Sharp, after hearing the evidence, instructed a verdict in their behalf, and judgment was rendered in accordance with said proceedings, from which judgment and rulings of the court plaintiff has appealed, and by her first assignment of error complains of the action of the court in refusing to permit her to take judgment by default against defendant Brice.

It appears from the petition that Brice was a transient person, doing business in Harris county, Tex., but the place of his residence was not stated. It is shown from the bill of exceptions taken to the ruling of the court that Brice was served without the state with citation by personal notice, as permitted under the statute, service being had upon him in the state of Iowa more than 10 days before the convening of the court; said bill of exceptions further reciting that plaintiff's pleading alleged that the place of residence of said Brice was unknown to her and that said Brice did not appear and answer in said cause. We regard the law as well settled that no personal judgment can be rendered against a nonresident defendant who is served by process without the state, it not appearing that he owns property within the state, upon his failure to appear and answer; and therefore we conclude that there was no error in the action of the court below in refusing to render judgment by default against Brice. Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 714, 24 L. Ed. 535; Donovan v. Hinzle et al. (Tex. Civ. App.) 60 S. W. 904.

By her second assignment the appellant complains of the action of the court in sustaining the plea of privilege presented by the Heywood Oil Company. By reference to said company's plea of privilege it appears that it was a resident of Jefferson county; that the cause of action asserted against it and no part thereof arose in Harris county, and that it had no agent or representative in said county; that its principal office was never at any time in Harris county, but was at all times located in Jefferson county. It negatived all of the other exceptions in the statute permitting it to be sued out of the county of its residence, among other things alleging that it was not jointly liable with any of its codefendants on account of the alleged cause of action set up in plaintiff's pleading, and that plaintiff's pleading does not allege or show any joint liability on its part. From the bill of exceptions taken to this ruling of the court

It appears that the oil company had no agent or representative in Harris county, and, further, that there was no joint liability on the part of this defendant with the other defendants sued herein. No defendant can be sued out of the county of its residence, except in certain special instances enumerated in article 1194 of the Revised Statutes of 1895. It appearing that the oil company had its place of residence or domicile in Jefferson county, in order for it to be sued in Harris county on a cause of action which arose in Hardin county, it must be shown that it came within some of said exceptions, all of which were negated by its plea of privilege, duly filed by it in limine. It appearing from the recitations of said bill of exceptions that defendant had no representative or agency in Harris county, and was not a joint tort-feasor with the other defendants, but was separately operating its wells, tanks, and pumps, it seems to us that the ruling of the court sustaining its plea was correct. We therefore overrule this assignment. Behrens Drug Co. v. Hamilton & McCarty et al., 92 Tex. 284, 48 S. W. 5; Zap v. Davidson, 21 Tex. Civ. App. 586, 54 S. W. 366.

We overrule the fourth and fifth assignments of error, complaining of the action of the court in excluding the statement of the witness Gallaher as to what was said by Wagner, the agent of Brice, to the deceased, at the time he was employed by him, to the effect that the work was not dangerous, because it appears from the bill of exceptions taken to said ruling that at the time said statement was made by Wagner none of the other defendants were present, and because it further appeared that when this testimony was offered Brice was no longer a party to the suit; he having been dismissed therefrom on account of not having been properly served.

The only remaining assignment which we deem it necessary to consider is the eighth, wherein it is urged by appellant that the court erred in instructing the jury to return a verdict for the defendants. It appears from the evidence in this case that the wells and tanks of the defendants were located within a few hundred feet of each other; that the tanks of Hughes and Sharp were located within about 100 or 150 feet from where Hennigan and Williams had been working when found dead. It was further shown that, in the operation of the business in which defendants were engaged, the gas was conveyed along with the oil from the wells by pipes into settling tanks, and that this gas, if allowed to escape, was very dangerous and likely to destroy the lives of people near by; that it was most dangerous in foggy or damp weather, at which time the gas would descend to the ground; that the night in question was both foggy and cloudy. It appeared that the deceased was employed at the time and at work for the defendant Brice in the immediate vicinity of the several wells and tanks owned and operated by the other defendants, and that the deceased, Hennigan, while possessing sufficient knowledge to run an engine or pump, knew nothing of the hazard or danger from the escape of gas in the oil fields. It was shown that gas thus conveyed from the wells to the settling tanks, if not properly safeguarded, would, and very often did, escape therefrom, that many persons before this had been "knocked out" by the escape of gas in said oil field. At the time of the injury it appeared from the evidence that there were several ways by which gas could be prevented from escaping from said tanks, or by which its dangerous agency and injurious effect could be lessened. Among others, it was shown that it could be conducted by means of a flume extending to such a distance up in the air that, when discharged, it would float away in the atmosphere and would not become dangerous, or that by the use of a steam jet inserted into the flumes it could be more or less destroyed or neutralized by steam. As to whether or not these tanks were sufficiently covered, and the best known agencies resorted to by the defendants to prevent the escape of gas from their respective tanks, on the night in question, there is conflict of testimony; and, while it is not affirmatively shown that the death of the deceased was due to gas escaping from any particular well, yet we are constrained to believe that there are circumstances in the record from which a jury might determine from whence the same came.

Under the facts of this case we are inclined to believe that the principle invoked by the appellant obtains, to wit, that where there is any evidence upon which the jury, if the issue were submitted to them, might find a verdict in behalf of plaintiff, or from which they might draw a different conclusion as to the issue of negligence, then it becomes the imperative duty of the court to submit such issue to the jury. In the present case we are of the opinion that this issue, to wit, as to whether or not the defendants Hughes and Sharp so negligently permitted the escape of gas from their oil tanks as to cause the death of Hennigan, should have been submitted to the jury; and we say this without intending to intimate any opinion as to the sufficiency of the evidence to support or defeat this issue. Bonn v. G. H. & S. A. Ry. Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 82 S. W. 808; Lamberida v. Barnum (Tex. Civ. App.) 90 S. W. 698. In Bonn v. G. H. & S. A. Ry. Co., supra, it is said by the court: "It is well settled that the question of negligence dependent on evidence should not be taken from the jury, except in cases where there is no material conflict, and where there is no room for different minds to draw different inferences from it. The question is one of law for the court only where the facts are such that all reasonable men must draw the same conclusion from them, and unless the conclusion follows as a matter of law that no recovery can be had upon any view that can be properly taken of the facts which the evidence tends to establish." Choat v. Railway Co., 90 Tex. 82, 36 S. W. 247, 37 S. W. 319; Lee v. Railway Co., 89 Tex. 583, 36 S. W. 63; Railway Co. v. Gasscamp, 69 Tex. 545, 7 S. W. 227, and other authorities there cited.

Believing that the court erred in directing a verdict in behalf of said defendants, this assignment is sustained, and, on account of this error in the ruling of the court, its judgment, so far as it affects defendants Hughes and Sharp, is reversed and the cause remanded; but, as to the rulings dismissing the defendant Brice and sustaining the plea of privilege filed by the Heywood Oil Company, the same is affirmed.

Affirmed in part, and reversed and remanded in part.

HILDEBRANDT v. HOFFMAN et al.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Oct. 30, 1908. On Rehearing, Nov. 25, 1908.)

1. TRESPASS TO TRY TITLE (§ 47*)—PETITION—JUDGMENT.

Where in trespass to try title and for injunction and damages, the petition described the land and defendant disclaimed title and thereby admitted plaintiff's title, a judgment for plaintiff for the land described was proper, though he did not offer evidence of title.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trespass to Try Title, Cent. Dig. § 70; Dec. Dig. § 47.*]

2. TRESPASS TO TRY TITLE (§ 47*)—PETITION—JUDGMENT.

A judgment in trespass to try title which, in describing the land adjudged to plaintiff, follows the field notes of the land claimed in the petition, and which does not undertake to settle any question as to the location of the boundary lines between the lands of plaintiff and defendant, is not objectionable as giving to plaintiff more land than he claimed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trespass to Try Title, Dec. Dig. § 47.*]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 742*)—ASSIGNMENTS OF ERROR—PROPOSITIONS—REVIEW.

A proposition that a party is restricted in his recovery to the allegations of the petition and the relief prayed for is not germane to the assignment of error that plaintiff in trespass to try title had judgment for more land than he claimed, and cannot be considered on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3000; Dec. Dig. § 742.*]

4. TRESPASS TO TRY TITLE (§ 47*)—PETITION—JUDGMENT.

A petition containing the essentials of a petition in trespass to try title and special allegations on which prayers for injunction and/or damages are based, concluding with a prayer for injunction and damages and for further relief, authorizes a judgment for plaintiff for the land described in the petition.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trespass to Try Title, Cent. Dig. § 69; Dec. Dig. § 47.*]

Appeal from District Court, Austin County; L. W. Moore, Judge.

Action by Dorothea Hoffman and others against Joe Hildebrandt. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

C. G. Krueger and W. I. Glenn, for appellant. Bell, Johnson, Matthaël & Thompson, for appellees.

REESE, J. Appellees brought this suit in the district court against appellant, alleging in their petition that they were the owners of certain land, describing it by field notes; that appellant had invaded the premises, had built a string of fence within their inclosure, had trampled their grass, and with miscellaneous weapons of war created a general disturbance and invasion of their freehold, causing them great mental anguish, and inflicting upon them irreparable damage. They claim actual damages in the sum of $300 and exemplary damages of $1,000, for which they prayed judgment, and also prayed for injunction, and that defendants be required to remove the fence. Appellees sought and obtained a temporary injunction. Appellant pleaded general denial and not guilty as to the wrongs and trespasses charged. He further disclaimed title to any of the land described in the field notes of the petition. Upon trial without a jury appellees had judgment perpetuating the injunction, and ordering appellant to remove the fence placed by him on their land. It was further adjudged that appellees have and recover of appellant the land described in their petition. The only evidence in the record is testimony introduced on both sides on the question of the location of the boundary lines of appellees' land. It will be seen that the case as pleaded and tried is something of a nondescript. There is no assignment of error raising the question of the sufficiency of the pleadings to authorize the judgment.

The first assignment of error is as follows: "The court erred in rendering judgment for plaintiffs for land which they had shown no title in themselves." The appellees did not introduce any evidence of title so far as is shown by the record, but this was not necessary in view of the disclaimer of title on the part of appellant, which was clearly taken and intended as an admission of appellees' title to the land described in their petition. The assignment is overruled.

It is contended by the second assignment that appellees had judgment for more land than they claimed. This contention cannot be sustained. The judgment in describing the land adjudged to appellees follows accurately and exactly the field notes of the land claimed in the petition. The judgment does not undertake to settle any question there may be of boundary, or to locate the lines between the land of appellant and that of appellees, but simply gives appellees judgment for the land as described in their petition, and no more. There is no merit in the assignment.

The second proposition under this second assignment, "that a party is restricted in his recovery to the allegations of his petition and the relief prayed for," in so far as it may be intended to raise the question of the sufficiency of the pleadings to authorize the judgment, is entirely outside of the assignment, which complains that the court erred in rendering judgment for more land than was sued for. The proposition cannot be considered.

What has been said sufficiently disposes of the third assignment of error, which, with the proposition thereunder, is overruled.

There is no merit in the fourth assignment of error questioning the judgment against appellant for costs.

Finding no reversible error presented, the judgment is affirmed.

Affirmed.

On Rehearing.

Upon the hearing of this appeal, we were inclined to the opinion that the judgment was not authorized by the pleadings, but that the point was not presented by any assignment of error. In this latter holding we still think we were correct, but our attention is called to the alleged error by a proposition under the second assignment of error (not germane to the assignment, however). If error at all, it would be fundamental. Upon a more careful examination of the petition, however, we think that it authorizes the judgment. The petition contains all the essential allegations of a petition in trespass to try title, as well as the special allegations upon which the prayer for injunction and for damages is based, and concludes with a prayer for injunction and damages, and for "such other and further relief as they may be entitled to in the premises." There is no specific prayer for judgment for the land. We think the petition authorized a judgment for the land. Cravens v. Wilson, 48 Tex. 841. The case was evidently treated by both parties as a suit in trespass to try title as well as for injunction and damages. The disclaimer of appellants went to the full extent of the land as described in the petition and judgment. The location of the third line in the metes and bounds set out in the petition and judgment, with reference to appellees' fence, was as much a part of the metes and bounds of the land as the other calls. If appellant had desired to limit his disclaimer to the land as described by the calls for course and distance, he should have so pleaded.

Having disclaimed any title or ownership to any of the land sued for and adjudged to appellees, appellant has no ground for complaint against the judgment. Appellees were only given judgment for land which appellant admits by his pleadings he does not own, or claim to own.

The motion for rehearing is overruled.
Overruled.

WILLIAMS v. LIVINGSTON et al.
(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Nov. 11, 1908.)

1. EVIDENCE (§ 506*)—EXPERT OPINIONS—MIXED QUESTIONS OF LAW AND FACT.

It was improper to allow an expert witness to give an opinion as to whether decedent had mind enough to comprehend the legal effect of a deed; the opinion being in part on a question of fact, as to the competency, which was for the jury, and in part as to the legal effect of a deed, which was a question of law for the court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 309; Dec. Dig. § 506.*]

2. EVIDENCE (§ 471*)—OPINIONS—CONCLUSIONS OF FACT OR LAW.

A witness should not be permitted to give an opinion, which, if the jury believes it to be correct, would determine the matters of law as well as the facts involved.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 2149-2152; Dec. Dig. § 471.*]

3. EVIDENCE (§ 472*)—OPINIONS—MENTAL CAPACITY—ADMISSIBILITY.

A witness could not give an opinion that decedent did not have sufficient mind to execute a deed or to not know its effect or value, though witness was familiarly acquainted with her, and had testified from his observation of her conduct that she was very weak minded.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 2194; Dec. Dig. § 472.*]

4. EVIDENCE (§ 506*)—EXPERT OPINIONS—MENTAL CAPACITY.

Capacity to "transact business" is not a proper subject for expert testimony, since the question presents a matter of law.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 2309; Dec. Dig. § 506.*]

5. TRIAL (§ 260*)—INSTRUCTIONS—REFUSAL—MATTER COVERED.

Instructions substantially covered by those given are properly refused.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 651-659; Dec. Dig. § 260.*]

Appeal from District Court, Waller County; Wells Thompson, Judge.

Action by Della Livingston against Sandy Williams; Harry Stubblefield and another being substituted as plaintiffs on plaintiff's death. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded.

J. D. Harvey, A. G. Lipscomb, and W. J. Poole, for appellant.

NEILL, J. On November 22, 1905, Della Livingston sued Sandy Williams to cancel a deed to certain lands made by her to him on September 14th of the same year. The ground upon which cancellation was asked was mental incapacity of the grantor. Pending the suit the original plaintiff died, and her death being suggested, Harry Stubblefield and Myra Downing, the heirs of deceased were made parties plaintiff. Defendant's arswer consisted of a general demurrer, a disclaimer as to a part of the premise, a general denial, and plea of not guilty. The trial of the case resulted in a verdict and judgment for the plaintiffs.

The only issue in the case was Della Livingston's mental capacity to make the deed. Upon this issue there was testimony pro and con, which required it to be submitted to the jury. Much opinion evidence upon the issue was introduced by either side, of which was the testimony of Dr. Osborne, who having qualified as an expert upon diseases and infirmities of the mind, and having testified that he observed Della Livingston on several occasions between March, 1906, and January, 1906, having been called to treat her professionally, and that at times he considered her blank—no mind at all—her mind was weak, was asked by appellees' counsel whether during the period between said dates she in his judgment had mind enough to comprehend and understand the legal effect of a deed or legal instrument, which he answered: "In my opinion she had not." Again, he was asked: "Now, in seeing her in the condition you saw her in January, in your judgment, doctor, would it have been possible for her to have mind enough to have understood and comprehended the legal effect of a deed made in September?" This he answered: "No; I do not think she did." The appellant objected to each question and answer upon the ground that it invoked and obtained a legal conclusion of the witness upon the very issue to be determined by the jury, under instructions from the court as to the law, from the evidence introduced. The action of the court allowing the questions to be asked and answered over appellant's objection is the basis of the first assignment of error.

There can be no doubt about the assignment being well taken. The first question embodies the fact that the witness himself understood the legal effect of a deed or legal instrument; for, unless he knew its legal effect, he could not answer the question. The answer, then, embraces the witness' opinion on a matter of law as well as of fact; that is to say, the legal effect of a deed or legal instrument and the condition or state of Mrs. Livingston's mind when she made the deed sought to be cancelled. The legal effect of a deed or other legal instrument is a question of law with which a jury has nothing to do; but can only be decided by the court. The mental capacity of the maker of a deed is a matter of fact for the jury, with which a court has nothing to do. Whenever it may become necessary for a jury to be informed as to the legal effect of a written instrument in order to enable it to determine whether the party who executed it had sufficient mental capacity, such information should come from the court, and not from the witness stand. No witness should be permitted to give an opinion, which, if the jury believes correct, would determine the matters of law as well as the fact involved. The opinion of the witness, being, in part, upon a question of law addressed to the court, and, in part, upon a matter of fact, addressed to the jury, was on a mixed question of law and fact, and should not have been admitted as evidence. Houston & T. C. Ry. Co. v. Roberts (Tex. Sup.) 108 S. W. 808; G., C. & S. F. Ry. v. Kimble (Tex. Civ. App.) 109 S. W. 234. What we have just said applies in all its force to the other question and answer embraced in the assignment. Construing the answer in connection with the question, the witness was permitted to give it as his opinion that it was not possible for Mrs. Livingston to have mind enough to have understood the legal effect of her deed. If this was taken by the jury as evidence, as it must have been from its being admitted, the case was decided, both as to the law and facts, by the opinion of the doctor, and nothing remained for the jury to do except register his opinion in the form of a verdict, and return it to the court, so that it might be entered as a judgment on its minutes in favor of the plaintiffs.

In Brown v. Mitchell, 88 Tex. 367, 31 S. W. 629, 36 L. R. A. 64, after an exhaustive review of the authorities, it was held by the Supreme Court: "That no witness will be permitted to testify to a legal conclusion from facts given either by himself or testified to by another. It is the province of the jury from the testimony to find the facts; but it is the duty of the court alone to inform the jury as to the rule of law by which they are to be governed in determining upon the sufficiency of the facts given to them by the witnesses. The conclusions or opinions to which witnesses may testify in this character of case [one involving mental capacity] are simply to be treated as facts presented to the jury by means of the conclusions drawn by the witnesses from their observations for the reason alone that the facts are of such character that they are incapable of being presented by stating conclusions drawn from their observation." See, also, Metropolitan Ins. Co. v. Wagner (Tex. Civ. App.) 109 S. W. 1123; Mills v. Cook (Tex. Civ. App.) 57 S. W. 81; Half v. Curtis, 68 Tex. 642, 5 S. W. 451; 2 Wigmore on Ev. § 1958.

The testimony complained of by the fourth, fifth, and sixth assignments of error each presents the question whether it is permissible to allow a witness who was acquainted with and familiar with the grantor, after testifying from his observation of her conduct and mental condition that she was very weak minded, to give in evidence his opinion that she did not have sufficient mind to execute a deed, or would not know its effect or its value. While there is perhaps a conflict of opinion upon this question, as is indicated by the authorities collated in the notes under the section above cited from Wigmore on Evidence, we think in this state that it is controlled by the opinion of the Supreme Court in Brown v. Mitchell, supra, and that under it such evidence is inadmissible. We therefore sustain the three assignments referred to.

The seventh assignment of error involves the question whether it is permissible for a witness who has shown himself qualified to testify as to one's mental condition or state to give it as his opinion that such a one did not have sufficient mental capacity to "transact business." It is held that "what is sufficient capacity to transact business" is a matter of law, depending somewhat upon the nature of the business. As is said in Fairchild v. Bascomb, 35 Vt. 416: "A witness may not correctly apprehend the rule of law, and, if he uses such an expression, may be misled himself or may mislead the jury." See, also, Betts v. Betts, 113 Iowa, 111, 84 N. W. 975; McGibbons v. McGibbons, 119 Iowa, 140, 93 N. W. 55; Torrey v. Burney, 113 Ala. 496, 21 South. 348; Dominick v. Randolph, 124 Ala. 557, 27 South. 481; Shapter v. Pillar, 28 Colo. 209, 63 Pac. 302; Turner's Appeal, 72 Conn. 305, 44 Atl. 310. As is said in Shapter v. Pillar, supra (a case wherein the issue was similar to the one here): "The great weight of modern authority in such cases, in the absence of any statutory provision, is that such capacity is not properly the subject of opinion evidence, but must be determined by the probative facts bearing thereon." From the weight of authority upon the question raised by this assignment, we think such testimony inadmissible.

The special instruction asked by appellant was, in substance, embraced in the main charge; and its refusal was not error. The test of a grantor's capacity to make a deed, though stated in different language, was correctly given in the court's charge and the refused instruction.

On account of the errors indicated, the judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded.

HILL et al. v. MOORE et al.

(Supreme Court of Tennessee. Nov. 14, 1908.)

JUDICIAL SALES (§ 61*)—EVIDENCE—RECITALS IN OFFICIAL DEEDS.

Under Acts 1907, p. 1131, c. 334, §§ 1, 2, making conveyances by public officers, etc., prima facie evidence of the facts recited therein so far as they relate to the execution of the power of the office, a clerk and master's deed, reciting that by a decree of a specified chancery court, rendered at a specified term in a specified cause and entered at a specified page, the clerk on a specified date sold at public auction the land described to the grantee for a specified sum, as appears from the clerk's report, the grantee having paid such sum as required by the decree confirming the report, shows prima facie the clerk's authority to make the deed, requiring one questioning his authority to file a copy of the record to overturn such prima facie case.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judicial Sales, Cent. Dig. § 121; Dec. Dig. § 61.*]

Appeal from Chancery Court, Jefferson County; Hal. H. Haynes, Chancellor.

Action by L. C. Hill and others against J. L. Moore and others. From a decree for complainants, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

C. T. Rankin, for appellants. Swan & Cawood, for appellees.

NEIL, J. This action was brought in the chancery court of Jefferson county to recover a part of a 15-acre tract of land described in the pleadings. The complainant deigned a complete title from the state. The defendants, however, insist that one link in the chain of title, consisting of a clerk and master's deed, is defective, because that deed is not supported by the record of the case in which the land was sold; hence that, within the rule laid down in Castleman v. Land Co., 1 Tenn. Ch. App. 9, 12, 13, the complainant cannot recover. The case stated does fall within the authority cited, and the point would be fatal to the recovery, but for the fact that the rule referred to is met by Acts 1907, p. 1131, c. 334. This act reads as follows:

"Section 1. Be it enacted," etc., "that all instruments of conveyance executed in official capacity by any public officer of this state, or by any person occupying a position of trust or acting in fiduciary relation shall be admitted, held and construed in and by the courts of this state as prima facie evidence of the facts in such instruments recited in so far as such facts relate to the execution of the power of such office or trust.

"Sec. 2. Be it further enacted, that all such instruments now of record shall be admitted, held, and construed in accordance with section 1 of this act; provided, further, this act shall not apply to any pending litigation."

The deed referred to, so far as necessary to be quoted, reads as follows:

"This indenture, made this the 21st day of January, A. D. 1902, between G. W. Holsinger, clerk and master of the chancery court at Dandridge, for Jefferson county, Tennessee, of the first part, and J. H. Ferguson, of Jefferson county, state of Tennessee, of the second part, witnesseth that by a decree of said court, rendered at the May term, 1899, in the cause of J. H. Carey, Adm'r, et al., complainants, v. J. L. Kirby et al., defendants, and entered on page 567 of Minute Book 11, the said clerk and master did, on the 14th day of November, 1899, sell at public auction the real estate hereinafter described to the said J. H. Ferguson, for $1,211.85, as appears from the report of said clerk and master, made in said cause to the November term, 1899, and entered on page 37 of Minute Book 12, the said J. H. Ferguson having paid said sum of $1,211.85 as required by the decree of said court, confirming said report: Now, therefore, in order to carry into effect said sale, in pursuance of said decree, and in consideration of the sum of $2 paid to the clerk and master, the receipt of which is hereby acknowledged, the said G. W. Holtsinger, as such clerk and master, doth hereby transfer and convey to the said J. H. Ferguson, and to his heirs and assigns, forever, said tract or parcel of land"—describing the land.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

From these recitals the court would presume, under the statute referred to, that the court that ordered the land sold had jurisdiction of the parties and subject-matter, and, in short, that the clerk acted under due authority in making the deed. Under the statute referred to the burden would rest upon any one questioning such authority to file a copy of the record to overturn the prima facie case made by the deed.

Other errors assigned have been examined and overruled orally. They need not be referred to in this opinion.

The chancellor committed no error in decreeing the land to the complainants, and his decree is affirmed, with costs.

WESTERN UNION TELEGRAPH CO. v. POTTS et ux.

(Supreme Court of Tennessee. Nov. 7, 1908.)

1. TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES (§ 68*)—SOCIAL TELEGRAMS—DELAY—RECOVERABLE DAMAGE—MENTAL ANGUISH.

Mental anguish is an element of damage recoverable for delay in delivering a social telegram.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Telegraphs and Telephones, Cent. Dig. §§ 69, 70; Dec. Dig. § 68.*]

2. TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES (§ 56*)—TELEGRAMS—DELAYS IN DELIVERY—PERSON ENTITLED TO DAMAGES.

The right to sue for delay in delivering a telegram may be in either the sender or addressee, and either on the contract or for breach of a statutory duty. If on the contract, the right of the addressee is based on the theory that the contract was made for his benefit; if under the statute, the addressee sues as the "aggrieved party."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Telegraphs and Telephones, Cent. Dig. § 37; Dec. Dig. § 56.*]

3. TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES (§ 59*)—TELEGRAMS—DELAYS IN DELIVERY—ACTIONS—NATURE.

An action for breach of a telegraph company's statutory duty to promptly deliver a message is in effect one for negligence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Telegraphs and Telephones, Cent. Dig. § 48; Dec. Dig. § 59.*]

4. TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES (§ 67*)—TELEGRAMS—DELAY IN DELIVERING—MEASURE OF DAMAGES.

The measure of damages for wrongful delay in delivering a death message, whether suit be on the contract or in tort, is, first, at least nominal damages; second, such damages as may be fairly considered as arising naturally, or having been within contemplation of the parties when the contract was made; and, third, in a proper case, punitive damages.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Telegraphs and Telephones, Cent. Dig. §§ 64-68; Dec. Dig. § 67.*]

5. TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES (§ 67*)—TELEGRAMS—IMPROPER DELIVERY—NOTICE OF DAMAGES.

A telegraph company may learn the grounds on which it may base an estimate of, or anticipate, damages resulting from a failure to properly deliver the message, either from facts communicated to its agents dehors the message or from the face of the message itself.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Telegraphs and Telephones, Cent. Dig. §§ 64-68; Dec. Dig. § 67.*]

6. TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES (§ 56*)—TELEGRAMS—DELAY IN DELIVERY—WHO MAY SUE FOR.

Action for delay in delivering a telegram may be brought by one whose name appears in the message as the beneficiary thereof, though he be neither sender nor addressee, or in the name of an undisclosed principal of the sender.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Telegraphs and Telephones, Cent. Dig. § 37; Dec. Dig. § 56.*]

7. TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES (§ 68*)—DEATH MESSAGES—UNDISCLOSED PRINCIPAL—MENTAL ANGUISH—RIGHT TO RECOVER.

The undisclosed principal of both the sender and the addressee of a death message cannot recover damages for mental anguish; her measure of recovery being only such damages as the apparent sender could recover, the cost of the telegram.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Telegraphs and Telephones, Cent. Dig. §§ 69, 70; Dec. Dig. § 68.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Hamilton County; M. M. Allison, Judge.

Action by A. B. Potts and wife against the Western Union Telegraph Company. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Reversed and rendered.

Shields, Cates & Mountcastle and Brown & Spurlock, for appellant. Murray & Murray, for appellees.

NEIL, J. Action to recover damages for failure to promptly deliver a telegram, recovery in the court below for $500, and an appeal in error by the company.

The facts are as follows:

The mother of Mrs. Clara Potts, of Chattanooga, Tenn., was lying at the point of death near Springville, Ala. Mrs. Potts requested her brother, W. D. Self, to telegraph news of her mother's death to Chattanooga, when it should occur, in time to enable her to be present at the funeral. The arrangement between them was that the message was to be sent to her husband, A. B. Potts, at his place of business, and he promised his wife that on receiving such a message he would promptly deliver it to her. Mr. Self complied with his promise by handing to plaintiff in error for transmission the following message:

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

"Springville, Ala., 2/14, 1905.

"A. B. Potts, % Master Mechanic, C. S. Shops, Chattanooga, Tenn.

"Mother died this morning, seven o'clock; come to Springville, train one, tonight.

"W. D. Self."

The message reached Chattanooga at 2:48 p. m. on the same day, and could have been delivered in ample time to enable Mrs. Potts to leave for Springville on the 6:30 p. m. train. If she had received the message in time, she could and would have reached Springville in ample time for the funeral. The company, however, negligently failed to deliver the message until after the 6:30 train had left. In consequence of this negligence Mrs. Potts could not leave for Springville until the next morning. She left on the earliest train possible after the delivery of the message to her husband, but was able to reach her mother's home only after the interment had taken place.

Mrs. Potts and her husband brought suit to recover damages on this state of facts, with the result already stated.

The company had no further knowledge or notice of the relations of the parties, or the probable consequences of a negligent failure to deliver the message, than such as was furnished by the face of the message itself.

The company moved for peremptory instructions in the court below, which was refused, and it insists here that the court erred in denying the motion.

The plaintiff in error insists that the facts stated do not make out a case of liability against it, since, as it claims, Mrs. Potts was neither sender nor addressee of the message, and there was nothing on its face indicating that she had any interest in it. Hence it is said the consequences to Mrs. Potts, in the way of mental suffering or otherwise, or a failure on the part of the company to deliver the message, could not have been within reasonable contemplation.

At a former term of the court the judgment of the circuit court was affirmed, and a petition for rehearing was thereafter filed by the telegraph company, and was held under advisement.

It is not necessary to discuss the right to damages for mental anguish arising from delay in the delivery of a social telegram. That question has long been settled in this state. Wadsworth v. Telegraph Company, 86 Tenn. 686, 8 S. W. 574, 6 Am. St. Rep. 864; Railroad v. Griffin, 92 Tenn. 694, 22 S. W. 787; Telegraph Company v. Mellon, 96 Tenn. 66, 33 S. W. 725; Telegraph Company v. Robinson, 97 Tenn. 638, 37 S. W. 545, 34 L. R. A. 431; Telegraph Co. v. Frith, 106 Tenn. 167, 58 S. W. 118; Gray v. Telegraph Co., 108 Tenn. 39, 64 S. W. 1063, 56 L. R. A. 301, 91 Am. St. Rep. 706; Telephone Co. v. Brown, 104 Tenn. 56, 55 S. W. 155.

The right to sue may be in either the sender or the addressee, and may be either on the contract or for breach of the statutory duty to promptly deliver. If on the contract, the right of the addressee is based on the proposition that the contract must be treated as made between the sender and the company for the benefit of the addressee; if under the statute, the addressee sues as the "aggrieved party." Manier & Co. v. Telegraph Co., 94 Tenn. 442, 448, 29 S. W. 732; Gray v. Telegraph Co., 108 Tenn. 39, 64 S. W. 1063, 56 L. R. A. 301, 91 Am. St. Rep. 706; Telegraph Co. v. Mellon, supra. The ground of the action, if on the contract, is for the breach thereof; if under the statute, it is for the failure to perform the duty imposed, and in effect the action is equivalent to one for negligence. Gray v. Telegraph Co., 108 Tenn. 39, 49, 50, 64 S. W. 1063, 56 L. R. A. 301, 91 Am. St. Rep. 706; Wadsworth v. Telegraph Co., supra; Jones v. Telegraph Co., 101 Tenn. 442, 47 S. W. 699; Telegraph Co. v. Mellon, supra. The measure of damages, whether the suit be on the contract or in tort, is, in this class of cases substantially the same, viz.: (1) If there has been a violation of the contract, or a breach of duty on the part of the company, the aggrieved party is entitled to recover, in any event, nominal damages. Wadsworth v. Telegraph Co., supra; Jones v. Telegraph Co., supra; Telegraph Co. v. Mellon, supra; Gray v. Telegraph Co., supra. (2) Such damages as may be fairly and reasonably considered as arising naturally, in the usual course of things, from the breach of the contract or the violation of public duty, or such damages as may be reasonably supposed to have been within the contemplation of both parties, at the time they made the contract, as the probable result of a breach of it. Wadsworth v. Telegraph Co., supra; Railroad v. Griffin, supra; Telegraph Co. v. Reid, 120 Ky. 231, 85 S. W. 1171, 70 L. R. A. 289; McPeck v. Telegraph Co., 107 Iowa, 356, 78 N. W. 63, 43 L. R. A. 214, 70 Am. St. Rep. 206; 27 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law (2d Ed.) p. 1059. (3) In a proper case, punitive damages. Telegraph Co. v. Frith, 106 Tenn. 167, 58 S. W. 118; Telegraph Co. v. Mellon, supra. The company may learn the grounds on which it may base an estimate of, or anticipate, the damages that may result or naturally flow from a failure to properly deliver the message, either from facts communicated to its agents dehors the message or from the face of the message itself. Pepper v. Telegraph Co., 87 Tenn. 554, 558, 11 S. W. 733, 4 L. R. A. 600, 10 Am. St. Rep. 699; Telegraph Co. v. Frith, supra; Telegraph Co. v. Adams, 75 Tex. 531, 12 S. W. 857, 6 L. R. A. 844, 16 Am. St. Rep. 920; Postal Telegraph Co. v. Lathrop, 131 Ill. 573, 23 N. E. 583, 7 L. R. A. 474, 19 Am. St. Rep. 55; Telegraph Co. v. Feegles, 75 Tex. 537, 12 S. W. 860; Reese v. Telegraph Co., 123 Ind. 294.

24 N. E. 163, 7 L. R. A. 583; Telegraph Co. v. Swearingin, 97 Tex. 293, 78 S. W. 491, 104 Am. St. Rep. 876; Bright v. Telegraph Co., 132 N. C. 317, 43 S. E. 841; Davis v. Telegraph Co., 107 Ky. 527, 54 S. W. 849, 92 Am. St. Rep. 371; Telegraph Co. v. Edmondson, 91 Tex. 206, 42 S. W. 549.

It is not necessary to a recovery that the suit should be brought either by the person whose name appears in the telegram as the sender, or by the one whose name appears as the addressee. It may be brought by one whose name appears upon the face of the message as the beneficiary thereof, though neither the sender nor the addressee. Telegraph Co. v. Mellon, supra; Whitehill v. Telegraph Co. (C. C.) 136 Fed. 499, 500. Or it may be brought by the undisclosed principal of the sender. Milliken v. Telegraph Co., 110 N. Y. 403, 18 N. E. 251, 1 L. R. A. 281; Leonard v. Telegraph Co., 41 N. Y. 544, 1 Am. Rep. 446, 454; Harkness v. Telegraph Co., 73 Iowa, 190, 34 N. W. 811, 5 Am. St. Rep. 672; Telegraph Co. v. Broesche, 72 Tex. 654, 10 S. W. 734, 13 Am. St. Rep. 843.

It would seem to follow, from the principles above stated, that the undisclosed principal of the addressee might also bring the action; but the contrary has been held in two cases. Lee v. Western Union Telegraph Co., 51 Mo. App. 375; Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Schriver, 141 Fed. 538, 72 C. C. A. 506, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 678. And there seems to be a general disinclination to extend the right of recovery for mental anguish, as distinguished from physical injury, beyond the point already reached by the authorities. However, it seems to be recognized that, where the person interested in the telegram is the undisclosed principal of both the sender and the addressee, he may recover. Leonard v. Telegraph Co., supra; Milliken v. Telegraph Co., supra.

This is the case we have before the court now for consideration. Both the sender and the addressee were the agents of the undisclosed principal, Mrs. Clara Potts.

The petition to rehear and the accompanying brief, so far as they need be noticed, make the point that the court, in the former opinion, erred in respect of the measure of damages. It is conceded that the undisclosed principal of the sender of a telegram could sue for breach of the contract; but it is said that he would have to adopt the contract as he found it, that he would be entitled to recover only such damages as the apparent sender could recover, and that this would necessarily exclude damages for the mental anguish of the undisclosed principal; that the telegraph company and the apparent sender, together with the language of the message, would be the persons and the matter for consideration; that the company would be presumed to have in contemplation the language, purport, and effect of the message, and the relation of the apparent sender thereto, and would be liable to the apparent sender, in case of a breach of duty in respect of the message, for all such damages as might be considered as arising naturally, in the ordinary course of things, from such breach of contract or violation of duty, but this could not be held to include a special injury to a third person, whose particular relation to the matter could not be held in contemplation, because not only unknown, but unsuggested by the language of the message or otherwise; that where the subject of the message is some commercial matter, and a breach of duty occurs on the part of the telegraph company, the nature of the business, which is the subject of the telegram, places the parties thereto in possession of data from which they may contemplate the probable effect of a failure in correct and seasonable transmission and delivery on the part of the company, and that an undisclosed principal can obtain the benefit of this as fully as the agent, the apparent sender; but that the case is different in respect of social messages, since in these the personal element enters of the special relation of the parties thereto, and unless the existence of such parties and the fact that they have an interest in the message be called to the attention of the company, by something in the language of the message itself or by collateral information given to the company or its agent in the course of the transaction, it is impossible that there should have been had in contemplation the relationship and interest of such parties, and the probable result to them of a breach. It is said that it was on this principle that the recoveries were based in favor of the undisclosed principal in the two commercial cases referred to in the original opinion (Leonard v. Telegraph Co., 41 N. Y. 544, 1 Am. Rep. 446, 454; Harkness v. Telegraph Co., 73 Iowa, 190, 34 N. W. 811, 5 Am. St. Rep. 672), and on which relief for mental anguish was denied in Telegraph Co. v. Kerr, 4 Tex. Civ. App. 280, 23 S. W. 564, and Pacific Express Co. v. Redman (Tex. Civ. App.) 60 S. W. 677, and that the two mental anguish cases relied upon in the original opinion (Cashion v. Telegraph Co., 124 N. C. 459, 32 S. E. 746, 45 L. R. A. 160, and Landie v. Telegraph Co., 124 N. C. 528, 32 S. E. 886) have, since the delivery of our former opinion, been discredited by the Supreme Court of North Carolina; the first-mentioned case having been in terms overruled, and the second in effect, by the case of Helms v. Western Union Telegraph Co., 143 N. C. 386, 55 S. E. 831, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 249, 118 Am. St. Rep. 811, it having been held in the case last cited, and the two Texas cases (4 Tex. Civ. App. 280, 23 S. W. 564, and [Tex. Civ. App.] 60 S. W. 677) that the undisclosed principal in a social telegram could not recover for his mental anguish, but only such damages as the apparent sender could recover—that is, the cost of the telegram.

This view of the matter was not suggested by counsel at the former hearing, nor did it occur to the court; but after further examination of the authorities and careful reflection we are of the opinion that this is the correct view. Of course, there never could have been any doubt of the general proposition that an undisclosed principal of the sender could have the benefit of a contract made for him by his agent in the name of the latter; but the conditions which he must submit to in availing himself of such contract were not sufficiently attended to in due correlation to the measure of damages in cases of the character before us.

In our own case of Foster v. Smith, 2 Cold. 474, 478, 88 Am. Dec. 604, the court said:

"It will make no difference in such cases * * * that the principal, at the time of entering into the contract, is unknown or unsuspected, nor that the third person has dealt with the agent, supposing him to be the sole principal. The only effect of the last consideration is that the principal will not be permitted, while insisting upon the contract, to intercept the right of such third person in regard to the agent; but he must take the contract, subject to all the rights of such third person, in the same way as if the agent was the sole principal, and subject to these rights the principal may generally sue upon such contract in the same manner as if he had personally made it. Neither can it make any difference that the contract be of that character that the agent may maintain a suit upon it in his own name. In cases where a third person deals with an agent, supposing him to be the principal, and without any knowledge that the property involved in the transaction belongs to another, such third person may acquire rights which will be protected; and to this end, it can make no difference whether the action be in the name of the principal or agent. The right to sue upon the contract entered into by the agent, within the scope of his power, and to the enjoyment of all its benefits and advantages by operation of law, flows to the principal, though he may be unknown; and the fact that the third person dealt with the agent, believing him to be the principal, cannot defeat the rights of the principal. Neither will the fact that the name of the principal was concealed, while such third person was induced to contract with the agent believing him to be the principal, be permitted to defeat the rights of such third person under or growing out of such contract, even though the action be brought in the name of the principal; and in all such cases it may be said the principal 'steps into the shoes of the agent.'"

In Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Kerr, supra, it appeared that, the husband of Mrs. Kerr being ill, she asked one Henderson to send a message to Dr. J. C. Jones, at Gonzales, Tex. This message was sent, but was signed only by Henderson, and it was not known to the telegraph company, or to its agent, that Henderson was acting as agent for Mrs. Kerr. The message was not delivered promptly, the husband of Mrs. Kerr died, and the suit was brought to recover compensation for mental anguish and for suspense experienced by her, as the result of the failure of Dr. Jones to arrive as she expected. On this subject the court said:

"The telegram, according to the petition, was sent by the agent of appellee for her benefit. A breach of the contract thus made would give rise to a cause of action for damages legitimately resulting. That this is true, if Henderson acted as plaintiff's agent, appellant's counsel does not deny. The second question presented does not involve a denial of the right of an undisclosed principal to sue upon a broken contract made by his agent for his benefit, but raises a question as to the character of damages recoverable."

After adverting to the fact that the telegraph company had no notice that Henderson was acting as agent for Mrs. Kerr, the court continued: "There was nothing in the dispatch, or the circumstances attending its delivery, to excite any inquiry as to the plaintiff's connection with it. How can it be said that a condition of her mind, the result of the failure to deliver, entered into the calculation of the parties when it was sent? It may be true that she can enforce the contract, if made by her agent for her benefit; but she must adopt it as it was, and can recover nothing but what the agent could recover if he sued in his own name. All defenses and rights which the defendant could urge against the agent, if suing, it may urge against the plaintiff. Mechem, Ag. § 773. Can it be contended that, in a suit on this telegram by Henderson, such element of damages would be mental anguish of Mrs. Kerr? * * * That the fact of the agency was not communicated may be immaterial to some questions, but very material to others. The principal may sue for breach of the contract made for his benefit, whether his existence and connection with it were disclosed or not; but he cannot, in our opinion, recover a class of damages affecting his person, which an ignorance of his existence put beyond the contemplation of the other contracting party."

The case of Pacific Express Company v. Redman, supra, is in strict accord. In that case it appeared that Miss Redman, through her agent, N. B. Pruett, ordered certain medicine, by express, from a neighboring town. By reason of the negligence of the express company the medicine was not promptly delivered, and as a result thereof Miss Redman averred that she suffered great physical and mental pain, and her recovery was seriously retarded. It was not known to the express company that Mr. Pruett was acting as her agent. He made the order in his own name, and it was held that Miss Redman could not recover any damages peculiar to herself, but only such as Pruett could have recovered if he had been suing.

In view of what has been said in this opinion, we think that the conclusion reached in the former opinion, as to the liability of the company, was erroneous, and that a peremptory instruction should have been given in favor of the company, to the extent, at least, of directing a verdict for nominal damages only—that is, for the price of the message, 40 cents. A judgment will accordingly be entered now. The plaintiff in error will pay the costs of this court, and the defendant in error the costs of the court below.

KNIGHTS OF PYTHIAS OF NORTH AMERICA, ETC., et al. v. BOND.

(Supreme Court of Arkansas. Nov. 2, 1908.)

APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1134*)—ABSENCE OF BILL OF EXCEPTIONS—AFFIRMANCE.

Where it appears from the record that no bill of exceptions was filed within the time allowed by the lower court, and no error appears on the face of the record, the judgment will be affirmed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4454; Dec. Dig. § 1134.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Pulaski County; Robert J. Lea, Judge.

Action between the Knights of Pythias of North America, South America, Europe, Asia, Africa, and Australia, and the Grand Jurisdiction of Arkansas against John A. Bond. From the judgment, the Knights of Pythias appeal. Affirmed.

Jones & Price, for appellants. L. J. Brown, for appellee.

MCCULLOCH, J. It appears from the record that no bill of exceptions was filed within the time allowed by the circuit court; and, as no error appears on the face of the record the judgment must be affirmed. It is so ordered.

FARMERS' & MERCHANTS' BANK v. LAYSON LUMBER CO.

(Supreme Court of Arkansas. Nov. 2, 1908.)

1. EVIDENCE (§ 179*)—SECONDARY EVIDENCE—GROUNDS—POSSESSION BY ADVERSARY.

Where a deed in plaintiff's chain of title had never been recorded, and was presumptively in possession of the grantee, whom plaintiff, after making a reasonable effort, was unable to find, parol evidence of the contents of the deed was admissible as though the deed was lost and destroyed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 596; Dec. Dig. § 179.*]

2. JUDGMENT (§ 682*)—CONCLUSIVENESS—PERSONS NOT PARTIES.

Kirby's Dig. § 5694, relating to the foreclosure of special municipal assessments, provides that the owner of property assessed shall be made a defendant, if known, and, if not known, the fact shall be stated in the complaint "and the suit shall proceed as a proceeding in rem against the property assessed." Held that, where a suit to foreclose an assessment was brought against an alleged owner after he had conveyed the property to another by an unrecorded deed and the complaint did not state that the owner was unknown, the suit was not in rem, and the decree was therefore not binding against the alleged owner's grantee and his successors in title.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. § 1203; Dec. Dig. § 682.*]

Appeal from Polk Chancery Court; J. V. Bourland, Chancellor.

Suit by the Layson Lumber Company against the Farmers' & Merchants' Bank. Decree for complainant, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Norwood & Alley, for appellant. Pole McPhetridge and Olney & Lundy, for appellee.

BATTLE, J. The Layson Lumber Company brought this suit against the Farmers' & Merchants' Bank, in the Polk chancery court, to set aside a decree under which lot No. 6, in block No. 53, in the city of Mena, in this state, had been sold to pay certain delinquent assessments due to improvement district No. 1, in said city, and to cancel a deed executed to the Farmers' & Merchants' Bank, the purchasers at the sale.

An assessment was made by the city council of Mena upon lot No. 6, in block 53, and the other lots in the district, for the purpose of constructing certain public improvements. The assessment due the district for the years 1903 and 1904 not being paid within the time prescribed by law, a suit was brought on the 12th day of October, 1904, by the board of improvement of the district against J. D. Eubanks as the owner of lot 6, in the Polk chancery court, to enforce the payment of the unpaid assessment. It was not stated in the complaint in the suit that the owner was unknown, but, on the contrary, Eubanks was named as such. The plaintiff in that suit recovered a decree against the defendant for the unpaid assessments, and the lot was ordered to be sold to pay the same, and a commissioner was appointed to make the sale. The commissioner sold the lot on the 6th day of January, 1906, to E. W. Hutchinson, and the sale was approved and confirmed by court on the 30th day of the same month. On the 10th day of April, 1907, Hutchinson transferred his certificate of purchase to the defendant, Farmers' & Merchants' Bank, and on the 27th day of May following a deed therefor was duly executed by the commissioner to the defendant, which was approved by the court.

Eubanks did not own the lot, and had no interest in it at the time the suit was brought against him, but had conveyed it to Robert Parker on the 25th day of September, 1903, who conveyed to John Layson on the 7th day of June, 1906, and he conveyed it to a trustee for Layson Lumber Company on the 3d day of July, 1906.

In the trial of this suit it was shown that the deed of Eubanks to Parker was not on record, and it was proved by plaintiffs that they did not know where Parker is or was, and that they had made efforts to find him for the purpose of taking his deposition in this case and failed. Upon this proof plaintiffs, over the objection of the defendant, were allowed to prove by Eubanks that he conveyed the lot to Parker on the 25th day of September, 1903.

The court set aside the deed of commissioner to the defendant, quieted title to the lot in plaintiffs, and decreed that they pay the amount of assessments upon the lot for the years 1903 and 1904 to the defendant; and it appealed.

The trial court committed no error in admitting the testimony of Eubanks to show that he conveyed the lots to Robert Parker on the 25th day of September, 1903; it having been virtually shown that the deed he executed for the purposes of this suit was lost, it not being recorded, and appellees having failed to find Parker after making a reasonable effort to do so. The deed could not be procured, and secondary evidence was admissible to prove its contents. Like a deed lost or destroyed, it is the only evidence which can prove its contents. In such cases it is the best evidence that can be produced, and for that reason is competent.

The decree in the suit against Eubanks did and does not affect Parker and those holding under him or their interest in the lot; they not being parties thereto and the suit not being in rem. The statute in such cases provides: "The owner of the property assessed shall be made a defendant if known; if he is not known, that fact shall be stated in the complaint [which was not done in the complaint in the suit against Eubanks], and the suit shall proceed as a proceeding in rem against the property assessed." Kirby's Dig. § 5694. In Greenstreet v. Thornton, 60 Ark. 369, 373, 30 S. W. 347, 348, 27 L. R. A. 735, a suit like this, Mr. Justice Riddick, delivering the opinion of the court, and discussing this statute, said: "There is only one contingency in which a general notice is authorized by the statute in proceedings of this kind, and that is when the owner of the property is unknown. That fact must be alleged in the complaint, and the suit proceeds, so says the statute, 'as an action in rem against the property.' Summons issues against the unknown owner of the particular property, and service is had by affixing a copy of the same to the property and by publication. In such a case the notice is general to the unknown owner, whoever he may be, and, if the summons is served in the manner required, all parties must take notice, for it includes all who have an interest in the property.

But, as before stated, this general notice is only allowed where the owner of the property is unknown, and that fact alleged in the complaint. When it is not alleged that the owner is unknown, and the proceedings are against a certain person named as a defendant, and alleged to be the owner of the property, then, whether there be actual service upon him or only constructive service in the manner designated by the statute, it is a notice to him only, and the decree affects only his interest in the land, whatever it may be, and no one else is bound by it."

Decree affirmed.

ST. LOUIS, I. M. & S. RY. CO. v. RICHARDSON.

(Supreme Court of Arkansas. Nov. 2, 1906.)

1. CARRIERS (§ 318*)—PASSENGER—ACTIONS—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY—NEGLIGENCE.

In an action by a passenger, the evidence held to warrant a finding that the company was negligent in failing to maintain its track free from low places and defects.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. § 1307; Dec. Dig. § 318.*]

2. TRIAL (§ 260*)—INSTRUCTIONS—REQUESTS—INSTRUCTIONS OTHERWISE GIVEN—INJURY TO PASSENGER.

In an injury action by a passenger, instructions that railroads are not insurers of passengers, and are not liable for accidental injuries, and, if plaintiff was injured by the sudden jerking of the train, but such jerking was the usual movement incident to the running of such trains, he could not recover, were properly refused, as being fully covered by instructions to find for defendant if the injury was accidental, and that passengers assume the ordinary risks incident to the running of trains, including the ordinary swinging and jerking of the train.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 657; Dec. Dig. § 260.*]

3. CARRIERS (§ 321*)—PASSENGERS—ACTIONS—INSTRUCTIONS—FORM.

An instruction that a carrier must use the highest degree of care, diligence, and skill which means the highest degree of diligence, care, and skill that a prudent and cautious man would exercise to prevent injuries to passengers, by providing a reasonably safe track, and handling its trains in a prudent manner in view of the condition of the track, though perhaps not as explicit as it might have been, when fairly interpreted, meant that the company must exercise the highest degree of care which a prudent man would exercise, reasonably consistent with the mode of conveyance and the practical operation of the road, to provide a reasonably safe track, etc., and was proper.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. § 1327; Dec. Dig. § 321.*]

4. CARRIERS (§ 321*)—PASSENGERS—ACTIONS—INSTRUCTIONS—APPLICABILITY TO EVIDENCE.

Where the evidence showed that a passenger was injured by a fall because of a sudden jerk of the train, an instruction was proper that a carrier must use the highest degree of care which a prudent man would exercise, reasonably consistent with the mode of conveyance, to provide a reasonably safe track, and if plaintiff was injured by reason of the train running over a low place in its track, which the company negligently permitted, he could recover.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. § 1327; Dec. Dig. § 321.*]

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

5. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 216*)—PRESENTATION BELOW—INSTRUCTIONS—MORE SPECIFIC INSTRUCTIONS—REQUESTS—NECESSITY.

Where an instruction stated the correct rule of law when fairly construed, if the other party believed it conveyed a different meaning, he should have asked the court to correct it, and, not having done so, cannot complain.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 828; Dec. Dig. § 216.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Miller County; Jacob M. Carter, Judge.

Action by Ed. S. Richardson against the St. Louis, Iron Mountain & Southern Railway Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appealed. Affirmed.

The appellee, a commercial traveler, was a passenger on appellant's train between Little Rock and Texarkana. He was riding in a sleeper. About 10 o'clock in the morning, after he had made an effort to hang his hat on a hook, he was standing on both feet in the aisle of the car. The train was going at a very high rate of speed, and the car he was in gave a very decided lurch, causing appellee to fall, and to break the second joint of the third finger of the left hand. Appellee had been riding continuously on trains for a great number of years. The lurch was a swinging, sinking movement as well as he could describe it. The movement was like one set of wheels being thrown lower than the other. It was not caused by making a curve; one side of the car went down and the other up. Appellee was earning, at the time of his injury, $21.75 per day. He lost 22 days while under treatment of his physician, and about two weeks after that. His doctor bills were $10.75. The injury was painful at the time of the occurrence, and was still painful at times when the trial was had. The fracture of the joint had never knitted so that it was the same as before the injury. On account of the injury he did not have the same grip, and could not carry his sample case as he once could. Appellee sued appellant, alleging that it was "negligent in failing to maintain a reasonably safe track from low places and defects, and in a condition suitable for the proper running of trains, and that appellant was negligent in running at a high rate of speed over a track containing such defects." Damages were laid at $2,000. The appellant denied all the material allegations, and set up contributory negligence.

The court gave, at the request of appellee, the following prayers: "(1) The jury are instructed that it is the duty of the carrier of passengers to use the highest degree of care, diligence, and skill, which means the highest degree of care, diligence, and skill that a prudent and cautious man would exercise to prevent its passengers from injuries by providing a reasonably safe track, and handling its trains in a careful and prudent manner in view of the nature of said track; and, if you believe from the evidence in this case that plaintiff, while a passenger on defendant's passenger train, and without fault on his part, was injured by reason of defendant's said train running at a high rate of speed over a sink or low place in its track, and that defendant was negligent in permitting said sink or low place in said track, or in running over same at a high rate of speed, then your verdict should be for plaintiff. (2) The jury are instructed that, if they believe from the evidence in this case that plaintiff was injured while traveling as a passenger upon one of defendant's passenger trains, and that said injury was caused by a defect in its railroad track, the law presumes that the defendant was negligent, and the burden of proof is upon said company to show, by a preponderance of the evidence, that the injury was not caused by its negligence. (3) You are instructed that if you find for the plaintiff, you will assess his damages at a sum that will fairly compensate him for the bodily injuries sustained and pain suffered by him, if any, the expense of his sickness resulting from the injury, and the pecuniary loss shown by the evidence to have been sustained by him by reason of his inability to attend to his business."

The following prayers were granted at the instance of appellant: "(2) The jury are instructed that in this case the law raises no presumption against the defendant; and, should the jury believe from the evidence that plaintiff's finger was injured while he was a passenger on one of defendant's trains, yet that fact alone would not enable him to recover in this case. (3) The court instructs the jury that the mere fact that plaintiff's finger was injured while he was a passenger on defendant's train does not establish a cause of action against the defendant, but the proof must go further, and establish, by a preponderance thereof, that said injury was due to some act, either of omission or commission on the part of this defendant, its agents, or employees. (4) The court instructs the jury that, if they believe from the evidence that the injury to plaintiff's finger happened by and through a mere accident, they will find for the defendant. * * * (6) The court instructs the jury that passengers traveling in railway trains assume the ordinary risks and inconveniences incident to the running and management of trains, among which are the ordinary rocking, swinging, jerking, or jolting of the train while in motion."

The court refused the following prayers: "(1) The jury are instructed to find for the defendant. * * * (5) The court instructs the jury that railway companies are not insurers of passengers, and they are not liable for injuries received by passengers by being carried on their trains, if the injury was a result of mere accident, the happening of which could not, by ordinary care and prudence, have been foreseen or anticipated. * * * (7) You are instructed that it was the duty of the plaintiff to keep his seat while the train was in motion, and if you believe from the evidence that plaintiff was unnecessarily standing up in the car at the time of the injury, and that he would [not] have been injured had he not been standing up, then you are instructed to find for the defendant. * * * (9) Although the jury may believe from the evidence that plaintiff was injured as claimed, and that said injury was the proximate result of the jerking, lurching, or swinging of defendant's train, yet if they further find and believe from the evidence that said rocking, lurching, and swinging of the train was a usual and ordinary incident to the running of passenger trains, such as the one which plaintiff was on, you will find for the defendant."

Exceptions were duly saved to the rulings of the court in giving and refusing prayers for instructions. The verdict and judgment were for $500. A motion for new trial, assigning as error the rulings of the court on the prayers for instructions, and that the verdict was excessive, was presented and overruled, and this appeal was duly prosecuted.

Mehaffy, Williams & Armistead, for appellant. R. W. Rodgers and Webber & Webber, for appellee.

WOOD, J. (after stating the facts as above). The evidence was sufficient to sustain the verdict that appellant "was negligent in failing to maintain a reasonably safe track, free from low places and defects." The testimony of appellant tended to show that the injury to appellee might have been produced by appellee being "off his balance" while the train was making a curve. But appellee's evidence was in sharp conflict with this, and the question was one for the jury.

Appellant contends that the court erred in not submitting to the jury its theory and contention, presented in its prayers numbered 5 and 9, that the injury was the result of an accident such as was a usual and ordinary incident to the running of passenger trains. But these prayers were fully covered by instructions 4 and 6 given at the instance of appellant. The court did not err in refusing to multiply instructions "announcing in effect the same legal principles." Hanger v. Evins, 38 Ark. 334; Railway v. Thomason, 59 Ark. 140, 26 S. W. 598; Furlow v. State, 72 Ark. 384, 81 S. W. 232; Goss v. State, 74 Ark. 33, 84 S. W. 1035.

The court did not err in giving instruction number 1. The instruction announced the correct rule of law applicable to the evidence adduced. The verbiage may not be as explicit as it should be, but the court evidently intended to conform to the rule announced in Railway Co. v. Sweet, 60 Ark. 550, 31 S. W. 571, and to tell the jury that it was the duty of appellant company to exercise "the highest degree of care which a prudent and cautious man would exercise, reasonably consistent with its mode of conveyance and the practical operation of its road, to provide a reasonably safe track," etc. Such we think is a fair interpretation to be put upon the language of the instruction. If appellant conceived that the verbiage conveyed a different meaning, it should have asked the court to correct it. Not having done so, it is not in a position to complain. Railway v. Barnett, 65 Ark. 255, 45 S. W. 550; Mt. Nebo Anthracite Coal Co. v. Williamson, 73 Ark. 530, 84 S. W. 779; St. L. Southwestern Ry. Co. v. Bowen, 73 Ark. 594, 84 S. W. 783.

The judgment is affirmed.

OZAN LUMBER CO. v. BIDDIE.

(Supreme Court of Arkansas. Nov. 2, 1908)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 843*) — REVIEW — QUESTIONS CONSIDERED.

In an action under a statute making all corporate employers and certain unincorporated employers liable for injuries to employees by the negligence of other servants, defendant being a corporation, the validity of the statute only as to corporations need be determined on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3331-3341; Dec. Dig. § 843.*]

2. CORPORATIONS (§ 371*) — CORPORATE POWERS—EXTENT.

Corporations have only those powers conferred upon them by charter, either expressly or as incidental to their existence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 1516; Dec. Dig. § 371.*]

3. CORPORATIONS (§ 13*) — INCORPORATION — "CHARTER"—GENERAL CORPORATION LAWS.

Under Const. art. 12, § 2, prohibiting the General Assembly from passing special acts conferring corporate powers, etc., and section 6, permitting corporations to be formed under general laws which may be altered or repealed from time to time, the general laws under which a corporation is formed constitute its charter.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 49; Dec. Dig. § 13.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 2, pp. 1088-1090; vol. 8, p. 7600.]

4. CORPORATIONS (§ 38*) — CORPORATE EXISTENCE—AMENDMENT OF GENERAL CORPORATION LAWS—"CHARTER."

Since the general laws under which a corporation is formed are its charter, their amendment under Const. art. 12, § 6, providing that corporations may be formed under general laws which may be altered or repealed from time to time, operates as an amendment of the charter.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 121; Dec. Dig. § 38.*]

5. CORPORATIONS (§ 39*) — CORPORATE EXISTENCE—AMENDMENT OF CHARTER.

Const. art. 12, § 6, provides that corporations may be formed under general laws which may be altered or repealed, and the General Assembly may alter or annul any corporate charter now existing and revocable at the adoption of the Constitution, or any thereafter created whenever it may be injurious to the state in such manner, if no injustice is done to the incorporators. Acts 1907, p. 162, approved March 3, 1907, makes all corporations who employ servants or employees liable for their injury or death resulting from the negligence of any other servant or employé in the same manner as if the injury was that of the employer. Held, in an action under the statute against a corporation organized under the constitutional provision, that the only limitation to the reserved power to amend or alter was that the amendment be reasonable, and the statute making all corporations liable for injuries, etc., to its employes, was reasonable, and was constitutional as to corporations.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 39.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Nevada County; Jacob M. Carter, Judge.

Action by Frank Biddle against the Ozan Lumber Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appealed. Affirmed.

McRae & Tompkins and D. L. McRae, for appellant. J. O. A. Bush, for appellee.

BATTLE, J. The Ozan Lumber Company is a domestic corporation, doing a general sawmill business, with its principal place of business and offices at Prescott, in Nevada county, Ark.

Frank Biddle brought an action against it, and alleged in his complaint, in part, as follows:

"That on the 28th day of May, 1907, the plaintiff was in the employment of the defendant, working at its sawmill at Prescott, and was setting 'dogs.' That plaintiff was in the exercise of due care. That the defendant had at that time in its employment as sawyer one Mr. Schenks, who, in placing a log on the carriage, or in turning it on the carriage with a steam 'nigger,' through carelessness, negligence, and incompetence, threw the log over the guards and struck plaintiff's right hand, mashing, wounding, and bruising his middle finger and other parts of his right hand. That from said injury he has suffered and will continue to suffer great physical pain. That said injury will permanently impair plaintiff's ability to earn money and obtain employment, and greatly disfigure his person. The plaintiff has suffered damage by reason of said injury in the sum of $1,000," and asked for judgment for that amount against the defendant.

The defendant answered, and denied the material allegations of the complaint.

Evidence was adduced in the trial of the action tending to prove the following facts: Plaintiff was in the employment of the defendant in May, 1907, working at its sawmill, and was setting what are called "dogs," a part of the machinery used in sawing logs. A man named Schenks was also employed by the defendant in the operation of the sawmill, and was sawyer. The plaintiff and Schenks were engaged in operating a carriage on which logs were moved to and from the saw; plaintiff using the dogs, and Schenks another part of the machine called the "nigger." They had a crooked log upon the carriage, one-half of which had been sawed.

While the carriage was running rapidly, Schenks made two or three ineffectual efforts to turn the log, and finally threw it over the guards on the hand of plaintiff, and mashed his fingers, while he was holding the dog lever. Plaintiff was in the exercise of due care. Schenks was guilty of negligence in failing to stop the carriage after making two efforts to turn the log and failing, and in using too great force in turning it, and in throwing the log over the guards and mashing plaintiff's hand.

Was plaintiff injured through the carelessness of Schenks? This question was submitted to the jury upon correct instructions by the court, and they returned a verdict in favor of plaintiff for $750; and the defendant appealed.

The verdict of the jury was sustained by evidence. But appellant says Schenks was a fellow servant of appellee, and appellant was not responsible for the consequences of his negligence.

The act entitled "An act to give right of action against an employer for injuries or death resulting to his agents, employes or servants, either from the employer's negligence or from the negligence of some of his other employes, servants or agents, and to repeal all acts and parts of acts in conflict herewith," approved March 8, 1907, provides as follows:

"That hereafter all railroad companies operating within this state, whether incorporated or not, and all corporations of every kind and character, and every company whether incorporated or not engaged in the mining of coal, who may employ agents, servants or employes, such agents, employes, or servants being in the exercise of due care, shall be liable to respond in damages for injuries or death sustained by any such agent, employé or servant, resulting from the careless omission of duty or negligence of any other agent, servant or employé of said employer, in the same manner and to the same extent as if the carelessness, omission of duty or negligence causing the injury or death was that of the employer." Acts 1907, p. 162.

Appellant contends that the act is unconstitutional, because it violates section 18 of article 2 of the Constitution of Arkansas, which is as follows: "The General Assembly shall not grant to any citizen or class of citizens privileges or immunities which upon the same terms shall not equally belong to all citizens." Also of the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States, which provides: "No person shall be deprived of life, liberty or property without due process of law."

The appellant is a corporation, and we need determine the effect of the act only as to corporations.

Corporations possess only those powers or properties which the charters of their creation confer upon them, either expressly or as incidental to their existence; and these may be modified or diminished by amendment or extinguished by the repeal of their charters.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

Section 2 of article 12 of the Constitution of this state provides: "The General Assembly shall pass no special act conferring corporate powers," etc.—and section 6 of the same article provides: "Corporations may be formed under general laws; which laws may from time to time be altered or repealed," etc. Under these sections the general laws under which a corporation is formed constitutes its charter. People v. Chicago Gas Trust Co., 130 Ill. 268, 285, 22 N. E. 798, 8 L. R. A. 497, 17 Am. St. Rep. 319; Morawetz on Private Corporations (2d Ed.) § 318. The Constitution specially provides that these general laws can be altered or repealed. As they form a part of the charter, the amendment or repeal of them operates as an amendment or repeal of the charter. Durand v. New Haven, etc., Co., 42 Conn. 211; 1 Thompson on Corporations, § 94.

The Constitution of this state expressly imposes a limitation upon the power to amend or revoke the charter of a corporation. Section 6 of article 12 of the Constitution further provides: "The General Assembly shall have power to alter, revoke or annul any charter of incorporation now existing and revocable at the adoption of this Constitution, or any that may hereafter be created, whenever in their opinion, it may be injurious to the citizens of the state, in such manner, that no injustice shall be done the corporators."

The reserved power to amend a charter in the absence of an express limitation must be exercised upon terms that are just and reasonable. In Shields v. Ohio, 95 U. S. 319, 324, 24 L. Ed. 357, Mr. Justice Swayne, in delivering the opinion of the court, says: "It is urged that the franchise here in question was property held by a vested right, and that its sanctity, as such, could not be thus invaded. The answer is: 'Consensus facit jus.' It was according to the agreement of the parties. The company took the franchise subject expressly to the power of alteration or repeal by the General Assembly. There is therefore no ground for just complaint against the state. * * * The power of alteration and amendment is not without limit. The alterations must be reasonable. They must be made in good faith, and be consistent with the scope and object of the act of incorporation. Sheer oppression and wrong cannot be inflicted under the guise of amendment or alteration."

In Sinking Fund Cases, 99 U. S. 721, 25 L. Ed. 406, Chief Justice Waite, in delivering the opinion of the court, after quoting the last two sentences of the foregoing quotation, says: "The rules as here laid down are fully sustained by authorities."

In New York & New England Railroad

Company v. Bristol, 151 U. S. 556, 567, 1 Sup. Ct. 437, 440, 38 L. Ed. 269, it is said: "A power reserved to the Legislature to alter, amend, or repeal a charter authorizes it to make any alteration or amendment of a charter granted subject to it which will not defeat or substantially impair the object of the grant, or any rights vested under it, and which the Legislature may deem necessary to secure that object or any public right"—citing Close v. Glenwood Cemetery, 107 U. S. 466, 476, 2 Sup. Ct. 267, 27 L. Ed. 408; Spring Valley Waterworks v. Schottler, 110 U. S. 347, 4 Sup. Ct. 48, 28 L. Ed. 173; Pennsylvania College Cases, 18 Wall. 190, 20 L. Ed. 550; Tomlinson v. Jessup, 15 Wall. 454, 21 L. Ed. 204; Wilmington Mining Co. v. Fulton, 205 U. S. 60, 27 Sup. Ct. 412, 51 L. Ed. 708.

It is obvious that this power to amend charters of corporations is in force under the Constitution of this state with the same limitation. It was virtually so held in Leep v. Railway Co., 58 Ark. 435, 25 S. W. 83, 23 L. R. A. 264, 41 Am. St. Rep. 109. In that case, after a review of authorities, it is said: "It is obvious that the Legislature cannot, under the power to amend, take from corporations the right to contract; for it is essential to their existence. It can regulate it when the interest of the public demand it, but not to such an extent as to render it ineffectual or substantially impair the object of incorporation." St. L., I. M. & St. Paul Ry. Co. v. Paul, 173 U. S. 404, 408, 409, 19 Sup. Ct. 419, 43 L. Ed. 746; Union Sawmill Co. v. Felsenthal, 85 Ark. 346, 353, 354, 108 S. W. 217.

The amendment to charters of corporations made by the act in question makes the employer liable in damages for injuries or death sustained by one of its employes through the negligence of a fellow servant. Is this not a reasonable amendment to the charters of corporations? Why should not the employer suffer the consequences resulting from the negligence of his employé, instead of the employé who is injured by such negligence? The employé has no control over his fellow servant—did not employ him, and cannot discharge him. The employer employs, can control and discharge him. The act does not make him liable for such damages unless the employé is at the time in the exercise of due care. Acts of Legislatures imposing such liability on railroad companies have been upheld by the courts on account of the hazardous character of the business of operating a railway. The only difference of the reason for such acts and the act in question is the danger of the service of railroads is greater than that of other corporations—a difference in degree, and not in kind. We think the act in question is constitutional as to corporations.

The appellant does not deny, but tacitly concedes, that it was organized under the provisions of the present Constitution of the state.

Judgment affirmed.

WILLIAMS v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Arkansas. Nov. 16, 1908.)

RAPE (§ 53*)—ASSAULT WITH INTENT TO COMMIT—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

Evidence held not sufficient to support a conviction of assault with intent to rape.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Rape, Cent. Dig. §§ 79-81; Dec. Dig. § 53.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Lonoke County; Eugene Lankford, Judge.

Sam Williams was convicted of assault with intent to rape, and appeals. Reversed, and remanded for a new trial.

Jas. B. Gray, for appellant. Wm. F. Kirby, Atty. Gen., and Daniel Taylor, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

HART, J. At the August term, 1908, of the Lonoke circuit court, the grand jury returned an indictment in due form against Sam Williams, charging him with assault with intent to rape upon Beryl Shadle. He was tried and convicted at the same term of the court. His punishment was fixed at a term of three years in the state penitentiary, which he is now serving pending his appeal to this court.

Miss Beryl Shadle, the prosecuting witness, testified as follows: "I live at England, Lonoke county, Ark. On July 27, 1908, I was living on Plum bayou, some seven or eight miles southeast of England, and on that morning I started from my home at England to my school on Plum bayou, riding in a buggy alone. I started from England about 7 o'clock in the morning, and, when I had gotten about five miles from home, I was tackled by a negro. The negro's name is Sam Williams, and that is him there [pointing to the defendant]. Q. Go on, and tell all that occurred, whose house you were passing. A. I was passing the house where Mahomes live, and my attention was called by some one saying, 'Wait,' and I looked around to the left to see, and a negro was just starting across the fence, had his right foot over the rail, and was fixing to put the other one over, and I thought he was talking to some one on the other side, and I looked across the road and saw he wasn't, and I looked again, and he was sliding off the fence inside the road. He said, 'You look mighty sweet in that buggy, Honey,' and I realized then that he was talking to me, and I whipped the horse with the lines and I looked back at the negro, and he had crossed back over the fence, and he was running up the fence the way I was going. And I ran a good piece, and the buggy ran up against a stump, and threw me out and dragged me a piece, and I went to Mr. Hughes house, and called him. When the negro first called, he was 10 or 15 steps from me. When I last saw him, he was on the inside of the fence in the field about 15 or 20 steps from where I first saw him, running in the direction I was going." The remaining testimony was directed towards the identity of appellant, the attempted establishment of an alibi by him, and his denial of having been the negro who accosted the prosecuting witness. The view we have taken of the case renders it unnecessary to abstract this evidence. The Attorney General confesses error. In this he is correct.

The case under consideration is ruled by that of Anderson v. State, 77 Ark. 37, 90 S. W. 846. In that case the court in discussing the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain a charge of assault with intent to rape said: "The statutes of this state, requiring the unlawful act to be coupled with the present ability to do the injury, clearly indicates that the unlawful act must be the beginning or part of the act to injure, of the perpetration of the crime, and not of preparation to commit some contemplated crime." In the present case the testimony does not show even a simple assault on the prosecuting witness. The negro was never closer than 10 or 15 feet to her. He made no attempt to touch her person, and, when she whipped up her horse, immediately crossed back over the fence. Of course, the language used by him to her was calculated to scare her, but the evidence wholly fails to sustain the judgment for assault with intent to rape, or even the charge of an assault merely.

Therefore the judgment is reversed, and the cause is remanded for a new trial.

In re GOLDSMITH.

(Supreme Court of Arkansas. Nov. 2, 1908.)

1. CERTIORARI (§ 1*)—PURPOSE AND SCOPE OF WRIT.

Certiorari is granted where it is shown that the inferior tribunal has exceeded its jurisdiction, and where it has proceeded illegally and no appeal will lie, or the right has been unavoidably lost.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Certiorari, Cent. Dig. § 1; Dec. Dig. § 1.*]

2. CERTIORARI (§ 5*)—RIGHT TO WRIT—OTHER REMEDY—APPEAL.

Where the circuit court denied certiorari to review prosecutions for violation of a city ordinance, petitioner was not entitled to certiorari from the Supreme Court to review such order; his right of appeal being neither lost nor prevented.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Certiorari, Cent. Dig. §§ 5, 6; Dec. Dig. § 5.*]

Certiorari to Circuit Court, Clay County; Frank Smith, Judge.

Certiorari on petition of S. B. Goldsmith to review an order of the circuit court denying his petition for certiorari to review certain proceedings in the mayor's court of the incorporated town of Piggott convicting petitioner of violating an ordinance declaring the owning, operating, or maintaining of a pool table within the town to be a nuisance, etc. Writ denied.

Moore, Spence & Dudley, for petitioner.

PER CURIAM. The town of Piggott passed an ordinance declaring that the owning, operating, or maintaining a pool table within the limits of said town was a nuisance, and provided for penalties against any one violating its provisions. Goldsmith was prosecuted under said ordinance, and fined several times in the mayor's court, and he took appeals from so many of said fines as he was able to secure bondsmen to the circuit court. He petitioned the circuit court for a writ of certiorari, setting forth said ordinance and the prosecutions under it and the pending and threatened prosecutions, and alleged facts tending to prove that his business was not a nuisance, and could not be made so by ordinance. He prayed that the ordinance and proceedings in mayor's court be certified to the circuit court, to the end that the ordinance and proceedings thereunder be declared void, and the town enjoined from proceeding against him for alleged violations of it. The circuit court denied the petition, and Goldsmith, after due notice, has petitioned this court for a writ of certiorari to bring the proceedings of the circuit court here, to the end that the judgment of that court denying the writ be reversed and the proceedings in mayor's court under said ordinance be quashed, and a record of the proceedings in circuit court be tendered with the petition.

In Burgett v. Apperson, 52 Ark. 213, 12 S. W. 559, the court said: "The writ [of certiorari] is granted in two classes of cases: First, where it is shown that the inferior tribunal has exceeded its jurisdiction; and, second, where it appears that it has proceeded illegally and no appeal will lie, or that the right has been unavoidably lost"; citing authorities. In Reese v. Cannon, 73 Ark. 604, 84 S. W. 793, this principle was restated and applied. The application here is not predicated on want of jurisdiction of the circuit court to grant the writ of certiorari, but that it erred in not doing so. Had the court granted it, the opposing side might have applied here and presented that question. The right of appeal from the circuit court is not lost or prevented, and that is as far as the court is called upon in order to decide this application.

The petition for the writ is denied.

SOUTER v. WITT.

(Supreme Court of Arkansas. Nov. 2, 1908.)

1. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 78*)—CONTRACT FOR SALE OF LAND—FORFEITURE—RELIEF IN EQUITY.

Where a written contract for the sale of land made time of the essence of the contract and other clauses clearly indicated that the parties intended that payments should be made at the time stipulated, and the vendor was not obliged to execute a conveyance until full compliance with the terms of the contract, the vendee, after default, was not entitled to relief in equity against the forfeiture.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 121, 122; Dec. Dig. § 78.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (1009*)—QUESTIONS REVIEWABLE—FINDINGS ON CONFLICTING EVIDENCE—CONCLUSIVENESS.

Where the evidence is conflicting, the testimony accredited by the chancellor will be accepted on appeal; nothing else appearing to determine the preponderance.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3972; Dec. Dig. § 1009.*]

3. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 95*)—CONTRACT FOR SALE OF LAND—FORFEITURE FOR NON-PAYMENT OF PURCHASE MONEY—WAIVER—EVIDENCE.

Where a vendor of land under a contract requiring the payment of the purchase money at specified dates according to the terms of two notes told the vendee at the time the contract was made and afterwards that, if he would pay the notes by the time the last note was due it would be all right, there was a waiver of a forfeiture for nonpayment of the first note when due.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. § 159; Dec. Dig. § 95.*]

4. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 95*)—CONTRACT FOR SALE OF LAND—FORFEITURE FOR NON-PAYMENT OF PURCHASE MONEY—WAIVER.

Where a contract for the sale of land provided that, on nonpayment of the purchase-money notes, the vendee should forfeit his rights and should pay rent for the premises, the failure of the vendor after default in payment of the notes to demand rent of the vendee, and his retention of the notes after expiration of the time for payment, was not a waiver of the forfeiture.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. § 159; Dec. Dig. § 95.*]

5. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 95*)—CONTRACT FOR SALE OF LAND—FORFEITURE FOR NON-PAYMENT OF PURCHASE PRICE—WAIVER—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

Evidence held to sustain a finding that a vendor of land did not waive a forfeiture of the contract of sale for nonpayment of the purchase price.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Dec. Dig. § 95.*]

Appeal from Columbia Chancery Court; E. O. Mahoney, Chancellor.

Action by J. D. Souter against J. M. Witt for specific performance of a contract for the sale of land. Decree for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Appellant bought of appellee a tract of land in Columbia county, Ark. The parties entered upon a written contract, which, so far as may be necessary to set forth, specified: "That, in consideration of the stipulations hereinafter contained and the payments to be made as herein specified, the first party agrees to sell unto the second party, the following real estate [here follows a description of the land], and the contract continues as follows:

"And the said second party, in consideration of the premises, hereby agrees to pay to the order of the said first party the following sums at the several times named below:

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

When Due.	Dollars. Cents.
Dec. 1st, 1905.....	125.00
Dec. 1st, 1906.....	150.00

"With 10 per cent. interest per annum on all notes from date until paid.

"For which amounts the party of the second part has executed and delivered to the said first party two promissory notes, dated on the 22d day of August, 1904.

"And the party of the second part hereby covenants and agrees that no timber shall be cut on this land without a special agreement, indorsed hereon, and signed by the parties hereto, except for necessary fuel for the family, erection of buildings and fences on said premises, and clearing of the land for actual and immediate cultivation, and that all improvements placed upon said premises shall remain thereon and shall not be removed or destroyed until final payment for said land; and, further, that he will regularly and seasonably pay all such taxes and assessments as shall be lawfully imposed upon said premises.

"In case the said second party, his legal representatives, or his assigns, shall pay the several sums of money aforesaid punctually, and at the several times above limited, and shall strictly and literally perform all and singular the stipulations and agreements aforesaid after their true tenor and intent, then and thereupon the first party will make unto the said second party, his heirs or assigns, upon the surrender of this contract, a warranty deed, conveying the title to said afore-described lands and premises in fee simple. But, in case the said second party shall fail to make the payments aforesaid, or any of them, punctually and upon the strict terms and at the times above limited, and likewise to perform and complete all and each of the agreements and stipulations aforesaid, strictly and literally, without any failure or default, time being of the essence of this contract, then this contract shall, from the date of such failure, be null and void, and all rights and interests hereby created or then existing, in favor of the said second party, his heirs or assigns, or derived under this contract, shall utterly cease and determine, and the premises hereby contracted shall revert to and revest in the said first party, his heirs or assigns, without any declaration of forfeiture or act of re-entry, or without any other act by said first party to be performed, and without any right in said second party of reclamation or compensation, or moneys paid or improvements made, as absolutely, fully, and perfectly as if this contract had never been made.

"And it is further covenanted and agreed by and between the parties hereto that, immediately upon the failure to pay any of the notes above described, all previous payments shall be forfeited to the party of the first part, and the relation of landlord to tenant shall arise between the parties hereto, for one year from January 1st, immediately preceding the date of default, and the said party of the second part shall pay rent at the rate of forty dollars for occupying the premises from the said January 1st, to the time of default, such rent to be due and collectible immediately upon such default."

The contract was executed August 22, 1904, and on the same day appellant executed and delivered to appellee the notes according to the stipulations of the contract. Appellant went into possession of the land in December, 1904. He made improvements on the place and paid the taxes amounting in the aggregate to $212.81. Appellant testified as follows: "I have never paid the notes given for the purchase price of said land. Just before the first of said notes was due, I went to Mr. Witt, and told him that I did not know that I would be able to pay all of the first note when due. That I was making improvements on the place, and needed all the money I could get to put on the place, and that the place was good for his money. He gave an affirmative grunt, but gave no intimation that he would want his money when it was due, or that he had any objection to giving me time on it. I had been doing business with Mr. Witt before this time, and had owed him money and he never had insisted on my paying it when due, but was always willing to extend time, and I understood from what he said and the way he acted that he was willing for me to have additional time on the land notes. About the 1st of January, 1907, I went to Mr. Witt to make a payment on my land notes, and asked him if he wanted it all, or was willing to take just a part of it, that I could pay it all if he wanted it, but would rather pay a part of it. He then claimed that I was too late, and that he would not then let me have the land at the price we had agreed upon. Up to that time I understood that Mr. Witt was perfectly willing to extend time on the notes. If I had not understood it that way, I would have met them when they were due. Mr. Witt has never asked me to pay anything on these notes. He has never said anything to me about paying rent. He has never returned to me my notes, or indicated to me in any way that my delay was unsatisfactory to him. About the 1st of last February I went to Mr. Witt's house, and offered to pay him the full amount of the purchase price, with interest up to that time, and asked him for a deed to the land. He refused to give the deed or to receive the amount that I offered to pay. When I first went to Mr. Witt in January, 1907, and asked him if he would take a part or did he want all of the money, he asked me if I had all of the money with me. I told him that I did not have all the money with me, but that I could get it. He then refused to let me have the land at the price agreed upon. He afterwards told me that if I had had the money with me that he would have let me have the land. Mr. Witt passed this place frequently, and knew that I was going ahead making improvements on it after the time the notes were due." The statement in the last clause was practically nullified on cross-examination. The appellant further testified that, when he first signed the contract, there was a blank in that part of the printed form in regard to the description of the land and the amount to be paid for rent; that since the contract was signed the description and the word "forty" has been inserted; that there was no agreement that appellant should pay rent in case of a failure to pay notes when due.

J. M. Witt testified that: "The contract and notes are as executed by me and Mr. Souther, with the exception that I afterwards wrote the numbers in there by agreement with Mr. Souther. I never did give Mr. Souther to understand that I waived any of the conditions of the contract. He spoke to me about being able to pay a part only as I remember of the first note about the time it became due or possibly afterwards. It seems to me that it was some time just before Christmas of the year the first note became due. I do not remember what answer I gave him, but probably the one he says I made is correct. He never did after that conversation offer to pay any part of the first note until in this year. He never did speak to me again about the payment of either notes until January of this year. Mr. Souther had been in debt to me at different times before we made this contract, and was frequently slow in making payments. I never pressed him for payments. I have never asked Mr. Souther for the payment of the notes given for the land involved in this suit. I have never returned the notes to him. I always told Mr. Souther at the time of making the contract, and after that, that, if he would pay the notes by the time the last note was due, it would be all right. At the time we made the contract I told Mr. Souther that he could have his own time to pay for the land, and he named the terms stipulated in the contract. At the time we made the contract, Mr. Souther remarked that he expected it would be hard on him to make all of the first payment, and I told him I guess it would be all right if he didn't pay the first full payment. This was when we were talking about the land, and before the written contract was signed. I expect maybe that I would have taken the money and made Mr. Souther a deed if he had come up with the money in full any time before January 1, 1907, the time I marked the contract canceled. The contract we made was a bona fide sale. The forfeiture clause was put in the contract to show that he was to pay me so much money before he could get the land according to the stipulations of the contract. I never asked Mr. Souther to pay any rent on the place. The day we signed the contract Mr. Henderson wrote it, and, when he came to the rent part of it, he asked what amount of rent, and I told him that it made no difference, as I didn't intend to charge him any rent no way. He then asked what the rent would be worth, and I said that if I was going to rent it, I would want $40 or $50, and he must have then put in the $40. I never did ask Mr. Souther to surrender this place to me, never demanded any rent on it, never demanded any payment of the notes, and have never surrendered the notes to him. I took the two copies of the contract the day we made it to fill out the numbers of the land, and never gave him back a copy of it. Mr. Souther has never asked for the notes, and I think I told him in January, 1907, when he spoke to me about the matter, that he could get the contract and notes at any time. Whatever I might have done since December 1st last, I would have done it outside of the contract and not under it. There was never anything said between me and Mr. Souther about paying rent." It was shown by the witness who filled out the printed form of contract and notes that he inserted the word "forty" in the contract.

The suit was by appellant against appellee for specific performance. The court upon the above facts refused the relief prayed in appellant's complaint, and dismissed it for want of equity. Appellant seeks by this appeal to reverse that decree.

McKay & Lile, for appellant. Stevens & Stevens, for appellee.

WOOD, J. (after stating the facts as above). The written contract is plain. There is a clause expressly making "time of the essence of the contract," and other clauses which clearly show that the parties intended at the time of the execution of the contract that the payments should be made at the times stipulated. From the language of various provisions of the contract, the conclusion is irresistible that payment at the time specified was made a condition precedent to the right of appellant to acquire the title, and to obtain a deed to the land. This being true, the case, so far as the written contract is concerned, comes well within the rule announced by Mr. Pomeroy and quoted by Judge Riddick in Carpenter v. Thornburn, 76 Ark. 578, 89 S. W. 1047, as follows: "It is well settled that, when the parties have so stipulated as to make the time of payment of the essence of the contract within the view of equity as well as of the law, a court of equity cannot relieve a vendee who has made default. With respect to this rule there is no doubt. The only difficulty is in determining when time has thus been made essential. It is also equally certain that, when the contract is made to depend on a condition precedent—in other words, when no right shall vest until certain acts have been done, as for example, until the vendee has paid certain sums at certain specified times—the also a court of equity will not relieve the vendee against the forfeiture incurred by a breach of such condition precedent." 1 Pom. Eq. § 455. See, also, Ish v. Morgan, 48 Ark. 413, 3 S. W. 440; Cheney v. Libby, 134 U. S. 68, 10 Sup. Ct. 498, 33 L. Ed. 818; 4 Pomeroy, § 1408. But it does not follow that, because there has been a forfeiture under the strict letter of the contract, the vendor is entitled to insist upon it. That depends upon his conduct with reference to it. The Supreme Court of the United States in Cheney v. Libby, supra, after announcing the doctrine we have mentioned as to the proper construction of a contract where time is essential, says: "The discretion which a court of equity has to grant or refuse a specific performance, and which is always exercised with reference to the circumstances of the particular case before it, may, and of necessity must, be controlled by the conduct of the party who bases his refusal to perform the contract upon the failure of the other party to strictly comply with its conditions." Some of our own cases to the same effect are Little Rock Granite Co. v. Shall, 59 Ark. 405, 27 S. W. 562; Morris v. Green, 75 Ark. 410, 88 S. W. 565; Banks v. Bowman, 83 Ark. 524, 104 S. W. 209.

The real difficulty in this case has been to determine, on the issue of fact, as to whether appellee's conduct was a waiver of the forfeiture. Appellant and appellee are the witnesses pro and con, respectively, on this issue, and, as is said by Chief Justice Hill in Banks v. Bowman, supra: "Where there is a conflict, it is a mere difference between two witnesses detailing the same transaction, and the court accepts in such conflict the testimony accredited by the chancellor; nothing else appearing to determine the preponderance." There was a clear waiver of any forfeiture on account of a failure to pay the first note when it became due. The testimony of appellee himself shows that. For among other things, he says: "I always told Souter at the time of making the contract, and after that, that, if he would pay the notes by the time the last note was due, it would be all right." The appellant, before the first note was due, went to the appellee and told him that he (appellant) was making improvements, and that he would not be able to make all of the first payment when due, and that thereupon appellee gave "an affirmative grunt." He says that he had been doing business with appellee before this time and had owed him money, but that appellee had never insisted on payment when the money was due, and was always willing to extend the time. Therefore appellant concluded that appellee was willing for him to have additional time on the second note, as well as the first. But appellant did not ask appellee about payment on the second note until after same was due. Then he found that appellee was unwilling to extend the time, claiming that appellant was too late, etc. Appellant testified that he understood from what appellee said and did that he was willing to extend the time of payment after the last note became due; but appellant fails to point out any conduct on the part of appellee before or after the time for the payment of the last note that would warrant appellant in believing that appellee would extend the time for payment beyond the date when the last note was due.

Appellee testified that his indulgence to appellant was with reference to the first payment. True he says that "maybe he would have taken the money" and given appellant a deed had he "come up with the money in full before January 1, 1907," the day the contract was marked canceled. But appellee says it was a bona fide sale, and "the forfeiture clause was put in the contract to show that he was to pay me so much money before he could get the land according to the stipulations of the contract." The fact that appellee never asked appellant to pay any rent on the place, and that appellee retained the notes after the expiration of the time of payment, cannot be taken as a waiver of the forfeiture. Appellee says that he told appellant in January, 1907, when he spoke about the matter, that he, appellant, could get the contract and notes at any time. He says that he did not intend to charge him rent, and there was nothing said about it that what he did since December 1, 1906, the time for the final payment, he would have done outside of the contract, and not under it."

The fact that appellee did not charge appellant rent may be regarded as an act of kindness to appellant rather than an acknowledgment on the part of appellee that he did not own the land. The testimony is set out in full, and it fully sustains the finding of the chancellor.

His decree is therefore affirmed.

ST. LOUIS, I. M. & S. RY. CO. v. HAMBRIGHT.

(Supreme Court of Arkansas. Nov. 2, 1908.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1001*)—REVIEW—EVIDENCE.

The sufficiency of the evidence to sustain a finding on appeal must be tested solely on the accredited testimony.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3928-3934; Dec. Dig. § 1001.*]

2. RELEASE (§ 57*)—VALIDITY—FRAUD—MISREPRESENTATION—EVIDENCE.

In an action for injuries to a servant, evidence held to sustain a finding that a release of plaintiff's injuries pleaded as a defense was obtained from him by fraud.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Release, Cent. Dig. §§ 106-108; Dec. Dig. § 57.*]

3. RELEASE (§ 16*)—VALIDITY—MISTAKE.

Where a settlement for an employee's injuries was based on a mutual mistake of fact predicated on a physician's medical opinion as to the employé's condition at the time the settlement was made, which opinion induced the settlement, a release consummating such settlement constituted no defense to an action for the servant's injuries.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Release, Cent. Dig. § 31; Dec. Dig. § 16.*]

4. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 300*)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—PHYSICIAN'S STATEMENT.

Where a railroad company employed the surgeon in charge of a hospital, it was estopped to assert that an employé treated at the hospital was not entitled to rely on such surgeon's statements as to his physical condition, which were made the basis of a settlement for the injuries.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 1209; Dec. Dig. § 300.*]

5. RELEASE (§ 24*) — DEFENSES — CONSIDERATION—RETURN.

Where, in an action for injuries to a servant, there was a controversy as to whether a release was intended to cover defendant's liability for the injuries, or whether it was merely the reimbursement of the employé for his loss of time and expenses incident to the injury, he was not required to tender a return of the amount received as a consideration for the release as a condition of his right to sue for his injuries.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Release, Cent. Dig. § 45; Dec. Dig. § 24.*]

6. EVIDENCE (§ 434*) — PAROL EVIDENCE — RIGHT TO WRITTEN CONTRACT—FRAUD.

The rule forbidding the addition, alteration, or contradiction of a written instrument by parol testimony does not apply where there is an issue of fraud in the procurement of the writing.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 2005-2020; Dec. Dig. § 434.*]

7. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 273*)—EXCEPTIONS—SUFFICIENCY—INSTRUCTIONS.

Where a general exception is taken to the refusal of several instructions and one of the instructions is bad, the exception does not preserve the other instructions for review.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 273.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Miller County; Jacob M. Carter, Judge.

Action by W. O. Hambright against the St. Louis Iron Mountain & Southern Railway Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Hambright was a brakeman on a freight train in the employ of the appellant railroad company, and on August 10, 1906, was knocked from his train by a defective waterspout at Austin, and seriously injured. He was taken to his home in Memphis, Tenn., where he was under the care of competent physicians of his own selection. Later he went to the hospital of the railroad company in St. Louis, Mo., where he arrived on the 27th of September. He remained there under treatment for about two weeks, when he returned to Memphis. At that time he promised the chief surgeon, Dr. Outten, that he would return to the hospital. It was a rule of the hospital that employés under treatment there should remain until they were discharged by the chief surgeon, who gave them what was called a "clearance," which they took to the general claim agent of the railroad company. This clearance was a statement of the exact physical condition of the employé, who was expected to take it to the claim agent as a basis for settlement before returning home. On the 21st of November Dr. Outten wrote Hambright, upbraiding him for not fulfilling his promise to return, stating that he, Dr. Outten, had been placed in an embarrassing position by permitting him to leave, evidently referring to his failure to obtain his clearance, and see the claim agent before his discharge. Hambright returned to the hospital shortly after receiving this letter, and was examined by Dr. Outten, the chief surgeon, on December 3d. Dr. Outten then wrote a letter to the general claim agent, making a report upon Hambright's case. He says: "I find a marked deformity of the spinal column, commencing with the twelfth dorsal and involving the first and second lumbar vertebra. There is undoubtedly a diseased condition here, as not only the spinal processes are enlarged, but seemingly the laminae of the vertebra as well." He goes fully into the case, and concludes as follows: "I cannot tell at this examination whether it will be permanent or not, but, as I have said before, a young man 29 years of age, under intelligent treatment, and when you take into consideration the region of the column involved, there is a bare possibility that it will get well. In any event, it is a serious injury, and one that decidedly menaces his future usefulness. This letter will take place of the clearance, as Hambright will report to you tomorrow morning." Hambright said this letter was given to him sealed, and he carried it to the office of Mr. Jones, the general claim agent, but failed to see Mr. Jones, and left the letter for him. Dr. Outten said that it was his custom to acquaint employés with statements he made to the claim agent, and he is satisfied he did so in this case. He denied the statements attributed to him by Hambright and Phillips hereafter set out. He said that all of his examinations were made in the interest of the employés as well as the company; that he is employed by the company, but that his salary comes out of a hospital fund, which is raised by assessments on all the employés of the company. Hambright says: That, when Dr. Outten examined him, he told him that his injuries were not serious, and that he would be able to go to work by the 1st of March, and he replied to him: "Doctor, it is up to you. I don't know, and I want to know just what you think." That the doctor said: "It is nothing bad, and you will be all right by the 1st of March." A friend of Hambright's, one Phelps, said he was with Hambright at this time, and that Dr. Outten told Hambright that he was not permanently injured, that his injuries were not going to be serious, and that he would be able to take his place back by March, 1907. Hambright returned to Memphis without making a settlement, but subsequently wrote to Dr. Outten that he would like to arrange with Mr. Jones or some of his agents to see him, as he would like to settle with the railroad company. A pass was furnished him to St. Louis, and he went there and saw the claim agent on the 28th of December. There is irreconcilable conflict between the testimony of the claim agent and his stenographer and that of Hambright as to the transaction at that time. The claim agent puts in evidence certain writings: First, a proposition signed by Hambright to him, reciting his injury and his condition, and proposing to settle with the railroad company for $1,250. A written acceptance follows, signed by Jones as general claim agent for the railroad company. Then follows a formal release setting forth in full the accident occasioning the injury and the extent of his injury, and that in his judgment the injuries received are of permanent character, and reciting an agreement to settle for $1,250 and acknowledging receipt of the same in full settlement of all actions, suits, or claims of every class or character arising to him or accruing to him by reason of the injuries referred to. Written upon this by Hambright in his own handwriting is this clause: "I understand this release." Mr. Jones and his stenographer testified that these papers were dictated to the stenographer in the presence of Hambright, and were signed by him, and that they truly reflect the transaction, and they further testify that Mr. Jones had no communication with Dr. Outten at that time, that Dr. Outten's letter, which served as a clearance, was the sole information he had before him of Hambright's condition. On the other hand, Hambright testifies that Mr. Jones called up Dr. Outten over the telephone, and, after inquiring as to Hambright's condition, listened for a few moments, and then turned to him and said: "Dr. Outten says that you are not badly hurt, and that you will be able to go to work by the 1st of March." He says that he placed every reliance upon the statement of Dr. Outten, and thought that he knew exactly what he was talking about, and that he consulted no other doctors at that time in regard to his condition, and that after receiving this information from Mr. Jones that he asked him in regard to his work, and that Jones told him that he would see that his job would be ready for him as soon as he was able to work. He said he told Jones he was hurt bad, and wanted pay for his time off; and he says that the settlement was based on the actual wages from the time of his injury to the 1st of March, and doctor's bills, expenses, and medicines, and that he put in no claim for a settlement for his injuries, and did not know that that element was stated in the writing which he signed, that the papers he signed were not dictated in his presence or hearing, and that he did not read them over because he did not consider it necessary, as he thought it was a receipt for his wages and expenses as agreed upon. The $1,250 was paid to Hambright and he returned to his home in Memphis. His physical condition did not improve, and in the latter part of February he consulted physicians there to see if he would be able to return to work the 1st of March, and was advised that he was permanently disabled from pursuing work in the railroad service requiring physical exertion. The evidence is undisputed that his injuries are of such a nature that he will be unable to do any work which would require physical exertion, and that the only service in the railroad employ for which he would be fitted would be such a position as flagman at a crossing at a salary of $40 or $45 a month. He says he is not sufficiently educated to do any clerical work, and his earnings are dependent upon comparatively unremunerative positions. He was earning at the time of the injury about $150 per month, and he had just been promoted to a freight conductor, but had not assumed that position at that time.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

This suit was brought by Hambright against the railroad company to recover damages for his injuries, alleging negligence. The answer denied negligence, and pleaded contributory negligence, and further pleaded a settlement for $1,250 in full satisfaction of the damages on account of the injury. The plaintiff filed an amended complaint, admitting the settlement and the receipt of $1,250, and charged fraud and deceit on the part of defendant's chief surgeon and general claim agent in procuring the settlement. The defendant filed an amended answer denying any false or fraudulent statements in procuring the settlement.

The facts above outlined were developed in the evidence and also the facts as cause of the injury. As there is no controversy in this court over the original cause of action, the sole controversy being in regard to the validity of the release, the testimony and instructions pertaining to the liability are not necessary to be set out in order to understand the issues here. The court gave the following instructions:

"(3) The execution of the release by the plaintiff, which bears date December 28, 1906, and put in evidence, is an admitted fact. But, if the jury find from a preponderance of the evidence that before or at the time the consideration was paid for said release and the same was executed that the physician and surgeon of the defendant railway company made an examination of the plaintiff's injuries, and thereupon assured the plaintiff that his injuries were not permanent, but that plaintiff would be able to resume his position and duties with defendant by the 1st of March following, and relying upon said statement to be true, he executed said release, but soon afterwards it was developed that plaintiff was permanently injured, and that he never would be able to perform labor in his line of employment, but that at the time of making said statements defendant's physician and surgeon either knew that plaintiff was permanently injured and misrepresented that fact, or was honestly mistaken as to the extent of plaintiff's injuries and misled him into signing said release, then plaintiff is not bound by same, and the jury should so find.

"(4) If the jury find for the plaintiff, they will assess his damages at a sum that will compensate him for the bodily injury sustained and the mental and physical pain and suffering endured and to be endured by reason of such injuries. The effect of the injuries on his health according to the degree and probable duration, his pecuniary loss from his diminished capacity for earning money through life, if any such has been proven; and, after you have fixed the sum, you will deduct the amount which defendant has paid plaintiff, and the difference should be the amount of your verdict."

The defendant asked 10 instructions, all of which the court refused. The jury returned the following verdict: "We, the jury, find for the plaintiff and assess his damages at $5,000, after allowing credit for the amount paid." Defendant railroad company has appealed.

T. M. Mehaffy and J. E. Williams, for appellant. L. A. Byrne, for appellee.

HILL, C. J. (after stating the facts as above). 1. Appellant says that the evidence is not sufficient to show that the plaintiff was either deceived or misled, or that any fraud was practiced on him in obtaining the settlement. In discussing this it must be taken that the jury has accepted the testimony of Hambright and Phelps and rejected that of Outten and Jones; and the sufficiency of the evidence must be tested solely upon the accredited testimony. In H. & T. C. Ry. Co. v. Brown (Tex. Civ. App.) 69 S. W. 651, an employé of the railroad company was injured and was taken to a hospital, where he was treated by Dr. Stewart, the surgeon of the railroad company. The doctor represented to him that the bones of his arm had knitted and united together, that his arm was well, and that as soon as the swelling had passed away his arm would be as good as ever. Brown, the employé, had stated that he was ready to settle with the railroad company whenever the bones of his arm had knit together and his arm was cured. The court said: "The facts in evidence warrant the conclusion that Stewart made the representations and statements to the appellee for the purpose of inducing him to execute the release to appellant, and that the appellee believed the statements were true, and relied upon the same, and was thereby induced to make the settlement and sign the release; that the representations and statements so made by Stewart were false, in that the bones at the time of the trial were not united, and that his arm was practically destroyed in its usefulness. The court correctly submitted this issue to the jury. We cannot agree with the contention of appellant that it may escape liability on the ground that the representations and statements made by Stewart was a mere expression of opinion. It was more than an opinion. It was the statement of a fact. The effect of his statement was that the appellee was a sound man, and that the bones of his arm had knitted together, and that it would be all right. It is true this statement may have been predicated upon his opinion as a medical expert, but the opinion is based upon facts of which he possessed knowledge. The fact that the statement made by Stewart was not intentionally false does not affect the right of the appellee to have the release set aside if he was misled by the statement, and executed the release believing the statement was true. In such a case innocent misrepresentations may as well be the basis of relief as where such statements are intentionally false." This case was quoted from and approved by the federal Court of Appeals of the Ninth Circuit in Great Northern Ry. Co. v. Fowler. 136 Fed. 118, 69 C. C. A. 106. In that case a brakeman on a railroad was injured and was examined by the company's physician, who advised him, after a cursory examination, that his injuries were slight, and that he would be ready for work in two weeks. He consulted no other physician as to the extent of his probable injuries. The decisions touching this exact point are carefully considered and discriminated, and these conclusions reached: "He accepted the statement and opinion of the appellant's surgeon, and on the basis of it received $195 and signed the discharge. We entertain no doubt that such a release executed under a mutual mistake of fact so induced by the appellant should be set aside. It is true that, where there is no misrepresentation or fraud on the part of the releasee, a releasor cannot subsequently avoid his release on the ground that his injuries were more serious than he thought them to be, even though his opinion at the time of making the settlement may have been based upon that of a physician employed by the releasee to examine and report on the extent of his injuries; * * * but it is equally true that a mutual mistake of fact or an innocent misrepresentation of the facts of the releasor's injury, made by the releasee's physician, may be effective to avoid a release induced thereby."

The case of T. & P. Ry. Co. v. Jowers, (Tex. Civ. App.) 110 S. W. 946, is essentially similar to the case at bar. An employé of the railroad company was injured and sent to the same hospital to which Hambright went, and was under the care of Dr. Vasterling, who was also one of the physicians who attended Hambright while he was at the hospital. The course of dealing between the hospital and the patient was shown to be the same in that case as it was in this. The plaintiff's evidence was that he had settled upon the statement of Dr. Vasterling that his injuries were slight, and it was proved that such was not the case. The court said: "The fifth and sixth assignments are submitted together in the appellant's brief, and assail the court's charge in submitting the issue of bad faith or fraud upon the part of Dr. Vasterling, appellant's physician in charge of the hospital, and Hoepfner, appellant's claim agent stationed at that place, in advising the appellee concerning the extent of his injuries at the time the release was executed. The propositions (two in number) submitted under those assignments indicate that the particular objection was to the action of the court in submitting any such issue at all under the circumstances. The first proposition asserts that fraud cannot be predicated upon a representation which is a mere statement of opinion, and not the statement of the fact. The appellants lose sight evidently of the fact that fraud may be based upon the giving of an opinion as well as the statement of any other fact. In this particular suit the contention is relied upon that the physician fraudulently gave an incorrect opinion, and thereby misled the appellee into agreeing to a settlement [citing authorities]. The second proposition assumes as a matter of fact that the physician acted in good faith. That, we think, was an issue for the jury." See, also, on the general principle involved, Railway Co. v. Kosischke, 104 Fed. 440, 48 U. S. App. 626, the Circuit Court of Appeals of the Eighth Circuit. The appellee's evidence fully meets the requirements of the authorities to avoid a release induced by fraud.

2. A special exception was taken to submitting the question of Dr. Outten being mistaken as to the extent of plaintiff's injuries to the jury in the third instruction. As shown by the above authorities, if the settlement was based upon a mutual mistake of fact, predicated upon the doctor's medical opinion as to the present condition of the employé, which opinion induced the settlement, the instruction was correct. If there was room to find that there was such mistake of fact as above indicated, it would be equally effective to set aside the release, and the appellant cannot be injured by having the most charitable construction given to the statements of Dr. Outten.

3. It is said that Hambright came direct from his own physicians and ought to have known, and must have known, something of his condition outside of anything Dr. Outten said to him, and that he could not have been misled in this regard. Hambright testified that he had been under Dr. Outten's care from September, and that he did not know his own condition, but relied upon Dr. Outten, and asked him to tell him his true condition. In the third instruction the court predicated plaintiff's case on a reliance upon Dr. Outten's statements, and the verdict means that the jury believed he did rely upon them. Dr. Outten says that his examinations were made in behalf of the employés as well as the railroad; that his employment came from the railroad company and his compensation came from a hospital fund derived from assessments of the employés. Certainly Hambright had a right to rely upon his good faith, and it does not lie in the mouth of the railway company to say that an employé cannot safely rely upon statements of its chief surgeon who occupies this delicate position between it and its employés.

4. It is next argued that the court erred in entertaining this suit without requiring a tender of the amount received in the settlement of December 28th. This point was reserved by exception to the fourth instruction. This contention, however, was settled against the appellant in St. L., I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Smith, 82 Ark. 105, 100 S. W. 884. In that case, as in this, there was a controversy over a release; one side claiming that it was for a single purpose and the other side claiming that it was a full release. The court said: "So, if the jury found that she was paid the sum of money as compensation only for the inconvenience and delay caused by the collision, or that she was induced to sign the receipt by false representations, which she relied on, as to its contents, she would not be bound to return the sum paid before suing to recover the damages sustained." If plaintiff's evidence was true, then the tender was not necessary; and the defendant did not ask for the converse of the proposition to be submitted.

5. Objection is made to the third instruction; but, as seen in the previous discussion, it is in accord with the authorities.

6. Error is assigned for the refusal to give each of the 10 instructions asked on the part of the defendant. The first and second of these charged the jury that, if the writings introduced in evidence were signed by the plaintiff, he would be bound by the terms and conditions thereof and not permitted by oral testimony to change, vary, add to, or contradict them. The rule of evidence forbidding the addition, alteration, or contradiction of a written instrument by parol testimony of antecedent and contemporaneous negotiations does not apply where there is an issue of fraud in the procurement of the writing. Jordan v. Fenno, 18 Ark. 593; Gause Sons v. Doyle & Co., 48 Ark. 122; Colonial & U. S. Mortg. Co. v. Jeter, 71 Ark. 185, 71 S. W. 945. The exception to the refusal of the court to give the 10 instructions was a general one, and where such is the case, if any of the instructions are bad, such exception does not preserve for review the other instructions. Young v. Stevenson, 75 Ark. 181, 86 S. W. 1000. There was no error in refusing to give any of these instructions. As they are not in reviewable shape, the questions presented by them cannot properly be discussed.

Judgment affirmed.

McCULLOCH, J., concurs in judgment, but not in all of the opinion.

ASHFORD v. RICHARDSON.

(Supreme Court of Arkansas. Nov. 16, 1908.)

APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1039*)—REVIEW—HARMLESS ERROR—PLEADING.

Act May 11, 1905 (Acts 1905, p. 798), provides that the circuit and chancery courts may consolidate actions when it appears reasonable to do so. Kirby's Dig. § 8148, provides that no judgment shall be reversed for any error or defect which does not affect the substantial rights of the adverse party. Held, that whether or not an action for slander and an action for a malicious prosecution growing out of the same transaction can be joined under Kirby's Dig. § 8079, enumerating actions which may be joined, the court might have consolidated the actions under such act of May 11, 1905, if they had been separately brought, and, the verdict in one of the causes of action thus joined being for $1 only, the judgment will not be reversed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4076; Dec. Dig. § 1039.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Garland County; W. H. Evans, Judge.

Action by Carter Richardson against Fred C. Ashford. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Carter Richardson brought this suit in the Garland circuit court against Fred C. Ashford, and united in the same complaint an alleged cause of action for slander with one for malicious prosecution. The complaint alleges: "That on the 10th day of May, 1906, the defendant in a certain discourse which he then and there had with the plaintiff, in the presence and hearing of Walter Flowers, Arthur Owens, Bob Jones, and divers other good and worthy persons, falsely, slanderously, and maliciously spoke of and concerning the plaintiff the false, slanderous, defamatory, and malicious words following, to wit: 'You God damned son of a bitch, you went and raped a woman, and I am going to have you sent to the penitentiary for it.' That subsequently, on the same day, but on a different occasion, in the presence of the said Bob Jones and of divers other worthy persons, the said defendant in a certain discourse he then and there had with the said Bob Jones and divers other persons then and there being falsely, maliciously, and slanderously spoke of and concerning the plaintiff the following false, slanderous, defamatory, and malicious words, to wit: 'I've got the two sons of bitches in jail now [meaning the said plaintiff and Arthur Owens], and I'm out, so you see what my money will do. I am going to have both of them [meaning thereby the said plaintiff and Arthur Owens] sent to the pen for raping that woman. Carter Richardson did rape her, and Arthur Owens held the other woman while he did it.' That said language in its common acceptation then and there amounted to charging this plaintiff with having committed a felony, and to bring into disrepute the good name and character of plaintiff, and was then and there knowingly and maliciously false and slanderous. That, by reason of the speaking, publishing, and uttering of said false, slanderous, and malicious words, the plaintiff has been damaged in his reputation in the sum of $5,000. The said plaintiff, for a further cause of action against said defendant, alleges: That the said defendant on the 10th day of May, 1906, in the city of Hot Springs, Garland county, state of Arkansas, falsely and maliciously, and without reasonable or probable cause, procured one Emma Henderson to charge the plaintiff before one J. W. Alford, a justice of the peace within and for Hot Springs township, in said county of Garland, state of Arkansas, with the crime of assault with intent to commit rape, and procured the said justice to issue a warrant for the arrest of the said plaintiff on said charge, and thereupon the said plaintiff was arrested under said warrant and imprisoned for ——— hours, and compelled to give bond in the sum of $500 to obtain his release. That on the ——— day of May, 1906, at the trial of said cause, the plaintiff was acquitted of said crime and discharged, and the said prosecution is wholly ended and determined. That said charge and arrest was published in several newspapers by the procurement of the defendant, and the plaintiff was grievously injured in his credit and reputation, and incurred an expense of ——— dollars in costs and counsel fees in defending himself. That, by reason of said matters, the plaintiff has been injured and damaged in the sum of $5,000. Wherefore plaintiff prays judgment against said defendant in the sum of $10,000 and other relief." The defendant demurred to the complaint and moved to require plaintiff to elect on which count he would proceed. The court overruled his demurrer and motion, and he duly excepted. Defendant, then without waiving his demurrer, filed his answer, which was a denial of all the material allegations of the complaint. There was evidence adduced at the trial tending to establish both slander and malicious prosecution. The jury returned the following verdict: "We, the jury, find for the plaintiff, Carter Richardson, on the first count, 'charge of slander,' and assess his damages on said count at $1. * * * and also we find for the plaintiff on the second count 'charge of malicious prosecution,' and assess his damages on said count at $200." The court rendered judgment accordingly, and the defendant has duly prosecuted his appeal to this court.

C. Floyd Huff and C. V. Teague, for appellant. Greaves & Martin, for appellee.

HART, J. (after stating the facts as above). The sole issue raised by the appeal in this case is whether the actions for slander and for malicious prosecution may be joined in the same complaint. Section 6079 of Kirby's Digest is as follows: "Several causes of action may be united in the same complaint where each affects all of the parties to the action, may be brought in the same county, be prosecuted by the same kind of proceedings, and all belong to one of the following classes: * * * Fifth. Claims arising from injuries to character. Sixth. Claims arising from injuries to person or property." Counsel for appellant contend that the action for slander is included in the fifth class, and that the action for malicious prosecution belongs to the sixth class, and hence, under the section above quoted, that the two actions cannot be joined in the same complaint. We do not deem it necessary to decide this question. The act of May 11, 1905, provides that, when causes of action of a like nature or relative to the same question are pending before any of the circuit or chancery courts of this state, "the court may make such orders and rules concerning the proceedings therein as may be conformable to the usages of courts for avoiding unnecessary costs or delay in the administration of justice, and may consolidate said causes when it appears reasonable to do so." Acts 1905, p. 798. "The wrong of a malicious prosecution is akin to the wrongs known under the designation of slander and libel. Though it is injurious in that it is likely to subject the party to expense and trouble to make good his defense, it is also a most effective species of defamation, the defamatory matter being not only published, but made more formal, and apparently authoritative, by the machinery of the law being made use of for the purpose." Cooley on Torts, p. 225.

The court had jurisdiction of both causes of action, and, if no objection had been made, they could have proceeded to judgment in the same time. The causes of action were of a like nature. They arose out of the same transaction, and, if separate suits had been brought, the court could have consolidated the two actions. No exceptions were saved either to the introduction of testimony, or to the instructions of the court, nor is it claimed that the verdict is not sustained by the evidence. The verdict of the jury on the declaration for slander was only $1. Hence it is manifest that the action of the court in permitting the two causes of action to be united in the same complaint and to be tried together did not result in prejudice to appellant. Section 6148, Kirby's Dig., provides that no judgment shall be reversed by reason of any error in defect which does not affect the substantial rights of the adverse party. This rule was applied in the case of Mahoney v. Roberts (Ark.) 110 S. W. 225. The court said: "It was not a prejudicial error to join a cause of action for breach of contract with another for a tort where the same evidence was necessary to sustain both causes, as the two causes of action, if brought separately, might have been consolidated under the act of May 11, 1905."

Finding no error in the record, the judgment is affirmed.

SUMPTER, County Judge, v. BUCHANAN. (Supreme Court of Arkansas. Nov. 18, 1908.)

APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 151*)—RIGHT OF REVIEW—APPEAL BY COUNTY JUDGE.

Kirby's Dig. § 1493, providing that when appeals from the county court are prosecuted in the circuit or Supreme Court, the judge of the county court shall defend the same, does not authorize the county judge to appeal from a decision of the circuit court in favor of the county.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 949; Dec. Dig. § 151.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Garland County; W. H. Evans, Judge.

M. J. Murphy presented a claim against Garland county to the county court, and on appeal to the circuit court, by a taxpayer of such county, from an allowance of such claim, the circuit court rendered judgment in favor of the county, from which judgment O. H. Sumpter, county judge, appeals. Appeal dismissed.

The subject-matter of this action is an allowance made by the county court of Garland county to M. J. Murphy for work and materials alleged to have been done and furnished by him for the plumbing and heating of the county jail. Appellee, as a citizen and taxpayer of Garland county, duly prosecuted an appeal from the order of allowance to the circuit court. After hearing the evidence the circuit court rendered the following judgment: "Now on this day, this cause having heretofore been submitted to the court, the court, being well and sufficiently advised, finds as a matter of fact that the contract as alleged to have been made by the county court with M. J. Murphy in the sum of $2,125 for plumbing and heating the county jail of Garland county was void, for the reason that the same was not made during term of the county court, and for the further reason that the contract was not advertised and publicly let, also that because no previous appropriation had been made for making such improvement. In view of the above findings the court does not feel called upon to pass on the reasonableness or unreasonableness of the amount of the allowance, and therefore finds that the judgment of the county court in allowing the claim of M. J. Murphy for $2,125 was without authority of law, and therefore void." O. H. Sumpter, as judge of the county court, filed his motion for a new trial, and, upon the same being overruled, has duly prosecuted an appeal to this court. Appellee moves to dismiss his appeal.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

C. Floyd Huff, Murphy, Coleman & Lewis, for appellant. Wood & Henderson, for appellee.

HART, J. (after stating the facts as above). Section 1493, Kirby's Dig., provides that when appeals are prosecuted in the circuit or Supreme Court, the judge of the county court shall defend the same. This court has held that this includes the right to take an appeal. Ex parte Morton, 69 Ark. 48, 60 S. W. 307; Ouachita County v. Rolland, 60 Ark. 516, 31 S. W. 144. These were cases where the county judge appealed from an adverse judgment. Here the judgment of the circuit court was in favor of the county, and the question is presented, Can the county judge in such case take an appeal? In discussing the statute above referred to, in the Ouachita County Case, the court said: "It is obvious that the authority conferred by them [referring to the words 'shall defend the same'] was given for the purpose of protecting the interest of the county which may be involved. It would be against the liberal policy of the law to so limit it as to deny him the right to take an appeal when the county may be aggrieved by the judgment of a circuit court. As a general rule, all parties aggrieved are allowed to take appeals from all judgments of the circuit and inferior courts. There can be no good reason why counties should be denied the same right, except as to judgments of the county courts." Thus it will be seen that the statute primarily imposes upon the county judge the duty of defending its suits on appeal, and, as an aid to him in the discharge of that duty, he may take an appeal from a judgment of a circuit court when he deems it necessary for the purpose of protecting the interest of the county. But in defending suits in which the county is interested, he acts only as agent or representative of the county, and unless the decision is adverse to the county, there is no occasion for the county judge to prosecute an appeal. His only duty is to make a defense for the county, and if the judgment of the circuit court is in its favor, he has discharged the duty imposed upon him, and his authority to act ceases. The general rule is that a party who succeeds has no right to an appeal. Elliott on Appellate Procedure, § 147. This rule was applied by this court in the case of Phillips v. Goe, 85 Ark. 304, 108 S. W. 207, where the parties prosecuting the appeal had been granted the relief which they originally asked for. This opinion is not to be taken as in any manner determining whatever rights, if any, Murphy may have by appeal or otherwise, and merely goes to the right of the county judge to prosecute an appeal from a judgment in favor of the county.

Ordered that the appeal be dismissed.

BEVIS v. VANCEBURG TELEPHONE CO.
(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Nov. 20, 1908.)

1. NEGLIGENCE (§ 122*)—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—BURDEN OF PROOF.

Contributory negligence is matter of defense, as to which defendant has the burden of proof, though plaintiff unnecessarily pleaded that she was injured while in the exercise of due care, and this is traversed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Negligence, Cent. Dig. §§ 229-231; Dec. Dig. § 122.*]

2. NEGLIGENCE (§ 141*)—INSTRUCTIONS.

An instruction which requires, for a recovery by plaintiff, that the jury find, not only actionable negligence by defendant, but also that plaintiff was in the exercise of ordinary care for her safety, is erroneous, as her failure to exercise ordinary care, unless the proximate cause of the injury, would not defeat recovery.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Negligence, Cent. Dig. §§ 382-399; Dec. Dig. § 141.*]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1064*)—REVIEW—PREJUDICIAL ERROR—INSTRUCTIONS.

Where there was no evidence of contributory negligence, but there was some evidence that the person with whom plaintiff was riding was driving fast, and the jury may have inferred from this that plaintiff was not exercising ordinary care for her safety, by not controlling or attempting to control the actions of her companion, error in requiring the jury to find, as a condition to recovery, that plaintiff was in the exercise of ordinary care for safety, was prejudicial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4221-4224; Dec. Dig. § 1064.*]

4. DAMAGES (§ 91*)—PUNITIVE DAMAGES.

There is no ground for punitive damages, where one is injured by driving into a telephone pole in the side of a road.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Damages, Cent. Dig. §§ 193-201; Dec. Dig. § 91.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Lewis County.

"To be officially reported."

Action by Fanny L. Bevis against the Vanceburg Telephone Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed, and remanded for new trial.

W. Elmo Darragh, Thos. R. Phister, R. D. Wilson, and A. D. Cole, for appellant. W. J. Halbert, for appellee.

O'REAR, C. J. On a former appeal of this case the opinion states the facts as then appearing and the law applicable to them. As the case then went off on a peremptory instruction, the plaintiff's case only appeared. Bevis v. Vanceburg Telephone Company, 121 Ky. 182, 89 S. W. 126. On a return of the case the issue was submitted to the jury, resulting in a verdict and judgment for appellee.

The case is, briefly summarized, that Miss Bevis, while driving in the nighttime along one of the public roads of Lewis county, was everely injured by the buggy's running against one of appellee's poles, which was situated in the road, and it is claimed so far out in or near to the traveled way as to imperil persons using the highway when driving vehicles by that point. It may be conceded that the presence of the telephone pole was a nuisance, in the nature of a purpresture. Appellant did not know of its existence. Her companion, who was driving the buggy, and who had entire control of it for the purposes of the trip, is not shown to have been aware of the situation of the pole. In attempting to drive around and pass a buggy ahead of them, the horse was pulled to one side of the road, whereby the buggy was brought into contact with the pole, throwing appellant out, and injuring her as stated. In the former opinion it was said that the driver's negligence, if there was any, was not to be imputed to appellant. There is no evidence of appellant's negligence in the matter, as the term "negligence" is used in law. There was some evidence that appellant's companion was driving rapidly, but not necessarily recklessly. Except for the presence of the telephone pole, there is no reason to believe any bad result would have ensued from it, and not then, except for the buggy in front, which it was attempting to pass. There is not negligence in the mere fact that the driver of one buggy may desire and attempt to drive faster than the one ahead going the same way. One may be in a hurry, properly so, and the other not.

There was a plea of contributory negligence; but, as there was not evidence to support it, the trial court did not instruct the jury on that score. The court did instruct the jury, however, that, before the plaintiff was entitled to recover a verdict, they should believe from the evidence that the plaintiff was herself in the exercise of ordinary care for her own safety, in addition to believing the establishment of the various ingredients of actionable negligence on the part of the defendant. The question is whether the interpolation of the condition as to plaintiff's exercising due care for her own safety was proper, and if not, whether it was prejudicial. In this jurisdiction contributory negligence is a defense, and to be available must be pleaded, and, if an issue is made, must be proved. It is defined as being the failure by the plaintiff to exercise ordinary care for his own safety, but for which the injury would not have occurred, notwithstanding the defendant's negligence. The law endeavors to fix the responsibility upon the agent of the proximate cause. There is no dividing it, resting it partly upon one concurrent cause, and partly upon another, where the plaintiff's own negligence is one of the concurrent causes. The rigidity of this rule is apparently justified by the practice, which shifts the burden of proof and raises the necessity for the plea and proof. When the plaintiff shows the injury was caused by an act or omission of the defendant which is contrary to its duty toward the plaintiff in the premises, a prima facie case has been made out, and a verdict would be warranted, unless the act or omission can be excused, or the plaintiff can be shown by the defendant to have failed at the time to exercise ordinary care for his own safety, but for which, in spite of defendant's negligence, the injury would not have resulted. Thus the burden of showing the defendant's negligence is upon the plaintiff, while that of showing plaintiff's contributory negligence is upon the defendant. If, however, the plaintiff should be put to it to prove, not only that the defendant was negligent in the particular charged, but that he was at the time in the exercise of due care for his own safety, he would be compelled to carry the burden upon both propositions. It is true that, before one can recover for another's negligence, the former must have been without such negligence as to have caused his own injury. But the question we are considering is not one of right to recover, but of the correct practice in the enforcement of the right.

In pleading it is not unusual to charge that plaintiff, while in the exercise of due care for his own safety, was injured by the defendant's negligence in certain named particulars; but such an allegation is not necessary. Louisville & Portland Canal Company v. Murphy, 9 Bush, 522. While the plaintiff may needlessly plead that, whilst he was in the exercise of due care, by the defendant's negligence, in this, etc., he was injured and damaged, etc., he would have nothing added to his preliminary burden to show his right to recover, even though the defendant had traversed the allegation. If the plaintiff in this case was injured by the negligence of the defendant sued upon, she was entitled to recover a verdict, although she was not exercising ordinary care for her own safety, unless her failure to do so was the proximate cause of the injury. Elliott, Roads & Streets, 640. It was therefore error to have imposed upon her the condition and burden of showing that she was at the time using ordinary care for her own safety, before the jury were allowed to find for her. Palmer Tr. Co. v. Paducah Ry. Co., 89 S. W. 515, 28 Ky. Law Rep. 473; 29 Cyc. 604; Hoyt v. Hudson, 41 Wis. 105, 22 Am. Rep. 714; R. E. v. Fleming, 30 Ohio St. 484; City of Lincoln v. Walker, 18 Neb. 244, 20 N. W. 113, and note of cases collected.

We must remain in doubt as to the effect of the error upon the jury. There were two trials—one resulting in a disagreement of the jury. The jury on this case were taken to the place of injury to inspect the location of the pole. There was some evidence, as stated, that plaintiff and her companion were traveling very fast. We cannot say that the jury may not, from these facts, have inferred that plaintiff was not exercising ordinary care for her own safety, by not controlling the actions of her companion, or attempting to do so. But, if they regarded that as it they must have given that clause considerable weight in arriving at their verdict. We conclude that the error was prejudicial.

There is no ground for punitive damages in the case.

Judgment reversed, and remanded for a new trial under proceedings not inconsistent herewith.

TROENDLE et al. v. HIGHLEYMAN.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Nov. 24, 1906.)

1. BILLS AND NOTES (§ 117*)—CONSTRUCTION—PLACE OF PAYMENT—RATE OF INTEREST—WHAT LAW GOVERNS.

Where notes, which fixed no place of payment, were drawn and sent to one in Tennessee, who signed them without change and forwarded them to the sender in another state, they were Tennessee contracts, and the laws of that state governed as to the rate of interest.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Cent. Dig. §§ 248-254; Dec. Dig. § 117.*]

2. INSURANCE (§ 593*)—RIGHT TO PROCEEDS—ASSIGNMENT—POLICY PAYABLE TO WIFE.

Where a life insurance policy was payable to insured's wife, for her sole use and benefit, if she survived until time of payment, her interest in the policy was "settled" upon her as separate property, within a statute permitting married women to dispose of their separate estate, settled upon them for their separate use, and hence a pledge of her interest therein was enforceable.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. § 1478; Dec. Dig. § 593.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Christian County.

"Not to be officially reported."

Action by S. L. Highleyman against T. R. Troendle and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants T. R. and Lily A. Troendle appeal. Affirmed as to appellant T. R. Troendle, and reversed as to appellant Lily A. Troendle, with directions to enter judgment for a less amount.

Downer & Russell, for appellants. Humphrey & Humphrey and L. R. Yeaman, for Connecticut Mut. Life Ins. Co. T. H. Bush and Joe McCarroll, for appellee.

NUNN, J. On December 31, 1891, the Connecticut Mutual Life Insurance Company of Hartford, Conn., issued its policy of life insurance upon the life of Theodore R. Troendle, in the sum of $5,000. Under the terms of the policy, which is known as a "20-payment life," the insurance will become fully paid up after the payment of 20 annual premiums, but will not be due and payable until the death of the insured. The policy in question is payable to the assured, Lily A. Troendle, wife of the insured, "for her sole use and benefit, or, in case of her decease before payment, to his children or their descendants, if any survive; if none, to his executors, administrators, or assigns." The policy provides that at the end of 10 years from the date of the issuance of the policy, or at the end of each period of 5 years thereafter, the policy having been in force such entire periods for the full sum first named, the company will pay to the person or persons therein designated the cash value therefor, to be ascertained by the table of "cash values" indorsed on the policy, the premiums having been continually paid upon the policy. On February 18, 1901, appellant Theodore R. Troendle, went from his home in Memphis, Tenn., to St. Louis, Mo., the place of appellee's residence, and made an agreement with appellee by which he obtained a loan in cash of $850 and executed a note for the sum of $1,100, and assigned the insurance policy referred to as collateral, with the consent of the insurance company, to secure the payment of the note. The note and policy were sent to Memphis, Tenn., the place of residence of Lily A. Troendle, one of the appellants, who signed the note and the indorsement on the policy, and placed them in an envelope directed to appellee; and when received by appellee, through the United States mail, he issued a check for $850, payable to, or for the benefit of, appellant Theodore R. Troendle, and directed it to a bank in the city of Hopkinsville, Ky. On February 15, 1902, appellant T. R. Troendle executed another note payable to appellee for $1,900. It seems that this last note settled the first, and also included several premiums, which appellee agreed to pay to the insurance company on this policy. This note and the insurance policy, with another indorsement thereon for the security of appellee, were sent to Memphis, to appellant Lily A. Troendle, for her signature, which she signed and returned to appellee in the same manner as she did the first. It appears that afterwards another note was executed by appellants to appellee for the sum of $407. It is claimed by appellee that the note for $1,900 did not cover the amount first loaned to appellants and the cash he paid to appellant T. R. Troendle at the time of the execution of the $1,900 note, and the amount of the premiums on the policy which he had contracted to pay, and that the $407 note was executed to cover the difference.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

Appellee instituted an action on this last note in the Christian circuit court in December, 1905. Appellants answered, denying that they owed anything on it, and alleged that it was executed without any consideration, and by another paragraph set out every transaction had with appellee, stating the separate amounts received by T. R. Troendle from appellee and the premiums paid by appellee on the policy, and the assignment of the insurance policy as collateral. They also alleged that the obligations were Tennessee contracts, and that the laws of that state only allowed the collection of 6 per cent. interest, and that there was a large amount of usury contained in the notes. Appellant Lily A. Troendie presented a paragraph in her answer to the effect that the amount loaned by appellee was loaned to her husband and was used solely for his benefit; that she received no part of the consideration; that she only attempted to bind herself as the surety for her husband, and to place her interest in the policy as collateral security for the payment of the debts; that the law of the state of Tennessee prohibited this; and she pleaded the laws of that state as a bar to any recovery against her, or to the subjection of her interest in the insurance policy to the payment of her coappellant's debts. They both asked that appellee be required to file in the action all the notes held by him and the insurance policy, that the whole matter might be adjudicated in one action. Appellee complied with this request, and traversed the allegations of the pleadings of appellants.

The parties took their proof by deposition, the case was submitted for trial, and the court adjudged that appellee recover of appellant T. R. Troendle the sum of $2,334.79, and interest thereon at the rate of 8 per cent. per annum from that date, until paid and his cost, and also adjudged that appellee had a lien upon the insurance policy for the payment of that sum, and directed the insurance company to pay appellee, upon demand, the cash surrender value due thereon, under the terms of the several assignments of same indorsed thereon, not exceeding the amount due on the judgment, and, when so paid, should be credited on the judgment, and that appellants should "be bound by and charged with said payment, when so made, and such payment, when so made, shall operate as a full release and discharge of the Mutual Benefit Life Insurance Company of Hartford, Conn., of further liability under said policy to the said T. R. Troendle and Lily A. Troendle." To so much of the judgment as decides that the notes are Missouri contracts, and allows appellee the right to 8 per cent. interest on his debts, and declares a lien upon the policy of insurance, and subjects the same to appellee's debts, the appellants appeal.

It is conceded that the laws of Missouri, at the time the notes were executed, allowed the collection of 8 per cent. interest when contracted for in writing, and that the payment of 8 per cent. interest was specified in each of the notes. It is also conceded that the laws of Tennessee, at the dates mentioned, did not allow the recovery of interest exceeding 6 per cent. The notes, by their terms, do not fix any place for their payment. They are silent upon this question. Appellee introduced evidence to the effect that the contracts were to be performed in the state of Missouri; that such was the intention of the parties at the time the notes were executed. Appellants introduced evidence to the contrary. We have examined the testimony with some care, and are unwilling to disturb the finding of the lower court upon this question, in so far as appellant T. R. Troendle is concerned; but as to Lily A. Troendle it is different. The evidence shows that she had no personal transactions with appellee. He never saw her until after the suit was instituted. As stated, she resided in Memphis, Tenn., and the papers which she signed were prepared and sent to her there, and she signed them without any change. She accepted them as prepared by appellee, and, as there was no place fixed in the notes for their payment, the laws of Tennessee must govern and fix the liability of appellant Lily A. Troendle. There is no evidence that she understood and agreed that the laws of Missouri might fix her liability thereon. In the case of Northwestern Mutual Life Insurance Company v. Joseph, 103 S. W. 317, 31 Ky. Law Rep. 714, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 439, this court announced a principle which governs the question under consideration. In that case Joseph signed some papers as prepared by the insurance company, which he accepted without change, mailed them to the company, and while in the mail, but before they reached the company, Joseph died. The question under consideration was whether or not the contract was completed when Joseph mailed the papers. This court decided that the contract was completed when Joseph signed and mailed the papers; that when he accepted the contract as presented by the papers, and placed them in the United States mail, the contract was completed, and he had no further control over it. In the case of William Glenny Glass Co. v. Taylor, 99 Ky. 24, 34 S. W. 711, this court passed upon a question analogous to the one at bar. In that case Mary D. Bradford, who afterwards married Taylor, signed a note payable in New York, and, when sued, pleaded the New York statutes in regard to interest. The court in its opinion used the following language: "The note, when signed by Mary D. Bradford in Kentucky and inclosed to the payee, was an executed instrument, as much so as if the payee had been present and the note delivered to him in Kentucky." Under these authorities appellant Lily A. Troendle was not liable for 8 per cent. interest, but for only 6 per cent.

Appellant Lily A. Troendle further contends that the assignment of her interest in the insurance policy to appellee was not binding upon her, for the reason she was a married woman at the time she assigned her interest in the policy. Appellee introduced two lawyers of the state of Tennessee, who testified that under the laws of that state she was bound by the assignment, even though she was a married woman. The statute of Tennessee on the subject, as produced by the witnesses, is as follows: "All married women over twenty-one years of age, owning a separate estate, settled upon them and for their separate use, shall have and possess the same power of disposition, by deed, will, or otherwise, as if unmarried." The interest of Lily A. Troendle in the policy had been settled upon her for her sole use and benefit. It was her separate property, and under the Tennessee laws she had the right to pledge it. We are therefore of the opinion that the lower court did not err in subjecting her interest in the policy to the payment of the judgment, except as to the usury contained therein.

We are further of the opinion that the court did not err in rendering a judgment against T. R. Troendle for 8 per cent. interest, as the preponderance of the evidence shows that the contract with him was made in Missouri, and was understood by him to be performed in Missouri.

The insurance company is not a party to this appeal, nor does appellee take a cross-appeal.

For these reasons the judgment of the lower court is affirmed as to appellant T. R. Troendle, and reversed on behalf of appellant Lily A. Troendle, with directions to subject her interest in the policy to the payment of the judgment, after eliminating all interest contained therein, except 6 per cent.

LUGART v. LEXINGTON TURF CLUB et al.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Nov. 18, 1908.)

1. MECHANICS' LIENS (§ 63*)—RIGHT TO LIEN —WRITTEN CONSENT OF OWNER.

A materialman was not entitled to a lien under Gen. St. 1888, c. 70, art. 1, § 1, giving a lien to materialmen upon real property improved if the material was furnished under contract with, or by the "written" consent of, the owner, where the work was done under a contract with a lessee with the owner's knowledge and verbal consent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mechanics' Liens, Cent. Dig. § 80; Dec. Dig. § 63.*]

2. MECHANICS' LIENS (§ 58*)—RIGHT TO LIEN —AGREEMENT OF OWNER — OWNERSHIP OF LAND — VENDEE UNDER EXECUTORY CONTRACT.

Gen. St. 1888, c. 70, art. 1, § 1, provides that, where the owner of real estate claims by executory contract which for any cause shall be rescinded, a mechanic's lien which in the meantime has attached shall follow the property in the hands of the person to whom it goes by reason of the rescission. The petition alleged that a lessee of a lot owned and held it under a contract to purchase from the owners, but elsewhere averred that it was owned by the lessor "and her children living at her death," and it did not appear that her children were parties to the contract of sale. Held, that it did not appear that the lessee was the owner of the lot under an executory contract, and hence a lien for materials furnished during the term of the lease would not follow the lot on the expiration of the lease.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mechanics' Liens, Cent. Dig. § 72; Dec. Dig. § 58.*]

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

3. LIFE ESTATES (§ 23*)—CONVEYANCES BY LIFE TENANTS—INTEREST CONVEYED.

One owning only a life interest in land with remainder to her children could not convey a valid title to the fee without the children uniting with her in the conveyances, or conveying their interest by separate instruments.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Life Estates, Cent. Dig. § 43; Dec. Dig. § 23.*]

4. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 3*)—SALE DISTINGUISHED FROM LEASE—OPTION TO PURCHASE.

Where an agreement leasing land provided that, if the lessee at any time during the continuance of the lease should desire to purchase the leased premises, it could do so for a certain sum, the contract was a lease, and would vest no title in the lessee, in the absence of the exercise of the option by the lessee.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. § 8; Dec. Dig. § 3.*]

5. HUSBAND AND WIFE (§ 150*)—DISABILITIES OF WIFE—WIFE'S SEPARATE PROPERTY—CONVEYANCES—REQUISITES OF CONVEYANCES.

Gen. St. 1888, c. 52, art. 11, § 2, provides that real estate of a married woman shall be liable for such of her debts contracted after marriage for necessities as shall be evidenced by writing signed by her. The lease of a lot by a married woman who owned a life estate therein provided that any alterations or improvements thereon shall be performed by the lessee, and a petition seeking to establish a lien against the lot for improvements placed thereon alleged that plaintiff performed the work upon the leased premises under a contract with the lessee. Held, that the improvements were made on the lot at the instance of the lessee, and the lessor's interest in the lot was not liable therefor under the statute; the debt as evidenced by the lease not being created for her account.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Cent. Dig. § 575; Dec. Dig. § 150.*]

6. HUSBAND AND WIFE (§ 150*)—DISABILITIES OF WIFE—SEPARATE PROPERTY—LIABILITIES—LIENS.

No equitable liens exist against a married woman's property, and a lien can only be created in the manner provided by statute.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Cent. Dig. § 575; Dec. Dig. § 150.*]

7. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 171*)—REVIEW—THEORY OF CASE BELOW—QUESTIONS NOT RAISED.

Whether a materialman had a remedy for materials furnished under Gen. St. 1888, c. 70, art. 1, § 4, permitting him to remove materials furnished a lessee from the premises, if the lease thereafter fail, and the lessor refuses to pay for them, will not be decided on appeal where he based his claim on other grounds below.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 1053; Dec. Dig. § 171.*]

8. MECHANICS' LIENS (§ 63*)—RIGHT TO LIEN—AGREEMENT—CAPACITY TO CONTRACT—MARRIED WOMAN.

Under Local & Private Laws 1871, p. 4, c. 1073, applicable to Fayette county alone, providing that, if a married woman owning land in the county thereafter contracts for materials for the improvement of a building thereon, the person furnishing the materials, etc., shall have a joint lien upon the land and the buildings thereon, one furnishing materials for the erection of a building on a lot owned by a married woman under a contract with her lessee, and not with her, was not entitled to a lien on the lot.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mechanics' Liens, Cent. Dig. § 80; Dec. Dig. § 63.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Fayette County. "To be officially reported."

Mechanic's lien proceedings by John Luigart against the Lexington Turf Club and another. From a judgment dismissing the petition, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Falconer & Falconer and O. J. Bronston, for appellant. Morton, Webb & Wilson, for appellees.

SETTLE, J. On November 29, 1882, the master commissioner of the Fayette circuit court, acting under and pursuant to an order of that court, conveyed by deed to Mrs. Joanna E. Montague for life, with remainder to such of her children as might be living at her death, a lot of ground in the city of Lexington fronting on Main street 60 feet and extending back the same width to Short street. By a writing of date January 28, 1891, signed by Joanna E. Montague and Thomas J. Montague, her husband, this real estate was leased to the Lexington Turf Club, a corporation, for the term of five years from that date. The Lexington Turf Club at once took possession of the property, and in the year 1892 entered into a contract with John Luigart, a contractor and builder of the city of Lexington, whereby the latter undertook to furnish the necessary materials and erect for it upon the lot a building and other improvements, and this work Luigart did during the year 1892 at a total cost to his employer of $4,200. Of this amount, $2,548 was paid by the latter, leaving a balance due Luigart of $1,652, for which he filed in the office of the clerk of the Fayette county court, within 120 days of the furnishing of the last material and completion of the work, a mechanic's and materialman's lien against the property in question, and on March 31, 1893, brought suit in the Fayette circuit court against the Lexington Turf Club, Joanna E. Montague, her husband and children, seeking a personal judgment against the Lexington Turf Club and the enforcement of his alleged mechanic's lien against the lot in question. Later two amendments were filed to the petition, and to the petition as thus amended a general demurrer was filed by the Montagues, which the lower court on March 16, 1908, sustained, and, no effort being made to further amend the petition, the action was dismissed. From the judgment sustaining the demurrer and dismissing the action, this appeal was taken. Thomas J. Montague, husband of Joanna E. Montague, died after the institution of the action, and, one of the daughters having married, that fact was brought to the attention of the court by the last amended petition, and her husband made a party to the action. No explanation of the delay in disposing of the case appears in the record.

The question presented by the appeal for our consideration is: Did the petition, as amended, state a cause of action? It alleged substantially the following facts: (1) That the materials and work for which appellant sought to enforce the mechanic's lien were furnished and done in erecting a building and otherwise improving the Montague lot under a contract made by him with the Lexington Turf Club. (2) That the lot was the property of Joanna E. Montague and her children living at her death, and had been conveyed them by "deed of November 29, 1882, recorded in Book 67, page 59, Fayette county court clerk's office." (3) That the Lexington Turf Club was in possession of the property under contract to purchase it from Joanna E. Montague, Thomas J. Montague, and their children, and that, "with the knowledge and consent of said owners, the said Lexington Turf Club was permitted to erect said buildings upon said lot, which said lot was delivered to said turf club for the purpose of erecting said buildings upon same." (4) That the Lexington Turf Club took possession of, owned, and held the lot under a written contract made by it with Joanna E. Montague and Thomas J. Montague, which gave the turf club the right to make, at its own cost and expense, such alterations and improvements upon the premises leased as it might desire to make during the continuance of the lease. (5) That the alterations and improvements made upon the lot were at the expiration of the lease to be and remain the property of Joanna E. Montague. (6) That the turf club under its contract with the Montagues had the option to purchase the leased premises at any time during the continuance of the lease upon paying therefor $30,000, and that it did not exercise this option, but, on the contrary, rescinded the lease contract and restored to the owners the possession of the property.

At the time the material was furnished and work done by appellant in improving the lot in question the laws contained in what was known as the "General Statutes" of Kentucky were in force, and, if he has or can enforce a lien upon appellees' lot, it is under article 1, c. 70, Gen. St. 1888, section 1 of which gave a lien to the mechanic or materialman upon the real estate improved where the material was furnished or work was done "by contract with or by the written consent of the owner," but the lien could only be secured "on any interest such owner has in the same." Section 2 of the article and chapter mentioned provides: "If the owner claims by executory contract, and if, for any cause, such contract shall be rescinded or set aside, the lien aforesaid shall follow the property into the hands of the person to whom the same may come, or with whom it may remain by reason of such rescission. * * * Manifestly appellant did not secure a lien by virtue of these sections or either of them. It is not claimed in the petition that he furnished the materials, or did the work by contract with the appellees or by their written consent. On the contrary, the averment is that it was by contract with the Lexington Turf Club, and with the knowledge and consent of appellees. Verbal consent on their part, if given, was not sufficient. Written consent from them was necessary, and, as this was not charged, the language of the petition falls to show that appellant's alleged lien was acquired under section 1 of the statute, supra. It is also wide of the mark to say it was acquired under section 2, for it does not appear from the petition that the Lexington Turf Club claimed to be, or was in fact, the owner of the real estate by "executory contract." It is true the petition alleges that the Turf Club acquired, owned, and held the property "under a contract to purchase same from the owners," but elsewhere in the petition it is averred that it was the property of "Joanna Montague and her children living at her death," and in still another part of the petition it is explained that the Lexington Turf Club "took possession of, owned, and held" the property "under and by virtue of a certain written contract made and entered into by and between the defendants Joanna Montague and Thomas Montague." If this contract could have made the Lexington Turf Club owner of the property by executory contract, it was only to the extent of the life estate of Mrs. Montague, as it is not averred that her children, the remaindermen, were parties to the contract made by her with the Lexington Turf Club, nor do their names appear in or to that contract. The mother and father could not pass a valid title to the property to a purchaser without the children's uniting with them in a writing for that purpose, or conveying by separate instruments. When we look to the contract between the appellee Joanna Montague, her husband, and the Lexington Turf Club, we find it to be a mere lease of the lot therein described for a term of five years. It is true it provides that the Lexington Turf Club might at any time during the existence of the lease purchase the property at the price of $30,000, but this privilege conferred by the contract upon the club was nothing more than an option of which it might or might not avail itself. The option was never exercised, and until exercised no title, not even an equitable one, to the lot, passed to or vested in the company. The language of the contract with respect to this option is: "If the party of the second part, at any time during the continuance of this lease, shall desire to purchase the leased premises, it shall have the right to purchase same upon the payment of the sum of $30,000.00, cash in hand." Obviously the contract was, what its own language declares it to be, only a lease, and so remained as long as the Lexington Turf Club retained possession of the property, and the relation of landlord and tenant

It created was never changed to that of vendor and purchaser, for the lessee never availed itself of the option to purchase. We are aware that this court in the case of Bacon v. Kentucky Central Company, 95 Ky. 373, 25 S. W. 747, held that, where a substantial consideration for a contract conferring an option exists, it will be upheld, but this view of the question in no way changes the legal character of an "option." Until accepted and thereby made a part of the contract, it confers no interest, and creates no liability.

We are constrained to hold that on yet another ground the petition is clearly insufficient to charge appellees' real estate with the cost of the improvements erected thereon by appellant. It is apparent from the petition that the lien claimed by appellant, if any was created at all, would have to be confined to the interest of the appellee Joanna Montague in the property, yet the petition fails to allege either of the two things essential to fasten responsibility upon her or her property, viz., that the alleged debt for which the lien is sought to be enforced was contracted "on account of necessities," that the debt was "evidenced by writing signed by her." The property rights of married women in this state at the time the lease to the Lexington Turf Club was made by appellee Joanna Montague and her husband, and when appellant's claim was created was governed by chapter 52, art. 11, § 2, Gen. St. 1888, which provides: "Such real estate or rent (belonging to a feme covert) * * * shall be liable for her debts and responsibilities * * * contracted after marriage (1) on account of necessities, for herself or any member of her family, her husband included, as (2) shall be evidenced by writing signed by her." It cannot fairly be contended that the provision of the lease contract giving the Lexington Turf Club the privilege of making alterations and improvements upon the leased premises was such a writing as would, under the statute supra, bind Mrs. Montague or her estate; for the provision of the lease contract referred to contains the restriction that "the entire costs and expenses of such alterations and improvements to be borne and paid by the party of the second part." Here we have a writing which, instead of evidencing an intention on the part of the owner of the real estate to burden it or herself with the cost of such improvements as the lessee might make upon the property, expressly declared her intention not to do so. This provision, together with the averment of the petition that appellant undertook the erection of the improvements upon the leased premises under a contract with the Lexington Turf Club, conclusively shows that he gave credit to and expected to be paid by the turf club alone. Construing the statute, supra, in McMahon v. Lewis, 4 Bush, 138, the court said: "Whilst, under our statute a married woman having an estate may bind herself for necessities, it is essential that the credit should originally be given to her, and not alone to the husband; for, if to him alone, she will not then be an original debtor, but a mere security." Gatewood v. Bryan, 7 Bush, 509; Roberts v. Riggs, 84 Ky. 251, 1 S. W. 431. The statutory method of acquiring such a lien as appellant seeks to enforce was not pursued by him, and, this being true, the court below was powerless to afford the relief prayed for, as said by this court in Webster v. Tattershall, 36 S. W. 1126, 18 Ky. Law Rep. 439: "No equitable lien exists against the property of the married woman, and it can only be created in the manner pointed out by statute. The mechanic undertaking the risk must examine the title, and particularly in a case where it is a matter of record in the county where the property improved is situated." Kentucky Building & Loan Company v. Kister, 101 Ky. 321, 41 S. W. 293. The petition, as amended, discloses appellant's knowledge of appellee's title at the time of his undertaking with the Lexington Turf Club to improve the leased premises, for it avers that the deed conveying them the real estate was recorded as far back as the year 1882. According to the petition, appellant then also knew the nature of the lease contract under which the Lexington Turf Club held the property. In view of these facts, it would seem that he has little ground to claim that advantage was taken of him, at any rate we cannot under the circumstances assume that he was ignorant of the situation; but, if he was, it was his own fault, as the means of information were at hand.

If appellant had a remedy against the real estate improved by him, it was that given by section 4, art. 1, c. 70, Gen. St. 1888, which provides: "If the labor be performed or the material furnished by contract with a lessee of real estate for a term of years, and if before the expiration of the term by lapse of time, the lessee's interest therein shall, from any cause, become forfeited to the lessor, or shall be surrendered to him; and if the lessor shall refuse to pay for the same, the person performing the work or furnishing the materials shall have the right to remove the same from the leased premises: Provided, it can be done without material injury to any previous improvement on said leased premises." It is not necessary, however, for us to decide whether appellant could have availed himself of the remedy conferred by the above statute, as he has not invoked it that question is not before us.

It is insisted for appellant that consent in writing from appellee Joanna Montague and her husband to the improving of the real estate by appellant was not essential to his acquiring a mechanic's lien. This contention is rested upon the following statute or special law passed in 1871 (Local & Private Acts 1871, p. 4, c. 1073), and made applicable to Fayette county alone, viz.: "That if a married woman owning land or lots in the county of Fayette, shall hereafter contract alone, or in conjunction with her husband, with any mechanic or other person or persons, to erect any building situated on any such land or lots of such married woman, or to do any repairs upon such land or lots, * * * or if such married woman shall hereafter contract alone, or in conjunction with her husband, or with any person or persons, for lumber or other materials or articles for the building, improvement, or for the purpose of repairing any building or making any improvement upon such lots of land, such person or persons performing labor or furnishing lumber or materials, under the contract as aforesaid, shall have a joint lien upon the land or lots, and the buildings and erections situated thereon to the extent of the value of labor performed and materials and other things furnished by the claimants respectively." It is doubtless true, as claimed by appellant, that this act was in force when he contracted with the Lexington Turf Club to improve appellee's lot and when he completed the work, but we fail to see that it entitled him to the lien attempted to be asserted, for it does not appear from the averments of the petition that the material and work furnished and performed in improving appellee's property were contracted for by the appellee Joanna Montague either alone, or in conjunction with her husband or other person, and this we understand from the language of the act must have been done, even to create a lien upon her interest in the property, which was merely a life estate. In other words, to acquire a materialman's or mechanic's lien under the special act upon the real estate of a feme covert, the materials furnished or work done to improve such real estate must have been furnished or performed pursuant to a contract with her. Moreover, the act did not provide that such contract with the feme covert could be made in any other manner than as prescribed by section 2, art. 11, c. 52, Gen. St. 1888, that is "evidenced by writing signed by her."

Being of opinion that the petition as amended fails to state a cause of action against the appellee Joanna Montague, and that the facts therein averred do not show appellant entitled to a lien upon the real estate sought to be subjected to the payment of his debt, it follows that the circuit court did not err in sustaining the demurrer.

Wherefore the judgment is affirmed.

CHRISTIAN WIDOWS' & ORPHANS' HOME v. HARBER.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Nov. 27, 1908.)

EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 138*)— MANAGEMENT OF ESTATE—SALE OF REALTY—POWER UNDER WILL.

A will devised land to testatrix's two children, with remainder to their respective issue, or in default of issue from either then to the other, and in default of issue altogether then to another. The will also gave testatrix's daughter the use of the land until she became 21 years old, or married in the meantime, in which event the land, if it could not be advantageously divided equally, might be sold and the proceeds reinvested in land for the use of the children. Both children survived testator, married, and had living issue. Held that, it appearing that the land could not be advantageously divided, the executor named in the will could sell it as an entirety at private sale, reinvesting the proceeds in other land, one-half in a tract for each of testatrix's children subject to the same limitations as were contained in the will.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. §§ 560, 561; Dec. Dig. § 138.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Madison County.

"Not to be officially reported."

Action between the Christian Widows' & Orphans' Home and William H. Harber, executor of Nancy Anne Harber. From the judgment, the Christian Widows' & Orphans' Home appeals. Affirmed.

Smith & Smith, for appellant. J. Teris Cobb, for appellees. J. T. Greenleaf, for purchaser.

O'REAR, C. J. Mrs. Nancy Anne Harber's will devises a tract of land of about 212 acres in Madison county to her two children, with remainder to their respective issue, or in default of issue from either then to the other, and in default of issue altogether then to the Christian Widows' & Orphans' Home of Louisville. She named her son as executor. There is this clause in the will: "It is my will that should I die before my daughter, Willie, becomes twenty-one years of age, she shall have the use and benefit of this entire two hundred acres of land until she does become twenty-one years of age, unless, in the meantime, she marries, in which event this land is to be divided equally, or, if it cannot be advantageously divided, it may be sold and the proceeds reinvested in some land for the use and benefit of each of my children during their natural lives."

Willie, the daughter named, survived her mother, is married, and has issue living. The son also has issue living. The circuit court has found that the land cannot be advantageously divided. The executor has contracted to sell the land as an entirety. The purchaser doubted the executor's authority to sell and convey. The circuit court decided that he had the authority under the will, and that he might sell at private sale, reinvesting the proceeds in other land, one-half in a tract for Willie Harber Igo (the daughter of testatrix), and the other half in a tract for Daniel S. Harber (the son of the testatrix), with the same limitations as are contained in Mrs. Harber's will. This we think is correct. The testatrix named her executor for the purpose of having him do what the will provided should be done in reference to changing the estate.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

Judgment affirmed.

COLEMAN et al. v. SIMMS et al.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Nov. 24, 1908.)

DEEDS (§ 211*)—VALIDITY—FRAUD—EVIDENCE.

Evidence held not to show that a deed was obtained through fraud of the grantee and her husband.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Deeds, Cent. Dig. § 645; Dec. Dig. § 211.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Mercer County.
"Not to be officially reported."

Action by Mary Coleman and another against Mary Parker Simms and husband to set aside a deed. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Emmet Puryear, E. M. Hardin, and Greene & Van Winkle, for appellants. E. H. Gaither and J. F. Vanarsdall, for appellees.

CLAY, C. Appellants, Mary Coleman and Add Coleman, are the daughter and divorced husband of Annie J. Coleman, who died in 1899. When appellant Mary Coleman was a child about eight years of age, Add Coleman and his wife, Annie J. Coleman, separated. Thereafter the wife obtained a divorce and went from his house to that of her father, where her sister lived. The remainder of her life was spent with her sister. Five days before her death, Annie J. Coleman conveyed to her sister, Mary Parker, who afterwards married appellee Joshua Simms, all the estate which she then possessed. The consideration set forth in the deed was $1 and love and affection and an agreement on the part of Mary Parker to care for her grantor and furnish her with food, clothing, etc. In case the grantor outlived the grantee, the land was to revert to the former. Appellant Ida May Coleman instituted this action to have the deed set aside and adjudged to be null and void. The petition charges fraud on the part of Mary Parker Simms and her husband, and also alleges that Annie J. Coleman, the mother of appellant, was feeble-minded, was addicted to the use of morphine, had led a dissolute life, was easily influenced, and was wholly incompetent to make the deed. Judgment was rendered in favor of Mary Parker Simms and her husband, and Mary Coleman and her father appeal.

The testimony for appellants is to the effect that the relations between Mary Coleman and her mother, Annie J. Coleman, were always friendly, and that Mary Coleman frequently visited her mother before her death. About a half dozen witnesses testified that Annie J. Coleman, the mother, had never possessed a bright mind and was not considered intelligent; at times she was flighty; and that she did not have the capacity to make a deed. There was also evidence to the effect that the mother was given whisky occasionally; but it is not shown that she was ever intoxicated. Two or three witnesses testified that she looked like a morphine eater. On cross-examination it was developed that the facts upon which the witnesses' conclusions as to the mental infirmity of the mother were based were rather vague and nebulous; and judging these witnesses from the standpoint of their own statements, and the reasons which they gave for their opinions as to Annie J. Coleman's lack of mental capacity, it may be seriously doubted if the witnesses themselves were competent to judge of the matters concerning which they gave their testimony.

The testimony for appellees conduces to show that Annie J. Coleman was a bright, intelligent woman, and had sufficient mind to attend to and conduct her own business. As a matter of fact, she had a better mind than many of the witnesses who testified to her mental infirmity. The strongest testimony for appellees was given by W. J. Poteet, who was then county clerk of Mercer county. After detailing the circumstances of his employment to write the deed, he testified that he explained to Annie J. Coleman fully the effect of the deed which she had written; that he was very particular in his explanation; that Annie J. Coleman sat up in bed and made her mark or signed her name to the paper, he was not positive which; that she talked very freely about the deed; that she said that Mary Parker (Simms) was her sister, and had been very kind to her and attended her in her illness; that she did not know how long she would be sick and in that condition; that she wanted her sister to be rewarded at her death—wanted her to have her property; that he did not observe anything wrong with her mind; that she talked as if she understood fully what she was doing.

It further appears from the evidence that the two sisters, Annie J. Coleman and Mary Parker, had lived together for several years and were devoted to each other; that Mary Parker had been very attentive to her sister during her illness. The property, a half interest in which was conveyed by the deed which was sought to be set aside, was owned by the sisters jointly, and had been inherited by them from their father. The mother only saw her daughter at rare intervals. During the last few months of her life Add Coleman, the father, who, after his divorce from his wife, married again, would bring the daughter occasionally to her mother's house. It is not surprising, therefore, that Annie J. Coleman should have preferred to reward her sister for the care and attention which she had received, rather than the daughter, who visited her only at rare intervals, and who had spent almost her entire life with the father, from whom she (Annie J. Coleman) had been divorced.

We do not think that the deed itself evidences any fraud on the part of appellees. In addition to the consideration of love and affection, it was provided that the grantee should take care of Annie J. Coleman as long as she lived. In case the grantee died before the grantor, the property was to revert to the grantor. The land itself was of small value, and the contract on the part of the grantee to support the grantor as long as the latter lived, although she may have died shortly thereafter, amply protected the rights of the grantor.

While the evidence is conflicting, and appellants have furnished a larger array of witnesses than have the appellees, yet when their testimony is considered in the light of the reasons for their opinions, as given upon cross-examination, we are unable to say that the chancellor erred in his conclusions.

Judgment affirmed.

BATES et al. v. BURT & BRABB LUMBER CO.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Dec. 1, 1908.)

LOGS AND LOGGING (§ 3*)—SALE OF STANDING TIMBER—DUTY OF PURCHASER.

A purchaser of standing timber, who has left the tops and debris of timber felled so as to damage the land, is liable to the owner.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Logs and Logging, Dec. Dig. § 3.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Letcher County.
"To be officially reported."

Action by the Burt & Brabb Lumber Company against Mary J. Bates and others. From the judgment, both parties appeal. Affirmed on cross-appeal, and reversed on original appeal, with directions.

See, also, 86 S. W. 550.

R. O. Brashears, for appellants. James H. Jeffries and D. D. Fields, for appellee.

O'REAR, C. J. This is the second appeal of this case. The merits of the case, as presented by the somewhat imperfect record before us, impress us that appellee, who sues upon a breach of warranty, did not show itself entitled to recover for a greater number of trees than were admitted in appellants' answer. On the other hand, the damage done to appellants' lands unnecessarily by appellee's agents in removing the timber, and the value of the trees taken by them that were not branded, as found by the circuit court, practically offset the value of the trees lost to appellee by the failure of the title to part of the branded timber. In addition, we think appellants should be allowed for the damage done by appellee's leaving the tops and debris of the timber felled by them. The sale of standing timber includes the right to remove it in a judicious manner, but does not include the right to cut it down and leave it, or any part of it, so that it will do damage to the lands of the grantor or owner of the principal estate. On the whole, we think the accounts of the parties are about equal. Limitation on appellants' account is saved by the disability of the female appellant.

Judgment affirmed on the cross-appeal, and reversed on the original appeal, with directions to the lower court to dismiss the petition. Each party will pay their own costs in this court.

BAKER v. KASH.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Nov. 25, 1908.)

1. HOMESTEAD (§ 80*)—EXEMPTION—PROCEEDS OF SALE—REINVESTMENT.

A person who owns a homestead may sell the same and reinvest the proceeds in another homestead, which will be exempt to the same extent from forced sale for debts as would the homestead that was sold.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homestead, Cent. Dig. § 112; Dec. Dig. § 80.*]

2. HOMESTEAD (§ 80*)—EXEMPTION—SALE AND REINVESTMENT—TIME.

A debtor cannot sell his homestead, retain or reinvest the money, and after the expiration of several years buy other land and assert a homestead in it as against debts created before the later purchase.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homestead, Dec. Dig. § 80.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Clay County.

"Not to be officially reported."

Action by S. H. Kash against Anderson C. Baker. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

A. B. Hampton and A. W. Baker, for appellant. W. W. Rawlings, for appellee.

CARROLL, J. The appellee, S. H. Kash, having recovered a judgment in the Clay circuit court against the appellant, Anderson C. Baker, brought this action upon a return of "No property found" and sought to subject to the satisfaction of the judgment a tract of land owned by appellant, who resisted a sale of the land upon the ground that he was entitled to it as a homestead.

In 1897 the appellant sold his old homestead in Perry county, Ky., for $1,000 in cash. The debt of Kash upon which the judgment was obtained was created in 1888. The land sought to be subjected in this action was purchased by appellant in 1904 for $385. It will be observed that the land was purchased subsequent to the creation of the debt, but appellant's contention is that he purchased and paid for the land now claimed as a homestead with a portion of the proceeds received from the sale of his homestead in 1897. We gather from the record, and chiefly from the testimony of appellant, that in March, 1897, he sold the homestead he then owned and a few articles of personal property to A. L. Howard for $1,000 in cash. Five hundred dollars of this money he handed to his brother, Gardner Baker, to keep for him. With the other $500, or a large part of it, he established himself in the saloon business in Manchester, Clay county, remaining there in that business for several months. During the time that he lived in Manchester, he and his wife were divorced, and their children were placed by him in the custody of his wife's mother, who lived at Barbourville, Ky. After leaving Manchester in the winter of 1897-98, he enlisted in the army and remained in the service about 10 months. When he was discharged, he went to Indiana, and soon afterwards married in that state. After his marriage, he and his wife traveled extensively, living in probably a dozen different states. His wife died about 1901, and after her death he continued his travels, going to various places in different states. During his travels, he sometimes boarded, and at other times kept house, and occasionally worked. Finally he returned to Kentucky in 1904, after being absent from the state some 7 years, and says that upon his return he went to see his brother, Gardner Baker, who gave him the identical money that he had left in his possession in 1897, and with a part of this money he purchased the homestead sought to be subjected, and was living on it with his third wife when this action was instituted.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

The law is very well settled that a person who owns a homestead may sell the same and reinvest the proceeds in another homestead, and the homestead thus purchased will be exempt to the same extent from coercive sale for the payment of debts as would the homestead that was sold; the purchase of the new homestead being regarded as merely the continuance of the original homestead right, and not the acquiring of a new homestead. Lee & Hester v. Hughes, 77 S. W. 386, 25 Ky. Law Rep. 1201; Green & Son v. Pennington, 123 Ky. 837, 97 S. W. 766; Collins v. Collins, 99 S. W. 653, 30 Ky. Law Rep. 816. But, under the application of this rule, it is necessary that the debtor, to preserve his right to a homestead in the new tract of land, should purchase and occupy it as a homestead within a reasonable time after selling his first homestead. A debtor cannot sell his homestead, put the money in his pocket, or otherwise invest it, and after the expiration of several years, or an unreasonable length of time, buy other land and assert a homestead in it as against debts created before its purchase. The establishment of a rule like this would be a perversion of the beneficial purposes of the homestead statute and enable persons not entitled to its protection to avail themselves of its provisions. Fitch v. Duckwall, 78 S.

W. 185, 25 Ky. Law Rep. 1535; Caldwell v. Selvers, 85 Ky. 38, 2 S. W. 651.

We are of opinion that appellant is not entitled to a homestead in the land sought to be subjected, and the judgment of the lower court is affirmed.

McALLISTER'S ADM'R v. BRONAUGH.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Nov. 27, 1908.)

1. WILLS (§ 68*)—CONTRACTS TO MAKE—ACTIONS FOR BREACH—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

Evidence in an action for breach of contract to make a will, devising to plaintiff's wife one-half of decedent's estate in consideration of furnishing decedent board, lodging, and fuel and giving her the attention required, examined, and held to establish the contract sued upon.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Dec. Dig. § 63.*]

2. WILLS (§ 58*)—CONTRACTS TO MAKE—VALIDITY.

A contract to make a will, devising to the other party's wife one-half of decedent's estate in consideration of his furnishing her board, lodging, and fuel, and giving her the attention required, was valid, and a recovery may be had for a breach as in other cases of a violation of a contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. § 164; Dec. Dig. § 58.*]

3. WILLS (§ 68*)—CONTRACTS TO MAKE—ACTIONS FOR BREACH—INSTRUCTIONS.

An instruction, in an action for breach of a contract to devise to plaintiff's wife one-half of decedent's estate in consideration of his furnishing her support and the attention required, that if decedent agreed with plaintiff that, if he would furnish her support and such attention as she required, she would pay him $10 a month, and at her death would devise to plaintiff's wife one-half of her estate, and, if plaintiff rendered such service and it was reasonably worth more than $10 a month, then to find for plaintiff such sum as the services were worth over $10 a month, and unless the jury so believed to find for defendant, fairly presented the only issue in the action.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Dec. Dig. § 63.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Lincoln County.
"Not to be officially reported."

Action by R. H. Bronaugh against the administrator of the estate of Catherine McAllister, deceased, for breach of a contract to make a will devising to plaintiff's wife one-half of decedent's estate. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

F. F. Bobbitt and G. D. Florence, for appellant. M. C. Saufey, for appellee.

CARROLL, J. Catherine McAllister, a very old lady, who had an estate valued at about $2,000 and no children, entered into a contract with appellee R. H. Bronaugh in September, 1901, by which it was agreed that Bronaugh should furnish her board, lodging, fuel, and the attention a person of her age required, and in consideration thereof she was to pay him $10 per month, and make her will devising to his wife, who was her niece, all of her estate. Some time afterwards this contract was modified to the extent that Mrs. McAllister was only to devise to Bronaugh's wife one-half of her estate. There was no relationship except by marriage between Mrs. McAllister and Bronaugh. She continued to live with him from the time this contract was made until her death in 1904, and during this period paid him $10 a month, but died without leaving a will. This action was brought by Bronaugh against her administrator to recover damages for the breach of decedent's contract in failing to make a will devising to his wife one-half of her estate. He alleged that the damages he sustained were equal to the value of the services rendered her from September 4, 1901, to August 21, 1904, independent of the sum of $10 a month for board and lodging, and that the value of such service was reasonably worth the sum of $15 a month, amounting in the aggregate to $501.50. Other appropriate pleadings completed the issues; and upon a trial before a jury appellee recovered the full amount sued for, less two admitted credits.

No complaint is made about the contract for $10 per month, but it is insisted for appellant that there was not sufficient evidence of the contract to devise to authorize a submission of the case to the jury or to warrant a recovery. Upon this point, Mrs. Mary E. Bronaugh testified, in substance, that she was well acquainted with Mrs. McAllister, who told her some time after she commenced to live with Bronaugh that she had agreed to pay $10 per month board, and that she intended to make her will and devise to Vina Bronaugh, the wife of R. H. Bronaugh, one-half of her estate; that Mrs. McAllister at another time said to her that she had told R. H. Bronaugh that she would make this devise, that she knew the $10 per month was not enough, but that it was enough to buy coal and furnish her incidental attention. On another occasion she said that R. H. Bronaugh had agreed to board, lodge, furnish fuel, and give her incidental attention for the low sum of $10 per month on her promise to him that she would will all of her estate to his wife. And at still another time she said that it was agreed between herself and Bronaugh that she might give half of her estate to her niece Katie Scott. The testimony of this witness is not contradicted, and we think it clearly establishes the contract sued upon. A contract of this character is valid and enforceable, and, if it is broken, a recovery may be had for the breach as in other cases for violations of contracts. Myles v. Myles, 6 Bush, 237; McGuire v. McGuire, 11 Bush, 142; Thomas v. Feese, 51 S. W. 150, 21 Ky. Law Rep. 207. There is also evidence that Mrs. McAllister was in delicate health, and suffered from an ailment that required unusual attention, and that Bronaugh and his family faithfully performed their part of the contract. Upon the question of the physical condition of Mrs. McAllister, and the amount of care and attention she required, there is sharp conflict; but this issue is really not material, as the case turns upon the question whether or not the contract sued upon was made.

The court instructed the jury as follows: "If you believe from the evidence in this case that Catherine McAllister made an agreement with plaintiff, R. H. Bronaugh, that, if plaintiff would furnish her with board, lodging, fuel, and such incidental attention as was necessary for the comfort of a person of her age and condition, she would pay him $10 per month, and at her death she would devise to plaintiff's wife one-half of her estate, and that plaintiff rendered or caused to be rendered through his family such service, and that it was reasonably worth more than $10 per month, then you will find for the plaintiff such sum as you may believe from the evidence the service was worth over and above $10 per month, not exceeding $501.50, the amount claimed. Unless you so believe, you will find for the defendant." This instruction fairly presented to the jury the only issue in the case.

The petition stated a cause of action, the evidence supported it, and, the jury under appropriate instructions having returned a verdict in favor of plaintiff, the judgment of the lower court awarding to him the amount claimed is affirmed.

COLE'S ADM'R v. CHESAPEAKE & O. RY. CO. et al.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Nov. 25, 1908.)

1. CARRIERS (§ 282*)—INJURIES—PERSON ACCOMPANYING PASSENGERS.

A carrier is not liable for the death of one who falls from a moving train after accompanying a passenger into the car, in the absence of evidence that its servants had either actual or constructive notice that deceased intended to leave the train and did not intend to take passage thereon.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 1111, 1112; Dec. Dig. § 282.*]

2. CARRIERS (§ 318*)—PERSONS ACCOMPANYING PASSENGERS—INJURIES.

In an action for the death of plaintiff's intestate, who was killed while alighting from a moving train after entering a car with a passenger, evidence held insufficient to show that defendant's servants had actual or constructive notice that the deceased intended to get off the train before it started.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. § 1307; Dec. Dig. § 318.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Greenup County.
"Not to be officially reported."

Action by A. B. Cole's administrator against the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

W. T. Cole and Allan D. Cole, for appellant. W. D. Cochran and Le Wright Brown, for appellees.

CARROLL, J. In this case, upon the conclusion of the evidence for the appellant, who was plaintiff below, the court instructed the jury to return a verdict for appellee, so that the only question we are called upon to consider is the correctness of this ruling. The facts, about which there is no substantial dispute, are as follows: On the evening of January 10, 1907, the deceased, A. B. Cole, his daughter, Mrs. Chestnut, and his nephew, A. D. Cole, went to the Market Street Station of the appellee company in Maysville, Ky., at which place Mrs. Chestnut intended to take an east-bound accommodation train on her way home. When the train arrived, it was sometime after dark; and the brakeman, with a lantern in his hand, got off of the train and stood near the steps of the car into which Mrs. Chestnut desired to go. Her baggage consisted of a heavy suit case, and a large basket containing flowers and other articles. The brakeman did not offer to assist in putting her baggage on the train, nor does it appear that he was requested so to do. In fact, no conversation took place between the brakeman and the parties named. The decedent, who did not intend to take passage on the train, took his daughter's basket in the car. Mrs. Chestnut immediately followed, and when she reached the platform of the car A. D. Cole lifted her suit case and placed it beside her on the platform. The deceased entered the open car door, and walked about two-thirds of the length of the car, placing the basket in or beside a vacant seat, and then turned around and walked towards the door for the purpose of getting off of the train. On his way to the door he passed his daughter, who at that time had gone inside of the car, but did not stop as he passed her. When he reached the door, it was closed. The brakeman who followed Mrs. Chestnut up the steps of the car closed it after she walked in, and then went into the front car. About the time Mrs. Chestnut got inside the car, the train started; and when the decedent opened the door and walked out on the platform and down the steps, for the purpose of getting off, the train had increased somewhat in its speed, and when he stepped or fell off it had run 226 feet from the point at which it started. He fell or was violently thrown to the ground, and, from the injuries and shock received, died within a few days thereafter.

There was no evidence that any of the trainmen had actual notice that the deceased went into the car only for the purpose of assisting his daughter with her baggage, or that he did not intend to take passage on the train; nor was there any evidence that any of them had actual notice that he intended to get off of the moving train. It is contended, however, that the facts heretofore related, together with some circumstances that will be noticed, were sufficient to put the persons in charge of the train upon notice that the deceased did not intend to take passage, but only went into the train for the purpose of assisting his daughter, and that he intended to get off as soon as he could get out of the car. From this it is argued that the persons in charge of the train had constructive notice of his purpose, and were guilty of negligence in not affording him a reasonable time to leave the train before starting it, and that this character of notice was sufficient to authorize a submission of the case to the jury. It is argued by counsel for appellant that constructive notice may be inferred from the following circumstances that we give in the language of counsel: 'First. There is the fact and circumstance that, after the passengers in the rear coach had alighted, the brakeman who was standing by the coach steps was confronted by a party of three—a woman and two men; that he must have known, and certainly ought to have known, that she could not, unassisted, have ascended the steps and platform and at the same time have carried the baggage. When the brakeman thus forced her father to assist her, and when he indicated that he would do so, and ascended the steps ahead of her, the brakeman must have known that a man who was getting on the cars as a passenger would not likely be carrying a basket of plants and flowers, especially at that season of the year, but that they belonged to a woman, and that he would return again as soon as he took them to a seat. Second. The brakeman must have known from the fact that with A. D. Cole using both hands lifting Mrs. Chestnut's heavy suit case from the ground to the car platform where she was standing, that she needed assistance, and from her remarks in the brakeman's presence about her visit that she was also being assisted by the other member of the party who preceded her. Third. As the brakeman ascended the steps, he could see through the car window the deceased coming towards the door, and when he reached the door and closed it he must have known, when the deceased hastily passed her and thus approached the door, that he was endeavoring to get off the train, and he should then either not have closed the door or have pulled the bell rope and stopped the train. Fourth. But for the closed door, deceased could easily have reached the bottom step and alighted before the engine gave a sudden jerk upon the viaduct.'

The difficulty with these circumstances is that there is no evidence upon which to base them. There is no evidence that the brakeman had any notice whatever of the relationship between the parties, or that he had any acquaintance with any of them, or that he saw the deceased through the car window coming towards the door, or that he had any cause to suspect that deceased intended to get off, or that he had any notice from any source or in any manner that deceased was not a passenger, or that he went into the car merely for the purpose of assisting his daughter. In truth, the circumstances re-

Held upon by counsel to bring home to the brakeman constructive notice are mere surmises, that may or may not be so. We think that in cases like these the trainmen must have actual, or at least sufficient constructive, notice to put a person of ordinary understanding upon notice that a person who enters the car to assist a passenger intends to get off before the train starts. The character of constructive notice that would bind the company we do not deem it necessary to discuss in this case, because there are no facts or circumstances disclosed by this record upon which we could base an argument along this line.

Wherefore the judgment is affirmed.

NEW ENGLAND MUT. LIFE INS. CO.
v. SPRINGGATE.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky, Dec. 2, 1908.)

INSURANCE (§ 392*)—LIFE INSURANCE—FORFEITURE—RECOVERY OF PREMIUM.

Where a life policy provides that it shall be void if any premium note is not paid when due, insured, after the maturity of a premium, demanding payment thereof, is estopped to insist on a forfeiture of the policy.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. §§ 1056-1070; Dec. Dig. § 392.*]

"To be officially reported."

On petition for rehearing. Overruled.

For former opinion, see 112 S. W. 681.

HOBSON, J. The general agent for the state represented the insurance company. His act in demanding the premium was the act of the company. It could not on one hand demand the premium and on the other insist on the forfeiture. Estoppels arise by operation of law. The acts of the insurance company here estop it from insisting on the forfeiture.

Petition overruled.

LAWRENCE COUNTY v. LAWRENCE FISCAL COURT.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky, Nov. 24, 1908.)

1. COUNTIES (§ 150*)—PUBLIC DEBT—LIMITATION ON AMOUNT OF INDEBTEDNESS.

Under Const. § 157, prohibiting a county from becoming indebted in any year in an amount exceeding its income provided for that year, it is not necessary that the county has made provision for the payment of an indebtedness, but only that it shall be able to pay its indebtedness out of its ordinary resources for that year which are reasonably solvent and may be fairly relied on as equivalent to cash.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Counties, Cent. Dig. §§ 215-217; Dec. Dig. § 150.*]

2. COUNTIES (§ 207*)—PUBLIC DEBT—LIABILITY.

The fact that a county lost the money collected for paying its indebtedness for a certain year before paying the debts would not affect its liability for such debts, but it would remain bound until they were discharged.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Counties, Cent. Dig. § 335; Dec. Dig. § 207.*]

3. COUNTIES (§ 150*)—PUBLIC DEBT—LIMITATION ON AMOUNT OF INDEBTEDNESS.

A tax for county purposes of 50 cents on the $100 was levied for each of the years 1903 and 1904, but the sheriff defaulted as to a part of the taxes collected, so that some claims against the county for those years were not paid out of the current income. In 1906, just after recovery from the sureties of the defaulting sheriff, the fiscal court levied a tax of 50 cents on the $100 for 1907, and also ordered certain claims allowed in 1903 and 1904, to be paid out of the sum received from the surety until exhausted and the balance thereof out of the 1907 levy. To this order the county attorney objected on the ground that such balance exceeded the income for that year, in violation of Const. § 157, limiting the taxes levied in any year to 50 cents on the $100, and prohibiting any county from becoming indebted in any year in an amount exceeding the income provided for that year. Held, that the amount collected on the sheriff's bond was the legal equivalent of the defaulted taxes for the years 1903 and 1904, and could be applied to the unpaid claims for those years, and that the payment of the balance of such claims out of the 1907 levy, rendering the county unable to pay all of the claims allowed for that year out of the current levy, did not affect the constitutionality of the claims payable out of that levy; the liabilities incurred in any of the years not exceeding the constitutional inhibition.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Counties, Cent. Dig. §§ 215-217; Dec. Dig. § 150.*]

4. COUNTIES (§ 160*)—PUBLIC DEBT—LIMITATION ON USE OF FUNDS.

Const. § 180, requiring every resolution levying a county tax to specify the purpose for which it is levied and prohibiting its appropriation to any other purpose, does not limit the revenues of a year to the payment of liabilities incurred during that year, but only requires that revenues levied for a particular purpose, as for road purposes, be used for that purpose, either in the year levied or some other year.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Counties, Cent. Dig. § 219; Dec. Dig. § 160.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Lawrence County.

"To be officially reported."

Suit by Lawrence County against the Lawrence Fiscal Court to have an order of the court directing the payment of claims out of certain funds set aside. From a judgment for defendant on demurrer to the petition, plaintiff appealed. Affirmed.

G. W. Skaggs and W. M. Savage, for appellant.

O'REAR, C. J. The fiscal court of Lawrence county levied taxes for county purposes for the year of 1903 as follows: 20 cents on each $100, as a common fund, which we understand to be the ordinary expenses of the county, such as salaries to officers, and other items of fixed liability, which may include care of the poor; 20 cents on the $100 as a road and bridge fund; 10 cents on the $100 as a sinking fund; also a poll tax of $1.50, to be used as a part of the common fund. For the year of 1904 there was levied 50 cents on the $100 apportioned as follows: 25 cents as the "common fund," and 25 cents as a road and bridge fund, $1.50 poll tax was also levied, to form part of the common fund. Claims against the county payable out of these respective funds for each of the years were allowed. The sheriff of the county, who was also the collector of the county taxes, defaulted. As a result of the litigation with his surety, the county realized in 1906 the sum of about $9,000. It is alleged that the claims allowed against the levies of 1903 and 1904 exceeded $10,000, much of which had been sued on and reduced to judgments against the county. The fiscal court met in 1906 to lay the levy for the year of 1907. The money had just been collected from the surety of the sheriff for the years of 1903 and 1904. The court entered the following order: "The fiscal court met pursuant to adjournment and proceeded to allow the following claims which are payable out of the $9,058.80 paid by the Aetna Indemnity Company until said sum is exhausted, then balance is to be paid out levy of 1907. The county attorney objected to the above order." The list of claims is not copied into the record. At the October term, 1906, of the fiscal court, an order was made laying the county levy for 1907 as follows: 50 cents on the $100, divided, namely, 25 cents for road and bridge purposes, 15 cents for the common fund, 10 cents for courthouse fund, also $1.50 poll tax, to constitute part of the common fund. This suit was brought in the name of Lawrence county by the county attorney against the fiscal court and its members, seeking to have the order made to pay the old debts out of the $9,058 so far as it would go, and then the balance out of the 1907 levy set aside and adjudged void, on the ground that it exceeded the income of the county for that year, and was therefore in violation of section 157 of the Constitution. Section 157 of the Constitution limits the tax which may be levied in any one year at 50 cents on the $100, unless it should be necessary to enable the county to pay an indebtedness contracted prior to the present Constitution. It also provides that no county shall become indebted in any manner, in any year, to an amount exceeding in any year the income and revenue provided for such year without the consent of two-thirds of the voters.

Even if it should be conceded that the claims alluded to in the order of the October term of 1906 of the fiscal court which is the subject of this suit were those allowed in 1903 or 1904, it would not follow that the order is void. It is not charged, nor is it pretended, that the claims allowed in 1903 or 1904 were in excess of the income or revenues provided for either of those years. It is not necessary to the validity of a municipal indebtedness that the municipality shall have made provision for its payment. The inhibition is against creating an indebtedness in any year that the municipality is unable to pay out of its resources for that year. If the liabilities incurred, say in 1903, did not exceed the income and revenues provided by law—that is, the maximum which under the law the county was authorized to levy in taxes—plus any available funds it had on hands, then nothing subsequently occurring could render the liability void as being in contravention of section 157, supra. If the county had collected the taxes levied for the purpose of paying its liabilities incurred in 1903, but had in some way lost the money before it paid its debts, that fact could not affect its liabilities. It would remain bound until payment, or otherwise legally discharged. So, when the county lost the taxes levied for 1903, as it evidently did, but subsequently recovered some $9,000 of them, it was proper to say the least of it that the $9,000 should be applied to the payment of such part of the indebtedness for 1903 as remained unpaid and most pressing, and, as the remainder of the indebtedness was as truly a county liability as that contracted in 1906 payable out of 1907 levy, to order their payment out of that levy. Nor were the current claims allowed in 1906, payable out of 1907 levy, affected as to their constitutional validity by the fact that, owing to an unexpected happening subsequent to their creation, the county would not be able to pay in full as they fell due; that is, out of the current levy. The income and revenues of a year include resources of the municipality which are reasonably solvent, and which in ordinary events may be fairly relied on as equivalent to cash. So, as against the outstanding indebtedness of 1903 and 1904, the county and its creditors had the right to assume that the sheriff's bond, so far as that officer had collected or was liable for the taxes for those years, was a legal equivalent on the county ledger. In that view nothing appears here to indicate that Lawrence county had for any of the years named exceeded the income and revenues of such years.

Appellant also contends that section 180 of the Constitution is violated by the order of the fiscal court which is under investigation, in this: that the provision of section 180 requiring every resolution levying a tax to specify the purpose for which it is levied, and prohibiting its appropriation to any other purpose, means that the levy of 1907 is to pay eo nomine the debts contracted in 1903 payable out of the levy of 1907, and that those revenues cannot be appropriated for any other year. But the Constitution does not confine the revenues of a year to the payment of the liabilities incurred during that year. What section 180 means is revenue raised for road purposes, for example, cannot be applied to educational purposes; and that a tax levied to build a courthouse cannot be used to repair a bridge, unless as in the case of Field v. Stroube, 103 Ky. 114, 44 S. W. 363. But a fund legally raised in 1906 for bridge purposes may be appropriated by the fiscal court for bridge purposes whenever contracted. The discretion of the fiscal court over such details is left to the good business sense and right judgment of that body. We are of the opinion that the Circuit court properly sustained the demurrer to the petition.

Judgment affirmed.

DAVIS v. GOTT et al.

CRUMP v. DAVIS et al.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Nov. 18, 1908.)

1. SHERIFFS AND CONSTABLES (§ 97*)—DUTIES—DUTY AS TO LEVY OF EXECUTION.

Under Ky. St. 1903, § 1713, providing that it shall be no defense in an action against a collecting officer that plaintiff directed him to stay proceedings unless plaintiff consented to, or required, the stay in writing, only a written consent will excuse the officer's failure to execute a writ, and he must proceed unless directed in writing to stay the execution.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sheriffs and Constables, Cent. Dig. § 140; Dec. Dig. § 97.*]

2. EXECUTION (§ 461*)—WRONGFUL EXECUTION—PERSONS ENTITLED TO DAMAGES—EXECUTION DEFENDANT AND MORTGAGEE.

Under Ky. St. 1903, § 1709, providing that, when mortgaged property is sold under execution, defendant's interest must be levied on subject to the incumbrance, and by subsection 4, the purchaser must give a bond payable to the incumbrancer and the owner to preserve the property to answer the incumbrance, and deliver the bond to the officer before possession is delivered to him, where a sheriff did not make his levy on corn subject to a mortgage thereon, nor take a bond from the purchaser as required, he is liable to the execution defendant, and to the mortgagee for any damage sustained by his failure to comply with the statute.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Execution, Dec. Dig. § 461.*]

3. EXECUTION (§ 469*)—WRONGFUL EXECUTION—ACTIONS—PARTIES DEFENDANT—PURCHASER.

In actions by the execution defendant and the mortgagee of the property for wrongful execution by levying on mortgaged property after satisfaction of the judgment and without taking a bond to protect the incumbrancer, the purchaser at execution sale should be made a party defendant so as to settle the entire controversy in one suit.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Execution, Dec. Dig. § 469.*]

4. EXECUTION (§ 472*)—WRONGFUL EXECUTION—DAMAGES.

Where a purchaser on execution sale of mortgaged property took possession of the entire property without giving bond to protect the mortgagee's interest, he would be liable for its fair value at the time of the conversion, less the amount of his bid.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Execution, Cent. Dig. §§ 1403, 1404; Dec. Dig. § 472.*]

5. JUDGMENT (§ 874*)—SATISFACTION—PERSONS TO WHOM PAYMENT MAY BE MADE—PLAINTIFF'S ATTORNEY.

Where the judgment creditor referred the debtor to her attorney to settle with him, and the attorney agreed to stop execution and the debtor deposited the amount of the judgment in his name, the deposit in bank of the amount of the judgment and the acceptance thereof by the attorney was a satisfaction thereof.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. § 1643; Dec. Dig. § 874.*]

6. EXECUTION (§ 120*)—SATISFACTION—SATISFACTION OF JUDGMENT.

Since writs of execution exist only to enforce judgments, where a judgment is satisfied, the execution issued thereon will also be treated as satisfied.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Execution, Dec. Dig. § 120.*]

7. JUDGMENT (§ 874*)—SATISFACTION—PERSONS TO WHOM PAYMENTS MAY BE MADE.

Payment to satisfy a judgment may be made to plaintiff, or one of several plaintiffs, or to the levying officer, or to plaintiff's attorney, except where defendant knows the attorney has no authority to receive it or to a next friend or to his attorney.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. § 1643; Dec. Dig. § 874.*]

8. SHERIFFS AND CONSTABLES (§ 98*)—LIABILITY—EXECUTION AS PROTECTION FROM LIABILITY.

Where a judgment is not satisfied when execution issues, the writ, being fair on its face, protects the officer in case the judgment is afterwards satisfied.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sheriffs and Constables, Cent. Dig. § 146; Dec. Dig. § 98.*]

9. EXECUTION (§ 455*)—WRONGFUL EXECUTION—PERSON LIABLE—JUDGMENT CREDITOR.

When a judgment is satisfied, plaintiff must stay execution as required by law, and will be liable to the execution defendant if he allows the sheriff to proceed, so that, where plaintiff permitted the sheriff to levy execution after the amount of the judgment had been paid to her attorneys, she was liable to the execution defendant for the proceeds of the execution sale which were paid to her attorneys, with interest thereon from the time it was paid.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Execution, Cent. Dig. § 1382; Dec. Dig. § 455.*]

10. PAYMENT (§ 82*)—SATISFACTION—PAYMENT—OVERPAYMENT.

Where the amount paid in satisfaction of a judgment was in excess of the amount of the judgment, the excess should be returned to the judgment debtor, with interest.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Payment, Dec. Dig. § 82.*]

11. SHERIFFS AND CONSTABLES (§ 52*)—COMPENSATION—LEVY OF EXECUTION.

Where a judgment was satisfied by payment of the money to plaintiff's attorney after execution had issued and had been levied by the sheriff, he was entitled to the same commissions as he would be if the money had been paid to him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sheriffs and Constables, Cent. Dig. § 48; Dec. Dig. § 52.*]

12. EXECUTION (§ 120*)—SALE—VALIDITY.

Where a judgment had not been satisfied when execution issued and the execution was not stayed when the judgment was satisfied as required by statute, and the officer did not take a bond from the purchaser to protect the mortgagee of the property sold, the sale was voidable and not void.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Execution, Cent. Dig. § 275; Dec. Dig. § 120.*]

13. EXECUTION (§ 286*)—SALE—RIGHTS OF PURCHASER ON AVOIDANCE.

Where a judgment was not satisfied when execution issued and was not stayed upon being satisfied, and the sheriff did not take a bond from the purchaser to protect a mortgagee so that the sale was merely voidable, the purchaser er should be allowed the money paid by him in discharge of the sale bond.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Execution, Cent. Dig. §§ 820, 821; Dec. Dig. § 286.*]

14. EXECUTION (§ 462*)—WRONGFUL EXECUTION—PERSONS LIABLE.

Where corn was sold under execution after plaintiff's judgment was satisfied, and the sheriff did not take a bond from the purchaser to protect a mortgagee thereof as between the execution defendant or his mortgagees on one side and the purchaser, the sheriff, and the execution plaintiff on the other, the latter are all liable to the former for the value of the corn, but, as between themselves, the execution plaintiff is primarily liable for the money paid by the purchaser to the sheriff, and by him to her attorney, with interest thereon, and for the balance of the value of the corn the purchaser is primarily liable, then the sheriff, and, lastly, the execution plaintiff.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Execution, Dec. Dig. § 462.*]

15. EXECUTION (§ 472*)—WRONGFUL EXECUTION—ACTIONS—DAMAGES.

The measure of damages would be the value of the corn at the time it was taken, less what it brought at the sale.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Execution, Cent. Dig. §§ 1403, 1404; Dec. Dig. § 472.*]

16. EXECUTION (§ 462*)—WRONGFUL EXECUTION—PERSONS LIABLE.

If the purchaser of property which was wrongfully sold under execution caused any damages to the execution defendant in removing the property, he alone would be liable therefor, and not the sheriff or execution plaintiff.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Execution, Dec. Dig. § 462.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Butler County.
"To be officially reported."

Actions by S. A. Davis against M. A. Gott and others and by Robert Crump against S. A. Davis and others for wrongful levy of execution. From judgments dismissing the petitions, plaintiffs appealed. Judgments reversed and remanded for further proceedings.

D. W. Wright and W. A. Helm, for appellants. Gore & Bunch, for appellee M. A. Gott. N. S. Howard, for appellee Holman.

HOBSON, J. S. A. Davis rented of Mrs. M. A. Gott her farm in Butler county for the year 1906, agreeing to pay her therefor as rent $600, for which he executed to her a note due December 15, 1906. He raised on the farm a large crop of corn, which he sold before it was gathered to Robert Crump, who advanced him on the purchase $654.30. After this had been done, a large part of the corn was washed away or injured by a flood, and the trade with Crump was rescinded by mutual consent, Davis executing to Crump his note for $654.30 on December 13, 1906, and a mortgage on 500 barrels of corn, which was then in the crib; it being agreed between Davis and Crump that he would sell Crump enough of the corn which he had at 40 cents a bushel to pay the debt. Mrs. Gott's rent note not having been paid, she on January 8, 1907, brought suit against him on the note in the Butler circuit court, and took out an attachment which was levied on the corn. On January 15th Davis paid her $400 on the note, and on February 7th judgment was entered by default in her favor against Davis for the balance of the debt and cost. The attachment was sustained, and the sheriff of Butler county was ordered to sell the property attached, or enough of it to pay the debt and the cost, and he was allowed in the judgment $7.50 for his services in making the sale. No sale was made of the attached property under the judgment, but on March 4th an execution was issued on the judgment which was placed in the hands of the sheriff and levied by him on the corn, which was advertised for sale under the execution on March 16th. On March 15th Davis deposited to the credit of Mrs. Gott's attorneys in the Citizens' National Bank at Bowling Green $242.20, which was the amount due upon the execution as figured by the sheriff. The plaintiff's attorneys were Gore and Bunch. He thereupon called them up over the telephone. Mr. Gore was out, and Mr. Bunch answered the phone. Davis told him that he had deposited the money in the bank to the credit of Mr. Gore, and asked him to stop the sale of the corn. He said: "All right, Mr. Davis, I will do it. I will stop the sale." He immediately went over to the sheriff's office and told him what had occurred, and that he had better stop the sale. The sheriff's statement as to what occurred is as follows: "Mr. Bunch came up to the courthouse, and told me that Mr. Davis said he had deposited the money in some bank in Bowling Green and to stop the sale. That was about 4 o'clock in the afternoon, and the water was up so I could not get over there." The execution was in the hands of a deputy, who was not informed by the sheriff of what had occurred. He went on the next day and made a sale of enough of the corn to pay the debt; R. S. Dunn being the purchaser of 900 bushels of corn at 26 cents a bushel. This was the same corn that Davis had agreed to sell to Crump in December at 40 cents a bushel, and it was then worth in the market 50 cents a bushel. Davis was not present, and did not know of the sale. The Bowling Green bank sent the money which had been deposited there to the bank in Morgantown with which Mr. Gore did business, and it was deposited there to his credit. When Mr. Gore learned what had occurred, he wrote R. S. Dunn the following letter: "Dear Sir: Mr. Davis put the money in the bank for me at Bowling Green Mch. 15, and called me over the phone. I was away and received the notice this morning. Also learned from Cardwell that he had sold the corn to you. This places everything in a bad shape, and, if you will release your sale, everything will be all right. I hope you will do this. Yours, N. W. Gore. 3/10, '07." Dunn declined to give up his bargain. The sheriff collected the sale bonds, and paid the money over to the plaintiff's attorneys. It is said in the briefs that Mr. Gore tendered back to Davis the money which he had deposited in the bank, but this fact is not shown by the record. It appears from the record of the telephone company that the message sent over the telephone was sent at 1:50 p. m. on the 15th, and that there was a telephone connection from Morgantown; where the sheriff was, to the neighborhood where the corn was to be sold. Davis brought suit against Mrs. Gott and the sheriff, charging that, after the execution had been satisfied, the sheriff wrongfully went on and made the sale, to his damage in the sum of $572. Robert Crump also brought a suit in equity against Davis and Mrs. Gott to enforce his mortgage, and to recover for the corn which had been sold and taken away after the execution had been satisfied; his mortgage being of record at the time. The issues were made up upon the pleadings, and, the facts as we have stated them being shown, the circuit court dismissed both petitions, and the plaintiffs appeal.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

It is insisted for the sheriff that he is not liable because no written order was given him to stay proceedings on the execution as provided in section 1713, Ky. St. 1903. "It shall be no defense to an action or motion against a collecting officer for failure of duty of himself or deputy that the plaintiff directed said officer to delay or in anywise stay proceedings thereon, unless said defense is supported by the written consent or request of said plaintiff, his agent or attorney, so to do." In Ridgway v. Moody, 91 Ky. 587, 16 S. W. 526, the court said that the statute was enacted for the purpose of shutting out contradictory evidence as to whether a verbal consent had been given. In other words, the purpose of the statute is to provide that only written consent may be shown as a reason for the failure of the officer to proceed with the execution of his writ. No written consent or written direction of the plaintiff's attorney was shown here, and therefore the sheriff would not be liable if nothing more appeared. There is much force in the position that the sheriff might waive the written request; and, where he does this, he should be held liable to the execution defendant. But it cannot be the contemplation of the statute that the sheriff shall be liable to the execution defendant if he proceeds with the writ and also liable to the plaintiff in the writ if he does not proceed with it; and we conclude that the just effect of the statute is that the sheriff must proceed with his writ, unless he is directed in writing to stay the proceedings; the purpose of the statute plainly being that the officer must obey his writ unless he has written authority otherwise. But the corn was mortgaged to Crump. By section 1709, Ky. St. 1903, when mortgaged property is sold under execution, the interest of the defendant in such property may be levied on and sold subject to the incumbrance. The purchaser at the sale acquires a lien on the property for the purchase money with interest at 10 per cent. from date of sale until paid, subject to the prior incumbrances; and, if the defendant does not redeem the property, the lien may be enforced in a court of equity. Subsection 4 of that section is as follows: "The purchaser of incumbered movable property must, before possession thereof is delivered to him, give an obligation, with good surety, payable to the incumbrancer and the owner, stipulating that the property shall not be removed out of the county, and shall be preserved and forthcoming, unavoidable accidents excepted, to answer the incumbrance, and for redemption, and deliver the obligation to the officer, to be returned with the execution." The sheriff did not levy on the corn subject to the mortgage, he did not so sell it, and he did not take bond from the purchaser as required by the statute. He is therefore liable to the defendant Davis, the defendant in the execution, for the damages which Davis may have sustained by reason of his failure to comply with the statute, and he is also liable to Crump for any damages he may have sustained thereby. On the return of the case to the circuit court, the plaintiffs will make Dunn, the purchaser, a party to these actions, that the entire matter may be settled here. As Dunn took and converted the corn when he had no right to it, except a lien on it, he is answerable for its fair value at the time of the conversion less the amount of his bid; and, if he does not pay, the sheriff will be answerable for the reason that he failed to take the bond required by law.

It is insisted for Mrs. Gott that she is not liable, as she had nothing to do with the transaction. It appears from the uncontradicted proof that Davis went to see Mrs. Gott, and that she told him to pay her lawyer and settle with him. He then telephoned to the lawyer as above stated. The lawyer represented his client. What he did was the act of his client. When he accepted the deposit in the bank, and agreed to stop the sale, the judgment was satisfied. In Freeman on Execution, § 442, the rule is thus stated: "As writs of execution exist only for the purpose of enforcing judgments, it is evident that, whenever a judgment is by any means satisfied, the writ which is issued for its enforcement must also be treated as satisfied. * * * The first question in regard to payment made by or for the defendant is this: To whom may the payment be made? The answer is that it may be to the plaintiff, or to one of several plaintiffs, or to the officer holding the writ, or to the plaintiff's attorney, except where the defendant knows that the attorney has no authority to receive it, or to a prochein ami, or the attorney of such prochein ami. To same effect, see 17 Cyc. 934, 1387. In Freeman on Judgments, § 466, it is said: "The fees of the sheriff on execution are no part of the judgment. They constitute a demand against the party for whom the services are performed. If the judgment be paid, the sheriff's authority is extinguished; and he cannot lawfully proceed to levy upon property to enforce the collection of his costs." The rule announced in these authorities was followed by this court in Chiles v. Bernard, 3 Dana, 35, where an execution issued on a judgment after it had been satisfied. The court held the sale void, and that the purchaser, though innocent, took no title. Where the judgment is not satisfied when the execution issues, the writ, being fair on its face, protects the officer, in case the money due on the judgment is afterwards paid to the plaintiff or his attorneys. It then becomes the duty of the plaintiff to stay the execution in the manner provided by law, and, if he allows the sheriff to proceed by failure to do this, he will be liable to the defendant in the execution for such damages as he thereby sustains. The money made on the execution sale having been paid over to Mrs. Gott's attorney, she is liable to Davis for this money with interest from the time it was paid, for the reason that the judgment had been satisfied before the sale, and it was incumbent upon her to stay the sale before it was made. As matters now stand, she has received satisfaction twice of her judgment. As between her and the sheriff, the latter is primarily responsible for all damages which Davis sustained by reason of Dunn's taking and hauling away the corn, for it was incumbent upon the sheriff to follow the law in executing his writ. On the return of the case either party will be allowed to take further proof. As we figure it, the judgment of Mrs. Gott against Davis with interest and all costs did not amount to as much as $242.80; and, if it shall turn out that more was collected than was due, the excess also with interest should be returned to Davis, and he may amend his petition if he desires to do so, so as to set up this matter. When, after the execution had been placed in the hands of the officer and levied by him, the judgment was satisfied by payment of the money to the plaintiff's attorney, the officer is entitled to the same commissions as he would be if the money had been paid to him; for he cannot be deprived of his commissions by the fact that the money is paid to the plaintiff's attorney rather than to him. As the judgment had not been satisfied when the execution issued, and it was not stayed as provided by the statute, the proceeding, which the officer was required to take for the protection of his sureties, should be regarded as voidable rather than void, and the purchaser should be protected in the money paid by him in discharge of his bond. As between Davis or his mortgagee, Crump, on the one hand, and the purchaser, Dunn, the sheriff, Holman, and Mrs. Gott on the other, the latter are all liable to the former for the value of the corn converted; but, as between themselves, Mrs. Gott is primarily liable for the money paid by the purchaser to the sheriff, and by him to her attorneys for her with interest, and for the balance of the value of the corn the purchaser is primarily liable, then the sheriff, and lastly Mrs. Gott, the measure of recovery being the value of the corn at the time less what it brought at the sale. If the purchaser by his negligence in removing the corn did Davis any damage, he alone is responsible for this.

Judgment in each case reversed, and cases remanded for further proceedings consistent herewith.

PENNEBAKER BROS. et al. v. BELL CITY MFG. CO.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Nov. 24, 1908.)

1. CORPORATIONS (§ 668*)—FOREIGN CORPORATIONS—PROCESS—SERVICE.

Civ. Code Prac. § 51, subsec. 3, provides that in an action against a private corporation a summons may be served in any county on defendant's chief officer or agent who may be found in the state, and section 72 declares that, if an action against a corporation is on a contract, it may be brought in the county in which the contract was made or to be performed. Held that, where a foreign corporation had filed no designation of an agent in the office of the Secretary of State on whom process might be served as required by St. 1903, § 571, the court in an action against a corporation to restrain the collection of certain notes and for breach of warranty acquired jurisdiction by service on the corporation's state agent in the county where the contract was made.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 2622; Dec. Dig. § 668.*]

2. CORPORATIONS (§ 641*)—FOREIGN CORPORATIONS—STATUTES.

Ky. St. 1903, § 571, requiring foreign corporations to file designation of an agent on whom process might be served, should be construed to provide an additional person on whom process might be served, and did not repeal Civ. Code Prac. § 51, subsec. 3, and section 72, providing for service of process on nonresident corporations.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 2604; Dec. Dig. § 641.*]

3. SALES (§ 442*)—BREACH OF WARRANTY—DAMAGES.

Where plaintiffs executed notes for a threshing machine purchased by them under defendant's warranty that the machine would operate satisfactorily, which notes defendant assigned to a bona fide purchaser for value, the machine proving utterly worthless, plaintiffs were entitled to recover from the seller as damages the amount of the notes and freight paid on the machine.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. §§ 1284, 1290; Dec. Dig. § 442.*]

4. CANCELLATION OF INSTRUMENTS (§ 31*)—GROUNDS—FAILURE OF CONSIDERATION.

Where a buyer of a threshing machine executed notes for the price, which were immediately transferred to an innocent purchaser, the buyer could not obtain a cancellation of the notes on rescinding the sale because the machine was worthless.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Cancellation of Instruments, Cent. Dig. § 48; Dec. Dig. § 31.*]

5. PLEADING (§ 248*) — AMENDMENT — NEW CAUSE OF ACTION.

Where, in a suit to compel the cancellation of notes given for a machine which though warranted to work satisfactorily was in fact worthless, it appeared that the notes had been transferred to a bona fide purchaser, the court properly permitted complainants to file an amended petition, claiming damages for breach of warranty, without additional process.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 686-700; Dec. Dig. § 248.*]

6. SALES (§ 441*) — WARRANTY — ACTION FOR BREACH—EVIDENCE.

In an action for breach of warranty in the sale of a machine, evidence held insufficient to sustain a finding that the machine was sold to B., and not to plaintiffs.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Dec. Dig. § 441.*]

7. SALES (§ 427*)—BREACH OF WARRANTY.

Defendants sold a thresher to plaintiffs under a warranty that it would operate satisfactorily. Plaintiffs gave notes for the price, which defendant immediately transferred to B. in exchange for B.'s notes. The machine was worthless, and plaintiffs abandoned it in a place directed by defendant's agent. Held, that defendant, having received the amount of plaintiffs' notes from B. was properly compelled to indemnify plaintiffs for the loss they sustained arising from the breach of warranty.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Dec. Dig. § 427.*]

8. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 199*)—OBJECTIONS WAIVED.

Where a suit for the cancellation of certain notes was permitted to remain on the equity docket after the petition had been amended, so as to state a cause of action for damages for breach of warranty and the case was tried as in equity, it is too late for appellee to raise on appeal the question whether the trial court erred in not transferring the cause to the law docket, and to complain that defendants did not move for a new trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 1149; Dec. Dig. § 199.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Mercer County.
"To be officially reported."

Action by Pennebaker Bros. and others against the Bell City Manufacturing Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs appeal. Reversed and remanded.

E. H. Gaither, for appellants. C. E. Rankin, for appellee.

SETTLE, J. Appellee is a corporation engaged in the business of manufacturing and selling threshing machines; its manufacturing plant and principal place of business being in the state of Michigan. The appellants, Pennebaker Bros. and Strader Bros., each a firm engaged in the business of farming in Mercer county, this state, together made an effort to purchase a threshing machine of appellee through George Bohon, of Harrodsburg, its then local agent. For some reason unexplained, Bohon did not make the sale, but turned the matter over to one C. L. Dawes, appellee's state agent, who went to see appellants, and, after some negotiation, sold them a machine, and took their order for it upon a blank form furnished by appellee and attested by Dawes as agent which contained the usual warranty as to the quality of the machine and the character of work it was claimed by the seller it would perform. The agreed price to be paid by appellants for the threshing machine was $625, for which they were to give two notes bearing date of June 27, 1906, for $312.50 each, one payable October 1, 1906, and the other October 1, 1907. Appellants were unwilling to execute these notes until the machine should be delivered by appellee and an opportunity afforded them of ascertaining whether it would do its work as warranted; but, upon the representation of Dawes that he was anxious to close the transaction and get away and that he would leave the notes with Bohon, the local agent, until the threshing machine should prove satisfactory, appellants consented to and did execute and deliver to Dawes the notes in form and amount each as stated. Instead of depositing the notes with Bohon according to the agreement under which he received them, Dawes in his capacity of agent sold, assigned, and delivered them to Bohon at a discount of 10 per cent., accepting for them Bohon's note payable to appellee, which he forwarded to the latter by mail. Upon receiving the threshing machine from appellee's manufactory, appellants paid the freight upon it, amounting to $25. Appellee's agent Dawes at that time set up the machine on the Pennebaker farm, and attempted to operate it, but without success. Subsequently an expert machinist by appellee's direction attempted to adjust and make it work, but he, too, failed, and declared that it could not be made to run at all. Thereupon appellants offered to return the machine to appellee, and made a tender of it to appellee through its local agent, Bohon, at the same time demanding the return or cancellation of the notes they had executed for it. The notes were not returned, but the thresher by direction of Bohon as agent was stored under a shed on the Pennebaker farm, where it has since remained without use by appellants. Shortly thereafter this action in equity was brought in the court below by appellants against appellee and its agents Dawes and Bohon to obtain a cancellation of the notes in question, upon the ground that they were without consideration; it being alleged that the machine for which they were executed was worthless. Later an amended petition was filed setting up the warranty of the machine in the contract of sale, alleging its breach, and asking a judgment against appellee for damages. Appellee, before answering, entered a motion to quash the summons and return, which was overruled. It thereupon answered, denying the jurisdiction of the Mercer circuit court, specifically traversing the averments of the petition as amended, and averring that it sold the threshing machine to Bohon, who sold it to appellants. The plea to jurisdiction was overruled by the court, and, following the taking of proof by the parties, judgment was rendered dismissing the action, of which judgment appellants complain; hence this appeal.

The motion to quash the summons and plea to the jurisdiction of the court were both properly overruled. The summons was served upon Dawes, in Mercer county, and the return of the sheriff thereon shows that he was the sole agent of appellee in that county. Appellee had no officer in Kentucky, and Bohon, its former agent in Mercer county, was not its agent at the time of the institution of the action, nor had it, as required by section 571 of the Kentucky Statutes of 1903, filed in the office of the Secretary of State a statement signed by its president or secretary, giving the location of its office in this state or the name of its agent thereat upon whom process could be served. Dawes was at that time its managing or chief agent in the state, and its only agent in Mercer county, and, according to his testimony, his duties were to make sales of the threshing machine manufactured by the appellee, to assist local agents in making such sales, settle with local agents as to their commissions on sales, collect for machines sold, and act as expert in setting up and repairing machines. It is true that from and after September 16, 1906, Dawes worked for appellee upon commission, instead of a regular salary as theretofore; but that fact did not make him any less an agent of appellee. He was therefore an agent, as he acted for and stood in the place of appellee in the business in which he and it were engaged, and whatever contract he made in the apparent scope of his agency appellee was bound by. He was in Mercer county when the suit was instituted and upon the trial admitted that he sold the threshing machine to appellants, that he warranted it as charged, and that such warranty was expressed in the written contract of sale. Section 51, subsec. 3, Civ. Code Prac., provides: "In an action against a private corporation, the summons may be served, in any county, upon the defendant's chief officer or agent who may be found in this state, or it may be served in the county wherein the action is brought, upon the defendant's chief officer or agent who may be found therein." The contract between appellant and appellee was made in Mercer county, and was to be performed in that county. The service of the summons upon Dawes as agent was also proper under section 72, Civ. Code Prac., which provides with reference to the venue of an action against a corporation such as appellee that, "if it be upon a contract, * * * It may be brought in the county in which the contract is made or to be performed." Newport News, etc., Ry. Company v. Thomas, 96 Ky. 613, 29 S. W. 437; New South Brewing Company, etc., v. Price, 50 S. W. 963, 21 Ky. Law Rep. 11. In enacting section 571 of the Statutes of 1903, it was not the intention of the Legislature to repeal the sections of the Code, supra, providing for the service of process in the case of non-resident corporations, but to provide an additional person upon whom process might also be served. Paducah Cooperage Co. v. Commonwealth, 122 Ky. 755, 93 S. W. 12.

The claim of appellee that it had discharged Dawes as agent the day before summons in this case was served upon him was not in our opinion made in good faith. It has too much the appearance of a subterfuge, and was not sustained by the testimony of Dawes himself. Indeed, it was contradicted by him.

We are also averse to placing any reliance upon the further contention of appellee that the purchase by appellants of the threshing machine in controversy was made of Bohon and the machine sold Bohon by it. This, too, appears to us in the light of the facts presented by the record to be a mere subterfuge. Bohon, like Dawes, was a mere agent of appellee; the only difference being that the former was a local agent, whose agency was confined to the county of Mercer, while the latter was the agent or general supervisor of appellee's business for the entire state. As a matter of fact, Bohon, the local agent, was applied to by appellants as agent of appellee for the machine. The latter, for some reason, referred the sale to Dawes, and it was made and consummated by Dawes, acting for and on behalf of appellee, the manufacturer. The order for the machine and the contract with reference to its purchase, including the warranty given by the appellee, were all made upon and contained in a form of contract furnished by appellee; and the transaction as a whole shows conclusively that it was a sale made by appellee in the usual course of business. This being true, and there having been a breach of the warranty of sale, appellee will not be permitted to dodge responsibility by shielding itself behind such a subterfuge as attempted. To permit it to do so would be repugnant to our sense of justice, and to the law as well. The proof overwhelmingly shows the breach of warranty complained of by appellants. This is not a case in which the machine purchased merely failed to operate satisfactorily, and was nevertheless kept and used by the purchaser. It proved at once to be utterly worthless, because it did not perform at all. Therefore appellants should have been allowed upon the facts of the case to recover damages as claimed by them.

The court below could not grant a cancellation of the notes as they had passed into the hands of an innocent purchaser, who recovered judgment against appellants for the amount of them. Nor does it matter that Bohon was the party who purchased these notes, as the sale of the machine was not made by him to appellants but by appellee's agent Dawes, and it does not appear that Bohon was in any way connected with the wrong done appellants in the sale of the machine. In any event, appellee is responsible to appellants upon the warranty contained in the contract of sale. Therefore the court properly allowed the amended petition to be filed by which appellants claimed damages by reason of the breach of the warranty, and no additional process was required thereon.

It is claimed by appellants, and not denied by appellee, that the judgment of the lower court was based on the theory that the threshing machine was purchased by appellants of Bohon, and not of appellee. As already indicated, we think this conclusion unwarranted by the testimony, the weight of which shows the contrary. Indeed, we may say that the whole of it, when properly analyzed, supports appellants' version of the contract of sale. Appellee was paid the amount of appellants' notes by Bohon, and it cannot complain at being compelled to indemnify and reimburse appellants for the loss they sustained arising from the breach of warranty. It can yet repossess itself of the threshing machine as it is where it was left by order of its agent when appellants offered to return it.

We see no force in appellee's contention that there should have been a motion for a new trial in the case. It is true that the filing of the amended petition entitled either party to have the case transferred to the ordinary docket, and tried by a jury as a common-law action; but neither party made such a motion. By acquiescence, or common consent, it was allowed to remain upon the equity docket, the proof was all taken by depositions, and the case allowed to proceed in all respects as a cause in equity. This being true, it is too late for appellee to raise in this court, and for the first time, the question of whether the lower court erred in not transferring it to the law docket; and likewise too late to complain that appellants did not enter a motion in the court below for a new trial, following the rendition of the judgment appealed from.

For the reasons indicated, the judgment is reversed and cause remanded, with directions to the lower court to enter a judgment in appellants' behalf for the damages claimed, not to exceed the amount of the notes they executed to appellee and freight paid by them upon receiving the machine.

WIBURG & HANNAH CO. v. U. P. WALLING & CO.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Nov. 27, 1908)

1. SALES (§ 119*)—RESCISSION BY BUYER—DEFECTS AS TO QUALITY.

The buyer of goods of a specified quality and description may refuse to accept the entire shipment, unless all of it corresponds with the contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. § 293; Dec. Dig. § 119.*]

2. SALES (§ 178*)—PERFORMANCE BY SELLER—ACCEPTANCE BY BUYER.

Where lumber in car load lots is ordered and delivered, the purchaser does not accept the lumber by unloading it for inspection.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. § 451; Dec. Dig. § 178.*]

3. SALES (§ 177*)—PERFORMANCE BY SELLER—INSPECTION AND MEASUREMENT.

Where the buyer of lumber agrees to accept the same on the seller's inspection, he cannot reject the lumber on the ground of defects as to quality, unless there is such a substantial difference between the lumber contracted for and that delivered as to raise the inference of fraud on the part of the seller.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Dec. Dig. § 177.*]

4. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1009*)—REVIEW—CONFLICTING EVIDENCE.

In an action for the price of lumber, the evidence being conflicting, a finding by the chancellor that there was not such a substantial departure from the contract as to warrant the inference of fraud on the part of plaintiff will not be reviewed on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3970-3978; Dec. Dig. § 1009.*]

5. SALES (§ 407*)—REMEDIES OF BUYER—BREACH OF CONTRACT—ESTOPPEL.

An agreement by the buyer of lumber to accept the same on the seller's inspection and measurement did not estop the buyer from suing for breach of contract as to quality of the lumber, though such breach might not have been ground for rejection of the lumber.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Dec. Dig. § 407.*]

6. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1033*)—REVIEW—HARMLESS ERROR—ERROR FAVORABLE TO APPELLANT.

Appellant cannot complain that the trial court granted him relief for which he did not ask.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4060; Dec. Dig. § 1033.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Taylor County.
"Not to be officially reported."

Action by the Wiburg & Hannah Company against U. P. Walling & Co. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

C. W. Wright, Jno. T. Moss, and W. M. Jackson, for appellants. Lindsay & Edelen, Jno. A. Wolford, and B. A. Rice, for appellees.

CARROLL, J. The appellants are dealers in and manufacturers of hard woods in Cincinnati, Ohio, and the appellees are dealers in hard woods in Taylor county, Ky.

The litigation between these parties grows out of an alleged breach of contract on the part of appellees in failing to furnish to appellants the kind and quality of lumber purchased by them. The contract was made by the following correspondence: "Campbellsville, Ky., Jan. 18, 1907. The Wiburg-Hannah Co., Cincinnati, O.—Gentlemen: At the earnest request of Mr. S. J. Stultz, we quote you as follows: [Then follows a description of the size of lumber, which was all poplar.] We ship on our own inspection and measurement. Would be pleased to ship you all or any part of above in car lots." In reply to this, appellants wrote: "We have just received your letter of January 18, and wish to thank you for the same. We inclose herewith our order No. 115 for all the stock which you offer at the prices named in your letter. Please ship in to us at once the half car each 1-4 and 8-4 1s and 2s poplar, making a car load shipment of the two lots. The other stock kindly hold for a few days until you hear from us further." The order accompanying this letter described the lumber the same as the letter written by Walling & Co.; but at the foot of the order are these words "National Hardwood Lumber Association rules to govern." In reply to this letter and order, Walling & Co. wrote: "Replying to yours of 1-19, we will accept your order No. 115 on the condition named in ours of 1-18. If this is not satisfactory to you, we will return the order as there are others that want the stock." Wiburg & Hannah Company then wrote: "We are just in receipt of your letter of the 21st stating that you will accept our order No. 115 on the condition named in your letter of Jan. 18th. Your letter of the 18th stated that you would ship this stock enumerated on your own inspection and measurement. We assume, as a matter of course, that your inspection and measurement would not be lower than that of the National Hardwood Lumber Association Rules, and we therefore sent you our order on that basis. We would not care to have the order filled, unless you are willing to abide by the National Rules. We understood your letter to mean that settlement was to be made on your own measurement and inspection under these rules." In reply to this letter, Walling & Co., sent the following letter: "In reply to yours of 1-23, we ship on the National Rules as we interpret them." Wiburg & Hannah Company then wrote: "We have concluded to cancel our order No. 115, which covers four car loads of poplar. Kindly return the order to us." On the following day Wiburg & Hannah Company wrote: "We beg to confirm telegram which we sent you this morning as follows: 'Waive cancellation yesterday on order No. 115, and let stock come forward.' Please disregard our letter of yesterday requesting you to return the order. We hope you will get this stock loaded out as quickly as possible, and oblige." On February 4, 1907, Walling & Co. wrote Wiburg & Hannah Company the following: "Reply to yours of 2-2, we understand this to mean that you take this stock as quoted or on our own inspection and measurement. If this is not correct, wire us on receipt of this and we wont ship it. We will commence loading as soon as R. R. Co. will allow us to load to your city." Wiburg & Hannah Company on February 5, 1907, sent the following letter to Walling & Co.: "We are in receipt of your favor of the 4th, in regard to the matter of inspection of the stock purchased from you, and beg to say that all we ask is that you inspect the cars as they should be inspected according to the National Hardwood Lbr. Ass'n's Rules. We assume that you will not take advantage of our permitting you to ship them on your own inspection and measurement, if we thought you would, we certainly would not take the stock."

It will be observed that in the first letter written by Walling & Co., they said, "We ship on our own inspection and measurement," and that, although Wiburg & Hannah Company insisted that the "National Hardwood Lumber Association Rules should govern," Walling & Co., declined to make the shipment unless the lumber was accepted upon their inspection and measurement under the hardwood lumber association rules as they interpreted them. It will be further noticed that Wiburg & Hannah Company finally consented to this condition, and thereupon three car loads of lumber were shipped to them. When the lumber was delivered in their yards at Cincinnati, it was inspected by one of their employees, who reported that it did not come up to the contract, and then Wiburg & Hannah Company had it inspected by an inspector employed by the National Hardwood Lumber Association, of which they were members. This inspector confirming the report made by the private inspector, Wiburg & Hannah Company refused to receive the lumber, which had been unloaded from the cars and was in their yards, held by them as they informed Walling & Co., subject to the order of the latter. Failing to make any adjustment of the matter, Walling & Co., brought this suit to recover the contract price of the lumber.

Wiburg & Hannah Company in an answer averred that they purchased the lumber upon the faith of the contract tendered them by Walling & Co., and with the agreement that the lumber should fulfill the contract; that, when the cars containing the lumber arrived at their yards, they had the same inspected, and the inspection disclosed that the lumber was not of the kind, description, or quality specified in the contract; that, upon ascertaining this fact, they at once wrote to Walling & Co., informing them that they would not accept the lumber, and that it was held subject to their disposal. They further averred that it was necessary to remove the lumber from the cars in order that it might be inspected, but that the removal for this purpose did not amount to an acceptance of the lumber by them or a waiver of their right to rely upon the contract right of rejection if the lumber did not come up to the contract. They therefore prayed that the petition be dismissed, and did not ask any damages for a breach of the contract. Upon the pleadings and evidence the case was heard by the chancellor, who rendered a judgment in favor of Walling & Co. for the full amount claimed, less $100 which he allowed Wiburg & Hannah Company as damages upon the ground that the lumber did not fulfill the contract.

The actual amount in controversy is not large. Wiburg & Hannah Company testify that the three cars of lumber were worth only $180 to $200, less than the value of the lumber ordered; but they insist that, having bought a certain quality of lumber at a specified price to be delivered to them in Cincinnati, they were not obliged to accept lumber of any other quality, kind, or description than that specified in the contract; and that, as the lumber delivered to them did not comply with the contract, they rejected, as they had the right to do, the whole of it, and the petition should have been dismissed. As a legal proposition, it is well settled that, when a person contracts for the delivery to him of goods or property of a certain quality and description, he may refuse to accept any part of the property or goods received unless all of them are in accordance with the contract. We should also say that in a case like this, where lumber in car load lots was ordered and delivered, that the purchaser would not be held to have accepted it or waived his right to reject it merely because he took it out of the cars for the purpose of inspection, as it could not be inspected without being removed from the cars, and each piece of lumber examined. Jones v. McEwan, 91 Ky. 373, 16 S. W. 81, 12 L. R. A. 399; Munford v. Kevell, 109 Ky. 246, 58 S. W. 703; Somers Fiber Co. v. Walker, 109 S. W. 883, 33 Ky. Law Rep. 153; Ewing v. Hauss, 50 S. W. 249, 20 Ky. Law Rep. 1883; Duckwall v. Brook, 65 S. W. 357, 23 Ky. Law Rep. 1459; Albin Co. v. Kentucky Table Co., 67 S. W. 13, 23 Ky. Law Rep. 2261; Vogel v. Moore, 84 S. W. 557, 27 Ky. Law Rep. 94; O'Bannon v. Relf, 7 Dana, 320; Dana v. Boyd, 2 J. J. Marsh. 587. So that, if the facts authorize the application of this principle, the contention of appellants would be correct; but they do not. Appellants agreed to accept the lumber as inspected and measured by appellees; and, having thus contracted, they are bound, with the exceptions hereafter noticed, by the terms of the contract, and could not reject the lumber unless there was such a substantial difference between the lumber contracted for and that delivered as to manifest fraud or lack of good faith on the part of appellees. The evidence as to the kind and quality of the lumber is conflicting. Appellants and their witnesses testified that there was some gillynn, and buckeye in the shipment, and that the poplar did not comply with the contract. On the other hand, appellees introduced a number of witnesses who testified that they inspected and handled the lumber, and that it in every respect fulfilled the contract. That there was no material difference is made manifest by the fact that there was only $180 or $200 difference in the value of the lumber ordered and that shipped, according to the testimony of appellants. Under these circumstances, we do not feel authorized to say that there was either fraud or bad faith on the part of appellees.

The argument for appellees is made that as appellants agreed to accept the lumber by their inspection and measurement, that they were obliged to take the lumber unconditionally, and that the court should not have allowed the appellants any damages. Upon this theory a cross-appeal was prosecuted, but afterwards abandoned. We may say, however, that, although appellants agreed to take the lumber according to the inspection and measurement of appellees, this contract would not estop them from asserting a claim for damages for a breach of the contract if it appeared that the lumber did not fulfill the contract. In cases like this, although the evidence may not authorize the buyer to rescind the contract or reject the property, he may yet maintain an action for damages growing out of a breach of the contract, although he left the selection of the kind and quality of the articles purchased to the seller. Under such contract, the seller is under an obligation to furnish the kind and quality of goods or property that he contracted to furnish, and the mere fact that the selection is left to him does not authorize him to impose upon the buyer goods or property of another kind or quality, or estop the buyer from seeking redress for a violation of the contract, although the facts might not warrant a rescission or rejection. Baird v. Mathews, 6 Dana, 129; Munford v. Kevell, 109 Ky. 246, 58 S. W. 703. In disposing of the case, although the chancellor granted appellants relief they did not ask, they are not in a position to complain of the judgment for this reason. If the judgment had not allowed any damages to appellants, we could not under the conflicting facts say that it was erroneous.

Upon the whole, we are satisfied that the chancellor did substantial justice between the parties, and the judgment of the lower court is affirmed.

GIRDLER v. GIRDLER et al.

Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Nov. 24, 1908.)

WILLS (§ 467*) — CONSTRUCTION — STATEMENT AS TO INTENTION — "WILL."

Testator devised certain property absolutely to certain of his sons, with a provision that it was his "will and desire" that none of the real estate so devised should be sold until the oldest son was 35, etc. Held, that the word "will" in such connection amounted to a restriction equivalent to the expression "I direct," and that he devisees were therefore incompetent to convey the property prior to the time specified, though their interest was subject to their debts as expressly provided by St. 1903, §§ 1681, 1353.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. § 954; Dec. Dig. § 467.*

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 8, pp. 7461-7463.]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Pulaski County.

"Not to be officially reported."

Action by L. D. Girdler against George O. I. Girdler and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

James Denton, for appellant. M. G. Colton, for appellees.

CLAY, C. J. H. Girdler departed this life in Pulaski county, Ky., in the year 1888, leaving four children, to wit, J. E. Girdler, A. M. Girdler, George O. H. Girdler, and L. B. Girdler. He left a will, which was duly probated by the Pulaski county court, and is now on record in the county clerk's office of that county. Those provisions of the will necessary to be considered in the decision of the questions before us are as follows:

"I give, devise and bequeath to my younger sons, George O. Hayden Girdler and Lee Brent Girdler, and their heirs or assigns forever, my store house on the south side of the public square in Somerset. The lot and the houses thereon, known as the Wm. F. Davis property on Main street, and the western half of the George W. Singleton lot, is divided by line from north to south, through the middle of the cutting room in the barn,—but here it must be remembered that on or about the first day of March, 1883, by verbal contract, sold to one Puss Long, part of this lot in the N. W. corner thereof, at the price of seventy-five dollars, with interest till paid, but no part of said price has been paid. Now, if the heirs, at law, of said Puss Long pay the price and the interest thereon, on or before the first day of March, 1888, I direct my executors to pay said price and interest for other real estate with title to these boys, and to make title to said fraction of said lot to the legal heirs of said Puss Long. If said purchase price is not paid on or before the said first day of March, 1888, I direct that Charles Long and the children of said Puss Long be permitted to occupy the house thereon, up to said time in compensation and satisfaction for the house and fencing by her placed thereon. I also give, bequeath and devise to my said younger sons my farm on the Cincinnati Southern Railway, known as the Crawford place, and my farm on the Somerset and Mount Vernon road, known as the Stone land, and a tract of land lying in Whitley county, known as the land deeded to me by Frank Sears, near the mouth of Laurel river. And the sum of seven hundred dollars to be paid out of my bank stock in the National Bank of Somerset. All of these bequests to my said younger sons, I estimate to be of the value of forty-six hundred dollars, and of equal value with the property given to my elder sons.

"It is my will and desire that none of the real estate given and devised to my sons, George O. H. and Lee Brent, shall be sold or alienated by them or any one for them otherwise than is here directed, until the time that the oldest one, George O. H., becomes thirty-five years of age, but they may have, receive and enjoy the use, rents and incomes of said real estate after they each arrive at the age of twenty-one years, and before that time for necessary support and education."

At the time of the death of J. H. Girdler, L. B. Girdler was five years of age and George O. H. Girdler seven years of age. At the time of the institution of this action they were aged 26 and 24 years, respectively. They are both married men, and the plaintiff, L. B. Girdler, is now living in the city of Louisville, Ky. Plaintiff, L. B. Girdler, is indebted to the firm of Girdler Bros. in the sum of $480.27 and certain interest. He has no property or assets out of which said debt can be made except the property devised to him by J. H. Girdler. All the city property devised, except the building on the south side of the public square, is old, dilapidated property. After paying the expenses of insurance, taxes, and repairs, the property yields to the owners, L. B. and George O. H. Girdler, but very little revenue; it not being sufficient to pay a fair rate of interest on the value thereof. The farm property is of such a character and in such a state of repair and cultivation that it produces no revenue. The property on the south side of the public square is under 10 years' lease, and the joint owners, George O. H. and L. B. Girdler, derive no revenue from the same, and will not do so until September 12, 1914, at which time the lease will expire. This lease was given in consideration of the erection of the building now located on said lot. On the 12th day of March, 1908, the plaintiff, L. B. Girdler, and the defendant George O. H. Girdler, entered into an agreement by which L. B. Girdler agreed to sell and convey to George O. H. Girdler his entire interest in the lands devised to him by his father for the sum of $3,000. L. B.

Girdler has tendered a deed of the property to George O. H. Girdler, but the latter has declined to receive it, on the ground that L. B. Girdler had no power to make the conveyance. The above facts appear from the agreed statement. The question involved was submitted to the court, which held that L. B. Girdler had no power to convey his interest in the property in question, and entered judgment accordingly. From that judgment, L. B. Girdler prosecutes this appeal.

This court in a long line of decisions has held such limitations as that embraced in the language of the will before us for consideration to be reasonable, and therefore valid. In the case of Stewart and Wife v. Brady, 3 Bush, 623, the language is almost identical with that in the Girdler will; the provision being: "The forty-two acre tract shall, in no way, be disposed of, by deed of gift or sale, by her, until she arrives at the age of thirty-five years." It was held that the limitation on the use was not inconsistent with the fee, and was therefore valid. In the case of Wallace, etc., v. Smith, 113 Ky. 263, 68 S. W. 131, the language of the will was: " * * * But he shall not pledge mortgage, or sell the eighty acres of land hereby given to him, nor any part thereof, until he is thirty-five years old." The court, after referring to the case of Stewart v. Brady, supra, held that the limitation was not void. To the same effect is Stewart v. Barrow, 7 Bush, 368.

Counsel for appellant, while admitting the doctrine in this state to be as announced above, contends that it is against the great weight of authority to hold that, after property is deced or devised in fee simple, any restriction on the use or alienation thereof can be imposed, and now asks this court to adopt the latter view. It is true the doctrine contended for by counsel for appellant is upheld by many courts; but we are not prepared to say that it is either more reasonable or more just than the rule in force in this state. It cannot be doubted that in many instances a limitation of the kind contained in the will before us is a great protection to the devisee. In a majority of cases, where a reasonable restriction is imposed, it is better to trust to the good sense of him whose sound judgment and energy enabled him to acquire the property, rather than to turn it over absolutely to those whose business capacity has not been ripened by many years' experience. Furthermore, the rule in question is one affecting property rights. And, where such rule has been long established and is known by bench and bar, and is acted upon by the public, we do not think it should be lightly disturbed, especially in view of the fact that in nine cases out of ten it serves a beneficial purpose in preventing the dissipation of property, or, at least, its premature sale by those who, if older or more experienced, would not have consented thereto.

But it is earnestly insisted that the language, "It is my will and desire," is not in effect a restriction, but merely a request as the part of the testator. While there may be some question as to whether the expression, "It is my desire," amounts to a positive restriction, there can be no question that the phrase, "It is my will," does amount to a restriction and is equivalent to the expression, "I direct."

It is also insisted that, because under Ky. St. 1903, §§ 1681, 2355, and the authority of Smith v. Smith, 115 Ky. 329, 73 S. W. 1028, the property involved in this action could be subjected to the payment of appellant's debts, the court should hold that appellant has the right to make a voluntary sale of the property, as he would be apt to secure a better price therefor under such circumstances. The right, however, to subject the property, is not given because of any defect in the restriction contained in the will. The right is found purely in the statutes. The fact that the statutes subject the property to the payment of the devisee's debts cannot give to the devisee the power of voluntary alienation within the time prohibited by the will. Under some circumstances it might be best that he have the power of voluntary alienation where it is necessary to sell the property to pay debts; but, where the will provides to the contrary and the restriction is not unreasonable, the courts have no power to nullify the provisions of the will.

Being of the opinion that the trial court properly held that appellant had no power to convey the property at the time he made the deed in question, the judgment should be affirmed; and it is so ordered.

BOZEMAN'S ADM'R v. PRUDENTIAL INS. CO. OF AMERICA.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Nov. 20, 1906)

1. INSURANCE (§ 368*) — LIFE POLICY — EXTENDED INSURANCE.

A life policy gave insured the privilege of borrowing from it, according to tables following, on the security of the policy; then provided that if the policy, after being in force three years, lapsed or was forfeited for nonpayment of a premium or a note given for a premium or loan, it might be surrendered for a paid-up life policy as specified in the following table, and that, if the policy so lapsing or forfeited was not surrendered for a paid-up life policy, the company would write in lieu of it, and, without any action by insured, a paid-up term policy "for the full amount insured by this policy, and to continue in force for the term indicated by the following table of extended insurance. the paid-up term policy, however, to provide that, in case of death of insured within three years from such lapse or forfeiture, there shall be deducted from the amount payable by the company all premiums that would have become due on the policy up to insured's death had the policy been continued in force, and any interest

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

adness due the company on the policy at the late of such lapse or forfeiture; then made provisions for surrender of the policy for cash, according to the following table, at the end of five years, or at certain other times, and then, under the head of "Tables Above Referred To," provided that any indebtedness placed on the policy would operate to reduce the benefits. Held, that the amount, otherwise available for purchasing extended insurance, and so fixing the period of such extended insurance, was not to be diminished by any indebtedness of insured to the company; the policy under the head of such insurance otherwise providing the manner of payment of the indebtedness.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. § 936; Dec. Dig. § 368.*]

1. INSURANCE (§ 179½*)—LIFE POLICY—LOANS TO INSURED.

Where a life policy provides the terms on which insured may borrow of the company, a more onerous condition in the contract under which he did borrow of it is void; there having been no further consideration for it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Dec. Dig. § 179½.*]

1. INSURANCE (§ 179½*) — LIFE POLICY — LOANS TO INSURED—FORFEITURE FOR NON-PAYMENT.

Even if valid, in view of provisions of the policy, the provision in a contract of loan by a life insurance company to a policy holder that if the loan, with accumulated interest, shall equal the legal reserve for the policy, the company may demand immediate payment, and, if payment is not made, may cancel the policy, is available only where there is no balance of reserve above the loan and interest.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Dec. Dig. § 179½.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, McCracken County.

"To be officially reported."

Action by Charles J. Bozeman's administrator against the Prudential Insurance Company of America. Judgment for defendant. Plaintiff appeals. Reversed, with directions.

Hendrick, Miller & Marble, for appellant. Price & Ross, for appellee.

NUNN, J. On the 22d day of July, 1899, appellee issued and delivered to James Edgar Bozeman an ordinary life policy for the sum of $1,000, payable, first, to Bozeman Bros., and afterwards changed, about which there is no dispute, and made payable to his brother, Charles J. Bozeman. He paid two premiums of $35.26 each in cash, but failed to pay the third premium when due, and the policy lapsed July 22, 1901. Appellee insisted that he pay the premium and be reinstated, and finally wrote him that it would loan him the money to pay it and take an assignment of the policy as security. In the month of April, 1902, he borrowed $32 from appellee, and assigned the policy to secure the loan and paid $1.60 interest in advance on the loan, and the difference between the amount borrowed and the premium he paid in cash and was given a receipt for the amount of the premium, $35.26. When the next premium fell due, July 22, 1902, he paid it in cash, and also paid the interest for one year in advance, to wit, $1.60, on the loan note. He failed to pay the next premium, which fell due July 22, 1903. Bozeman lived until the 1st of December, 1905; and his brother, the beneficiary, died about three weeks afterwards. Appellant was appointed and qualified as the administrator of Chas. J. Bozeman, and instituted this action to recover the amount of the face of the policy. The issues were formed by the pleadings, and the case, by agreement, was transferred to the equity docket. The court heard the case and dismissed appellant's action, from which ruling he appeals.

Indorsed on the back of the policy in print are certain privileges, conditions, and tables. Appellant contends that these extend the policy, for the full amount thereof, until more than one year after the date of the death of the insured. Appellee's contention is that the policy, for its face value, was not extended by the privileges, conditions, and tables indorsed thereon until the date of the insured's death; but that the policy ceased some time in the month of June, 1905. We copy the indorsements on the policy that have application to the issues presented. They are as follows:

"Privileges.

"Cash Loans.

"If this policy is continued in force, the insured may borrow from the company the amount specified in the following table, by making written application for the loan and assigning the policy to the company as security in accordance with the terms of the company's loan certificate; provided five per cent. interest on the whole amount of the loan is paid annually in advance.

"Paid-Up Life Policy or Extended Insurance.

"If this policy, after being in force three full years, shall lapse or become forfeited for the nonpayment of any premium or any note given for a premium or loan made in cash on such policy as security, or of any interest on such note or loan, it may be surrendered for a nonparticipating paid-up life policy as specified in the following table; provided the policy is legally surrendered to the company within three months after such lapse or forfeiture. If this policy, having lapsed or become forfeited as above, is not surrendered for a paid-up life policy, the company will write in lieu of this policy, and without any action on the part of the insured, a nonparticipating paid-up term policy for the full amount insured by this policy, and to continue in force for the term indicated by the following table of extended insurance. The paid-up term policy shall provide, however, that in case of the death of the insured within three years from the date of such lapse or forfeiture there shall be deducted from the amount payable by the company the sum of all the premiums that would have become due on this policy up to the time of the death of the insured if the policy had been continued in force, and any indebtedness due the company on this policy at the date of such lapse or forfeiture. The paid-up term policy will be delivered on the legal surrender of this policy.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

"Or Cash Surrender Values.

"If this policy is legally surrendered to the company within three months from the end of five years from its date or of any five-year period thereafter, and all premiums to the end of that period have been paid in full, the company will pay therefor the sum indicated by the following table of cash surrender values. Or, if this policy is legally surrendered to the company within three months from the end of twenty years from its date or of any five-year period thereafter, and all premiums to the end of that period have been paid in full, the cash value of the policy may be applied to purchase an annuity payable during the life of the insured.

"Tables Above Referred To.

"The benefits stated in the following tables apply to the original sum insured only. Any indebtedness placed on the policy will operate to reduce the benefits."

The tables referred to in the above quotations are on the back of the policy, and show that, when three premiums have been paid, the insured is entitled to borrow $37, and when four have been paid he has the right to borrow $49, and is entitled to a non-participating paid-up life policy, when three premiums have been paid, of $106, and, when four have been paid, of $138, and, when three premiums have been paid, he is entitled to extended insurance for the face of the policy for 2 years, 328 days, and, when four premiums have been paid, for 3 years, 271 days; and is entitled to named amounts at the end of five-year periods.

Appellee's contention is that, when four premiums were paid, he was not entitled to have the policy extended 3 years and 271 days, because when the policy lapsed for the nonpayment of the premium of July 22, 1903, he owed appellee the $32 note; that it should have been deducted from the legal reserve due the insured, and the balance of the reserve would have only extended the insurance to June, 1905, four or five months before the death of the insured, and cites the cases of Mutual Benefit Life Insurance Co. v. First National Bank of Louisville, 115 Ky. 757, 74 S. W. 1066, Emig's Adm'r v. Mutual Benefit Insurance Co., 106 S. W. 230, 32 Ky. Law Rep. 484, and Jagoe v. Aetna Life Insurance Co., 123 Ky. 510, 96 S. W. 598, as sustaining its contention. This position would be correct if we were construing a policy containing provisions like unto those in the cases referred to. The policies before the court in the Emig and Bank Cases were issued by the same company, and provided that "when after two full annual premiums shall have been paid on this policy it shall cease or become void solely by the nonpayment of any premium when due, its entire net reserve by the American Experience Mortality and interest at 4 per cent. yearly (provided there be no loan on the policy) shall be applied by the company as a single premium at the company's rates published and in force at this date." And then continues, giving the different options that the insured may avail himself of. Another paragraph of the policy is as follows: "If there be any loan on the policy, such indebtedness shall be paid off out of the cash value and the remainder paid in cash by the company, or a value will be allowed by the company in the form of extended or paid-up insurance, as above provided, the amount to be applied to the purchase of such insurance being correspondingly reduced in the ratio of the indebtedness to the full cash surrender value." Thus it will be seen that the policies under consideration in those cases expressly provided that the loan to the insured should be deducted from the legal reserve, and the remainder was to purchase extended insurance. That is to say, it expressly provided that any indebtedness by the insured to it should first be deducted from any option proffered by the policy chosen by him. The policy in the case of Jagoe v. Aetna Life Ins. Co., supra, in terms is substantially like those of the Mutual Benefit Ins. Co.; but it further provides, as construed by this court, that if the insured was indebted to the company when the policy lapsed for nonpayment of premiums, no extended insurance was allowed. So it will be seen that the construction placed on the policies in those cases have but little application to the policy in the case at bar. The terms are different.

The policy in the case at bar provides expressly that if the policy should lapse or become forfeited by reason of the nonpayment of any premium or loan, and the policy is not surrendered for a paid-up policy, the company will write, in lieu of it, and without any action on the part of the insured, a non-participating paid-up term policy "for the full amount insured by this policy," and it shall continue in force for the term of 3 years, 271 days. This paid-up term policy shall provide, however, that, in case of death of the insured within three years from the date of such lapse or forfeiture, there shall be deducted from the amount payable by the company the sum of all the premiums that would have become due on the policy up to the time of the death of the insured if the policy had been continued in force, and there should, also, be deducted from the face of the policy any indebtedness due the company on he policy at the date of such lapse or forfeiture. Thus we see that the contract the insured had with appellee provided how the indebtedness of the insured should be settled in case of extended insurance; that is, it should be deducted from the face of the policy, and not as in the cases referred to deducting it from the legal reserve. There is not an intimation in the contract before us that authorized the company to first deduct the indebtedness of the insured to the company from the legal reserve, and apply the remainder to purchase extended insurance, as in the cases referred to; but by express terms this policy provides that such indebtedness should be deducted from the amount named in the policy, to wit, $1,000. If appellee's contention be sustained, and the loan be deducted from the legal reserve and the balance used to carry extended insurance, and then also deduct it from the face of the policy, if the insured dies within three years from the lapse, the result would be to make him pay the loan twice, and contrary to the terms of the policy. Appellee contends that the following words: "Any indebtedness placed on the policy will operate to reduce the benefits"—which are found under the expression "Tables referred to," authorized the deduction of the indebtedness from the legal reserve of the policy, and the balance only could be used to purchase extended insurance. The last quoted words are in harmony with the words quoted above with reference to extended insurance. The indebtedness of the insured does operate to reduce the amount that would be received otherwise. It is not reasonable to suppose that those words were used with the intention of changing the provision with reference to what should be the disposition of the indebtedness of the insured to the company in the case of extended insurance; for that had already been especially provided for. The only reasonable inference and construction that we can place upon the words last quoted, to wit, "any indebtedness placed on the policy will operate to reduce the benefits," is that the policy in the case at bar provides that the full amount of cash that will be loaned on the policy, when four premiums have been paid, is $49, and, when a like number of premiums have been paid, a paid-up nonparticipating life policy for $138 would be issued; and the tables referred to in the clause under title, "Cash Surrender Values," fixed the amount that the insured would be entitled to receive at the periods named, and the language used was for the purpose of requiring that the amount of the indebtedness of the insured should be deducted, in case of a loan, from the $49, and, in case of the paid-up life policy, the indebtedness should be deducted from the $138, and the policy issued for the balance. In addition to the above, it will be seen from the provisions of the policy that there were four methods by which to settle the policy in the lifetime of the insured: First, cash loan privileges; second, by the issuing of a nonparticipating paid-up life policy; third, extended insurance; fourth, by the insured receiving certain stated sums at the end of five-year periods—in none of which were there any provisions stating how the indebtedness of the insured to the company should be settled, except the one with reference to extended insurance. Hence the necessity for the clause with reference to the indebtedness operating to reduce the benefits that it might apply to those options not provided for; and to accentuate the fact, as had already been provided, it provided that the indebtedness of the insured should be deducted from the face of the policy. There is no other construction that can be placed upon this language without making the last quoted words conflict with the previous language of the policy dealing, especially, with the matter of extended insurance, and as to what disposition should be made of the indebtedness of the insured to the company. This court has frequently said, in construing such contracts as this one, that the insurance companies prepare their policies, which are printed mostly in small type, and, if there are any ambiguities or seeming inconsistencies, that that construction of the contract which is most favorable to the insured should prevail. The reasonable presumption is that, when Bozeman read and accepted the policy, he understood from the provision with reference to extended insurance that it meant that, if he did not elect to take one or the other of the options provided for in the contract, the company was bound, without any action on his part, to provide for him, after he had paid four premiums, a policy of extended insurance for the face value of the policy for 3 years, 271 days; and that his beneficiary would receive the full face value of the policy, except the premiums that he would have paid from the date of the lapse of his policy to his death, and any indebtedness that he owed the company; and that the deduction of benefits referred to in the first clause had reference to the matters above stated.

To construe this policy as contended for by appellee, we would have to interpolate words and phrases, and the words used would have to be given a meaning that was not intended, or, at least, that the insured never thought of when he entered into the contract. Appellee claims that, when the insured borrowed the $32 from it, he executed an obligation by which he agreed that it might declare the policy forfeited and void upon his failure to perform certain conditions therein named, and he failed to perform the conditions, and appellee declared the policy at an end, and it ceased to be binding upon it. The obligation referred to is as follows: "This is to certify that I, the undersigned, James E. Bozeman, the insured on whose life ordinary policy No. 161006 was issued by the Prudential Insurance Company of America, have this day borrowed from the said Company the sum of thirty-two ——— 00/100 dollars and hereby assign, transfer and set over unto the said company, its successors and assigns, the said policy and all profits and benefits now due or which may hereafter become due thereon as herein provided. It is understood and agreed: First. That the said sum borrowed as aforesaid shall bear interest at the rate of five per cent. per annum, payable in advance, and that said interest unless duly paid shall be added to the above loan and bear interest at the same rate and on the same conditions. Second. That any dividend declared on said policy may be applied by the company toward the payment of said loan and any unpaid interest, anything to the contrary in the policy notwithstanding. Third. That if said policy shall become forfeited in any manner, the amount of said loan, with interest accumulated and accrued thereon, shall be deducted from the cash value of any allowance guaranteed by the terms of said policy in case of such forfeiture. Fourth. That if said policy shall mature before said loan, with the interest accumulated and accrued thereon, shall have been fully paid, the total amount thus due the company shall be deducted from the amount otherwise payable by the company. Fifth. That if the said loan with the accumulated interest shall become equal to the legal reserve for the said policy, the company may demand immediate payment of said loan—or any part thereof—with all interest accumulated and accrued thereon, and if the same be not paid to the company within thirty days after due notice by mail or otherwise, the said policy shall be and become entirely forfeited and void." It will be seen that clauses numbers 1, 2, 3, and 4 in the loan obligation conform to the provisions of the policy; but the fifth enters upon a new field, and prescribes conditions not mentioned in the policy. The insured had paid for the right to borrow $49 upon the conditions named in the policy, which do not include the conditions or provisions mentioned in the fifth article of the loan contract. Appellee in its answer relies on the cancellation of the policy under the conditions stated in the fifth clause of the loan contract. It is our opinion that the additional and more onerous provisions incorporated in that clause are not binding, because, as stated, the insured had purchased the right to borrow $49 upon the conditions stated in the policy. It is not pretended that appellee paid the insured any consideration for the right to forfeit his policy on any other conditions than those named therein.

The cases of New York Life Ins. Co. v. N. L. Curry, 115 Ky. 100, 72 S. W. 736, 61 L. R. A. 268, 103 Am. St. Rep. 297, and Emig's Adm'r v. Mutual Benefit Ins. Co., supra, sustain this position, and the last case cited overrules the case of Mutual Benefit Life Ins. Co. v. First National Bank of Louisville, supra, to the extent that it opposes this principle. If, however, we are in error as to this, appellee had no right, under the fifth clause of the loan agreement, to declare, when it did, on June 29, 1905, that the insurance of Bozeman was at an end. The language of that article is to the effect that if the loan, which was $32, with the accumulated interest, should become equal to the legal reserve for the policy, then, in that event, the company might demand the immediate payment of the loan and the accumulated interest, and, if not paid, it reserved the right to cancel the policy. Appellee's actuary, the only witness who testified on the subject, stated that the amount of the reserve which had accumulated on the policy of the insured was $82.30. The interest which had accumulated on the loan to the time when appellee canceled the policy in July, 1905, could not have been more than two years, as it is agreed that he had paid the interest to July 22, 1903, and this added to the loan of $32 makes $35.35, which did not equal the legal reserve for the policy. The reserve, as stated without contradiction, was $82.30. But appellee wants the words "the balance" inserted in the fifth clause of the loan agreement, so that it will read: "If said loan with the accumulated interest shall become equal to the balance of the legal reserve for the policy," etc. Even if this was allowable, the loan with its interest would not equal the balance of the reserve, for such balance at the time they canceled the policy amounted to $46.95, nor would it have equaled the balance of the reserve at the time of the insured's death, nor at this time. It is contended that this construction of the policy operates as a hardship upon appellee; that the policies under consideration in the cases cited by appellee were otherwise construed. In answer to this it is enough to say that the provisions of the policies referred to are different from the provisions of the one now under consideration. The terms of the policies in the cases referred to seemingly made it a hardship upon the insured; but the court determined that they made the contracts and were bound thereby, notwithstanding it seemed to be a hardship upon them. We have construed the policy in the case at bar in accordance with the provisions contained in it. To construe it as contended for by appellee, the wording would have to be changed. Doubtless appellee obtained insurance by showing and explaining to persons the advantages contained in its policy over the policies of other companies, and it must abide by the terms therein. It took the chance of the insured living beyond the 3 years, 271 days. If he had, it would have retained all that he had paid, to wit, $112.24, and the right to collect the loan of $32 with its interest from the insured. It is true that after that its collateral would have been worthless, but it would have had the right to collect its debt if he was solvent or ever became so.

For these reasons, the judgment of the lower court is reversed with directions for the court to deduct from the face value of the policy the sum of the premiums that would have become due on the policy up to the time of the death of the insured, and the amount of the loan obligation of $32 with its interest due at the date of the death of the insured, and render judgment in favor of appellant for the balance, with interest from the date when the policy was due and payable.

FARMERS' HOME INS. CO. v. CAREY et al.
(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Nov. 25, 1908.)

1. INSURANCE (§ 197*)—MUTUAL FIRE INSURANCE—LIEN—NOTICE.

Under Ky. St. 1903, § 712, giving a co-operative insurance association a lien upon property insured to secure assessments, and providing that on loss the subsequent purchaser or junior lienholder shall be entitled to the benefit of the insurance, the lien operates against a subsequent purchaser, though without notice thereof at the time of purchase.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. § 437; Dec. Dig. § 197.*]

2. INSURANCE (§ 197*)—MUTUAL FIRE INSURANCE—LIEN.

Ky. St. 1903, § 712, giving a co-operative insurance company a lien on the property insured to secure assessments and calls made under the contract, does not provide a lien for membership fees, but simply for assessments and calls.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Dec. Dig. § 197.*]

3. PLEADING (§ 8*)—PETITION—CONCLUSIONS.

Allegations in an action by a co-operative insurance association to recover a delinquent assessment, and enforce its lien therefor on the property insured, that insured was indebted to the association in a certain sum, it being his pro rata of the association's indebtedness at the time of the cancellation of his policy, and that the proportion of the debt of the association to the amount of insurance carried by insured calculated as required by law was a certain sum, were mere conclusions of the pleader, and insufficient to state a cause of action.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 12, 13, 15, 18, 19; Dec. Dig. § 8.*]

4. INSURANCE (§ 197*)—MUTUAL FIRE INSURANCE—ASSESSMENTS—ACTIONS—PETITION—SUFFICIENCY.

To subject insured property to the payment of the pro rata of insured of the indebtedness of a co-operative insurance association, the petition must allege that such pro rata is based upon calls or assessments, and set up the facts showing the same to have been legally made.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. § 447; Dec. Dig. § 197.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Mercer County
"To be officially reported."

Action by the Farmers' Home Insurance Company against Leantie G. Carey and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

C. E. Rankin, for appellant.

CLAY, C. Plaintiff, Farmers' Home Insurance Company, is a co-operative fire insurance association organized under chapter 32, subd. 5, Ky. St. 1903. It insured the property of J. E. Donovan and Artemesia Donovan, located in Cornishville, Ky., for the sum of $400. Thereafter the Donovans sold the property to Leantie G. Carey. Plaintiff instituted this action to recover certain sums due by the Donovans at the time their policy was canceled. It also seeks to enforce its lien given by the statute on the property purchased by Leantie G. Carey and described in the petition. The petition, after setting forth very fully the provisions of the Kentucky Statutes applicable to co-operative insurance associations, its by-laws, and the provisions of the policy, seeks to recover the sum of $2.87, being the amount of membership fee due by the Donovans and evidenced by their note of April 28, 1902, payable on June 28, 1902. It then sets forth certain calls or assessments made by the executive committee of the company, but leaves the amount of such calls or assessments blank. The petition further states: "Plaintiff, further pleading, says that the defendant is indebted to said company in the further sum of $17.49, it being the defendant's pro rata of the company's indebtedness at the time of the cancellation of his policy." The petition also seeks judgment for interest on the note given for membership fee, amounting to 95 cents, and interest on the pro rata of indebtedness, amounting to $3.15; the entire interest amounting to $4.10. It also seeks to recover the penalty of 50 per cent. on the amounts due provided by the statute in case an action has to be brought for the collection of such sums. Leantie G. Carey and her husband demurred to the petition, and their demurrer was sustained. Thereupon plaintiff filed an amended petition stating that the defendants' (Donovans') note for $2.87 was given for their membership fee. After setting out other matters, which it is not necessary to mention, the amended petition also states that "the proportion of the indebtedness of the association, to the amount of insurance carried by the defendants, calculated as is required by law, was the sum of $17.49." The defendants, Leantie G. Carey and her husband, demurred to the amended petition, and, their demurrer being sustained, the petition and amended petition were dismissed, and plaintiff appeals. No brief is filed by counsel for appellees but counsel for appellant states that the lower court sustained the demurrer to the petition and the amended petition because it was not alleged that the defendants, Leantie G. Carey and her husband, had notice of the existence of a lien at the time they purchased the property.

The first question to be considered is whether or not such notice was necessary in order that appellant's claim for assessments and calls against the Donovans might be enforced against the property purchased. The case of Kentucky Farmers' Mutual Insurance Co. v. Mathers, etc., 7 Bush, 23, 3 Am. Rep. 286, involved the question whether or not appellant's charter gave to it a lien on property subsequently purchased by a party without notice. In that case the provision of the statute was as follows: "All buildings insured by and with said company, together with the right, title, and interest of the assured to the lands on which they stand, shall be pledged to the company, and the company shall have a lien thereon against the assured during the continuance of his or her policies." This court held that there was nothing in the charter of appellant in that case from which it could be inferred that it was designed that the lien should operate against a subsequent purchaser, unless the latter should choose to continue the policy by taking an assignment of it in the manner prescribed. The present statute (being a part of section 712, Ky. St. 1903) goes far beyond the provision of the charter under consideration in that case. Its language is as follows: "The corporation shall have a lien upon property insured to secure the payments of such assessments and calls as may be legally made under the contract of insurance, and in case of loss, the subsequent purchaser, or junior lienholder, shall be entitled to the benefit of the insurance, and to the rights, benefits and privileges of the original insurer to the extent of his interest in the property." Here the Legislature has plainly indicated that the lien provided should extend to the property even in the hands of a subsequent purchaser or junior lienholder. Protection is afforded the subsequent purchaser by providing that the rights, benefits, and privileges of the original insurer should inure to the benefit of the subsequent purchaser. We therefore conclude that the lien was given without reference to whether or not the subsequent purchaser had notice of the existence of the policy or of the fact that a lien was claimed. That this view is correct we think may be gathered from the character of the insurance association contemplated in the act of the Legislature. Such insurance companies are purely mutual and co-operative. The only funds which they have arise from the assessments and calls which may be legally made upon the members. If these assessments or calls could be defeated by a sale of the property, it would not be long before such a company would necessarily become insolvent. We think the statute itself is sufficient notice of the fact that a lien on the property purchased may be claimed, and that a subsequent purchaser buys the property with the risk of having it subjected to the payment lawfully due the insurance company by his grantor by reason of calls or assessments that have been legally made. So far, then, as the question of notice is concerned, we are of opinion that the petition and amended petition stated a cause of action against appellees.

However, we are of opinion that the petition and amended petition are defective in other respects. The statute does not provide a lien for membership fees. It simply provides a lien for such assessments and calls as may be legally made under the contract of insurance. As stated above, in alleging circumstances under which the calls or assessments were made, the amount of the calls or assessments was left blank. Furthermore, the allegations of the petition and amended petition with reference to the Donovans' pro rata of the company's indebtedness at the time of the cancellation of the policy, as set out above, are mere conclusions of the pleader, and do not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. Acton v. Farmers' Home Insurance Company, 124 Ky. 677, 40 S. W. 955. In addition to this no lien is given for mere pro rata of indebtedness not founded upon calls or assessments legally made. In order to subject the property of appellees to the payment of the Donovans' pro rata of indebtedness at the time of the cancellation of the policy it should have been made to appear in the petition or amended petition that such pro rata of indebtedness was based upon calls or assessments that had been legally made and the facts showing that the calls or assessments were legally made should have been fully set forth.

As the statute does not provide a lien for membership fees and as the pro rata of indebtedness is not shown to have been based upon calls or assessments which were legally made it necessarily follows that the appellant has not shown itself entitled to a lien upon the property purchased by Leatrice G. Carey. For these reasons then the trial court properly sustained a demurrer to the petition and amended petition.

Judgment affirmed.

LOUISVILLE & N. R. CO. v. DALTON.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Dec. 2, 1906.)

1. RAILROADS (§ 394*)—INJURIES TO PERSONS ON TRACKS—ACTIONS—PLEADING—SUFFICIENCY OF ALLEGATIONS—NEGLIGENCE.

In an action against a railroad company for injuries to a person on the track, it is not necessary that the petition should allege the specific acts constituting defendant's negligence, and a petition charging that defendant negligently ran its engine upon plaintiff was not defective because not alleging that plaintiff was upon the track where he had a right to be, and that the engineer saw him in time to save him from injury by the exercise of ordinary care.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads Cent. Dig. §§ 1332, 1335; Dec. Dig. § 394.*]

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

2. RAILROADS (§ 394*)—INJURIES TO PERSONS ON TRACKS—ACTIONS—PLEADING.

Even if plaintiff were a trespasser, if those in charge of the train negligently injured him, defendant would be liable; but if he was injured at a place where no lookout was required, and those in charge of the train did not discover him in time to save him from injury, that would be matter of defense.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Cent. Dig. §§ 1332, 1335; Dec. Dig. § 394.*]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1066*)—REVIEW—HARMLESS ERROR—REFUSAL OF REQUESTS.

In an action against a railroad for injuries to a person on the track, the refusal to charge that plaintiff was a trespasser, and those in charge of the train owed him no duty until they discovered his peril, was not prejudicial, where it appeared that the engineer saw plaintiff when he was more than 200 yards ahead of the train, and no warning was given.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4229; Dec. Dig. § 1066.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Lincoln County.
"Not to be officially reported."

Personal injury action by William Dalton, by his next friend, against the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Benjamin D. Warfield and J. W. Alcorn, for appellant. T. H. Shanks, W. S. Burch, M. C. Saufley, and G. B. Saufley, for appellee.

NUNN, J. The judgment for $500 appealed from in this case was rendered in favor of appellee, a boy about 12 years of age, who was struck and injured by one of appellant's engines in the town of Rowland, a place of 300 or 400 inhabitants.

The first reason assigned by appellant for reversal is that the petition did not set forth a cause of action, and the court erred in not sustaining its motion for a judgment notwithstanding the verdict. It was alleged in the petition that "the defendant, while engaged in the business of managing, running, and operating an engine and train of cars attached thereto on its line of railway in Lincoln county, Ky., and while actively running, managing, and operating said engine and train, negligently and carelessly ran its engine upon and against plaintiff, William Dalton, thereby inflicting serious and painful injuries upon his person," etc. The point made is that it is not alleged in the petition that William Dalton was on appellant's track at a place where he had a right to be, and that it is not alleged the engineer in charge of the engine saw him in time to have saved him from injury by the exercise of ordinary care. Appellee charged in general terms that his injuries were due to the negligence and carelessness of the appellant. This court has often decided in actions of this character that it is not necessary, in order to state a good cause of action, that the petition should allege the specific acts constituting the negligence; that a general allegation of negligence is sufficient. L. & N. R. Co. v. Wolfe, 80 Ky. 82; L. & N. R. Co. v. Mitchell, 87 Ky. 327, 8 S. W. 706; Newman on Code Pleading (Rev. Ed.) § 324. Conceding Dalton to have been a trespasser at the time he was injured, the persons in charge of the train had no right to negligently and carelessly injure him, and, if they did, they, with their master, are liable to him in damages. If Dalton was at a place on the track where no lookout duty was required of those in charge of the train, and they did not discover his presence in time to have saved him from injury, then they would not have been guilty of negligence. Under such a state of facts, the negligence and carelessness charged in the petition would have been refuted. We are therefore of the opinion that the court did not err in refusing to give a judgment for appellant non obstante verdicto.

The testimony of appellant shows that appellee was walking on the railroad of appellant in the town of Rowland, between the Goshen and Craborchard crossings; that this part of the railroad was customarily used by persons walking, and this fact was known to the persons in charge of the engine that struck appellee. In fact, the engineer so testified, and that he was keeping a lookout and saw appellee when the engine was near Goshen crossing. Several witnesses for appellee stated that they were near the Craborchard crossing and saw the boy coming towards them, walking on the ends of the ties and the train following him, coming down-grade, the steam shut off, and was "rolling" at the rate of 15 or 20 miles an hour; that the engineer was at his post of duty, with his head out of the window, looking forward in the direction of appellee; that the whistle was not blown nor the bell rung for the crossings or to give the boy warning of the approach of the train until about the time it struck him; that the reason they knew this they listened and wondered why the whistle was not sounded or the bell rung to give warning to appellee of the approach of the train. Appellant complains because the court refused to instruct the jury that appellee was a trespasser on its track, and those in charge of its train owed him no duty until they discovered his peril. Even conceding that, under the proof in this case, they owed appellee no lookout duty, the refusal to give such an instruction was not prejudicial, for the testimony showed that the engineer saw appellee when he was more than 200 yards in advance of the train—this the engineer admits—and no warning of any kind was given of the approach of the train. That there was no warning given the engineer disputes, but the preponderance of the evidence is against him on this point. The testimony, however, is conflicting on the question of whether or not appellee was a trespasser on appellant's track at the time he was hurt. Much of it conduced to show that appellant's track between the crossings named was, and had been for many years, constantly used by the traveling public, and by persons the back of whose premises abutted the right of way of appellant, and this was so open, notorious, and continued for such a length of time as to create a presumption that it was with the knowledge and acquiescence of appellant. Under the facts in evidence the court properly instructed the jury. I. C. R. R. Co. v. Murphy's Adm'r, 123 Ky. 787, 97 S. W. 729, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 352; Rader's Adm'r v. L. & N. R. R. Co., 104 S. W. 774, 31 Ky. Law Rep. 1105; L. & N. R. R. Co. v. McNary's Adm'r's, 108 S. W. 898, 32 Ky. Law Rep. 1266.

For these reasons, the judgment of the lower court is affirmed.

CINCINNATI, N. O. & T. P. RY. CO. v. JOHNICA'S ADM'R.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Nov. 27, 1908.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 265*)—INJURY TO EMPLOYÉ—BURDEN OF PROOF.

In an action for death of an employé, the burden is upon plaintiff to make out his case, and, if upon the evidence introduced by him the presumption in favor of the conclusion that decedent was killed as claimed is no stronger than the presumption that he was killed in some other way, the burden is not sustained.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 894-908; Dec. Dig. § 265.*]

2. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 276*)—DEATH OF EMPLOYÉ—EVIDENCE.

In an action for death of an employé, plaintiff's evidence held not to show with any certainty how decedent came to his death.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Dec. Dig. § 276.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court; Grant County.
"Not to be officially reported."

Death action by William E. Johnica's administrator against the Cincinnati, New Orleans & Texas Pacific Railway Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded.

John Galvin and A. G. DeJarnette, for appellant. A. S. Hagan, Clore, Dickerson & Clayton, and W. M. Beckner, for appellee.

HOBSON, J. William E. Johnica was a brakeman on a freight train of the Cincinnati, New Orleans & Texas Pacific Railway Company. He lost his life while in the service of the company, and this suit was brought by his personal representative to recover for his death, on the ground that the loss of his life was by reason of the negligence of the company. On a trial of the case in the circuit court a verdict and judgment were rendered in favor of the plaintiff for $7,000, and the defendant appeals.

The only question we find it necessary to consider on the appeal is whether the court should have instructed the jury peremptorily to find for the defendant. The proof introduced on behalf of the plaintiff was, in substance, as follows: John J. Johnica testified that he was a brother of the deceased, who was 21 years old at his death; that he was earning $70 or $80 a month, and was in good health. J. N. Underwood testified that he was the conductor of the train on which Johnica was killed; that the train left Cincinnati at 10:20 p. m. on September 25, 1907. The train consisted of 35 cars, 2 engines, and a caboose. William Johnica was the front brakeman, L. B. Wells was the rear brakeman, and Underwood was the conductor. When the train had reached Crittenden it was discovered that a brake beam had worked off the top of a wheel of one of the cars, causing fire to fly from it. The train was stopped south of Crittenden for the purpose of adjusting the trouble shortly after midnight. It was a dark, rainy night. After the train stopped, Johnica went under the car with a lantern for the purpose of adjusting the beam. At this point the plaintiff turned the witness over to the defendant to cross-examine; and on cross-examination he stated that he was on the first engine; that there were three cars between him and the next engine, and the car where the trouble was was seven cars back of the second engine; that he went back to this car and he and Johnica both went under it, after giving the engineer a signal to stand still, and sending the flagman back; that Johnica, when they found they needed some tools, went to the second engine for a hammer and came back with it; that they then got the brake beam out, and Johnica took the hammer back to the engine, while he took the pieces of iron they had taken off from under the car. Johnica returned and got up on the train with his lantern, and he returned to the engine after signalling to the engineer to call in the flagman. When he reached the engine, Johnica gave a signal from the top of the car for the train to go forward. The train moved forward 12 or 15 car lengths, and then stopped because the flagman had not come in. The flagman came in, and a signal was given them to go ahead from the top of the car. They then went ahead. He saw Johnica no more, and, when they reached the next station, Johnica was missing. The plaintiff then introduced O. Vallandigham, who stated that he was an undertaker, and that the next morning between 5 and 6 o'clock he found the remains of William Johnica near the Henderson Rouse crossing near Crittenden. His head was between the rails. His body was cut in two at the small of the back. The face was down, the lower part of the body was just a little way from the rail, and appeared as though he was on his knees. His toes did not seem to be touching the ground. His feet were sticking out towards the gutter.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

but they were not straightened out. Near his body he saw something like a crowbar or a long wrench, something of that kind, about two feet long. North of his body, and a few feet from it, was his lantern setting between the rails. The globe was broken. Henderson Rouse then stated that he lived about 50 or 60 feet from the line of the railroad, and a short distance south of the crossing referred to; that in the night he heard a train stop there, heard it back up and a good deal of loud talking, heard the train jerk and pull up and back. They were there for a considerable while. He could not tell whether they were backing or pulling. He could tell they were jerking the cars. They did that several times before they pulled out. They pulled up and stopped for a while, and then backed and then, when they pulled up, he could hear the cars jerk and then they pulled out and went on. About 3 o'clock he learned a man had been killed and went out on the railroad. His hat was lying on the ties about two ties north of him. The lantern, with the globe broken, was two or three ties north of his hat. The body was on the west rail, or next to his house, and about seven rails from the crossing just at the north edge of his yard. He did not see any tools or wrench or crowbar or anything of the kind. R. H. Wild testified that he reached the scene of the accident shortly after Rouse, and described what he saw substantially as Rouse did. L. B. Wells, the flagman, testified that he was sent back to flag when the train stopped, and that, when they gave the signal for the flagman to come in, he started to the train, but, before he got up to it, the train started on; that he then signaled them to stop, and, when the fireman saw his signal, the train was stopped, and he got aboard of the train. He did not see any light on the train as he came up. If he had been looking, that he might have seen a light, but that he was not paying attention to see whether there was anybody on top or not. He was signaling them down as he went along, and when he got on the caboose, he gave the signal for them to go ahead, and heard somebody in front halloo, "That will do." Ed. McGuire testified substantially as Rouse and Wild to seeing the body when they got there, but he did not see any wrench or other tool. On this proof the plaintiff rested his case. The defendant thereupon moved the court to instruct the jury peremptorily to find for it. The court overruled the motion, and the defendant introduced the other men on the train, who testified substantially as the conductor; the engineers on both the engines testifying to seeing a light on top of the car, and the engineer and the fireman on the second engine testifying to Johnica coming up to that engine and borrowing a hammer and bringing the hammer back after he and the conductor had finished the work under the car. At the conclusion of all the evidence the defendant again moved the court to instruct the jury peremptorily to find for it, and the court overruled the motion.

It is insisted for the plaintiff that the proof warrants the conclusion that the train stopped but once, and that Johnica was killed at the place where this stop was made when going under the car for some purpose connected with the work to be done under there, and that the positive testimony of the conductor to the effect that he went up on the cars after he had finished the work under the car cannot be believed in view of the testimony of Rouse and the other facts shown. It is also insisted that, when we look at the evidence introduced in behalf of the defendant, there are contradictions in the evidence making it proper that the case should be left to the jury. The burden of proof is upon the plaintiff to make out his case and, if upon the evidence introduced by him the presumption in favor of the conclusion that Johnica was killed as claimed by him is no stronger than the presumption that he was killed in some other way, the plaintiff fails. The trouble with the plaintiff's case is that when we reject the testimony of the conductor, and the other witnesses who were present, we have no evidence as to how Johnica was killed. If we credit their testimony, he evidently fell from the top of the car, in the dark and in the rain, about the time that it started up after the flagman got in. He might have fallen from the car in this way, and been killed just as he was found; for it must be remembered that a long train of cars had passed over him after he fell and before he was found. If he was not killed after he reached the top of the car, as stated by all the witnesses who were there and saw him, then there is a failure of proof to show how he was killed. We do not see that the testimony of Rouse contradicts substantially the testimony of the railroad witnesses. If the train stopped, as they say, the front of it would not have been very far from Rouse's house. Fifteen car lengths would be less than half the length of the train, and, as he was in his house and in bed, he could not tell very accurately just where the train was, and he does not undertake to do so. We think his testimony does show that there was more than one stop of the train and more than one starting. But we do not rest our judgment here. We rest our judgment on the fact that, when we reject the positive testimony of the witnesses on the ground, there is nothing in the case to show with any certainty how the deceased came to his death. In Wintuska's Adm'r v. L. & N. R. R. Co., 20 S. W. 819, 14 Ky. Law Rep. 579, no one saw how the deceased was killed. He was missing from the train. Some of the trainmen went back, and found his body in the cut where a ledge of rock projected. A man going down the side of a ladder would be in danger of coming in contact with the rock. There was a wound upon the right side of his head, which would be the side next to the rock if he was going down the ladder, and his coupling stick was found upon a projecting part of the ledge about 10 feet up from the ground, where it was supposed he probably threw it by the action of his hands when he came in contact with the rock. The court said that it was as reasonable to suppose that he became dizzy and stumbled in the darkness or in some other manner fell from the top of the car, and sustained the circuit court in giving the jury a peremptory instruction. In Hughes v. Cincinnati Railroad Company, 91 Ky. 526, 16 S. W. 275, after a freight train had passed through several tunnels in close succession, a brakeman was found on one of the box cars in a dying condition. There were some loose timbers hanging from the roof of one of the tunnels, and the plaintiff insisted that his intestate was struck by these timbers; but there being no evidence that he was in fact so struck, and it being equally probable that he had been struck in one of the other tunnels, a peremptory instruction was approved, on the ground that circumstances were merely presented upon which one might theorize as to the cause of the accident, but which did not show with any certainty how the accident occurred. In Early's Adm'r v. Louisville, etc., R. R. Co., 115 Ky. 13, 72 S. W. 348, the deceased was found dead on the railroad track; but, the evidence not showing whether he was walking on the track or attempting to cross it or lying on it, it was held that a peremptory instruction for the defendant was properly given. To same effect, see L. & N. R. R. Co. v. Vittitoe's Adm'r, 41 S. W. 269, 19 Ky. Law Rep. 612; Morris' Adm'r v. L. & N. R. R. Co., 61 S. W. 41, 22 Ky. Law Rep. 1593. This case falls squarely within the rule laid down in the above cases, and on the plaintiff's evidence the court should have instructed the jury peremptorily to find for the defendant. The defendant's evidence did not strengthen the plaintiff's case in any way; on the contrary, taken as a whole, it confirmed the testimony of the conductor, and there is no such inconsistency in the testimony of the witnesses as to render their testimony unworthy of credit. But, if we reject altogether the testimony of the railroad men and assume that the deceased was killed while crawling under the car and at the point where it first stopped, still there is no evidence to show under what circumstances he so went under the car or to charge the men controlling the train with notice of his perilous position or to impute to them negligence in moving it as they did. None of the witnesses who were first at the body saw the crowbar or wrench seen by the undertaker, and there is no evidence whatever that the deceased at any time had such a tool.

Judgment reversed, and cause remanded for further proceedings consistent herewith.

JENKINS v. COMMONWEALTH.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Nov. 24, 1908.

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1159*)—PLEA—REVIEW—EVIDENCE.

A conviction will not be reversed as contrary to the weight of the evidence, when there is any evidence to show accused's guilt.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. 3074-3083; Dec. Dig. § 1159.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1134*)—PLEA—NEW TRIAL—DENIAL—REVIEW.

Under Cr. Code Prac. § 281, providing that the decisions of the court on motion for a new trial should not be subject to exception, the Court of Appeals has no power to review the action of the trial court in denying a new trial in a criminal case.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2587, 3067-3071; Dec. Dig. § 1134.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Jefferson County, Criminal Branch.

"Not to be officially reported."

Harry Jenkins was convicted of murder, and he appeals. Affirmed.

E. E. McKay and W. H. Sweeney, for appellant. James Breathitt, Atty. Gen., and T. B. Blakey, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the Commonwealth.

NUNN, J. Appellant, a man about 28 years of age, was indicted with Willie Little, a boy about 16 years of age, for the murder of Frederick Baker, which was alleged to have been committed about June, 1906. He was convicted and given a life sentence. The appeal has been pending since November, 1907, and was submitted only a few days ago, and then without any brief in the record for appellant. We have examined the record with care to see if any errors were committed by the lower court which would authorize a reversal for appellant. The instructions given by the court to the jury were as favorable to appellant as he was entitled to. There were no errors committed by the court in the admission and rejection of testimony which were objected to by appellant. There was testimony introduced by the Commonwealth by two persons who professed to be eyewitnesses to the killing, whose testimony, if true, and the jury had the right to believe them, showed the killing of Baker by appellant was willfully and maliciously done, and without any reasonable excuse. There was testimony to the contrary introduced by appellant; but we have no power to reverse when there is any evidence conducing to show the guilt of the accused. The jury's province is to pass upon the weight of the evidence.

Appellant moved for a new trial in the lower court upon the ground of newly discovered evidence, and claimed that one of the witnesses who testified for the Commonwealth was of such bad character that she was not entitled to credit, and that the coroner who held the inquest over deceased would have testified that the bullet which killed Baker was of a different size than some of the evidence produced upon the trial showed had been used in inflicting the death wound. The matter of refusing or granting a new trial is within the discretion of the lower court, and we cannot disturb its finding in any case, except when it be made plain that it has abused its discretion; but in a criminal case it seems that by section 281, Cr. Code Prac., we are altogether prevented from disturbing the action of the lower court in the refusal of a new trial.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes.

For these reasons, the judgment of the lower court is affirmed.

CINCINNATI, N. O. & T. P. RY. CO.
v. FORTNER.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Dec. 1, 1908.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 289*)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

Where, notwithstanding an employé who was injured while approaching the time check window, with several hundred other employes, by his foot striking a box filled with hot water and acid used for cleaning lubricators, knocking off the lid, and being immersed therein, knew the position of the box, he did not know that the top was not securely fastened and thought that it was, and the employer's rules required him, in company with the other employes, to come daily in close proximity to the box, and they habitually walked over it, he was not guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 1089-1132; Dec. Dig. § 289.*]

2. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 107*)—DUTY OF MASTER—SAFE PLACE IN WHICH TO WORK.

Where the lid of a box filled with hot water and acid used for cleaning lubricators is so constructed and maintained that it does not afford reasonable protection to employes required to be near or about it, the employer is liable for injury to an employé because of such unsafe construction or maintenance.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Dec. Dig. § 107.*]

3. DAMAGES (§ 95*)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—DAMAGES.

An injured employé may recover such sum as will reasonably compensate him for loss of earnings and pain and suffering of mind and body, not exceeding the amount claimed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Damages, Cent. Dig. §§ 222-224; Dec. Dig. § 95.*]

4. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 229*)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

An employé is bound to exercise ordinary care for his own protection.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 674; Dec. Dig. § 229.*]

5. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 227*)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

Notwithstanding an employer may have been negligent, if the employé was also guilty of negligence without which the accident would not have occurred, there can be no recovery.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 668; Dec. Dig. § 227.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Kenton County.

"Not to be officially reported."

Action for personal injuries by John Fortner against the Cincinnati, New Orleans &

Texas Pacific Railway Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

E. J. Tracy and Galvin & Galvin, for appellant. Walker C. Hall and S. W. Adams, for appellee.

BARKER, J. At the time of the accident involved in this litigation, the appellant, Cincinnati, New Orleans & Texas Pacific Railway Company, in and about its shops and yards at Ludlow, Ky., employed a large number of men. Under a rule of the company these men were required to apply at a certain window in the south wall of the engine room for what are called in the record "time checks," and, when they quit work, they were required to deposit these time checks at the same window. In this way the employes came to the window in question several times each day. Near the check room window, up against the south wall of the building, was placed an iron box about 3 feet long, from 15 to 18 inches wide, and about 15 inches deep. This box was filled with hot water and some kind of acid, and was used for the purpose of cleaning lubricators and other like instruments, which for that purpose were sunk in the hot acid. The box was placed in the ground, but projected above the level of the earth from one to four inches. It was covered by a flat piece of sheet iron laid over it; and this cover or top was fastened by an "L" slot, which fitted around a pipe going down into the box or tank. The appellee had been in the employ of the company some 10 or 12 months, and, with the other employes, had regularly each work day applied for his check at the window, and knew of the position of the box, but did not know that the top could be knocked off by being struck with the foot. On the occasion when he was injured, the appellee, and several hundred other employes, were approaching the window for their time checks. The appellee's foot struck the box in question, knocking off the lid, and his foot was immersed in the hot acid, burning it most severely. To recover damages for this injury he instituted this action, charging negligence on the part of the appellant company in failing to afford him a safe place in which to do the work at which he was engaged. The appellant answered, denying all the material allegations of the petition, and affirmatively pleading the contributory negligence of the plaintiff. The issues were completed by reply, and a trial resulted in a verdict in favor of the plaintiff for $1,000.

It is insisted on this appeal that the trial court erred in refusing to grant the defendant company a peremptory instruction to the jury to find a verdict in its favor; it being said in support of this position that the evidence showed that the employé knew the box was there, and by his own negligence he walked over it, kicked off the lid, and injured himself. It is true the plaintiff in his testimony shows that he knew the position of the box, and perhaps knew the contents of it; but it utterly fails to show that he knew the box top was not securely fastened so as to prevent an inadvertent step from removing the top and precipitating the foot of the unwary employé in the highly dangerous fluid contained therein. On the contrary, we think the evidence shows without contradiction that the appellee thought the box was securely fastened. The men habitually walked over it, and there is testimony in the record that more than once before the accident in question the top had been knocked off by some employé's foot inadvertently coming in contact with it, although the appellee did not know of this. This case does not come within the principle announced in Wilson's Adm'r v. Chess & Wymond Co., 117 Ky. 567, 78 S. W. 453. There the employé knew the pool in which he was dipping kegs was unprotected, and was full of hot water. He also knew there was a rim of ice around the pool; and with this knowledge he went to the edge of it, slipped upon the ice, and fell into the hot water, and was injured. The case we have here is very different in principle from that above cited. Here the employé knew the position of the box, but he saw it was covered and apparently secure. The business of his employer, and its rules, required him, in company with several hundred other employés, to come daily in close proximity with this box. He had a right to assume that so dangerous a thing was securely fastened. Now, if this box had been open and fully exposed to view, with hot steam arising from the acid, bringing home to the employé the danger of stepping in it, then the case would be within the principle announced in Wilson's Adm'r v. Chess & Wymond Co., supra; but here, with the top on and apparently secure, the box constituted a veritable trap for the foot of the unwary workman whose duty called him about it. The evidence shows without contradiction that the employés walked over this box constantly. One of the witnesses being asked the height of the box above the surface of the earth said that it was an inch above ordinarily, but that the feet of the men constantly walking over it sometimes wore the earth away so that the box projected as much as four inches above the surface of the earth. We think the court correctly overruled the motion for a peremptory instruction.

The court instructed the jury as follows:

"(1) The jury is instructed that it is the duty of the master to furnish the servant with a reasonably safe place in which to perform the work assigned to him, and a reasonably safe means of ingress and egress to and from such place, and, if the jury believe from all the evidence that the lid of the box described in the proof was so constructed and maintained that it did not afford reasonable protection at the place and for the purpose for which said box was designed and used to the plaintiff and other employés required by their employment to be near or about said box, and if they further believe from the evidence that such construction or maintenance of said lid was not such as ordinarily careful and prudent men in the same or similar circumstances would use, and if the jury further believe that the plaintiff was injured by reason of the unsafe construction or maintenance of said box, if either there was, and the plaintiff himself was in the exercise of ordinary care for his own safety, then they shall find for the plaintiff; otherwise, for the defendant.

"(2) The court instructs the jury that, if they find for the plaintiff herein, they will award him such sum in damages as will reasonably compensate him for his loss of earnings, if any, resulting immediately from the injuries received, not exceeding the sum of $90, and for such further sum as will reasonably compensate the plaintiff for his pain and suffering of mind and body, if any, the immediate and direct result of the injuries received, not exceeding in all the sum of $1,990, the amount prayed for in the petition.

"(3) The court instructs the jury that the defendant in the operation of its business had the right to place the box and the contents thereof, described in the proof, in the place described in the proof, and that it was only required to exercise ordinary care to have said box and place in a reasonably safe condition, and that the plaintiff was bound to exercise ordinary care for his own safety and protection in or near the vicinity of said box.

"(4) The court instructs the jury that even if they should believe that the defendant was negligent in regard to said box under any of the other instructions given to you herein, and also believe that the plaintiff was guilty of negligence contributing to said accident, and without which the said accident would not have occurred, then your verdict must be for the defendant."

These instructions correctly presented the law of the case, and we think the facts fully justified the verdict of the jury.

Judgment affirmed.

BEST et al. v. HOUSE et al.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Dec. 2, 1908.)

1. DEEDS (§ 211*)—PARTIES—CAPACITY TO CONVEY—EVIDENCE.

Evidence held to sustain a finding that a grantor had sufficient mental capacity to make a conveyance.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Deeds, Cent. Dig. §§ 638-642; Dec. Dig. § 211.*]

2. DEEDS (§ 68*)—GRANTOR'S MENTAL CAPACITY—EXTENT.

Where a grantor had sufficient mental capacity to make a will, he had sufficient capacity to execute a deed, to take effect after his death, vesting in his daughters an estate for life, remainder to their children.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Deeds, Cent. Dig. §§ 149-155; Dec. Dig. § 68.*]

3. DEEDS (§ 196*)—UNDUE INFLUENCE—PRESUMPTIONS.

Where a grantor had no legitimate children, and was under a moral obligation to provide for the grantees, his illegitimate daughters, the fact that he had illicit relations with the grantees' mother, and that she did not testify in a suit to set aside the deeds, was insufficient to create a presumption of undue influence on her part.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Deeds, Cent. Dig. § 587; Dec. Dig. § 196.*]

4. BASTARDS (§ 16*)—SUPPORT—OBLIGATION OF PARENT.

Where a father knows with certainty that he is the father of illegitimate children, a natural obligation rests on him to provide for them, which is greater than any obligation owed by him to collateral kin.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bastards, Cent. Dig. §§ 21-23; Dec. Dig. § 16.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Madison County.

"Not to be officially reported."

Action by Lucy Best and another against Emma House and another. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

C. J. Bronston, A. B. Burnam & Son, J. Tavis Cobb, and J. A. Sullivan, for appellants. Smith & Smith and Grant E. Lilly, for appellees.

NUNN, J. This is an appeal from a judgment of the Madison circuit court, rendered in an action in equity, by which appellants sought to have a deed, conveying about 380 acres of land to appellees, Emma House and Tommie Osborn, canceled. The deed was executed to them by their father, T. C. Bronston. The daughters, Emma House and Tommie Osborn, took a life estate under the deed with the remainder to their children.

Appellants assail the conveyance upon three grounds: First, mental incapacity on the part of T. C. Bronston; second, undue influence exercised by the grantees in obtaining it; third, groundless prejudice against appellants by the grantor.

The issues having been formed, the parties took the depositions of about 60 witnesses. Appellants took 14 of the depositions, and appellees the remainder. The testimony of appellants' witnesses tended to show that T.

C. Bronston was about 82 years old at the time he executed the deed; that the weight of age and the ravages of dissipation had impaired his intellect; that the last three or four years of his life he was constantly under the influence of strong drink, and the most of the time drunk; that he suffered his farm to go to wreck and grow up in weeds; that he had many cattle, hogs, horses, and mules; that some of the horses and mules were five or six years old, and had never been broken, and that he failed to sell his stock, although offered good prices for it. About two-thirds of appellants' witnesses gave it as their opinion that Bronston's mind was so weak that he could not protect himself in any business transaction, and the other third seemed to be unable to express an opinion upon the subject of the condition of his mind. The most of appellees' witnesses, some of them being physicians, stated that they were well acquainted with Bronston to the date of his death, and gave it as their opinion that he was fully competent to transact business, and that he fully understood what he was doing when he executed the conveyance. One or two of appellees' witnesses stated that Bronston had told them, years before his death, and when he was not feeble, that he intended to give his home to his daughters, appellees. The lawyer who wrote the deed for Bronston testified that he prepared the deed under his directions, and that the first one he wrote and read to Bronston was found by him not to be correct, for by it the fee was conveyed to appellees when his intention was to convey to them a life estate with remainder to their children, and the deed was prepared to meet this view. Bronston carried the deed to the county court clerk's office, and there acknowledged it. The lawyer, the clerk, and his deputy all testified that Bronston appeared to be sober, and fully competent to understand exactly what he was doing. They all stated that neither appellees nor any one else was present when the deed was prepared and executed. In view of this evidence we are of the opinion that the lower court was correct in determining that Bronston had sufficient mental capacity, at the date of the execution of the deed, to bind himself and his heirs by the conveyance.

Appellants' counsel concede that he might have had capacity sufficient to make a valid will at the date of the conveyance, but contend that he did not have to make a deed, and cite many cases showing that it requires more mental capacity to make a deed than it does to make a will. The cases in effect hold that a vendor must have mental strength and understanding to compete with his business antagonist and to protect his own interest; but the testator has no antagonist to meet, and is not called on to consider whether or not he will be benefited or injured by the act in which he is engaged; that the ordi-many business affairs of life involve a contest of reason, judgment, experience, and the exercise of mental powers not necessary to the testamentary disposition of property. See Bramel v. Bramel, 101 Ky. 75, 39 S. W. 520; American & English Ency. of Law, vol. 28, p. 74, and Ring v. Lawles, 190 Ill. 520, 60 N. E. 881. These authorities do not aid appellants in this case, for the reason that the conveyance executed by Bronston, and which is assailed, partakes of a testamentary document. Like a will, the conveyance did not take effect during the life of the grantor. It gave to his daughters, appellees, the land for their lives, and then to their children, reserving to the grantor the use and control of the farm during his life; and, in the execution of it, it did not require any more reason, judgment, experience, and the exercise of mental powers than if he had at that time executed a will instead of the conveyance.

The proof shows that Bronston's wife died 15 or 20 years before he did, that he never had any legitimate children, and that appellees are his collateral kindred. It is admitted in the record that Bronston, for more than 30 years before his death, sustained immoral relations with Maria Lakes, the mother of appellees, Emma House and Tommie Osborn; that they were the children of T. C. Bronston, and were so recognized by him from their births to his death; that he treated them as such, furnished them with the necessities of life, and aided in their education. The charge by appellants that the execution of the deed was unduly influenced by appellees and their mother is without support in the testimony; there not being the slightest testimony that they exercised any influence whatever in obtaining the conveyance. Appellants contend, however, that as Bronston assumed immoral relations with appellees' mother, Maria Lakes, the presumption is that she unduly influenced him to execute the conveyance, and that, as Maria Lakes failed to give her deposition, the presumption referred to was sufficient to authorize the court to cancel the deed upon that ground. We cannot agree with this proposition, viz., that a deed should be canceled upon such presumption. Bronston was under a moral obligation to provide for appellees, and there was no proof that they importuned or attempted to influence him in any manner to make the conveyance, and it will not do to cancel a deed, made under such circumstances, upon a presumption arising from the mere fact that their father had illicit relations with their mother. There was no evidence introduced showing any prejudice of any character by Bronston towards appellants, except at one time he had not felt kindly towards one of his nephews on account of some trivial matter. We approve the following language of the lower court, to wit: "When the father knows with certainty that he is the father of illegitimate children, a natural obligation rests upon him to make provision for them, and when, as in this case, there are no legitimate issue, that natural obligation is greater than any obligation to his collateral kin."

For these reasons the judgment of the lower court is affirmed.

MOSEBY v. COMMONWEALTH.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Dec. 1, 1908.)

CRIMINAL LAW (§ 534*)—EVIDENCE—CONFESSIONS—CORROBORATION.

Ky. St. 1903, § 1162, makes it an offense to break into an outbuilding and steal chickens therefrom. Cr. Code, Prac. § 240, provides that a confession by one accused of crime will not warrant a conviction, unless accompanied by other proof that the offense was committed. Held, that a confession by one charged with a violation of section 1162 will not support a conviction, where there is no evidence other than the confession that there were chickens in the building at the time of defendant's entry therein.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 534.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Fayette County.

"Not to be officially reported."

Will Moseby was convicted of breaking into an outbuilding and stealing chickens therefrom, and appeals. Reversed, and new trial granted.

J. Franklin Wallace, for appellant. Jas. Breathitt, Atty. Gen., Tom B. McGregor, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the Commonwealth.

O'REAR, C. J. Appellant was indicted and convicted, charged with feloniously breaking into an outbuilding in connection with another's dwelling house and stealing therefrom three chickens, of the value of $1.50. He was sentenced to five years' penitentiary servitude.

While he confessed, out of court, to having committed the offense, though denying it at the trial, there is no other evidence that the act charged was committed. To complete the offense charged two facts must be established: (1) The felonious breaking into the house; (2) and stealing some article of property therefrom. There was other evidence that the henhouse had been broken into, and as it was in the nighttime it is fairly inferable that the intent was felonious. There is also other evidence that the prosecutrix's chickens had been taken, but when is not shown. There is no other evidence that the chickens were, or ever had been, in the chicken house. Section 240, Code Cr. Prac. reads: "A confession of a defendant unless made in open court will not warrant a conviction, unless accompanied with other proof that such an offense was committed." As under section 1162, Ky. St. 1903, under which appellant was being prosecuted, it was essential to establish both the breaking and the taking before he could be found guilty. A failure by the commonwealth to establish the taking was as fatal as would have been her failure to show there had been a breaking into the outhouse. There was not then other evidence that the offense charged had been committed. In that state of the record the court should have peremptorily instructed the jury to find the defendant not guilty.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes.

Other matters complained of, being questions of practice that may not rise again, are not passed upon.

Judgment reversed, and cause remanded for new trial consistent herewith.

HESSIG v. HESSIG'S ADM'R et al.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Nov. 27, 1908.)

APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 14*)—RIGHT OF REVIEW—CROSS-APPEALS—PERSONS NOT PARTIES IN APPELLATE COURT.

Under the express provisions of Civ. Code Prac. § 755, an appellee may obtain a cross-appeal at any time before trial by an entry on the records of the Court of Appeals, but a cross-appeal can only be granted as against an appellant who brings the original appeal to the Court of Appeals, since parties not before the court on appeal are not affected by cross-appeals, and, if it is desired to have the judgment reviewed as to other parties, the complaining party must prosecute an original appeal which he may do notwithstanding the pendency of the appeal between other parties.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 47; Dec. Dig. § 14.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, McCracken County.

"To be officially reported."

Action between H. T. Hessig and Catherine Hessig's administrator and others. From the judgment, there was an appeal and cross-appeal. On motion to extend the order granting a cross-appeal so as to grant a cross-appeal against a person not a party on appeal. Denied.

D. G. Park, for the motion. Wheeler, Hughes & Berry, opposed.

O'REAR, C. J. The circuit court rendered a judgment partially in favor of Hessig's guardian and partly disappointing to him. Both parties took exception to the judgment, and each prayed an appeal to this court. Appellant prosecuted the appeal in due season: Thereupon appellee, Hessig's guardian, prayed and was granted a cross-appeal against the appellant. He now complains because the order did not also grant a cross-appeal against the Fidelity & Deposit Company, who was also a party in the circuit court, and who was a surety it is alleged upon the obligation in suit.

By section 755, Civ. Code Prac., the appellee may obtain a cross-appeal, at any time before trial, by an entry on the records of the Court of Appeals; but a cross-appeal can only be granted as against the appellant who brings the original appeal to this court. Parties not before this court on the appeal are not affected by a cross-appeal. Davless County v. Howard, 13 Bush, 101. If other parties are concerned, and it is desired to have the judgment reviewed on appeal as against them, the party complaining must prosecute his appeal by original appeal, which he may do notwithstanding the pendency of the appeal between other parties.

Motion to extend the order is denied.

WILSON et al. v. SHUMATE et al.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Nov. 25, 1908.)

1. DEEDS (§ 105*)—CONSTRUCTION—GRANTEES—"CHILDREN."

While the word "children" as a rule is used in deeds and wills as a word of purchase, it is frequently used as a synonym for "heirs," and this may always be shown by or deduced from a consideration of the whole instrument.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Deeds, Dec. Dig. § 105.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 2, pp. 1115-1140; vol. 8, p. 7601.]

2. DEEDS (§ 124*)—CONSTRUCTION—ESTATES CONVEYED—LANGUAGE OF INSTRUMENT—"CHILDREN."

The caption of a deed stated the grantees as "trustee for C. and her children." The granting and habendum clauses stated him as "trustee for C., her heirs and assigns." The warranty was to "C., her heirs and assigns." Held that, in view of the exclusive use of the words "heirs" and "assigns" in all the parts of the deed which conveyed or warranted the estate, the word "children" in the caption, which was merely descriptive personæ of the grantee, was used by the grantors in the sense of "heirs," and the deed conveyed an equitable fee-simple estate to C.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Deeds, Cent. Dig. §§ 346-351; Dec. Dig. § 124.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Nicholas County.

"To be officially reported."

Action by E. S. Wilson and others against Filmore Shumate and others for the construction of a deed. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Morgan & Darragh, for appellants. Holmes & Ross, for appellees.

BARKER, J. The object of this litigation is to obtain a construction of the following deed:

"This indenture made this 18th day of September, 1856, between Wilford N. Rickey and Sallie Rickey, his wife, of the county of Nicholas and state of Kentucky, of the one part, and Lewis Feeback, as trustee for Catherine Shumate and her children, of the county of Bourbon and state aforesaid, of the other part, witnesseth:

"That the said Wilford N. Rickey and Sallie, his wife, for and in consideration of the sum of six hundred dollars in hand paid, the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, hath granted, bargained and sold, and by these presents do grant, bargain and sell unto said

Lewis Feeback, as trustee for Catherine Shumate, her heirs and assigns, all that tract or parcel of land situated, lying and being in Nicholas county, Kentucky, on the waters of Panther creek, and bounded as follows, to wit: [Metes and bounds omitted.]

"To have and to hold the land hereby conveyed with the appurtenances unto the said Lewis Feeback, as trustee for Catherine Shumate, her heirs and assigns forever. And the said Wilford N. Rickey and Sallie Rickey, his wife, for themselves, their heirs, executors and administrators, the aforesaid tract or parcel of land and appurtenances unto the said Catherine Shumate, her heirs and assigns against the claim or claims of all and every person or persons whatsoever, do and will forever warrant and defend by these presents. In witness whereof the said Wilford N. Rickey and Sallie Rickey, his wife, who hereby relinquishes her right of dower in and to the land hereby conveyed in this deed hath hereunto set their hands and seals the day and year first above written.

"[Signed]

W. N. Rickey.

"Sallie Rickey."

The particular question for adjudication is whether or not the grantee, Catherine Shumate (now Ogden), took an equitable estate for life, or in common, or in fee simple. The plaintiffs (appellants) contend for either the first or second construction, and the defendant (appellee) for the third.

Appellants' claim is based upon the fact that the deed in naming the parties thereto states the grantee as "Lewis Feeback," trustee for Catherine Shumate and her children, and they insist that the word "children" as used is a word of purchase, and not of inheritance, and therefore the children of Catherine Shumate were beneficiaries of the trust established by the deed, and either took with her as tenants in common or as remaindermen after the expiration of her life estate. On the other hand, the appellee Filmore Shumate, who is the vendee of Catherine Shumate, insists that, taking the deed as a whole, the word "children" is used as a synonym for "heirs," and is a word of inheritance, and not of purchase, and therefore Catherine Shumate took an equitable estate in fee simple. The granting clause of the deed is as follows: "Do grant, bargain and sell unto said Lewis Feeback, as trustee for Catherine Shumate, her heirs and assigns." The habendum is as follows: "To have and to hold the land hereby conveyed with the appurtenances unto the said Lewis Feeback, as trustee for Catherine Shumate, her heirs and assigns forever." The warranty is to "Catherine Shumate, her heirs and assigns against the claim or claims of all and every person or persons whatsoever." It is insisted that the use of the word "children" in the caption of the deed cannot control the words "heirs" and "assigns" which are used in all those parts which convey or warrant the estate. While the word "children" as a rule, is used in deeds and wills as a word of purchase, it is not universally so. On the contrary, it is frequently used as a synonym for "heirs," and this may always be shown by or deduced from a consideration of the whole instrument wherein it occurs. The rule on this subject is thus stated in McFarland, etc., v. Hatchett, 118 Ky. 423, 90 S. W. 1185: "The word 'children' is a word of purchase, and not of limitation, and therefore, where property is devised or conveyed to a woman and her children, the children take as joint tenants with the mother, where there is nothing to show a contrary intention. [Authorities omitted.] But, where there are other words in the will or deed showing that the word 'children' was used in the sense of heirs, as where they are followed by the word 'forever,' and in other parts of the instrument the words 'children' and 'heirs' are used interchangeably, the term 'children' will be read as meaning heirs, and construed as a word of limitation, and not of purchase. This construction is adopted only to effectuate the intention of the maker when there is enough on the face of the instrument to show that he used the word 'children' in the sense of 'heirs.' [Authorities omitted.] On the other hand, the word 'heirs' will be read as synonymous with 'children' and construed as a word of purchase, when necessary to effectuate the intention of the grantor in the deed. Tucker v. Tucker, 78 Ky. 503; Harper v. Wilson, 2 A. K. Marsh. 465. An exception to the above rule has been made in the case of a deed or will from the husband to his wife and children. These cases are held to constitute a peculiar class, and in such cases it is held that the wife takes the property for life, with remainder to the children." To the same effect is Williams v. Duncan, 92 Ky. 125, 17 S. W. 330.

Applying the foregoing principles to the deed under consideration, we are constrained to the conclusion that Catherine Shumate took an estate in fee simple. It will be observed that in the caption the word "children" is used as descriptive personae of the trustee; he being described as trustee for Catherine Shumate and her children. There is no intention shown in this part of the deed to convey an estate to the children of the cestui que trust, Catherine Shumate. So far as anything appears to the contrary, Lewis Feeback may have been trustee for Catherine Shumate and her children; at any rate, the conveyance was to the trustee, and he was the party named as vendee. But, when we reach those parts of the deed wherein the estate is actually conveyed, the word "children" is not used. The beneficial estate is to Catherine Shumate, her heirs and assigns, or her heirs and assigns forever, as in the habendum. So that, as said before, taking the deed as a whole, we are of opinion that Catherine Shumate took an equitable estate in fee simple. This conclusion in no wise conflicts with the principle announced in Bowe v. Richmond, 109 S. W. 359, 33 Ky. Law Rep. 173. In that case the vendees of the deed were described as Caroline Bowe and her children by A. J. Bowe, and afterwards, in the other parts of the deed, the estate was conveyed to Caroline Bowe, her heirs or her heirs and assigns forever (as in the habendum). Clearly the word "children," as used in the caption in the case cited, could not be construed as synonymous with "heirs," because the children named were limited to those begotten by A. J. Bowe, thus excluding the idea that it was used as synonymous with the general word "heirs." In addition, the court, as shown in the opinion, was largely controlled by the fact that it appeared that the father and husband, A. J. Bowe, furnished the consideration of the deed, and it was therefore inferable that he intended to make a provision both for his wife and his children by her. The case cited, therefore, falls within the exception mentioned in the excerpt from McFarland v. Hatchett, supra, and, as said before, it is in no wise inconsistent with the conclusion we have reached in the case at bar.

For these reasons, the judgment of the trial court in construing the deed that Catherine Shumate took an equitable estate in fee must be affirmed; and it is so ordered.

HATFIELD et al. v. FOLLOWAY.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Dec. 1, 1908.)

1. MINES AND MINERALS (§ 70*)—COAL LEASE—ROYALTY—EVIDENCE.

In a suit to determine complainant's share of royalty payable under a coal lease, evidence held insufficient to sustain a finding that complainant rented his part of the land for mining purposes in order that his father and mother could rent their land for the same purposes.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mines and Minerals, Dec. Dig. § 70.*]

2. RELEASE (§ 33*)—CONSTRUCTION.

Where several owners joined in a mining lease, reserving a royalty, and one of them thereafter, in consideration of $50, disclaimed any interest in and to an advancement of royalty, amounting to $900, paid by the manager of the lessee company to the lessors, such owner did not thereby disclaim all interest in future accruing royalties.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Release, Dec. Dig. § 33.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Pike County.
"Not to be officially reported."

Action by John Followay against Albin Hatfield and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants Hatfield appeal. Reversed and remanded.

York & Johnson and J. M. Robertson, for appellants. Roscoe Vanover, for appellee.

CLAY, C. Appellants, Albin Hatfield and John W. Hatfield, each own a tract of coal land on Coon's branch, in Pike county, Ky. Samuel Followay and Esther Followay jointly own a tract of coal land on the same branch. Adjoining the lands of Albin and John W. Hatfield, appellee, John Followay, owns about four acres of land at the mouth of Coon's branch. The four tracts of land above mentioned go to make up the entire territory of Coon's branch. On January 31, 1902, the above-named parties all joined in a lease to A. H. Carr, R. M. McGuffin, A. I. Godfrey, C. W. J. Walker, and E. W. Cooper, by which the lessors leased the entire lands to the lessees for the purpose of mining, shipping, and transporting the coal from said lands. The consideration was the payment of a royalty of seven cents per ton for the coal mined. The lessees further guaranteed a minimum royalty of $1,500 per year after the third year. The lease did not provide how the royalty should be divided among the lessors. This action was filed in the Pike circuit court by appellee, John Followay, for the purpose of having determined what proportion of the royalty he was entitled to. In his petition he claims to be entitled to one-fourth of the royalty. Samuel Followay and Esther Followay, the parents of appellee, made no defense. Appellants, Albin and John W. Hatfield, defended on the ground that the appellee joined in the lease alone for the purpose of enabling his father and mother, Samuel and Esther Followay, to lease their land. This was denied by reply. The trial court adjudged that appellee was entitled to one-fifth of the royalty, and appellants complain.

It appears that the various tracts of land embraced in the lease were located as follows: Appellee's tract, consisting of four acres, was at the mouth of Coon's branch; next to it lay the Samuel and Esther Followay tract; next to this lay the tract of John W. Hatfield; and in the main head of Coon's branch lay appellant Albin Hatfield's tract. It seems that the lessees would not lease the property embraced in the lease unless they could secure the tract owned by appellee. In addition to the other provisions of the lease, one clause therein is as follows: "The said John Followay agrees and binds himself not to build or allow any one to build any house or houses on said land for store, saloon, or dwelling houses, and make this reservation in the event of the sale of said land." We are of the opinion that appellants failed to show that appellee rented his four acres merely for the purpose of permitting his father and mother to rent the tract which they owned. On the contrary, we think he was given every assurance that he would be treated right by the other lessors.

It is further contended that the following writing is evidence of the fact that appellee disclaimed any interest in the royalties due under the lease: "I, John Followay, one of the original lessors of a deed given by Samuel Followay and wife, John W. Hatfield and wife, Albin Hatfield and wife, and myself and wife, to A. H. Carr, R. M. McGuffin, A. I. Godfrey, C. W. J. Walker, and E. W. Cooper, bearing date the 31st day of January, 1902, and of record in Pike county, Ky., and assigned by them to the Blackberry, Ky. & W. Va. C. & C. Co., do hereby disclaim any interest in and to the advancement on royalty, amounting to nine hundred ($900.00) dollars, this day paid by C. W. J. Walker, manager for said company, to said other lessors. This 30th day of April, 1904. [Signed] John Followay." It appears, however, that the lessees did not want to pay the $900 and thereafter have a question raised as to whether the payment had been made to the proper parties. Therefore the lessees paid appellee $50 and secured from him the disclaimer set out above. This was done merely for their own protection, and the circumstances under which the writing was signed show that it was executed for no other purpose. There is nothing to show that appellee disclaimed an interest in other royalties, and he received from the lessees the $50 as a consideration alone for the execution of the writing referred to.

We conclude, from the whole record, that appellee is entitled to a certain portion of the royalty. How much, we think, depends altogether upon the ratio which the value of his property bears to the value of the entire property embraced in the lease. It appears that the other lessors owned about 600 acres of land. This land was worth some $25 per acre; thus making the value of the 600 acres about $15,000. The testimony as to the value of appellee's 4 acres of land is very conflicting. It is variously estimated at from $150 to $12,000. While there can be no doubt that it is valuable land, and especially so for the purpose of the lease in which it is embraced, we are of the opinion that its value was fixed by appellee's witnesses at a sum far in excess of its real worth. Taking into consideration its advantageous location, and the restriction contained in the lease upon its use by appellee, we are of the opinion that the land, for the purpose of the lease, is worth about $1,000. This would make the value of the entire property $16,000. We therefore conclude that appellee is entitled to one-sixteenth of the royalties provided for in the lease.

For the reasons given, the judgment is reversed and cause remanded, with directions to enter a judgment in conformity with this opinion.

CINCINNATI, N. O. & T. P. RY. CO.
v. EARLS' ADM'R.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Dec. 2, 1908.)

1. RAILROADS (§ 359*)—TRESPASSERS—CARE REQUIRED.

If decedent was on a railroad track when he was struck at a place other than a crossing, the railroad company owed him no duty except to exercise ordinary care, after discovering him in peril, to save him from injury or death.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Cent. Dig. §§ 1238, 1239; Dec. Dig. § 359.*]

2. RAILROADS (§ 400*)—CROSSING ACCIDENT—QUESTIONS FOR JURY.

Plaintiff's evidence showed that decedent was killed on a turnpike crossing; that defendant's train was running between 50 and 60 miles an hour; that it gave no signal, except the alarm whistle which was sounded an instant before the accident; and that a person on the engine could have seen decedent where he was killed for more than half a mile. Defendant's evidence showed that all required signals were given; that decedent was seen when the train was half a mile away walking on a different track from that on which the train was running; and that, just before the train reached decedent, he went on the track ahead of the engine, and that it was then too late to stop or check the train. Held, that the only questions for the jury were whether, after decedent was at or on the crossing, defendant's servants gave proper signals, kept a lookout, and used ordinary care; whether decedent was on the track not at a crossing; and whether there was contributory negligence, but for which decedent would not have been killed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Cent. Dig. §§ 1365-1381; Dec. Dig. § 400.*]

3. TRIAL (§ 252*)—INSTRUCTIONS—APPLICABILITY TO EVIDENCE.

Instructions should be confined to the issues presented by the evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 596-612; Dec. Dig. § 252.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Grant County.
"Not to be officially reported."

Action by James Earls' administrator against the Cincinnati, New Orleans & Texas Pacific Railway Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded.

A. G. De Jarnette and John Galvin, for appellant. J. J. Blackburn and Carnes & Ernst, for appellee.

NUNN, J. This appeal is from a judgment for $3,000 recovered by appellee for the negligent killing of his intestate. According to appellee's evidence, James Earls was killed when on the Covington & Lexington turnpike where it crosses appellant's track, just inside the corporate limits of the town of Williamstown; and appellant's train of cars that killed him was running at the time at a very rapid rate, to wit, 50 or 60 miles an hour, and did not blow a whistle or ring the bell, or give any warning of its approach to that place. There was no evidence introduced by appellee to show any customary use of appellant's track between the pike where Earls was killed and the next public crossing 300 or 400 yards south from which the train approached the pike. There was evidence showing that appellant's track at this point was in a sparsely settled portion of the town. When James Earls was struck he was leading a little child, and was either knocked or carried north of the turnpike crossing a distance of about 150 feet, thrown upon the right-hand side of the track, and the little girl was knocked or carried about 35 feet from the crossing, and thrown upon the left-hand side of the track. They were both instantly killed. As stated, appellee's evidence conduced to show that they were at or on the crossing when struck, and that no signals or warnings of any kind were given of the train's approach to the crossing, except the alarm whistle was sounded an instant before they were struck, and further showed that appellant's track was nearly straight for a distance south of the crossing for nearly one-half a mile, and that a person on the engine could have seen Earls at the point he was killed for more than that distance. Appellant's testimony tended to show that Earls was struck by the engine 25 or 30 yards before reaching the crossing, that all the signals for the crossing and for the station in Williamstown were given before Earls was hit by the engine. Those in charge of the engine stated that they saw Earls and the little girl when they were about one-half mile away; that they were then walking on a different track from the one on which the train was on; that, just before reaching them, they left the track and went onto the track the train was on just ahead of the engine; and that, when they discovered their peril, they could not stop or check the train and save them. This testimony was contradicted by appellee's witnesses. There was no evidence to the effect that this was an unusually dangerous crossing.

Under these facts, there were only three questions to be submitted by the court to the jury: First. If Earls was at or upon the pike crossing, did appellant's servants in charge of its train give the proper signals, keep a lookout, and use ordinary care in the approach to the public crossing for the protection of those on the crossing? Second. Was Earls on appellant's track when struck at a place other than the crossing? If so, they owed him no duty other than to use ordinary care, after discovering him and his peril, if they did so, to save him from injury or death. Third. Was there contributory negligence on the part of Earls which so contributed to his injury, and but for which he would not have received same? The instructions given by the lower court to the jury were not confined to these questions, and were therefore erroneous. On another trial, if the testimony is substantially the same, the court will confine itself in its instructions to the questions above indicated.

For these reasons, the judgment of the lower court is reversed, and the case remanded for further proceedings consistent herewith.

LOUISVILLE HOME TELEPHONE CO. et al. v. CITY OF LOUISVILLE et al.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Nov. 20, 1908.)

1. MANDAMUS (§ 1*)—NATURE.

"Mandamus," as defined by Civ. Code Prac. § 477, and the courts, is a writ commanding the performance of some duty, in the performance of which the applicant for the writ is interested, or by the nonperformance of which he is aggrieved or injured.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mandamus, Cent. Dig. §§ 1-3; Dec. Dig. § 1.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 5, pp. 4323-4330; vol. 8, pp. 7714, 7715.]

2. MANDAMUS (§ 23*)—NATURE—PERSONS ENTITLED TO RELIEF.

A private person, who shows a direct and special interest in himself, may apply for a writ of mandamus to enforce a public duty, though the public may be affected, and it may be the duty of the commonwealth or the public, through its officers, to act in the matter.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mandamus, Cent. Dig. § 55; Dec. Dig. § 23.*]

3. MANDAMUS (§ 10*)—NATURE OF RIGHTS TO BE ENFORCED.

Mandamus cannot be maintained, unless there is a legal right in the applicant for the writ and a corresponding duty imposed on the respondent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mandamus, Cent. Dig. § 37; Dec. Dig. § 10.*]

4. NUISANCE (§ 72*)—PUBLIC NUISANCES—RIGHTS AND REMEDIES OF PRIVATE PERSONS.

A private individual can enjoin or recover damages for a public nuisance when he shows injury distinct from that suffered by the public.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Nuisance, Cent. Dig. §§ 164-169; Dec. Dig. § 72.*]

5. MANDAMUS (§ 23*)—NATURE—PERSONS ENTITLED TO RELIEF—"DIRECT AND SPECIAL INTEREST."

The "direct and special interest" of a private individual which entitles him to apply for mandamus to enforce his private right in the performance of a public duty must be independent of and distinguishable from that which obtains to him in common with the general public, though it may not be necessary that such particular interest should be different in kind from that of the general public or peculiar to the individual alone.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mandamus, Cent. Dig. §§ 55, 56; Dec. Dig. § 23.*]

6. MANDAMUS (§ 23*)—NATURE—PERSONS ENTITLED TO RELIEF.

An application by private individuals for mandamus to compel a city's executive board to advertise and sell a telephone franchise as directed by an ordinance providing therefor, which avers that the applicants are taxpayers, and that one of them, who owns an existing franchise, expects to purchase the new franchise, without any showing as to how their property or other legal right, or the city's property or revenue, are injured by the refusal to sell the franchise, does not show that the applicants have such private right as entitles them to the writ.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mandamus, Cent. Dig. §§ 55, 56; Dec. Dig. § 23.*]

7. MANDAMUS (§ 148*)—PROCEEDINGS—PARTIES.

Mandamus to compel a city's executive board to advertise and sell a telephone franchise as directed by an ordinance providing therefor involves the enforcement of a public duty, and a private individual, who is a citizen and a resident, engaged in business in the city, and, as such, interested in the execution of the law, is a proper relator to institute such proceedings for the public, when the city attorney or other representative of the commonwealth fails to act in the matter.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mandamus, Cent. Dig. § 289; Dec. Dig. § 148.*]

8. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 174*)—PRESENTATION IN LOWER COURT OF GROUNDS OF REVIEW.

The objection that relators, in a mandamus proceeding for the public, did not proceed in the name of the commonwealth cannot be raised for the first time on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 1124; Dec. Dig. § 174.*]

9. MANDAMUS (§ 154*)—PROCEEDINGS—PARTIES.

An objection that relators, in a mandamus proceeding for the public, did not proceed in the name of the commonwealth may be obviated by an amendment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mandamus, Cent. Dig. § 315; Dec. Dig. § 154.*]

10. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 680*)—USE OF STREETS—GRANT OF FRANCHISES.

An ordinance charging the board of public works with the duty of advertising and selling a telephone franchise provided for in the ordinance, is within the power of the city council.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 1460; Dec. Dig. § 680.*]

11. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 680*)—USE OF STREETS—GRANT OF FRANCHISES.

A municipality has the power to maintain and operate plants, and use the public streets, for furnishing public utilities, such as water, light, and telephone service, for itself and to its inhabitants, and it may discharge such power by others, upon such terms as may be agreed upon in the form prescribed by law.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 1460; Dec. Dig. § 680.*]

12. FRANCHISES (§ 1*)—NATURE OF RIGHT.

What is commonly termed the "granting" of a franchise by a city for a public utility, such as a telephone franchise, is in the nature of a contract by the city with the grantee for the performance of a public service, and the primary object is not the revenue to be obtained for the city, but the securing of efficient service upon such terms as will promote the greatest good.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Franchises, Cent. Dig. § 1; Dec. Dig. § 1.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 3, pp. 2929-2941; vol. 8, p. 7666.]

13. MONOPOLIES (§ 6*)—VALIDITY OF GRANTS—FRANCHISES.

That an ordinance for the public sale of a telephone franchise to the owner of an existing franchise eliminates the owner of another franchise as a bidder at the sale does not render it repugnant to Const. § 164, prohibiting monopolies; the purpose of the ordinance being to preserve effective competition.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Monopolies, Dec. Dig. § 6.*]

14. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 871*)—DEBTS—RELEASE—GRANT OF FRANCHISES—VALIDITY.

The relation between a city and the owner of an existing telephone franchise being quasi contractual for the performance of a service, an ordinance modifying the terms of the franchise for the purpose of securing more effective service in competition with the owner of another franchise is not invalid as releasing an indebtedness or liability to the municipality in violation of Const. § 52.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 871.*]

Hobson, Nunn, and Carroll, JJ., dissenting in part.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Jefferson County.

"To be officially reported."

Mandamus by the Louisville Home Telephone Company and another against the City of Louisville and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiffs appeal. Reversed.

Helm & Helm, Helm Bruce, and Kohn, Balrd, Sloss & Kohn, for appellants. A. E. Richards, A. B. Bensinger, and Dodd & Dodd, for appellees.

LINDSEY, J. The case presented by the record is an application by the Louisville Home Telephone Company and John Coleman against the city of Louisville and certain named persons, who constitute the "board of public works" of said city, for a writ of mandamus to compel such "board of public works" to advertise and sell at public sale a certain telephone franchise in said city, claimed to have been provided for, and its advertisement and sale directed to be made by such board, by an ordinance of the general council of said city, alleged to have been duly passed by boards of the general council of said city, and to have become obligatory without the mayor's signature on May 26, 1903. The plaintiffs or applicants, as required by section 474, Civ. Code Prac., filed a petition stating the cause and ground of the application, to which the defendants or respondents filed general demurrers, and, not waiting the demurrers, also filed answers.

The demurrers to the petition raise primarily the question whether or not the facts stated in that pleading show a right in the applicants to the writ against the appellees, the members of the "board of public works." This question may be considered from two aspects, the one as to the right of the appellants, under the facts, to sue for and obtain the writ, and the other as to the liability, so to speak, of the appellees, constituting the board of public works, to the writ. It is contended for the appellants that they are proper applicants for the writ, not only because of their private right in the relief sought, but also because there is involved a public right, and the object is the enforcement of a public duty. Obviously the determination of the questions presented involves the consideration of the nature and purpose of the writ of mandamus, the character of the right of the applicant entitling him to obtain it, and against whom the writ may issue. Mandamus is, by section 477, Civ. Code

Prac., thus defined: "The writ of mandamus, is treated of in this chapter, is an order of a court of competent and original jurisdiction, commanding an executive or ministerial officer to perform an act, or omit to do in act, the performance or omission of which is enjoined by law; and is granted on the motion of the party aggrieved, or of the commonwealth when the public interest is affected." This statutory definition does not differ materially from those given by the law writers and the courts. Ency. P. & P. vol. 13, p. 487; Legg v. Annapolis, 42 Md. 203. In the case just mentioned the court concisely said: "It is a writ commanding the performance of some act or duty, therein specified, in the performance of which the applicant for the writ is interested, or by the nonperformance of which he is aggrieved or injured." It is evident, then, that there must be some right which is affected by the performance, or nonperformance, of the act sought to be compelled or restrained; and, if that right is in the public, and the object is the enforcement of a public duty, the commonwealth, or the public in some form, should be the applicant for the writ, but if the right to be affected be merely that of a private person, that person must be the applicant, and that the performance, or nonperformance, as the case may be, of the act must be a duty which the law enjoins upon the respondent to the writ.

As to the interest required on the part of an individual to make him a proper party to apply for such writ, there is some conflict in the authorities. In Ency. P. & P. vol. 13, p. 630, the author writes: "In the greater number of states it is held that a private relator applying for a writ of mandamus must show some special interest in himself." While in the extended note to the case of Dane v. Derby, reported in 89 Am. Dec., the annotator, on page 471, says: "The doctrine supported by the great weight of authority is that, where the relief sought is merely private, the relator must show some special interest in the matter; but, where the question is one of public right, and the object the enforcement of a public duty, he need not show that he has any special interest in the result. It is in that case sufficient for him to show that he is a citizen, and, as such, interested in the execution of the laws (citing authorities). Other courts hold that the relator must show a special interest in the subject-matter of the proceedings." And in Ency. P. & P. vol. 13, p. 632, it is said: "In some instances a distinction has been made between public duties due the state in its sovereign capacity and those public duties affecting all, or a large number, of the citizens. When the duty is of the latter kind, it is held that a private citizen may be the relator in a mandamus proceeding to enforce it"—citing, among other authorities, the case of Union Pac. R. Co. v. Hall, 91 U. S. 843, 23 L. Ed.

428. In the case last mentioned the Supreme Court wrote: "There is, we think, a decided preponderance of American authority in favor of the doctrine that private persons may move for a mandamus to enforce a public duty, not due to the government as such, without the intervention of the government law officer." It is, we think, definitely settled by the decisions of this court that, though the public interest may be affected, and it may be the duty of the commonwealth or the public, through some of its agencies, to act in the matter, yet, a private person, who can show direct and special interest in himself, may apply for and obtain a writ of mandamus. Hammar v. City of Covington, 60 Ky. (3 Metc.) 494; Trustees of Catlettsburg v. Kinner, 76 Ky. (18 Bush.) 334; Register Newspaper Co. v. Yeiser, 117 Ky. 1013, 80 S. W. 478; Merchants' Police, etc., Co. v. Citizens' Tel. Co., 123 Ky. 90, 93 S. W. 642.

As to the character of right entitling an applicant to the writ of mandamus, the authorities are to the effect that it must be a clear, complete, and existing legal right. Ency. P. & P. vol. 13, pp. 496, 497; Cyc. vol. 26, pp. 151, 153, 154. Or in the language of this court: "Mandamus cannot be maintained unless there is a legal right in the appellant, and a corresponding duty imposed by law on the appellee." Lowe v. Phelps, Judge, 77 Ky. (14 Bush) 647. When it is considered that the public rights and duties enforceable by mandamus are of such great variety, and that the measure of the interest of a private individual therein to entitle him to invoke that remedy must, of necessity, largely depend upon the nature of the right or duty sought to be enforced in each particular case, it is readily seen why the authorities have not, and possibly cannot, lay down any general rule as to what constitutes an interest sufficient to entitle a private individual to institute mandamus proceedings to enforce a public right or compel the performance of a public duty.

In each of the cases of Catlettsburg v. Kinner and Hammar v. Covington, supra, the effect of the holding, in an opinion by Lindsay, Chief Justice, was that abutting property holders on a public street, by reason of their peculiar and particular right in the use of the street as a means of ingress and egress to and from their properties, and the apparent danger to their properties, distinguishable from the right in the general public to the use of the street as a highway, had such direct and special interest as entitled them to a writ of mandamus to compel the preservation and repair of the street by those upon whom the law placed that public duty.

The case of Register Newspaper Co. v. Yeiser, supra, cited in the brief of counsel, was where the newspaper company was, by due selection and appointment, the official newspaper of the city of Paducah, and as such was required and entitled to publish, at its regular rates for advertising, all ordinances, resolutions, notices, etc., which, under the charter or ordinances of the city, were required to be published. There were certain delinquent tax lists, which the law required should be sold at public auction, the lists and the notice for the sale thereof to be published for at least two weeks in the city's official newspaper. The city official charged with the duty of furnishing such lists and notice for publication failed and refused to do so. This court held that the Register Newspaper Company could, by mandamus, compel the city's official whose duty it was to furnish the delinquent tax lists and notice of sale for publication. Thereby, in effect, holding that the newspaper company had direct and special interest in having for publication and advertisement the delinquent tax lists and the notice; such interest being clearly its legal right to advertise the lists and the notice for their sale, and to receive therefor pay at its regular rates for advertising.

The case of the Merchants' Police & Telegraph Company v. Citizens' Telephone Company, supra, was where the appellee had a telephone franchise, obtained from the city in accordance with the provisions of section 164 of the Constitution, and appellants did not purchase a telephone franchise as provided by that section of the Constitution, but was operating its telephone plant in the city without authority of law, under an attempted grant to it by the city council, which, being void, conferred no right whatever. This court held that the appellee, as a citizen and taxpayer in the city, had the right by action to put an end to the wrong so perpetrated by the council, by stopping appellant from further acting under the illegal grant. Why? The court in the opinion gives the answer. The appellee was interested, as was each and every other taxpayer, in preventing loss to the city by the illegal gift of a valuable franchise, which, if sold, would increase the city's revenues and thereby lessen the amount necessary to be raised by taxation.

The relation of private individuals to common or public nuisances may be referred to as analogous to the question being considered. This court has repeatedly held that private individuals can enjoin, or sue to recover, damages for an act constituting a common or public nuisance when they show that they will receive, or have received, injury distinct from that suffered by the public. Gleason v. Schneider, 7 Ky. Law Rep. 834. Maysville & Mt. Sterling T. P. Co. v. Ratcliff, 85 Ky. 244, 3 S. W. 148. Beckham, etc., v. Brown, etc., 40 S. W. 684, 19 Ky. Law Rep. 519. The rule deducible from these and kindred cases from this court, and sustained, we think, by the weight of authority at large, is that the "direct and special interest" of a private individual, which would entitle him to apply in his own behalf for and obtain a writ of mandamus to enforce his private right, must be independent of and distinguishable from that which obtains to him in common with the general public or to the mass of the community; though it may not be necessary that such particular interest should be different in kind from that of the general public, or peculiar to the individual alone.

In the case here in hand the "cause and ground" of the application are the averments, in substance, as follows: That each of the applicants is the owner of real and personal property in the city, a taxpayer to the city, and engaged in business therein; that the applicant John Coleman is a citizen and resident of the city, and the applicant the Louisville Home Telephone Company is the owner and operator of a telephone plant in said city; that the ordinance exhibited was duly passed, etc., and became obligatory without the signature of the mayor; that by the terms of such ordinance it is made the duty of the "board of public works" of the city of Louisville to advertise and sell the franchise (in the ordinance provided) for the acquisition and operation of a telephone system in the city; that the applicants have demanded of the defendants, named as the board of public works of the city, "to proceed with the advertisement of sale, and with the sale, and have also demanded of the city, through its chief executive officer, the mayor thereof, to cause said advertisement to be made, but said defendants have refused thus to proceed, and have announced that they do not intend to advertise or sell said franchise"; and that "plaintiff the Louisville Home Telephone Company has a special interest in the sale of said franchise, because it expects and intends to become a bidder for said franchise, when sold by the board of public works," and hopes to become, and believes it will become, the purchaser thereof, and it desires to have the opportunity of thus acquiring the franchise for the operation of a telephone plant in the city of Louisville, in accordance with the terms set forth in the ordinance." Under the rule above stated, do these, the only facts alleged as the "cause and ground" of their application, show any "direct and special interest" in appellants, separate and apart from the general public, in having the telephone franchises contemplated by the ordinance advertised and sold? It is insisted by counsel in argument that they do, because it is alleged that the applicants each are taxpayers to the city, and cite as authority for the contention the cases above referred to, of Register Newspaper Co. v. Yeiser and Merchants' Police & Telegraph Co. v. Citizens' Telephone Company. In the first-mentioned of these cases there was no claim of right because the newspaper company was a taxpayer, or a citizen of, or engaged in business in, the city; but, as stated above, the "direct and special interest" of that company was by reason of its contract right to do the advertising and receive the compensation therefor. In the other case this court held that the party applicant, a taxpayer, was directly interested to prevent loss to the city by an illegal gift of a valuable franchise, which, if sold legally, would increase the city's revenue, and thereby lessen the amount necessary to be raised by taxation.

Here, in the pleading being considered, no averment is made as to how, or fact stated by which, it is made to appear that appellants' property or other legal right, or the property or revenue of the city, are injuriously affected by the failure and refusal of the appellees, constituting the board of public works, to advertise and sell the franchise. It is not even alleged that the sale of the franchise would be of pecuniary benefit to the city. It may be argued that, if the franchise be sold, to the extent of the purchase price it brings the revenues of the city would of necessity be increased, and that thus, under the authority of the case of Merchants' Police & Telegraph Company v. Citizens' Telephone Company, the "definite and special interest" of appellants as taxpayers is manifest. But is it true, or is it correct to assume, that by the sale of this franchise, under the terms of the ordinance exhibited, the revenues of the city would of necessity be increased? It appears from the application, and the ordinance exhibited and made part hereof, that the applicant the Louisville Home Telephone Company is now conducting a telephone plant under a franchise purchased from the city, which franchise has yet some years to run, and under the terms of this ordinance, if it becomes the successful bidder for the franchise, the sale of which is now sought to be compelled, then the former franchise is to be void, and all obligations to the city thereunder be also void. And the averment in the pleading being considered is that it, the Louisville Home Telephone Company, "expects and intends to become a bidder for said franchise * * * and hopes to become, and believes it will become, the purchaser thereof." Such being the situation, it will readily be seen that it is altogether problematical as to the effect the proposed sale of the franchise, if consummated, would have upon the revenues of the city. But the pecuniary advantage is not the only, or the most important, consideration in matters like those here under consideration. Efficient and reliable service, at reasonable rates, is far more important, and is the direct object to be obtained rather than the mere purchase price. We do not think that the appellants have by their pleading shown in themselves such private right as entitled them to obtain the writ in this case.

However as has been stated, the appellants contend that, even if they have not the requisite mere private right to entitle them to the writ sought in this proceeding, they, being citizens and residents of, and engaged in business in, the city, and as such interested in the execution of the law, have the right as relators to bring the matter before the court. Clearly the ordinance exhibited with the petition imposes upon the board of public works of the city of Louisville the duty of advertising and selling at public sale the telephone franchise in the ordinance provided. In this day efficient telephone service is so essential, not only in the conduct of private business in the cities, as well as in the rural districts, but is also so important in the management and conduct of the business and government of cities, that its proper installation and maintenance and service constitute a matter of decided public interest. The question in this case is therefore one of public right, and the object is the enforcement of public duty. And, as we have seen from the authorities quoted supra, in such state of case a relator in a mandamus proceeding need not show that he has any special interest in the result, but it is sufficient for him to show that he is a citizen and resident, and engaged in business in the city, and as such interested in the execution of the law, and that, inasmuch as the public duty here sought to be enforced is not one due to the state in its sovereign capacity, the decided preponderance of American authority is that private persons may move for a mandamus to enforce such public duty. 13 Enc. P. & P. 632; Union Pac. R. Co. v. Hall, 91 U. S. 343, 23 L. Ed. 428; State v. Weld, 39 Minn. 426, 40 N. W. 561; Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Suffern, 129 Ill. 274, 21 N. E. 824. It is true that the Code provision is that the writ of mandamus is granted on the motion of the commonwealth when the public interest is affected. And it is usual for the commonwealth or the public to take action in such matters through its selected officer. But there is no such limitation in the statute. And in the present case the fact that the officer, whose duty it is usually to enforce the public's rights in the city, and represent the same in the courts, is, in the performance of his official functions as adviser of the city officials, and with unquestioned good faith upon his part, placed in the adverse position of attorney for the respondents in this application raises the question, Does the failure or refusal of the city attorney, or other representative of the commonwealth, to seek the enforcement of this public duty preclude its enforcement?

The facts in the case of People ex rel. Ayres v. State Auditors, 42 Mich. 428-430, 4 N. W. 274, were, in many respects, similar to the case at bar. There a state statute, it was contended, imposed upon the State Auditors the duty of advertising for and receiving proposals for printing the decisions of the Supreme Court of that state. The auditors thought the statute not operative at the time. The relator was, by reason of his being engaged in the business of printing, etc., a competent bidder, and desired to become a bidder for the printing and publishing of the reports. It being claimed by the respondents that if they had done any wrong they were guilty of a public wrong, and not a private wrong, and that only the representative of the state could complain of their misconduct, the question arose whether the court would allow a private relator to complain of the alleged omission of duty. The court said in part: "In the present case the officer whose duty it usually is to enforce the rights of the state in this court, in the performance of his official functions as adviser of the state officers, placed himself in an adverse position, and appears for the respondents on this application. Inasmuch, then, as the Attorney General refuses to appear and seek the enforcement of the statutory provision, does his refusal preclude its enforcement? And if not, is the relator authorized to bring the matter before this court? There may perhaps be others who have interests that would justify their appearance, but there is no one else whose duty it is to appear where the Attorney General declines to do so. It cannot be said that relator has any greater legal interest than other citizens, if the application must be made by an interested party. But if any party not actually interested may become relator or reformer, then the fact that he is engaged in business which would make him a competent bidder, and that he desires to become a bidder if the interest is set up for competition, removes him from the position of an officious interloper, and gives sufficient assurance that the controversy is genuine and in good faith. The rule which rejects the intervention of private complainants against public grievances is one of discretion, and not of law. There are serious objections against allowing mere interlopers to meddle with the affairs of the state, and it is not usually allowed, unless under circumstances where the public injury by its refusal will be serious. In the cases of People ex rel. Drake v. Regents of the University, 4 Mich. 98, and People ex rel. Russell v. Inspectors of the State Prison, Id., 187, the court took pains to guard against any decision that would prevent complaint by a private relator where the public interests require prompt action, and where the public prosecutors will not interfere. There is, as there shown, more liberality in some states than in others. But we find no reason to consider the matter as one lying outside of judicial discretion, which is always involved in mandamus cases concerning the relief as well as other questions."

It may be urged that, even if the appellants are proper relators to institute this proceeding for the public, they should, under the statute, have proceeded in the name of the commonwealth, as the representatives of the public by them as relators—a form of procedure used in the case last above quoted from. That is a matter of procedure only, objection to which was not made by special demurrer in the court below, where, if deemed necessary, it might have been changed by amendment; and the point should not be regarded in this court. And it seems that in the case of Union Pac. R. Co. v. Hall, supra, which had the sanction of the Supreme Court, the form of procedure adopted in this case was used. Concurring in the rule announced by the authorities above cited, this court is of the opinion that the appellants are proper relators in behalf of the public, to apply for the writ of mandamus sought in this case. The enactment of an ordinance of the character of the one presented here was clearly within the province and power of the general council of the city. It was for that body in its discretion to determine, and in such form to promulgate, whether it would sell the franchise, and the terms upon which it should be sold; and it was entirely proper for it, in the ordinance, to charge the board of public works, the city's executive board having charge of and supervision of the use made of the streets and public ways of the city, over which and through which the franchise would have to be exercised, with the duty of advertising and making the public sale as directed.

In considering the demurrer to the petition it remains to be seen if the ordinance contravenes the Constitution in the particulars suggested in argument. It is contended for the appellees that the ordinance is in violation of section 52 of the Constitution, which reads: "The General Assembly shall have no power to release, extinguish or authorize the releasing or extinguishing in whole or in part the indebtedness or liability of any corporation or individual to the commonwealth, or to any county or municipality thereof." The proposition advanced by appellees' counsel is that the published ordinances of the city—of which this court must take notice—show that the appellant telephone company is now operating in the city under a franchise legally obtained, by the terms of which the company is required to pay annually to the city the sum of $1 for every telephone service or instrument in excess of 6,000, and to furnish telephone service at certain stipulated rates. And this, it is argued, constitutes a contract liability, from the company to the city, which the latter is powerless, under the section of the Constitution quoted, to release, that by the terms of the ordinance here involved the appellant telephone company is permitted to become a bidder for the franchise to be sold and expects to become the successful bidder therefor, and in the event that it does become the purchaser the present franchise, under which it is now operating, is to "become null and void, and be forfeited and surrendered to the city of Louisville, and all obligations created by the ordinance granting the same, or acceptance thereof, shall immediately cease and determine," and that by this ordinance the telephone rates are materially increased, which will, it is claimed, operate to release a liability from the telephone company to the city. It does not appear from the petition that the company is indebted to the city at present in any amount, or that the company has installed any telephone service or instruments in excess of the 6,000. But it is stated in the brief of counsel, as alleged in the answer, that under that provision in the franchise now being operated under, the city is receiving annually over $2,000, and the franchise has over 30 years to run. It is also contended that the ordinance here involved contravenes section 164 of the Constitution. The ground of this contention is not made plain, further than it is argued that, because the Bell system of companies, of which the Cumberland Telephone & Telegraph Company, now legally operating in the city, is a constituent member, is excluded as a competitive bidder, a sale of the franchise under the ordinance will not be a public sale within the meaning of the section of the Constitution indicated.

In considering these two propositions it may, we think, be proper to view the relation of a municipality to public utilities such as water, light, and telephone service. Because of their potency and usefulness in promoting and preserving the health, security, and comfort of the public, and of the aid they afford in the conduct of the business and administration of the municipality itself, such utilities have long been regarded as essential governmental agencies and important aids to the police power. A municipality has the power and right to erect, maintain, and operate plants, and use the public streets for furnishing such utilities for the municipality itself and to its inhabitants. Such power or duty it may discharge by having others perform them for it upon such terms as may be agreed upon in the form and manner prescribed by law. What, therefore, is commonly termed the "granting" of a franchise by a city for one of these public utilities is in the nature of a contract by the city with the grantee for the performance of a public service. Such, in part at least, seems to have been the view of this court in the opinion in the case of Cumberland T. & T. Co. v. City of Hickman, decided June 10, 1908, 111 S. W. 811, wherein the court, in speaking of a telephone franchise, said: "This right which is most akin to a right of way, is the subject of grant, which partakes, in turn, of the nature of a contract." From this view of the subject it will readily be seen that the primary object a city would have, in contracting for or securing the service of such utilities, is not the revenue to be obtained for the city, but the securing of good and efficient service, and upon such terms as will, in the judgment of the city's governing body, promote the greatest good, not alone to those who use the utility, the telephone for instance, but to the entire community, including the city government. For obtaining the end just mentioned, the value of competition in such service to the public is not only recognized, but is emphasized, by this court in Stites v. Norton, 101 S. W. 1189, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 474, where it was held that it was the duty of the city to establish a competing plant. In that case, as in this, the owner of a then existing franchise was eliminated as a bidder at the proposed sale. This court then said: "This duty was of equal dignity, and as binding upon it [the city] as that of selling the franchise to the highest and best bidder, and it had the right, in our opinion, to so frame the ordinance as to accomplish the purpose of obtaining a competing plant." And again, further on: "Section 164, as construed, is but a part of the general scheme of the Constitution to prohibit and break up monopolies." And we may say in this case that to make competition effective, and in such form preserve it, is as much a duty as to establish it. And as such seems to be the plain purpose in this ordinance, we do not think the ordinance is repugnant to section 164 of the Constitution.

The relation between the city and the appellant telephone company being, as we have seen, quasi contractual and for the performance of a service, can it be said that section 62 of the Constitution, above quoted, prevents the city, with the consent of the company, from so modifying the terms for such service as will, in the judgment of the city's governing body, permit and secure effective service in competition with the Cumberland Telephone & Telegraph Company? We do not think so. This section of the Constitution was before this court for construction in the cases of City of Louisville v. Louisville Ry., 111 Ky. 19, 63 S. W. 14, 98 Am. St. Rep. 387, Commonwealth v. Tilton, 111 Ky. 342, 63 S. W. 602, and Nat. Bank of Lebanon v. Commonwealth, 118 Ky. 51, 80 S. W. 479, 81 S. W. 686. There the liabilities attempted to be compromised or released were fixed demands; that in the first mentioned case being for taxes, fixed by the regular assessment of property, and in the hands of the collecting officer. The court held that the section of the Constitution forbade a compromise of such fixed moneyed liabilities due to a city, county, or the state. But in the first mentioned of those cases this court expressly said: "We do not mean to hold that an unlimited [unliquidated] demand, by or against the city, cannot be compromised, but we think that, when the liability to the city is fixed, it cannot be relinquished in whole or in part." As said by counsel in the brief, the right of the state, and of its political subdivisions, to exercise the right to contract, and to modify or change the contractual relation with the consent of the other contracting party, is an important one, and should not be limited. "That it may be abused is no argument against its existence. It was the exercise of this power which was upheld by this court in the case of Cumberland T. & T. Co. v. City of Hickman," supra. An examination of the proceedings had in the constitutional convention, as shown by the published debates (volume 3, pp. 3896, 4313; volume 4, pp. 5564, 5686, 5687), resulting in the adoption of the section as it now reads, discloses that section 52, as originally drafted and proposed, inhibited the release or extinguishment, in whole or in part, of "the contract, indebtedness, liability, or obligation, of any corporation or individual to the state, or to any county or municipality thereof." Subsequently, on revision, the words "contract" and "obligation" were stricken out, by which the restriction of the power of release or extinguishment was limited to "the indebtedness or liability of any corporation or individual" to the state or county or municipality. And in that form the section was adopted and is now in force.

Aside from the conviction that is impressed upon the mind by the elimination of the words "contract" and "obligation" from the section, that there was no purpose by the language left remaining to limit or restrict the right of the state, the counties, or the cities thereof in the power and right to contract is negated by the intent declared at the time, when in the debates the reason for the change is given in this language: "We did not think it was proper to say that the Legislature should not have the power to release a person from a contract, provided both the Legislature and the other party desired to be released from it. Our intention was to provide that they should not be released from liabilities incurred, whether by contract or subsidy; but we do not believe that, if one Legislature should make an unwise contract, and the people see it was unwise, and that the next Legislature, both the people, through their representatives, and the party with whom the contract was made, desired to be released, it should not be done. In other words, we do not want to get in the fix that they are in in Tennessee. They made a contract, and now both sides are willing to do away with its contract, and yet they cannot." And with that declaration of its purpose, the section was adopted.

As the judgment of the court below was based entirely upon its idea of the insufficiency of the petition, this court has only considered the questions arising upon the demurrer to the petition.

For the reasons stated, we are of the opinion that the court below erred in sustaining appellees' demurrers to the petition, and in dismissing appellants' petition. The judgment appealed from is reversed and remanded for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

Special Judges EDELEN and LINDSEY sat in lieu of Chief Justice O'REAR and Judge LASSING, declining to sit. HOBSON NUNN, and CARROLL, JJ., dissent in part.

CARROLL, J. (dissenting). I concur with a majority of the court in holding that the appellants had a right to institute and maintain this action, and in a proper case obtain the relief sought. But, being of the opinion that the ordinance in controversy is invalid, I have considered it proper, in view of the importance of the public questions involved, to put on record my reasons. An answer as well as an intervening petition was filed, but as the case went off in the court below upon a demurrer to the petition, and the majority opinion only deals with the sufficiency of the petition, I will confine what I have to say to the questions that arise upon a consideration of this pleading. One of these questions—that involving the right of the city council to enact an ordinance relieving the Home Telephone Company of the obligation it assumed, in the franchise granted to it in November, 1900, to pay to the city a stipulated amount upon each telephone in use in excess of 6,000 telephones—was considered by the court, and it was held in the majority opinion that this contract obligation upon the part of the company was not a liability within the meaning of section 52 of the Constitution. Another question presented by the petition is whether or not the ordinance afforded free and equal opportunity, within the meaning of section 164 of the Constitution, to all persons who might desire to bid for and purchase the franchise, and it was ruled that it did. And yet another, the right of the council, independent of the Constitution, to cancel a contract beneficial to the city and its inhabitants. The majority opinion does not discuss the last-mentioned feature of the ordinance, although it is material in the disposition of the case, and may with propriety be considered in determining the sufficiency of the petition, as the courts may take judicial notice of city ordinances.

Section 2775 of the Kentucky Statutes of 1903, which is a part of the charter of cities of the first class, provides in part that: "The courts of this commonwealth shall take judicial cognizance of the ordinances of the city, and the printed copy officially published by the city may be read as evidence in any trial in which the same may be competent evidence without proof of the passage and approval of said ordinance." So that, although the ordinance of November, 1900, granting a franchise to operate a telephone system in the city of Louisville, which franchise was purchased by the Home Telephone Company, is not a part of or noticed in the petition, it may be considered in connection with it. The franchise purchased by the Home Telephone Company under the ordinance of 1900 gave it the right to maintain and operate in the city a telephone system for a period of 20 years, and among other things, stipulated: "That when the purchaser of said franchise or privilege, or his assigns, in the operation of said telephone plant or system, shall have in use within the city of Louisville six thousand (6,000) instruments furnishing telephone service, to six thousand (6,000) persons, firms or corporations, then the said owner or owners of said telephone plant or system shall pay to the city of Louisville, in addition to all municipal taxes, the sum of one ($1) dollar per annum for every such additional telephone service or instrument in excess of six thousand (6,000), which payments shall be made semiannually on January 1 and July 1 of each year to the city treasurer, and it shall be the duty of the purchaser or owner of said franchise or privilege, or his assigns, on the first days of January and July of each year, commencing with the first day of January after the completion of said plant and putting the same in operation, to make a report to the city comptroller, which shall be in writing and sworn to by the president of the company or the general manager or the owner of said telephone system, and shall set forth therein the number of its patrons and the number of the telephone instruments it has in use at the date of each of said reports. All rentals shall be payable quarterly in advance." It further fixed the maximum rates which could be charged for the use of telephones, providing in section 6 that: "The rates to be charged by the person, firm or corporation owning or exercising the franchise or privilege aforesaid for the use of their telephones shall not exceed the following schedule, to wit: Forty-eight ($48) dollars per year for each business telephone on an individual wire with metallic circuit wherever located within the city limits; for each residence telephone on an individual wire with metallic circuit within a radius of one mile from the courthouse in said city, twenty-four ($24) dollars per year; for each residence telephone on an individual wire with metallic circuit within a radius of two miles of the courthouse and exceeding one mile therefrom, within the city of Louisville, thirty ($30) dollars per annum; for each residence telephone on an individual wire with metallic circuit within the limits of the city of Louisville and outside of said radius of two miles from the courthouse, thirty-six ($36) dollars per year. On extension desk telephones the rate shall not exceed twelve ($12) dollars per annum, and for installing extension bells five ($5) dollars each." The ordinance in controversy provides in section 6 that: "Should the franchise herein ordered to be sold be at any time acquired by any person who at the time of such acquisition already owns a telephone franchise previously granted by the city of Louisville, such previously granted franchise shall immediately upon the acquisition of the franchise herein ordered to be sold become null and void, and be forfeited and surrendered to the city of Louisville; and all obligations created by the ordinance granting the same or acceptance thereof shall immediately cease and determine." It is also provided in section 10 that: "The rates to be charged by the owner or operator of such system shall be for a business telephone not more than seven dollars; for a two party line business telephone not more than four dollars; for a single residence telephone not more than three dollars and a half; for a two party line residence telephone not more than two dollars and a half."

It will be thus observed that if the Home Telephone Company should become the purchaser of the franchise under the new ordinance, thereupon, and by reason of its purchase, its obligation and liability, under the franchise that it owns and is now operating, to pay to the city $1 per annum for every telephone in use in the city in excess of 6,000 would be at once extinguished, and it would be relieved of this burden, and the city deprived of the revenue, whatever it may be, derived from this source. In addition thereto it will be noticed that the old franchise bound it for the term of 20 years to furnish telephones at a price not exceeding $4 per month to business houses, and at a price not exceeding $2 per month to residences, while the new ordinance permits the purchaser of it to charge $7 per month for a business telephone, and $4 for a residence telephone. So that, if the franchise under the new ordinance is purchased by the Home Telephone Company, the city of Louisville will lose the revenue it may reasonably expect to derive from the use of telephones in excess of 6,000, and the citizens and taxpayers of Louisville will be required to pay almost twice as much for telephone service furnished by the Home Telephone Company as they do under the existing ordinance. It is therefore manifest that the ordinance offering this new franchise for sale was not enacted for the benefit of the city of Louisville or the citizens and taxpayers thereof, but on the contrary, its adoption was detrimental to the city and the citizens. It is further apparent that the only person benefited, or intended to be benefited, by the new ordinance is the Home Telephone Company.

Setting aside for the present the question whether or not the obligation of the Home Telephone Company under the old franchise is a liability within the meaning of section 52 of the Constitution, and the further question whether or not the ordinance is a fair and equal one within the meaning of section 164 of the Constitution, I will take up the proposition whether the municipal boards of a city that have entered into a valid contract, admitted to be beneficial to the city and its inhabitants, can subsequently, by the consent of the other contracting party, cancel the contract and exonerate the other party from all obligations assumed under it to the city and its people. In support of the proposition that municipal authorities, in the exercise of the power vested in them by the statute to contract and be contracted with, may modify or annul any contract they have made, by the consent of the other contracting party, the argument is made, first, that if it is competent for the municipal authorities to enter into a contract, it is also within their power to annul or modify the contract, with the consent of the other contracting party; and, second, that if this power was denied, a city would be disabled from annulling or modifying, by consent of the parties, a contract that experience or time had proven to be disadvantageous or undesirable to both; that this condition of affairs might impose upon the people of a city onerous burdens, from which they could not be relieved until the expiration of the contract period, although both the contracting parties were willing to make a change. I do not, of course, deny that municipal authorities, within the scope of the power granted to them by the statute, may enter into contracts, nor do I maintain that municipal authorities may not, by the consent of the other contracting parties, modify or cancel a contract that time or experience or other reason has shown to be disadvantageous to the people of the city, or that was entered into under a mutual mistake. And I agree that the presumption must be indulged that the boards will act within their powers for the best interests of the city, and discharge with sound judgment and fidelity the duties of their office, and, further, that the courts ought not to undertake to control their discretion, in municipal affairs, unless it is made clearly to appear that they have exceeded their authority or have acted fraudulently or corruptly. My position is that municipal boards occupy a position of trust; that they are agents and servants of the people of the city, and must perform their duties with fidelity to the welfare and interest of the people they represent for the time being; that their powers are delegated and limited; that although they may enter into contracts and, in certain states of case, cancel or modify them for a valuable and sufficient consideration, or in cases where a mutual mistake was made, yet they cannot modify or cancel to the detriment of the people, whose agents they are, a beneficial or advantageous contract, made with an individual or corporation, solely for the advantage of such person or corporation. To sanction a power like this would be giving to municipal boards authority not granted to any other agent or trustee; and when it is attempted, the courts have the same power to interfere and control as they do in any case where a trustee or agent is exceeding his power. And I rest my argument on the right of the court to interpose upon the ground that the council, in the enactment of so much of the ordinance as exonerated the Home Telephone Company from its liability and obligation, exceeded its power as much, although in a somewhat different way, as was attempted by the council that undertook to relieve the city railway company from the payment of taxes, but was prevented by this court in the case of City of Louisville v. Louisville Railway Company, 111 Ky. 1, 63 S. W. 2d 98 Am. St. Rep. 387.

When the bid for the franchise offered for sale under the ordinance of 1900 was accepted by the council, a valid and binding contract was entered into between the city and the Home Telephone Company for a term of 20 years. This contract neither party, under the facts presented, could modify or cancel without the consent of the other. Page 10 Contracts, § 1756. While admitting the correctness of this proposition, it is nevertheless confidently asserted that, as any kind of a contract may be altered or annulled by the consent of the contracting parties, so may a contract entered into by and with a municipality. Therefore the argument is made that, as the council and the other contracting party have consented to a cancellation of the contract, the courts have no authority to interfere; that the matter is entirely within the power and discretion of the council, and the council is to judge unrestrained of the necessity or reason for its cancellation and its acts are final and conclusive. In support of this contention counsel cite Bean v. Jay, 23 Me. 117, Nelson v. Milford, 7 Pick. (Mass.) 18, Meech v. Buffalo, 29 N. Y. 198, and section 477 of Dillon on Municipal Corporations, where the author, supporting his views by the cases supra, states that: "Growing out of its authority to create debts and to incur liabilities, a municipal corporation has power to settle disputed claims against the city, and an agreement to pay these is not void for want of consideration. If it has obtained a contract, which by mistake or a change of circumstances it deems to operate oppressively upon the other party, an agreement to make an additional compensation or to modify or annul it is not invalid for want of consideration." The case of Meech v. Buffalo is the only one of the three that is at all in point, and it does not decide the question presented in this case. There it appeared that the city ordered the construction of a sewer, and simultaneously determined that the amount to be assessed for the expense of the same be the sum of $1,058, and directed the city assessor to assess the same upon the real estate benefited by such improvement, and the amount was so assessed. Afterwards the corporation contracted with one Randolph to construct the sewer for $1,058.

and Randolph gave security for the performance of the contract on his part. While prosecuting the work, but before its completion, he struck and touched a bed of quicksand below the surface of the earth, of great extent, and directly in the line of the sewer, the existence of which was therefore unknown to both the contracting parties, and could not have been anticipated by either of them. The existence of the quicksand increased the expense of the construction of the sewer to such an extent that it was impossible for Randolph to construct the same for twice the amount of the contract price. Whereupon he stopped working upon it, and petitioned the common council to increase the contract price for building the sewer, to indemnify him for the loss which he would sustain by reason of such quicksand if he should go on and complete the sewer for the contract price. Upon such petition the common council determined to pay and allow to Randolph an additional sum on his contract. Randolph would have abandoned the work in its incomplete and unfinished state unless the additional allowance had been made to him as an indemnity for the loss which he would have sustained by reason of the quicksand, and this intention was known to the common council. Taxpayers of the town resisted the imposition and collection of this $588, upon the ground that the council had no power to add to the amount for which Randolph had agreed to construct the sewer," but, under the facts, the court held that it was within the power of the council to make the additional compensation. It is evident that the last sentence in the quotation from Dillon was rested upon this case, as no other authority is cited in support of it.

I have made diligent search, but without success, to find any authority supporting the view that a city council without any consideration may surrender or give away valuable property rights secured to the city under a fair contract, entered into by the contracting parties with full knowledge of existing circumstances, and the reciprocal rights and duties assumed. City councils are not invested with supreme power. They are not altogether above judicial control. They have large powers and extensive discretion, but these powers, and the discretion incident hereto, are delegated. They must be exercised within statutory limits, and when these limits are exceeded, their action may be reviewed by the courts. That they did exceed them in this case I have no doubt. The inhabitants of a city, although the principals, and indeed the corporation itself, are necessarily obliged to transact their business through agents appointed or selected for that purpose. And to say that these agents may cancel a contract made between the city and an individual, to the end that the individual may be benefited by the cancellation, and the people of the city damaged by it, seems to me to be unsound in principle, and entirely beyond the scope of the authority of these municipal agents. In this case the city will secure no consideration for its agreement to relieve the Home Telephone Company from its contract. True the ordinance provides for an upset price of $5,000 and the free use by the city for a few telephones, but these considerations are a part of the purchase price of the new franchise that any bidder would be obliged to pay and perform, and are not a reward paid to be released from an existing contract. The case before us furnishes a striking example of the necessity for judicial interposition, and illustrates well the evil consequences that would follow from a doctrine declaring that municipal boards had unlimited authority to cancel without consideration any and all contracts entered into between the city and persons or corporations. The telephone is one of the most useful of modern improvements. It has already become almost as essential to the convenience of the people as the common carriers. It is found in every well-appointed home, and it is rarely absent from a place of business. People use it one way or another in all the affairs of life. It is therefore highly important to the people of a city that telephone rates should be fixed at a reasonable price, in order that poor persons and those of moderate means may be able to have it in their homes and places of business. Under the contract made with the Home Telephone Company in 1900 the people of the city of Louisville were assured that for the term of 20 years from that date they would have furnished to them telephone service at reasonable rates. The ordinance provides in section 10: "That the apparatus, instruments, switch boards, appliances and equipment of said telephone system shall be of the best, most modern and approved central energy type, and all switch boards shall be of the multiple form except in subexchanges and shall be maintained during the period and existence of the said franchise or privilege with the best equipment possible, and the telephone service thereby shall be first-class in all respects and continuous and unlimited for twenty-four (24) hours in every day during the entire period for which said franchise or privilege shall be granted, except interruptions from unavoidable causes." But the enjoyment of this reasonable privilege will be taken away without consideration if this ordinance is valid.

It does not appear that any citizen of Louisville is objecting to the rates now charged, or complaining of the services rendered by the Home Telephone Company. But the company, after having operated its plant for several years, concluded that the rates fixed by the ordinance were too low; that the service it rendered to the city and the people was being furnished too cheaply; that the contract by which it assumed to pay a stipulated sum for each telephone in excess of 6,000 was an onerous burden upon it, and therefore it applied to the council to offer for sale another franchise. I use the expression "it applied to the council" because the ordinance upon its face shows, as I will presently point out, that it was really enacted for the benefit of the Home Telephone Company, and the petition avers that: "The Louisville Home Telephone Company has a special interest in the sale of said franchise, because it expects and intends to become a bidder for said franchise when sold by the board of public works, and hopes to become, and believes it will become, the purchaser thereof; and it desires to have opportunity, and has the right to have the opportunity, of thus acquiring the franchise for the operation of a telephone plant in the city of Louisville in accordance with the terms set forth in said ordinance."

I have heretofore pointed out the material disadvantages that the city and its people will suffer if the Home Telephone Company is permitted by the purchase of the new franchise to relieve itself of the obligations it assumed under the old one. And it is freely admitted by counsel for the company that, if it becomes the purchaser of the new franchise, the contract to pay the city for telephones in excess of 6,000, and to furnish telephones at the rates specified in the old ordinance, will be at once extinguished, except as to such individuals as have contracts, and as to them will terminate when the contracts expire. It therefore seems plain that, if the council can cancel this contract, it has the power to cancel any contract that might be made, by a person or corporation, with the city upon any subject, however injurious to the city and the people the annulment might be. This would result, if allowable, in permitting municipal boards to destroy any advantageous contract the city might make upon the request of the other contracting party who desired to free himself from the burdens or liability assumed when the contract was entered into. It would further result in permitting these boards to grant a gratuity, in the form of exonerations from assumed liabilities, to persons who had contracts with the city. If in and as part of the ordinance offering for sale a new franchise, the city council has the authority to provide that the obligations assumed under the old ordinance shall be extinguished, it would seem to follow that this result could, with as much force of reason and propriety, be arrived at, by simply adopting an ordinance striking from the old ordinance the features thereof objectionable to the Home Telephone Company, or, to put it in another way, if the provision in the ordinance in controversy that, "should the franchise herein ordered to be sold be at any time acquired by any person who at the time of such acquisition already owned a telephone franchise previously granted by the city of Louisville, said previously granted franchise shall immediately upon the acquisition of the franchise herein ordered to be sold become null and void, and be forfeited and surrendered to the city of Louisville; and all obligations created by the ordinance granting the same or acceptance thereof shall immediately cease and determine"—is valid, then why should not the council repeal by ordinance the features of the old ordinance that imposed upon the Home Telephone Company the obligations that are to be annulled if it purchased the franchise offered for sale under this new ordinance? The effect would be precisely the same. If one can be done, I see no reason why the other may not. But I doubt if the question was presented in this form if the majority of the court would have reached the conclusion that it was competent for the council to thus take away from the city, and the people of the city, valuable rights secured to them under a valid and enforceable contract, or be willing to lay down a rule that would encourage persons to enter into a contract with a city to perform for a consideration some beneficial public service, with the hope and expectation that a more accommodating council would relieve them from the onerous features of a contract that a less agreeable body had exacted. And in the views expressed upon this aspect of the case I find support in the opinion of this court in Cumberland Telephone & Telegraph Company v. City of Hickman, 111 S. W. 811, 33 Ky. Law Rep. 730, where it is said: "The grantee had agreed to certain conditions as part consideration for this grant. One of them, the rate of tolls, was of particular interest to the public, in other words, the city. The other condition was as to the time within which work on the plant was to be begun. The latter was not of so much importance to the city, except as a kind of security that the bid was in good faith. It was a condition which the city might have been justified in not exacting the penalty for its breach, if the delay had not been material. Still it was a matter of importance to the grantee, as it weakened his hold upon its franchise. We think it was competent for the city to waive the forfeiture of the franchise because the work had not been begun within six months, in consideration of a reduction of the rates by the owner of the franchise. There was a sufficient consideration moving to the city to support its waiver of the forfeiture; likewise a sufficient consideration moving to the grantee of the franchise to support his agreement to charge patrons within the city, and for whose benefit and welfare the contract had been entered into, a less rate than was originally agreed upon. In doing this the city granted no new or different right in the use of its streets, nor did it abate any of the original consideration. On the contrary, it gave only what it had originally agreed to grant, and got in exchange a better consideration."

The next question is: Is this ordinance a free and equal one and does it afford a fair opportunity to any bidder to purchase the franchise offered for sale? Section 164 of the Constitution provides that: "No county, city, town, taxing district or other municipality shall be authorized or permitted to grant any franchise or privilege or make any contract in reference thereto for a term exceeding twenty years. Before granting such franchise or privilege for a term of years, such municipality shall first after due advertisement receive bids therefor publicly, and award the same to the highest and best bidder, but it shall have the right to reject any and all bids. This section shall not apply to a trunk line railway." This section was incorporated in the new Constitution for the benefit of the citizens of municipalities, and not of persons or corporations who desired to purchase the right to operate public utilities. Its adoption, as said in Hilliard v. Fetter Lighting & Heating Co., 105 S. W. 115, 81 Ky. Law Rep. 1330, "was largely due to the fact that prior to the present Constitution the municipal authorities of cities might, and did, grant valuable rights in the streets and public places to individuals and corporations desiring to use them for private gain. No restrictions were thrown around the granting of these privileges to protect the citizens from the cupidity of the council or the greed of a purchaser of a franchise. As a result, the residents and taxpayers of the city found their most valuable streets occupied by corporations, who obtained them as a result of personal favor or private traffic without just or often any compensation to the people who owned them." That it was further intended by this section that no advantage or preference should be shown to any person in the sale of a franchise is illustrated by the care used in providing that: "Before granting said franchise or privilege for a term of years, such municipality shall first after due advertisement receive bids therefor publicly and award the same to the highest and best bidder"—thus throwing around the sale every possible efficient safeguard that might prevent such discrimination or favoritism as would deprive the people of the profit or advantage they might expect to gain from the sale of the franchise. If any preference was allowed or any favoritism permitted, either in the ordinance authorizing the sale, or in the conduct of the sale, or in any manner, by the municipal authorities, it is clear the object of this section would be defeated, and its useful purpose impaired, if not destroyed. As a consequence unscrupulous or favored persons or corporations would be enabled to secure for a trifle privileges that might be worth, and that in the open market would bring thousands.

The question then arises: In what particular does this ordinance violate the principle of fair, equal and free opportunity to bid and buy the franchise proposed to be offered? In considering this question it is well to keep in mind the fact that the Home Telephone Company at the time this ordinance was enacted was, and had been since 1900, operating a telephone system in Louisville, and that its only competitor in the business was the Cumberland Telephone Company. Both of these corporations were engaged in exactly the same kind of business. Each of them was operating under a franchise granted by the city, and there was a genuine and active competition between them. This being true, it strikes one at first blush as being singular that one of these companies should be excluded from bidding or becoming a purchaser of the franchise. No good reason, nor indeed any reason, in my opinion, is offered to explain why the Cumberland Telephone Company was discriminated against, and the Home Telephone Company favored, in this respect. I am unable to perceive how the purchase of this franchise by the Cumberland Telephone Company would give it any greater monopoly than would its purchase by the Home Telephone Company. If the Cumberland Telephone Company became the purchaser, its purchase would not in any manner interfere with the rights and privileges of the Home Telephone Company under its existing franchise. And so, if the Home Telephone Company should become the purchaser, its franchise would not prevent the Cumberland Telephone Company from competing with it for business under the franchise giving it the right to operate a telephone system. It is, however, said that the preamble to the ordinance sets out the reasons why the Cumberland Telephone Company was excluded. This preamble declares: "Whereas, it is desired to secure for the public more efficient competition with the Cumberland Telephone & Telegraph Company, and whereas, requirements of the telephone franchise heretofore sold for that purpose embraced certain restrictions that make such competition impossible; therefore, be it ordained by the general council of the city of Louisville."

I confess my inability to understand how the restrictions as to rates, imposed upon the Home Telephone Company by the ordinance of 1900, and heretofore pointed out, prevented it from being an efficient competitor of the Cumberland Telephone Company, or how the purchase by it of the franchise offered under the new ordinance would make it a helpful competitor in the interest of the public. The theory of the Home Telephone Company is that, if it is allowed to charge higher rates than its existing franchise permits, it may be a more efficient competitor than it could under the law rates; but, it seems to me that this reasoning is fallacious. The competition favored by the Constitution is a competition that benefits the public, a competition that reduces rates, and not a competition that enriches the competitors at the expense of the public, or that enables them to charge rates that, compared with existing rates, appear unreasonable. This kind of competition may be desirable looking at the matter from the standpoint of the corporation, but it is clear that it is not the kind of competition that the law regards with favor. But, as authorizing the exclusion of the Cumberland Telephone Company, its counsel relies with great confidence upon the opinion of this court in Stites v. Norton, 101 S. W. 1189, 31 Ky. Law Rep. 263, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 474. I think the ruling of the court in that case was sound in principle when applied to the facts stated in the opinion, but I am also confident that it should not be extended to embrace the state of case presented by this record. The purpose of that opinion was to encourage real competition, to the end that the people using public utilities might be benefited, and to prevent the creation of a monopoly. It was not the purpose of the court, in excluding the Louisville Lighting Company as a bidder, to encourage favoritism or discrimination without a corresponding benefit to the public. That this is a proper construction of the opinion may be readily understood by carefully considering what was decided. In that case the city offered for sale a franchise to string and maintain wires along the streets of the city for distributing and selling electricity. The ordinance creating the franchise excluded the Louisville Lighting Company, upon the ground that it already had all the privileges conferred by the ordinance; it being admitted that the Louisville Lighting Company and its associated corporations owned and operated, at the time the ordinance was adopted, the only franchise for lighting the city with electricity, and further admitted that, if it or those acting in its interests were permitted to bid at the sale of the new franchise, the purchase would be for the purpose of suppressing and preventing operation under it. Under these facts the court, in sustaining the right of the city to exclude the Louisville Lighting Company as a bidder, said: "The receiving of such a bid would have had the effect to delay, hinder, and possibly prevent the lawful purpose of the council in attempting to relieve the city from extortion. A bid made for such a purpose and with such an intent, is not a bid in the sense and meaning of section 164 of the Constitution. Legislative bodies should be very careful in prohibiting persons or corporations from bidding at such sales; and, if it should be made to appear that bids were rejected by reason of any ulterior, sinister, fraudulent, or unlawful purpose or reason, the court should grant relief, but when made to appear, as in this case, that the prohibition of a bid was made for the just and lawful purpose of enabling the council to secure to the citizens their rights under the Constitution, the court should uphold rather than condemn its action."

That there is a radical distinction between the facts before the court in the Stites Case and the facts exhibited by this record is made manifest by what has been heretofore said. The Stites Case presented exceptionally good and strong reasons for the application of the rule announced, none of which exist in this case. That the purpose in excluding the Cumberland Telephone Company was not to benefit the public or give fair competition, but to benefit the Home Telephone Company alone, is manifest. So that the question comes up, Is an ordinance that excludes a bidder, for no other reason than that he is already in competition with the bidder who desires to purchase the franchise, authorized by the Constitution? I think not. If the Stites Case should be extended along logical lines, both of these telephone companies should be excluded from purchasing the privilege of establishing a new telephone system; but, clearly one of them should not be. If municipal bodies could thus discriminate between competitors, without any reason except the desire to favor one above the other, the result would be that bribery, corruption, and improper influences would be resorted to by the owners of the competing plants whenever an ordinance for a new franchise was pending, the purpose of each being to exclude the other as a competitor. As a necessary consequence of this, the citizens of the municipality would be denied the right guaranteed to them by the Constitution to have these privileges sold at public outcry, after due advertisement, to the highest and best bidder. If, under circumstances like these, a city council can exclude one competitor from bidding for a franchise granting a privilege in which only two are engaged in the business of conducting, I see no reason why they might not say that only one of four or more persons or corporations, engaged in identically the same business, should be permitted to bid for or purchase a new franchise to conduct a similar business. And so, if this theory of exclusion and discrimination was authorized, a council could virtually award a franchise to its favorite corporation without any excuse or reason except that found in the influence of this councilmanic favorite. It needs no argument or elaboration to show what unfortunate results would follow from such a practice, if legalized. It was surely not contemplated by the Constitution makers that this valuable section, intended to secure competition, prevent discrimination, and deny favoritism, might be made the efficient instrument in the accomplishment of the very ends intended to be prevented. It would be a most remarkable condition of affairs if A, B, and C, who were engaged in the same identical business, in real competition with each other, and with D, should be denied the right to bid for a franchise permitting the purchaser to conduct the same business they were carrying on, and yet allow D to bid for and buy the franchise. This rule would prevent competition, deny equality, encourage discrimination, and foster favoritism. In short, it would be an active aid in everything that the Constitution was designed to prevent.

The ordinance in question not only excludes the Cumberland Telephone Company, but it also provides that, if the Home Telephone Company is the purchaser, its former franchise shall be at an end. In other words, if the Home Telephone Company purchases the franchise, it will be released from its obligation to furnish telephone service at the present rates, and will be allowed to charge almost double as much for the same service. It will also be released from its obligation to pay the city $1 each on all telephones over 6,000. If any one else buys the franchise, he will get no more than the privileges granted; but if the Home Telephone Company buys the franchise it will get in addition a release from its present obligations to the city. The bidders, therefore, will not stand upon an equal footing. The provision of the Constitution that the franchise shall be sold to the highest and best bidder after due advertisement is meaningless if such an ordinance as this can be sustained. The purpose of the Constitution is that the franchise shall be sold to the highest and best bidder after due advertisement, so that the city shall derive as much from the sale as can be gotten. The purpose of the ordinance is not to make anything for the city, but to relieve the Home Telephone Company from its present obligations under the form of a sale of a new ordinance. When the ordinance is read in the light of the allegations of the petition that the Home Telephone Company expects to be a bidder at the sale, it is manifest that the ordinance was designed to sell a franchise which only the Home Telephone Company could buy, and that it should be the only bidder at the sale, for no one can compete with it in bidding for this franchise, as no one can get, if he purchases, the same advantages as it will get. Free and equal competition is the fundamental aim of the constitutional provision, and when there is no free and equal competition, the constitutional provision is violated. Here the ordinance excludes from the bidding appellant's only competitor; and then gives it, if it purchases, privileges that no one else gets if he should purchase it. It is uniformly held, under statutes providing for sales to the highest and best bidder, that unless there can be real competition, the statute is violated. Fairfax v. Hopkins, 8 Fed. Cas. 955, No. 4,614; Hart v.

Buckner, 54 Fed. 925, 5 C. C. A. 1. And where the statute provides for the letting of public improvements to the lowest and best bidder, it is in like manner also held that the proceeding is void where the ordinance prescribes conditions preventing fair and free competition. Fineran v. Central Bitulithic Co., 116 Ky. 495, 78 S. W. 415; Fishburn v. Chicago, 171 Ill. 338, 49 N. E. 532, 39 L. R. A. 482, 63 Am. St. Rep. 236; Diamond v. Mankato, 89 Minn. 48, 93 N. W. 911, 61 L. R. A. 448. Here we have not a statutory provision, but a mandatory provision, of the Constitution. While the city council has legislative authority, it has this authority subject to the Constitution. Any legislation it makes in conflict with the Constitution is void. The public sale of the franchise in question is but a form of granting a special privilege to the Home Telephone Company, and when such proceedings are sustained, the door is open for all the abuses which the constitutional provision was intended to prevent. The exclusion of the Cumberland Telephone Company from bidding and the favoritism shown the Home Telephone Company were both in violation of section 164 of the Constitution, and for these reasons the ordinance should be declared invalid.

I am further of the opinion that the obligation upon the part of the company, under its contract of 1900, to pay to the city $1 per annum for each telephone in use in the city, in excess of 6,000, during the life of the contract, which was for a term of 20 years, was a liability within the meaning of section 52 of the Constitution, and the attempt to release the company a violation of the section which provides that: "The General Assembly shall have no power to release, extinguish, or authorize the releasing or extinguishing, in whole or in part, the indebtedness or liability of any corporation or individual to this commonwealth, or to any county or municipality thereof"—and should be given a liberal and not a strained construction. In other words, it should be so interpreted as to give to the city the full measure of protection intended to be conferred by the section. The words "liability" and "indebtedness" used in the section are the leading features of it. The other words merely describe the bodies that may not release or extinguish an "indebtedness" or "liability." It is to be presumed that they were used in the ordinary and usual acceptance of these words. They are not technical, but are commonly employed in the everyday affairs of life. If we say that a person is indebted, or that he has assumed a liability, it will be understood that there is some contract obligation existing under and by virtue of which the liability or indebtedness was created or incurred. The amount of the liability or the extent of the indebtedness is not material. It may be $1 or $1,000 or the rendering of service. Nor is it important when the contract was created, if it be valid, or when the indebtedness or liability is to be liquidated, or whether it may be paid in installments or as a whole. Webster defines "liability" as the "state of being liable, that which one is under obligation to pay, or for which one is liable." The word "liable" is defined as being "bound or obligated in law or equity, exposed to a certain contingency or casualty, more or less probable." And defines "indebtedness" as the "state of being indebted; that is, brought into debt, being under obligations, held to payment of requital, beholden, placed under obligation for something received, for which restitution or gratitude is due." It will be seen from these definitions that the word "liability" is sufficiently comprehensive to include any kind of legal or equitable obligation to do or perform a certain thing. If it was only intended that the section should be applied to contract obligations to pay a fixed sum of money, there would have been no reason for using the word "liability," as the word "indebtedness" covers and embraces all ordinary debts. It is therefore fair to assume that the word "liability" was added to remove any doubt that might exist as to the intent of the section. It is a word of broader meaning than "indebtedness," and includes matters that the word "indebtedness" might not reach.

There is no dispute about the terms of the contract between the city and the telephone company; nor is there any denial of its validity, so that, the only question to be considered is whether or not it created a liability to the city upon the part of the Home Telephone Company. It was agreed, as a part of the contract, that if the Home Telephone Company put in operation any telephones in excess of 6,000, that it would pay to the city $1 for each telephone over that number. It is therefore plain that, if the company installed, during the existence of the franchise, over 6,000 telephones, there would not only be a liability to pay the stipulated fee for the excess, but the creation of an indebtedness, upon which the city might maintain an action. But the argument is made that this liability is too contingent to come within the meaning of section 52. That there may or may not be any telephones over 6,000 in use, and hence there may or may not be any indebtedness or liability on the part of the company under its contract. Granting, for the sake of the argument, that the company might not have over 6,000 telephones in use, and consequently not become liable or indebted to the city in any amount, this does not prove that no liability was created. The mere fact that it is contingent in this particular does not take it out of the reach of the constitutional provision. It is not necessary that the extent or exact or approximate amount of the liability be specified, or that it shall be definitely fixed. It was clearly contemplated by the parties to the contract that at some time during its existence the number of telephones would exceed 6,000, and it was further contemplated that the contract would run for the full term of 20 years. Therefore the city has the right to exact from the company any amount that may become due at any time within 20 years. That this condition was incorporated in the ordinance is some evidence of the fact that the city expected to derive benefit from it. I might add that it is stated in the opinion that there is now in service 8,000 telephones, and that the city is deriving an annual income therefrom of $2,000, thus making it plain that the contract in this particular is valuable to the city, and creates a liability, as well as an indebtedness, upon the part of the Home Telephone Company that it wishes to be relieved of.

For the reasons stated, the general demurrer to the petition was properly sustained.

I am authorized to say that Judges HOBSON and NUNN concur in this dissenting opinion.

HAGER, Auditor, v. SIDEBOTTOM.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Nov. 27, 1906.)

1. STATES (§ 201*)—ACTION AGAINST—ANSWER—TIME TO FILE.

Mandamus to compel the Auditor of State to issue a warrant to pay a reward offered by the Governor for the apprehension of an offender is practically against the state, and a meritorious defense must be allowed, though not tendered in time fixed by Civ. Code Prac. § 474, whether the defense is governed by the section or not; the state not being affected by the laches of its officers.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see States, Cent. Dig. § 193; Dec. Dig. § 201.*]

2. STATES (§ 50*)—OFFICERS—GOVERNOR—PRIVATE SECRETARY OF GOVERNOR—AUTHORITY.

The private secretary of the Governor, employed to assist him in the labors of his office, as authorized by Acts 1906, p. 280, c. 30, is not authorized to discharge the duties of the Governor in his absence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see States, Dec. Dig. § 50.*]

3. REWARDS (§ 4*)—POWER TO OFFER REWARDS—STATUTES.

The Governor, in offering a reward for the apprehension of an offender, as authorized by Ky. St. 1903, §§ 1932, 1933, must exercise discretion as to whether a reward shall be offered, and the amount thereof, and must also determine to what jail the offender shall be delivered, etc., and his private secretary, authorized by Acts 1906, p. 280, c. 30, to assist him in the labors of his office, cannot, in the absence of the Governor, offer a reward.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Rewards, Dec. Dig. § 4.*]

4. EVIDENCE (§ 431*)—ACTION ON WRITTEN CONTRACT—DEFENSES.

The rule that, in a suit on a written contract, the writing cannot be called in question, except on an allegation of fraud or mistake, does not preclude a party from pleading that he did not execute the writing, or that he signed a blank, which was subsequently filled by another, without authority.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 1976; Dec. Dig. § 481.*]

5. MANDAMUS (§ 164*)—REWARDS—PAYMENT—ACTION TO COMPEL.

A plea in mandamus to compel the Auditor of State to issue a warrant to pay a reward offered by the Governor, which alleges that the Governor did not offer the reward, that he signed a blank, and that, while he was absent, his private secretary offered the reward by filling out the blank, charges that the record sued on is not a genuine record, because not in fact made by the Governor, and is available, though Ky. St. 1903, § 3760, provides that an official certificate shall not be called in question, except on allegation of fraud or mistake.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mandamus, Dec. Dig. § 164.*]

6. REWARDS (§ 4*)—EXECUTIVE POWER—CERTIFICATE OF GOVERNOR—EVIDENCE.

An official certificate of the Governor to a reward offered for the apprehension of an offender is only prima facie valid, and may be shown to be invalid by proof that would invalidate other official certificates purporting to be the acts of the officers whose names they bear.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Rewards, Dec. Dig. § 4.*]

7. STATES (§ 181*)—DEMANDS—STATUTES.

Claims against the state treasury cannot arise by implication, and he who demands money from the treasury must show that his claim is warranted by law.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see States, Dec. Dig. § 181.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Franklin County.

"To be officially reported."

Mandamus by J. P. Sidebottom against S. W. Hager, Auditor of State, to compel the issuance of a warrant for the payment of a claim. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded.

N. B. Hays and C. H. Morris, for appellant. John B. Lindsey and Cammack & Perry, for appellee.

HOBSON, J. J. P. Sidebottom brought this suit against S. W. Hager, as Auditor of Public Accounts of the state of Kentucky, alleging, in effect, that the Governor on November 30, 1906, by proclamation duly issued, offered a reward in the sum of $500 for the apprehension and delivery of Burt Hudson to the jailer of Owen county, wherein Hudson stood charged with murder; that while the offer was in force, he arrested Hudson on December 3, 1906, in St. Louis, Mo., and delivered him to the jailer of Owen county; that at the February term, 1907, his claim for $500 was allowed by the Owen circuit court; that he presented it to Hager as Auditor, and he refused to issue a warrant in his favor. A copy of the Governor's proclamation was filed with the petition, and a mandamus was prayed against the Auditor, requiring him to issue a warrant for the payment of the claim. The Auditor demurred to the petition. His de-murrer was overruled. He then tendered an answer, but the court refused to allow it to be filed, and entered judgment in favor of the plaintiff as prayed. The Auditor appeals.

The suit was filed July 24, 1907. The process was served on that day. The next rule day was August 5th. No defense was made then or on the next rule day, September 2d. On September 10th, the second day of the term, the plaintiff entered a motion in court for a mandamus pursuant to notice given when the suit was filed. On September 19th the plaintiff entered a motion for judgment. The court took time; and on September 24th the defendant filed a demurrer to the petition. On October 4th the court overruled the demurrer. The defendant then tendered his answer, but the court refused to allow it to be filed. It is insisted that the court properly refused to allow the answer filed because it was not tendered in time under the practice act. We do not deem it material to consider whether or not the filing of the answer was governed by section 474, Civ. Code Prac. The court had allowed the demurrer to be filed, and when he passed on the demurrer, the answer was tendered. The suit is practically one against the state. The Auditor was defending for the state. A meritorious defense for the state should never be rejected because of the delay of its officers in tendering it. The state is, as a rule, not affected by the laches of its officers. In the multitude of matters they have to look after some will be delayed, and we know officially that the Attorney General's office at this time was much overworked. We assume from the court's allowing the demurrer to be filed that he refused to allow the answer filed because he did not consider that it presented a defense to the action; and this is the main question in the case.

In the answer it was, in substance, alleged that the Governor did not offer a reward for Burt Hudson; but that he signed a blank, and left it with his private secretary, Ed. O. Leigh; that while the Governor was absent, application was made to Leigh; that he heard the application, and made out and promulgated the proclamation of the reward sued on, by filling out the blank in the absence of the Governor, and without his considering the application; that the proclamation was not the act of the Governor, and was null and void. It is insisted for the plaintiff that Leigh's act was authorized by the statute, to the effect "that the Governor of this commonwealth be and he is hereby allowed to employ and have a private secretary to assist him in the labors of his office. * * * The Governor shall be responsible for all the official acts of his private secretary." See Acts 1906, p. 260, c. 30. The private secretary is to assist the Governor in the labors of his office. He is not authorized to discharge the duties of the Governor in his absence. Certain officers are allowed by law to appoint deputies, but there is nothing in the act showing any intention to vest in the private secretary any of the powers vested in the Governor. The rule is elementary that a delegated authority cannot be delegated without authority of law, and that acts requiring the exercise of discretion and judgment must be performed by the officer himself. The Governor in cases of this sort must exercise a discretion as to whether a reward should be issued, and, if issued, in what amount. Ky. St. 1903, § 1932. He must determine to what jail the prisoner shall be delivered, and how, or in what paper or papers, the offer of reward shall be published. Ky. St. 1903, § 1933. If the Governor may delegate to his private secretary such matters of discretion as these, it is hard to understand what duties of the chief magistrate may not be performed by his secretary in his absence.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

Section 3760, Ky. St. 1903, is also relied on. That section provides, in substance, that an official certificate shall not be called in question "except upon the allegation of fraud in the party to be benefited thereby or mistake on the part of the officer." In a suit on a written contract the writing cannot be called in question except upon an allegation of fraud or mistake; but this rule was never understood to mean that a party could not plead that he did not execute the writing, or that he signed a blank which was afterwards filled by another without authority. The pleading here does not call in question the Governor's certificate. It charges that it is not his act. It is a plea that the alleged record sued on is not a genuine record because not in fact made by the Governor. Nor is the record itself conclusive of its genuineness. There is no statute giving it any such effect. It is, like the certificate of any other officer, prima facie valid, but subject to be shown invalid by proof that would invalidate other official certificates, purporting to be the acts of the officers whose names they bear. If the statute had authorized the circuit judge of the district to issue offers of reward in cases like this, would it be maintained that a certificate signed in the judge's name was conclusive on the state? Or if it was shown that the judge had signed a blank before leaving home, and in his absence his stenographer had heard an application and issued an offer of reward by filling in the blank, could it be said that this was the act of the judge, and binding on the state? The validity of an official act does not depend on the grade of the officer. The highest officer is bound by the law no less than the lowest. If he does not conform to the law, his act no more binds the state than that of the humblest officer in the land under like circumstances. Both are but agents of the state, and, to bind it, must act in conformity to law. One can no more delegate his discretionary duties to another than the other. Claims against the treasury cannot arise by implication, and he who demands money from the public treasury must fall unless his claim is warranted by law. The foundation of the plaintiff's claim is the proclamation of the Governor, and if that is invalid, the law does not authorize its payment. A similar question to that before us arose in Re Tod, 12 S. D. 386, 81 N. W. 637, 47 L. R. A. 566, 76 Am. St. Rep. 616, where the Governor signed blank warrants, and these, when application was made, were filled out and issued by his secretary without action by the Governor. The warrants were held void.

If the proceeding here was sustained, officers might be appointed, persons might be arrested, death warrants might issue in the absence of the Governor, and without any exercise by him of the discretion confided in him personally by law. We therefore conclude that the answer presents a good defense to the action. The ex parte order of the Owen circuit court is only prima facie evidence of the correctness of the claim. Ky. St. 1903, § 340a.

Judgment reversed, and cause remanded for further proceedings consistent herewith.

WEST et al. v. McDONALD et al.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Nov. 23, 1908.)

1. JUDICIAL SALES (§ 31*)—CONFIRMATION—OBJECTIONS—PERSONS ENTITLED TO RAISE.

The objection that the petition did not state a cause of action and was insufficient to support the decree cannot be relied on by the purchasers at the decretal sale to defeat a confirmation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judicial Sales, Cent. Dig. § 63; Dec. Dig. § 31.*]

2. JUDICIAL SALES (§ 31*)—CONFIRMATION—OBJECTIONS—PERSONS ENTITLED TO RAISE.

The objection that the property was divisible and should have been sold in separate parcels cannot be relied on by the purchasers at a decretal sale to defeat a confirmation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judicial Sales, Cent. Dig. § 63; Dec. Dig. § 31.*]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 934*)—REVIEW—PRESUMPTIONS—JUDGMENT.

Where, notwithstanding no proof seems to have been taken as to whether a lot sold under a mortgage foreclosure was divisible, the petition alleged that it was not, and such allegation was not denied, and the lot, though containing two houses, was small and the houses not valuable, the Court of Appeals will not presume that the court below acted unadvisedly in decreeing a sale of the lot as a whole, but will take it for granted that the petition and mortgage filed as an exhibit so described the lot as to enable the court to determine its indivisibility.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3777-3782; Dec. Dig. § 384.*]

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

4. JUDICIAL SALES (§ 31*)—CONFIRMATION—OBJECTIONS.

Purchasers at a decretal sale not prejudiced by the sale of the lot as a whole cannot complain that it was so sold.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judicial Sales, Cent. Dig. § 63; Dec. Dig. § 31.*]

5. JUDICIAL SALES (§ 31*)—CONFIRMATION—OBJECTIONS.

An objection by purchasers at a decretal sale to the confirmation thereof, charging the existence of a street improvement lien and also a lien for taxes, will not be sustained, where such liens may be set up and paid out of the proceeds of the sale after satisfying the judgment for which made, before final distribution of the surplus.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judicial Sales, Dec. Dig. § 31.*]

6. WILLS (§ 620*)—CONSTRUCTION—ESTATES CREATED—MAINTENANCE.

Under a will devising testatrix's interest in a lot to a daughter, with full power and authority to dispose thereof by will or otherwise, and providing that another daughter should have a home in the real estate, the estate of the latter daughter continued for life, provided only that the lot was not disposed of by the other daughter.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. § 1439; Dec. Dig. § 620.*]

7. JUDICIAL SALES (§ 31*)—CONFIRMATION—OBJECTIONS—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

An objection to the confirmation of a decretal sale that defendant was of unsound mind when the action was brought and judgment rendered held not sustained by the evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judicial Sales, Dec. Dig. § 31.*]

8. EVIDENCE (§ 67*)—PRESUMPTIONS—CONTINUANCE OF CONDITION—SANITY.

A person adjudged to be of sound mind will be presumed to so continue until the contrary is shown.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 87; Dec. Dig. § 67; * Insane Persons, Cent. Dig. § 6.]

9. INSANE PERSONS (§ 100*)—JUDGMENTS—VALIDITY.

A judgment against an insane person is not void, but voidable.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insane Persons, Cent. Dig. § 179; Dec. Dig. § 100.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Garrard County.

"Not to be officially reported."

W. T. West and another became the purchasers of a lot sold under the decree in an action by Mary K. McDonald against Mary Cunningham. The commissioner's report of sale having been filed, they interposed exceptions thereto, which were overruled, and they appeal. Affirmed.

Lewis L. Walker, for appellants. Wm. Herndon, for appellee Mrs. McDonald.

SETTLE. J. The appellants, W. T. West and J. A. Jones, became the joint purchasers at decretal sale of a small parcel of ground lying in the city of Lancaster, and known on the city plat as lot 39. The lot contains two small houses, and was until purchased by appellants the property of Mrs. Mary Cunningham. It was appraised before its sale at $1,700. Appellants were the highest and best bidders for the property, and it was knocked down to them at the price of $1,253, for which they executed two bonds with approved personal security, in each of which a lien was retained upon the lot to further secure their payment. The decree under which the lot was sold was rendered in an action brought in the Garrard circuit court May 17, 1907, by the appellee Mary K. McDonald against Mary Cunningham to recover of the latter upon a note of $650, bearing date May 16, 1898, payable one day thereafter with interest from date which had been paid down to May 1, 1903. The note was secured by a mortgage on the lot in question executed and acknowledged by the obligor simultaneously with the execution of the note, and duly recorded in the office of the clerk of the Garrard county court, and in the petition the lien given by the mortgage was sought to be enforced and a sale of the lot asked in payment of the note. Mary Cunningham, the defendant in that action, though duly summoned, made no defense, and judgment was rendered by default against her for the amount of the note and interest and also for the sale of the lot in satisfaction thereof. After appellants' purchase of the lot, the commissioner filed in the court below his report of sale, following which appellants filed exceptions raising numerous objections to its confirmation. The exceptions were, however, all overruled, the sale confirmed, and the commissioner directed to make appellants a deed of conveyance to the lot, which was done. Appellants excepted to the judgment manifesting these rulings of the court, and have appealed.

The exceptions filed to the report of sale were: (1) That the petition did not state a cause of action and was insufficient to support the judgment. (2) That the property was divisible, and should have been divided and sold in two separate parcels. (3) That there were other liens upon the property, and the holders thereof should have been made parties. (4) Because one Nancy Ann McMurtry, a sister of Mary Cunningham, owned an interest in the lot, and should have been made a party to the action. (5) That Mary Cunningham was of unsound mind when the action was brought and judgment rendered, that a committee was not appointed by the court to make a defense for her, and for this reason, and upon the other grounds mentioned in the exceptions, the judgment under which the lot was sold is void, and the sale should have been set aside.

Appellants cannot object to the judgment upon the grounds presented by exceptions 1 and 2. If true, none of them would render the judgment void; and besides they cannot be relied on by a mere purchaser of the property at decretal sale. Whether they could be relied on by the defendant Cunningham we need not decide, for no such objections are being urged by her. Our examination of the petition convinces us that it does state a cause of action, and was sufficient to support the judgment. While no proof seems to have been taken on the question as to whether the lot was divisible, the petition alleges that it was not, and this was not denied. Moreover, the lot, though containing two houses, is a small one, the houses not valuable, and on the face of the record we will not presume that the circuit court acted unadvisedly in decreeing a sale of the property as a whole, but, on the other hand, will take it for granted that the petition and mortgage filed as an exhibit so described the lot as to enable the court to determine its indivisibility. Sears v. Henry, 13 Bush, 413. Obviously appellants were not prejudiced by the sale of the lot as a whole, and it does not lie in their mouths to complain that it was so sold. Fowler v. Kellam, 4 Ky. Law Rep. 988.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

As to the third exception, we may say that while it charges the existence of a small street improvement lien against the lot sold in favor of the city of Lancaster, and also a small lien for taxes due the commonwealth, county of Garrard, and city of Lancaster, these liens will not together or in the aggregate exceed $80 in amount, and they may be set up by the lienholders and paid out of the proceeds of the lot after satisfying appellees' judgment before a final distribution of the surplus.

The interest in the lot claimed for Nancy Ann McMurtry by the fourth exception is not apparent from the record before us. Nancy Ann McMurtry is a sister of Mrs. Cunningham, and both were the daughters of Martha McMurtry, deceased, who before her death jointly with her daughter, Mary Cunningham, purchased of W. H. Kinnaird and wife the lot in controversy, each paying a certain proportion of the purchase money. The deeds from the Kinnairds conveyed them the lot jointly, but provided that each of the grantees should take title in proportion to the amount of purchase money paid by her upon the lot. The will of Martha McMurtry devised her interest in the lot, which was something less than a moiety to the sole and separate use of Mary Cunningham free from the control of her husband then living or any future husband she might have, "with full power and authority to dispose" of such interest "by will or otherwise." The will provides that Nancy Ann McMurtry should during her life have a home in the real estate. We incline to the opinion that the meaning of the testatrix as gathered from the entire language of the will was that the home thus intended to be provided Nancy Ann was to continue during her life, or until the property should be disposed of by her sister, Mrs. Cunningham. Unless such was her meaning, no effect can be given to the language of the will, which confers upon Mrs. Cunningham "full power to dispose of same by will or otherwise." The latter did dispose of the lot by giving appellee a mortgage upon it, and, when the mortgage debt matured and Mrs. Cunningham's inability to pay it compelled appellee to enforce the mortgage by suit and a sale of the lot, that fact ended the right of Nancy Ann to longer occupy it as a place of residence.

The exception as to the alleged unsoundness of mind of Mary Cunningham is not sufficiently sustained by the evidence. The witnesses who testified on that subject were not experts. Those introduced by appellants testified, it is true, to certain eccentricities of character possessed by Mrs. Cunningham, and among them that she was superstitious, but not one of them ventured to express the opinion that she was incapable of understanding a business transaction either at the time of the execution of the mortgage, at the time of the institution of the suit, or when appellants purchased the lot in controversy. On the other hand, appellees' witnesses were of opinion that she was of sound mind and mentioned business transactions which went far to support the opinions they expressed. Two of these witnesses were lawyers who had dealings with Mrs. Cunningham. Mrs. Cunningham seems to have been at one time adjudged of unsound mind after a verdict to that effect by a jury, but in a subsequent inquisition held before the execution of the mortgage to appellee she was found by verdict of the jury and adjudged to be of sound mind, and, this being true, the law presumes her to be still of sound mind, and this presumption will prevail unless overthrown by proof to the contrary. Furthermore, it may be said that a judgment rendered against an insane person is not necessarily void or to be so treated. It is merely voidable. Logan, etc., v. Vanarsdall, &c., 96 S. W. 981, 27 Ky. Law Rep. 822.

Finding in the record no reason for disagreeing with the conclusions arrived at by the lower court in this case, the judgment is affirmed.

LOUISVILLE & N. R. CO. v. SCHROADER.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Nov. 24, 1908.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 289*)—INJURY TO SERVANT—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

Whether a brakeman, who, while adjusting the crane of a water tank to fill the tank of his engine, was struck by another train backing on the next track, was guilty of contributory negli-ence, is a question for the jury on conflicting evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 1089-1132; Dec. Dig. § 359.*]

1. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 291*)—INJURIES TO EMPLOYE—ACTION—INSTRUCTIONS—CONFINING JURY TO EVIDENCE.

An instruction that "if the jury believe from the evidence" that the trainmen failed to observe the rules of defendant confines them to the rules given in evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Dec. Dig. § 291.*]

1. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 137*)—INJURIES TO EMPLOYE—BACKING TRAINS—LOOKOUT.

In backing a train in a town by where another train on the next track was taking water, and where the presence of persons on and about the track was to be anticipated, it was the company's duty to have some one on the rear of the backing train to keep a lookout and give signals of its movements.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 270; Dec. Dig. § 137.*]

1. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 145*)—INJURIES TO EMPLOYE—TRAINS "PUSHED" BY ENGINE—RULES OF COMPANY.

The rule of a railroad company as to having a flagman at the front of the leading car to keep a lookout and give signals, when a train is being pushed by an engine, applies when the engine, being behind the cars, is either going backward or forward.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Dec. Dig. § 145.*]

5. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 285*)—INJURIES TO EMPLOYE—QUESTION FOR COURT—CONSTRUCTION OF WRITTEN RULES.

The construction of a written rule of a railroad, like that of other writing, is for the court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Dec. Dig. § 285.*]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1033*)—HARMLESS ERROR—INSTRUCTIONS.

A party is not prejudiced by an instruction where the court should have given one more unfavorable to it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4056; Dec. Dig. § 1033.*]

5. TRIAL (§ 295*)—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—INSTRUCTIONS—CONSTRUCTION AS A WHOLE.

The instruction to find for plaintiff, if certain facts be found, unless the jury believe he was guilty of such contributory negligence as caused or helped to cause the accident, and out for which he would not have been injured, if not conforming to the proper rule as to contributory negligence, could not have misled the jury, they having also been instructed that if plaintiff failed to exercise ordinary care to avoid injury to himself, and by such failure he contributed to his injury to such a degree that but for such failure he would not have been injured, he could not recover.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 703-717; Dec. Dig. § 295.*]

3. DAMAGES (§ 215*)—PUNITIVE DAMAGES—GROSS NEGLIGENCE.

There is evidence of gross neglect, making it proper to submit the question of punitive damages where, without warning or a lookout, a train was backed onto the brakeman of another train on the adjoining track while he was turning, with a lever, a crane to supply his engine with water, the conductor and brakeman of the backing train taking no steps for his protection, though seeing his position, and that the train was backing without a flagman.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Damages, Cent. Dig. §§ 543-547; Dec. Dig. § 215.*]

9. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 994*)—DISCREDITING UNCONTRADICTED TESTIMONY.

The appellate court will not discredit the testimony of a physician for plaintiff, the facts testified to being physical symptoms, and he being uncontradicted, though any physician could have examined plaintiff and testified as to the correctness of the testimony.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3901; Dec. Dig. § 994.*]

10. DAMAGES (§ 132*)—PERSONAL INJURY.

A verdict of $12,000 for injury to a healthy young man, a railroad brakeman, resulting in loss of a leg above the ankle, paralysis of other parts, and nervous injury, is not excessive.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Damages, Cent. Dig. §§ 372, 374, 380, 381; Dec. Dig. § 132.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Hart County.

"Not to be officially reported."

Action by Louis P. Schroader against the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Benjamin D. Warfield and Sims, Du Bose & Rodes, for appellant. Bennett H. Young and McCandless & Larimore, for appellee.

HOBSON, J. Louis P. Schroader was a brakeman on a north-bound, through freight train known as "2d 74." His train overtook at Bonnieville the north-bound, local freight train 32, and, as it ran into the station, was flagged down by the flagman on 32. After it was thus flagged down, his train pulled up to the water tank for the purpose of taking water, and Schroader was directed by his engineer to turn the crane so that the water could be run into the tank of the engine. The crane was turned by a lever on the ground, between the main track and the side track, and in turning the lever it was necessary for the men to be at the end of it. The lever was so long that it reached over the end of the ties of the side track. Schroader took hold of the lever and pushed the crane around. When he had done this, it was found that the engine had pulled a little too far, and the engineer had to back up. After the engineer backed up, Schroader pushed the crane to get it over the opening of the tank, and, while he was doing this and just as he got the crane in position, train 32 backed in on the side track, striking him in the back and knocking him over on a barrel. He rebounded from the barrel, and fell to the ground. One of his legs, coming under the freight train, was cut off near the ankle. He brought this suit to recover for his injury, and, a verdict and judgment having been rendered in his favor for $12,000, the railroad company appeals.

There is little conflict in the evidence. It is conceded that there was no one on the rear end of the backing train to keep a lookout, and that the engineer from his position in front could see nothing on account of the freight cars he was pushing. The proof for the plaintiff is to the effect that no signal of the moving of this train was given. The proof for the defendant is to the effect that the whistle was blown when it started back. The conductor and two of the brakemen of the backing train were at the switch about 250 feet away. The conductor turned the switch, and signaled the train to come back. The flagman, who ought to have been on the rear of the train, keeping a lookout as it came back, was off getting a jar of honey, and not on the train. The conductor and the two brakemen at the switch knew there was no one on the train to keep a lookout. They saw Schroader at the tank turning the lever, but took no steps for his protection, on the ground that they thought he was in the clear, as they testify. He was not in the clear, however, and it was their manifest duty, seeing him there so close to the track, to take some steps for his protection. Rule 104, adopted by the company, is as follows: "When a train is being pushed by an engine (except when shifting and making up trains in yards) a flagman must be stationed in a conspicuous position on the front of the leading car, so as to perceive the first sign of danger and immediately signal the engineman." Rule 44 is as follows: "Three short blasts of the whistle, when the train is standing (to be repeated until answered as provided in rule 61), is a signal that the train will back."

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

It is insisted that a peremptory instruction should have been given the jury, on the ground that the accident was due to the contributory negligence of Schroader. There is evidence in the record from which the jury might infer this; but there was other evidence in the record to the effect that Schroader was at the time engaged in doing what he had been commanded to do, that he was doing it in the usual way, and that he was struck and run over while actually engaged in the work, and before he had completed what he had been told to do, by the backing in of train 32 without any signal and without any lookout. What the facts were was a question for the jury; but, the evidence being conflicting, the court properly left the question to the jury.

The court, at the conclusion of the evidence, gave these two instructions:

"(1) The court instructs the jury that it was the duty of the agents, servants, and employes of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company, defendant herein, at the time and place of the accident set out in the pleadings, to exercise ordinary care in the movement and operation of the train, which was backed in on the siding and which ran over the plaintiff herein, for the safety of the plaintiff, and to observe in the operation of said train the rules and regulations which defendant had prescribed for the movement of trains under similar circumstances, and, if the jury believe from the evidence that the agents and employes of the defendant in charge of the train which ran over the plaintiff failed to exercise ordinary care in the movement thereof, or failed to observe the rules and regulations prescribed by defendant for the operation of trains under such circumstances, then the law is for the plaintiff and the jury should so find, unless they shall further believe from the evidence that the plaintiff, at the time and place of the accident, was himself guilty of such contributory negligence as caused or helped to cause said accident, and but for which he would not have been injured, in which latter case the law is for the defendant, and the jury should so find."

"(4) If the jury shall find for the plaintiff, they will award him such sum in damages as they shall believe from the evidence will fairly and reasonably compensate him for any pain and suffering, mental and physical, which he has suffered, or which the jury may believe from the evidence it is reasonably certain he will hereafter suffer by reason of his injury occasioned by said accident, and for any permanent impairment of his power to earn money directly resulting therefrom, if they shall believe there was such impairment. And, if the jury shall believe from the evidence that the accident and injuries resulting therefrom were brought about by the gross negligence on the part of the employes of the defendant in charge of or operating the train which ran over plaintiff, then the jury may or may not in its discretion, in addition to the award for mental and physical suffering, and the permanent impairment of the plaintiff's power to earn money, if any, award such punitive damages against the defendant as they may see proper under all the evidence in this case, the whole amount not to exceed the sum of $25,000, the amount claimed in the petition."

It is insisted that instruction 1 is erroneous, in that it does not confine the jury to the rules read in evidence, and allows a recovery without reference to whether the infraction of the rules was the proximate cause of the accident or was negligence as to Schroader. The instruction is based upon these words: "If the jury believe from the evidence." Under the instruction, the jury could consider no rule not read in evidence. There is much force in the other two grounds of objection to the instruction; but, under all the facts, we do not see that the defendant was substantially prejudiced by the instruction. In backing the train in the town of Bonnleville right by where the other train was taking water, and where the presence of persons on and about the track was to be anticipated, it was incumbent upon the railroad company to have some one on the rear of the backing train to keep a lookout and give proper signals of its movements. See Chesapeake & Ohio Ry. Co. v.

McCoy (Ky. App.) 112 S. W. 1105, and cases cited. It is insisted for the railroad company that rule 104 only applies when the engine is behind the cars and going forward pushing the cars in front of it, and that it has no application to the backing of a train. The train is pushed when the engine is behind the cars, and not in front of them. It is immaterial whether the engine is going backward or forward. The purpose of the rule is that some one must be on the leading car when the engineman, from his position on the engine, cannot see the track in front by reason of the cars which he is pushing. The direction in which the engine is moving is immaterial. The rule applies when the cars are in front of the engine in the direction in which it is going. The proper construction of a writing is for the court. The rules of a railroad company being in writing, their proper construction is for the court and not the jury. In this case, instead of No. 1, the court should have instructed the jury that it was the duty of the servants of the railroad company to have a flagman stationed in a conspicuous position on the front of the leading car, as the train was backed in on the side track, to keep a lookout; that it was their duty to give three short blasts of the whistle before the train was started back as a signal that it would back in on the side track, and to exercise ordinary care in the movement and operation of the train; that if they failed to do this, and by reason of it the plaintiff was injured, they should find for the plaintiff, unless he himself failed to exercise ordinary care for his own safety, and but for this would not have been injured. If the court had given the instruction we have indicated, it would have been more unfavorable to the defendant than the instruction which the court gave, for it is admitted in the evidence that no lookout was kept on the leading car of this train, and it is manifest that, if a lookout had been kept, Schroader would not have been hurt. It is insisted that the latter part of the instruction, as to contributory negligence, does not conform to the rule heretofore laid down by this court, but we cannot see that this could have misled the jury, as the court also gave the jury the following instruction: "6. The plaintiff, Schroader, in entering the service of the defendant, assumed all of the ordinary risks of accidents incident to the branch of service he was engaged in, and it was the duty of the plaintiff, Schroader, to use ordinary care to avoid injury to himself, and, if you believe from the evidence that on the occasion in controversy he failed to exercise such care, and that by such failure he contributed to his injury to such a degree that but for such failure he would not have been injured, the law is for the defendant and you should find for the defendant."

It is insisted that instruction 4 is erroneous in allowing the jury to find punitive damages. But we think there was some evidence of gross neglect; and, where gross neglect is shown, the question of punitive damages should be submitted to the jury. The conductor and the two brakemen at the switch actually saw Schroader at the lever. They actually knew there was no one on the leading car of the train keeping a lookout; and, when they saw that the flagman was not at his place of duty, and also saw Schroader in a position of peril, it was incumbent upon them to take some steps for his protection, and their failure so to do was evidence of the want of slight care. Either one of them could have gotten on the front of the car as it passed them. The conductor could have had one of the brakemen get on it before he signaled the train to back. And the backing of a train, without warning and without any lookout, where persons are known to be in danger, or danger to them should be reasonably anticipated, has been held evidence of gross neglect.

Lastly, it is insisted that the verdict is palpably excessive, that the only injury which Schroader received was the loss of a foot, and that a verdict for $12,000 is so large as to strike the mind at first blush as excessive. But this is not the only injury that Schroader received. Dr. Reynolds testified that he examined Schroader on November 8, 1906, the accident having happened in July, that at that time his left wrist was paralyzed, and the muscles of the whole left arm wasting. He gave the measurements of the arm to confirm this. He found a circular scar to the right of the union between the spine and the top of the hip bone; half an inch further, to the right, a long depression, which showed that the muscles attached to the hip bone at that point had been torn away. He also found a loss of sensibility in the skin, and an absence of what is called "muscular reflex" over the left shoulder. On the left side, by picking the skin, it was shown that the nerves had been injured; there being a loss of sensibility. The leg had been amputated 6½ inches above the ankle. The stump of the wound was then discharging pus. On April 23, 1907, and on September 18th following, he again examined him. His pulse, when he was sitting, was 106 to the minute, when it should have been 68. When standing it was 112, when it should have been 76. He was breathing 26 times to the minute, when normally he should not have been breathing more than 16 times to the minute. His temperature was 100, when it should have been only 98½. The high temperature, the rapid pulse, and quick breathing showed that he had had a severe nervous shock affecting the base of the brain, and manifestly affecting both his vitality and his strength. It is urged by counsel for appellant that we should not credit the doctor's statements; but he is uncontradicted. The facts to which he testified were physical symptoms. Any physician could have examined Schroader and informed the court in a few minutes whether Dr. Reynolds was right or not. The defendant introduced no physician or other testimony to contradict Dr. Reynolds, and it cannot now ask this court to reject testimony which it failed to contradict or impeach in any way. Dr. Reynolds is sustained by a witness who testified to Schroeder's loss of flesh since his injury. And, if he is affected as above indicated, it cannot be said that $12,000 is more than a healthy, young man should receive for such injuries.

By section 134 of the Civil Code of Practice it is provided that the court must, in every stage of an action, disregard any error or defect in the proceedings which does not affect the substantial rights of the adverse party, and that no judgment shall be reversed for any such error or defect. Upon the whole record we are satisfied that none of the matters complained of affected the substantial rights of the defendant, and that upon the whole case the judgment should not be disturbed.

Judgment affirmed.

LATHAM v. LINDSAY.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Nov. 25, 1908)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 699*)—RECORD—QUESTIONS PRESENTED—INSTRUCTIONS.

Where the court struck from the record the part of it which purported to contain the instructions, errors in the instructions could not be considered.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 2930; Dec. Dig. § 699.*]

2. EJECTMENT (§ 64*)—ACTIONS—PETITION—DESCRIPTION OF PROPERTY.

A petition in ejectment describing the land as "beginning at a stake near a branch, B's corner and running thence N. 19½° E. along the old W. line about 140 poles to a small hickory on the hill side, W.'s old corner, thence S. 24° E. 14 poles; thence S. 19½° W. 140 poles; thence N. 81° W. 14 poles to the beginning," sufficiently describes the land to enable the parties to form an issue as to its ownership, and to permit the jury to understand the controversy, and to authorize the court to pronounce judgment on the verdict.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Ejectment, Cent. Dig. §§ 158-164; Dec. Dig. § 64.*]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1002*)—VERDICT—CONCLUSIVENESS.

A verdict on conflicting evidence will not be disturbed on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3935-3937; Dec. Dig. § 1002.*]

4. JUDGMENT (§ 226*)—FORM—SUFFICIENCY.

The judgment in actions involving or for the recovery of real estate should so describe the land that it may be identified by the parties or officer executing the judgment, or by persons interested, without reference to any other paper or record.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. § 406; Dec. Dig. § 226.*]

5. JUDGMENT (§ 303*)—FORM—SUFFICIENCY.

Where an insufficient description in a judgment in an action involving or for the recovery of real estate may be perfected by a reference to the pleadings and no injustice results, the judgment though erroneous, is not void, but may be corrected by the court rendering it, on motion of either party or any person interested.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Dec. Dig. § 303.*]

6. EJECTMENT (§ 114*)—JUDGMENT—SUFFICIENCY.

Where, in an action for the recovery of land, the petition sufficiently described the land and the jury found for plaintiff for the land in controversy, the error in the judgment merely reciting that plaintiff was the owner and entitled to the land in controversy was in the nature of a clerical misprision, which could be corrected by the record.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Ejectment, Cent. Dig. § 355; Dec. Dig. § 114.*]

7. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1154*)—DISPOSITION OF THE CASE ON APPEAL—REMAND FOR CORRECTION OF JUDGMENT.

Where a judgment in an action for the recovery of land erroneous for failing to describe the land may be corrected by the record, the court on appeal will affirm it with direction to the trial court to properly describe the land in the judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 1154.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Todd County.

"To be officially reported."

Action by Nellie E. Lindsay against G. N. T. Latham. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed, with directions.

Petrie & Standard, for appellant. Selden Y. Trimble, O. A. Denny, and Trimble & Mallery, for appellee.

CARROLL, J. The appellee, Mrs. Nellie E. Lindsay, who was the plaintiff below, brought this action to recover from G. N. T. Latham, defendant below, a tract of land described in her amended petition as follows: "Beginning at a stake near a branch, Bowman's corner, and running thence N. 19½° E. along the old Willoughby line; about 140 poles to a small hickory on the hill side, Willoughby's old corner; thence S. 24° E. 14 poles; thence S. 19½° W. 140 poles; thence N. 81° W. 14 poles to the beginning." She alleged that she was the owner and entitled to the possession of this tract of land, and asked judgment for its possession and damages for its wrongful detention. Upon a trial before a jury the following verdict was returned: "We, the jury, find for the plaintiff for the land in controversy. W. S. Willock, Foreman." Upon the verdict this judgment was rendered: "Wherefore it is adjudged by the court that the plaintiff, Nellie E. Lindsay, is the owner and entitled to the possession of the land in controversy in this action, and that the said plaintiff, Nellie E. Lindsay, recover of the defendant, G. N. T. Latham, her costs herein expended, to which judgment of the court the defendant objects and excepts." A reversal of the judgment is asked, first, because the court erred in refusing to enter a judgment for the appellant notwithstanding the verdict; second, because the verdict is not sustained by the evidence; third, because the judgment is not sufficiently specific and certain; and, fourth, for error in instruction number one. Upon a former day the court struck from the record that part of it which purported to contain the instructions, so that we cannot consider the alleged error in this respect.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

In support of the proposition that the court erred in failing to enter a judgment for appellant notwithstanding the verdict, the argument is made that this motion should have been sustained because the pleadings of appellee did not present such a description of the land as would enable a correct issue to be made concerning same. We do not consider this point well taken. The description contained in the petition and heretofore set out was sufficient to enable the parties to form an issue as to the ownership of the land, and to permit the jury trying the case to understand the matter in controversy and to authorize the court to pronounce judgment upon the verdict. Nor are we prepared to say that the verdict is not sustained by the evidence. The evidence was conflicting, but that introduced by the plaintiff was sufficient to sustain the verdict.

The point made that the judgment is not sufficiently specific and certain presents a question of more difficulty. The rule is that in actions involving or for the recovery of real estate the judgment should so describe the land that it may be identified by the parties or the officer whose duty it may be to execute the judgment or by persons interested without reference to any other paper or record. This is especially true of judgments for the recovery or sale of land; but it does not follow from this that a judgment, although it may be erroneous, is void because it does not describe the land, so that it may be identified by an inspection of the judgment alone. If the description contained in the judgment in actions for the sale of land can be perfected by reference to the pleadings, and it is made to appear that no injustice or injury resulted to any of the parties, we should say that the judgment, although erroneous because uncertain or indefinite, is not void, but may be corrected after notice upon motion of either party or any person interested by the court rendering it. Brumley v. Nichols-Shepherd Co., 92 S. W. 548, 29 Ky. Law Rep. 139; Four Mile Land & Coal Co. v. Slusher, 107 Ky. 664, 55 S. W. 555. And we see no good reason why this rule may not be applied to judgments for the recovery of land in actions in ejectment. To illustrate, the judgment in this case is manifestly insufficient. It contains no description whatever of the land in controversy. Looking at the judgment alone, it cannot be ascertained what land was in controversy, or what land was recovered, or what land the plaintiff was adjudged entitled to the possession of. But, when we look to the pleadings and the verdict, there is no difficulty in ascertaining an accurate description of the land in controversy, or in determining that the jury by their verdict found that the plaintiff was the owner and entitled to the possession of the land described in the pleadings, and the lower court can readily enter a judgment that will accurately describe the land in controversy. So that, under these circumstances, it is not necessary that the judgment below should be reversed for the purpose of enabling the court to conform the judgment to the verdict and pleadings. The error of the court in this respect was in the nature of a clerical misprision—one that can be corrected by the record.

In behalf of appellant our attention is called to the cases of Meyer v. City of Covington, 103 Ky. 546, 45 S. W. 769, and Neff v. Covington Sand & Stone Co., 108 Ky. 457, 55 S. W. 697, 56 S. W. 723. In the former case, in an action to enforce a lien upon real property, the lower court "adjudged that the plaintiff has a lien therefor upon the real estate of the defendant, beginning at Pike street on the east side of York street, in this city, running thence North 296½ feet, more or less, the said property or enough thereof to satisfy said lien be sold, after advertising the sale in both modes mentioned in rule number 40 of this court. For services, the master is allowed $15.00 to be paid by plaintiff and taxed as costs." In holding this judgment insufficient, the court said: "It will be seen from the foregoing that the description of the property ordered to be sold is totally insufficient. The terms and place of sale are not in accordance with the provisions of the Code. There should be a sufficient description of real property ordered to be sold to enable the purchaser or bidders to know with reasonable certainty what property was being offered for sale, and the report of the commissioner should in like manner be sufficient, to the end that there should be no controversy after the sale as to what property was sold or purchased. Explicit directions should be given to the commissioner as to the time, terms, and place of sale, in order that all such sales should be made as required by law. The judgment should be explicit in regard to the property ordered to be sold, as well as the time, terms, and place of sale, so that the commissioner should not be required to look to any other paper for order or direction. If the commissioner should be allowed to look to anything other than the judgment, as his guide, he might innocently sell property not adjudged to be sold, or sell it upon terms not authorized by law. In other words, the judgment should specifically direct the commissioner what to do, and not leave him to draw his conclusion from any other paper or from any other source of information." In the Neff Case the judgment followed that in the Meyer Case, and was also reversed. But it will be observed that there were several defects in this judgment. It did not fix the time, terms, or place of sale, but left these essential matters to the discretion of the commissioner; and we apprehend that the reversal was due more to these errors than to the insufficiency in the description. In the case before us the only error complained of is the failure of the judgment to sufficiently describe the land. In Foreman v. Redman, 5 S. W. 556, 9 Ky. Law Rep. 531, which was an action involving the title to land, the judgment was held sufficient because the land recovered was not described, and for this reason it was reversed and remanded, with directions to the lower court to make the judgment more specific. But in that case a description of the land in controversy could not be ascertained by this court from the pleadings or record, and hence a reversal was necessary to enable the lower court to correct the judgment if it could do so. In the case at bar there is no difficulty in describing the land after an inspection of the pleadings and verdict, and no injustice will be done by correcting it by the record.

Wherefore the judgment of the lower court is affirmed, with directions to enter a judgment in favor of the plaintiff below awarding her the ownership and possession of the land in controversy, describing it in the judgment as it is described in the amended petition.

DUPOYSTER et al. v. DUNN et al.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Nov. 25, 1908.)
QUIETING TITLE (§ 12*)—ACTUAL POSSESSION BY PLAINTIFF.

Under St. 1903, § 11, authorizing one having "the legal title and possession" of land to prosecute suit to quiet title to it, and providing that, if he establish his title to it, he shall have a decree, he must prove not only ownership, but actual possession when he sued.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Quieting Title, Cent. Dig. §§ 8-12, 44, 45; Dec. Dig. § 12.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Ballard County.
"Not to be officially reported."

Action by J. C. Dupoyster and others against J. I. Dunn and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

F. L. Turner, for appellants. J. M. Nichols & Son, for appellees.

CLAY, C. This is an action by appellants against appellees, under section 11 of the Kentucky Statutes of 1903, to quiet their alleged title to a tract of land located in Ballard county, Ky. Appellants alleged that they were the owners of, and in actual possession of, the land described in the petition, to wit, section 7, township 5, range 3 west, and the south half of section 6, same township and range. After denying their ownership and possession, appellees set out a boundary of land containing 222 acres, and alleged that the land belonged to them, and that they, and not the appellants, were in the actual possession of it at the date of the institution of this action. Judgment below was in favor of appellees, and, from that judgment, this appeal is prosecuted.

Neither appellants nor appellees exhibited a title from the commonwealth. Appellants claimed under a deed from Thomas Dupoyster to B. S. Dupoyster and others, executed March 18, 1859, and covering some 5,000 acres of land. It is the contention of appellants that, after procuring this deed, they moved upon that land and claimed the same to a well-defined boundary. The testimony for appellees is to the effect that Williams Hughes lived upon the 222 acres of land prior to, and at, the time the deed was made from Thomas Dupoyster to B. S. Dupoyster and others in 1859. For a while he occupied a residence upon the very tract in question. After being there for some time, the house burned down, and he then moved to a tract adjoining. During all the time, however, he exercised acts of ownership over the 222 acres of land, and claimed the same to a well-defined boundary. Upon the death of Hughes the land was purchased at a commissioner's sale by J. C. Harkless. Upon Harkless' death, the land was devised to appellee Jessie I. Dunn. Prior to his death Harkless leased the land for a period of five years to James Carpenter. Carpenter placed a man on the land, who occupied the same at the time of the institution of this action. After Harkless' death, Carpenter paid the rent to appellee Jessie I. Dunn. We think the evidence shows there was a well-defined boundary line between the Dupoyster land and the land involved in this action. It does not appear that any of the Dupoysters ever claimed the land in question. When Harkless took possession under this deed from the commissioner, he claimed to this well-defined boundary line. A large number of acres were cultivated, and he and his tenants for him exercised acts of ownership up to the boundary line lying between the 222 acres and the Dupoyster tract. As this action was instituted under section 11 of the Kentucky Statutes of 1903, it was necessary for plaintiffs below to prove both ownership and actual possession of the land at the time of the institution of the action. These two facts were essential to the maintenance of the cause. Appellants not only failed to prove possession in themselves, but we are of opinion that appellees were in the actual possession of the 222 acres of land. That being the case, the trial court properly gave judgment in favor of the appellees. Dupoyster v. Turk, 110 S. W. 260, 33 Ky.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

Law Rep. 320; Cornellson v. Foushee, etc., 101 Ky. 257, 40 S. W. 680; Packard v. Beaver Valley Land & Mining Co., 96 Ky. 249, 28 S. W. 779.

Judgment affirmed.

HOWELL v. COMMONWEALTH.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Dec. 1, 1908.)

1. PERJURY (§ 33*)—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

Evidence on a prosecution for perjury held sufficient to support a conviction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Perjury, Dec. Dig. § 33.*]

2. PERJURY (§ 36*)—PROSECUTION—QUESTIONS OF LAW.

Whether the police judge, before whom was held a court of inquiry on the question of gambling having been committed, was satisfied that such offense had been committed, and whether he had authority to swear defendant, are questions of law for the court on a prosecution for perjury based on what defendant testified to before such judge.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Perjury, Dec. Dig. § 36.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Hardin County.

"Not to be officially reported."

Taylor Howell was convicted of perjury, and appeals. Affirmed.

W. A. Barry and H. L. James, for appellant. Jas. Breathitt, Atty. Gen., and Tom B. McGregor, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the Commonwealth.

CLAY, C. This is the second appeal of this case. The opinion on the former appeal may be found in 104 S. W. 685, 31 Ky. Law Rep. 983. By that opinion the case was remanded for a new trial. Appellant was again tried and convicted of the crime of false swearing, and his punishment fixed at one year in the penitentiary. From the judgment based upon the verdict of the jury, he prosecutes this appeal.

It is first insisted that the court erred in refusing a peremptory instruction to the jury to find appellant not guilty. It appears that appellant, together with three or four other negroes, were apprehended by some parties in a crap game back of Scott's barber shop in the town of Elizabethtown, Ky. Upon the facts being made known to Fletcher Irwin, the police judge of that town, he proceeded to hold a court of inquiry. Among the witnesses who appeared before the police judge was the appellant. After being duly sworn, he testified that he was not engaged in any game of dice at the place or time that he was asked about, and that no one else was engaged in said game as far as he knew, and that no game was played there. He further stated that John Blevin, George Blevin, Ed English, and Albert Pawley were not engaged in shooting dice or gambling at the time and place inquired about. The proof of the commonwealth upon appellant's trial was to the effect that appellant and John Blevin, George Blevin, Albert Pawley, and Ed English were engaged in a crap game in the rear of Scott's barber shop, that they were seen to be shooting dice and passing the dice on the ground, and money was to be seen on the ground near the place where the game was played. Several witnesses testified to the statements made by appellant on oath before the police judge, and to facts showing the falsity of these statements. No evidence was offered by appellant. Without stating the evidence in detail, we may say it was sufficient to authorize the submission of the case to the jury, and abundantly supports the verdict of guilty.

It is next contended that the court erred in the instructions which it gave to the jury. When this case was before us on the former appeal, we held that the lower court erred in failing to require the jury to believe from the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt that the accused was present at the place back of E. B. Scott's barber shop at the time stated, and engaged in a game of dice with Ed English, or either of the parties named in the indictment, in which game money or property of value was bet, won, or lost, or that he was present at the place stated and saw the other parties engaged in a game of dice in which money or property of value was bet, won, or lost. Upon the second trial the court embodied in its instructions the suggestion contained in our former opinion as to the presence of the accused at the place and time referred to in the evidence, and to his engaging in a game of dice, or seeing others engaged in such game; and the instruction, as so amended on the second trial, properly presented the law of the case. In our former opinion criticism was made of the reasonable doubt instruction, and the lower court directed to give an instruction upon this point in accordance with section 238 of the Criminal Code of Practice. Upon the second trial, the lower court complied with the direction contained in the opinion, and presented the reasonable doubt instruction in the exact language of the Code. In our former opinion the trial court was also directed to instruct the jury that they should acquit the accused, unless it was proved that he swore falsely by two witnesses, or by one witness and strong corroborating circumstances. This direction was also complied with by the trial court. We are therefore of opinion that the trial court properly instructed the jury.

It is next insisted that the trial court erred because it failed to give an instruction offered by appellant, submitting to the jury the question whether or not the police judge before whom the court of inquiry was held was satisfied that the public offense of gambling had been committed, and the further question of the authority of the police judge to swear the appellant. The questions embodied in the instruction offered are not questions of fact to be determined by the jury. They are questions of law properly determinable by the court; and the trial court, therefore, properly refused to submit them to the jury.

Being of the opinion that the record contains no error prejudicial to the substantial rights of the appellant, the judgment is affirmed.

GEORGIA HOME INS. CO. v. KELLEY.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Dec. 2, 1908.)

1. INSURANCE (§ 145*)—CONTRACT TO REINSURE—ACTION—PETITION.

In an action for breach of an insurance company's contract to reinsure at the expiration of an existing policy, the petition held to state a cause of action.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Dec. Dig. § 145.*]

2. INSURANCE (§ 145*)—CONTRACT TO REINSURE—CONSTRUCTION—CERTAINTY.

Where plaintiff had purchased $600 insurance on certain tobacco for three months, the agent agreeing to keep it in force when it expired by renewing it, according to the course of business between the parties, the contract was to issue a new policy insuring the property for the same amount, and for the same time from the date of the expiration of the old one, and was therefore not defective for uncertainty.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Dec. Dig. § 145.*]

3. INSURANCE (§ 145*)—CONTRACT TO REINSURE—BREACH—NOTICE.

Where an insurance agent had been in the habit of renewing plaintiff's insurance, and extending credit to plaintiff for the premiums, and he agreed to keep certain insurance in force, it was his duty to renew a policy on its expiration, unless he gave plaintiff notice that further credit would be refused.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Dec. Dig. § 145.*]

4. TRIAL (§ 207*)—RECEPTION OF EVIDENCE—PARTIES—LIMITATION.

Plaintiff's tobacco was destroyed on the night of the day on which his insurance expired, and he sued for breach of the insurance company's agent's contract to keep the property insured. The agent, a man of high character, testified that plaintiff was in debt to him for premiums, and that he had notified him prior to the expiration of the policy that he would not carry him further. In rebuttal plaintiff and his attorney testified that, in a conversation with the agent after the fire, the agent admitted that he had never notified plaintiff that he would not keep up the insurance. The court did not limit this evidence to the purpose of impeaching the agent, who then testified that such conversation never occurred. Held, that the court erred in not so limiting the testimony, and that such error was accentuated by an instruction limiting the effect of the agent's answer that the conversation never occurred to impeachment purposes.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Dec. Dig. § 207.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Henry County.
"Not to be officially reported."

Action by Leonard Kelley against the Georgia Home Insurance Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Wm. P. Thorne and William Carroll, for appellant. Moody & Barbour, for appellee.

HOBSON, J. On February 6, 1907, the Georgia Home Insurance Company issued a policy to Leonard Kelley, insuring a lot of tobacco that he owned in the sum of $600 for three months, or until noon May 6, 1907. The tobacco was burned on the night of the 6th of May, and this suit was brought by Kelley to recover on the policy. He charged that at the time the policy was written, and afterwards, the insurance company, through its agent, agreed with him that, upon the expiration of the policy, it would issue to him another policy for the term of three months, beginning at noon May 6, 1907, in consideration of the usual premium; that its agents in Henry county, having authority to make contracts of insurance and to renew them, had been for some time doing business with him, and had, under a similar agreement, issued to him new policies upon the expiration of the old ones; that the premiums were not paid at the time the policy was issued, but were charged to him, and paid by him afterwards; that this was the usual course of dealing between the parties, and that because of this, he had not, on May 6th, paid the renewal premium, which he would have done but for the agreement with the agent to keep the policy in force, and to collect from him the premium later; and that he did not know that the agent had failed to renew the policy until after the fire. The defendant put in issue the allegations of the petition. The case was tried before a jury, who found for the plaintiff, and, the court having entered judgment on the verdict, the defendant appeals.

The petition is sufficient to maintain the action under the rule laid down by this court in Baldwin v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 17 Ky. 356, 54 S. W. 13, 92 Am. St. Rep. 362. The proof on the trial, both for the plaintiff and the defendant, substantially showed that at the time the policy was issued it was agreed between the plaintiff and the agent that the agent would keep it in force when it expired by renewing it, and that this course of business had been pursued by the parties for some time. After the policy was issued, the plaintiff called the agent up over the phone. He and the agent do not differ substantially as to what occurred. He said to the agent to keep the policy in force for him, and not let it run out when it expired, and the agent, in effect, said he would. The agent, however, testified that in March the plaintiff had fallen in debt to him in the sum of $92, and that he failed to pay it; that in April he saw him, and told him that he must pay up or he would not carry the policy any longer, and that when he failed to pay, he wrote him a letter, telling him that he would not renew this policy on May 6th. The plaintiff denied receiving the letter, and also denied that the agent told him that he would not carry the insurance longer. After the fire Kelley called up the agent over the telephone, and asked him if he had renewed the policy. The agent answered: "No; you know the reason why I did not." Kelley said, "Yes," and hung up the receiver. The case is clearly distinguishable from Hartford Fire Insurance Company v. Trimble, 117 Ky. 583, 78 S. W. 462. In that case the alleged agreement was held not enforceable because neither the amount of the insurance, the rate of premium, nor the duration of the risk was agreed upon. But here there was simply an agreement to renew an existing policy. The agreement would naturally mean that a similar policy was to be issued on May 6th on the same tobacco, insuring it for $600 for three months from that time. This is evidently what both parties to the oral contract understood, and undoubtedly the contract would have been carried out but for the fact that Kelley failed to pay the agent what he owed him. But although he failed to pay, still he, if his statement is true, agreed to pay soon; and the agent gave him further time. If this be true, it was the duty of the agent under the agreement to renew the policy, unless he gave Kelley notice that further credit would not be extended; for if such notice was given, Kelley could protect himself by getting other insurance; and if it was not given, he had a right to rely on the promise of the agent to keep his insurance up for him.

The plaintiff in rebuttal proved by himself and his attorney, Hillis List, that on the 4th day of July after the fire, there was a conversation between them and Patterson, the agent, in Patterson's office, in which List said to Kelley, "Leonard, Judge Patterson says that you would not say in his presence that he had not revoked his agreement to issue said policies," that Kelley answered, "Why, Judge, you did not tell me any such thing, you never told me that you revoked your agreement to keep my insurance up," and that Patterson said in reply, "No; I did not." This evidence was admitted over the defendant's objection and exception, and the court did not charge the jury that the evidence was not to be considered as substantive testimony, and was only to be considered by the jury for the purpose of impeaching the credibility of the witness Patterson, if it did so impeach him. The failure to so charge the jury when this evidence was admitted was a substantial error.

The statements of the agent after the transaction was closed were not substantive evidence against the defendant, but the jury would naturally consider them so, unless told otherwise. This error was accentuated by the fact that when Patterson was on the stand, he was asked if the conversation referred to did not occur, and said that it did not. The court thereupon said to the jury that they should consider the question and answer as contradicting the witness, if it did contradict him, and not as to the merits of the case, one way or the other. The jury would naturally infer from this that they were not to consider the conversation suggested in the answer as evidence, as Judge Patterson had denied its having taken place; and, when they were not similarly cautioned when the testimony of List and Kelley was given, they would naturally understand that now, as the conversation had been proven, they were to consider it. The case turns simply on the testimony of Patterson on the one hand, and that of Kelley on the other. There were circumstances sustaining Patterson, and but for this evidence as to the conversation which occurred on July 4th, it would seem that the weight of the testimony was with the defendant. The admission of this evidence, therefore, without any caution as to the purpose for which it could be considered, was prejudicial to the defendant. It would appear from the record that Judge Patterson is a man of high character, and the jury might have paid very little attention to the conversation which was had on July 4th, if they had been told they could only consider it on the question of the credibility of the witness.

Judgment reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

LOUISVILLE SCHOOL BOARD v. CITY OF LOUISVILLE.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Dec. 1, 1908.)

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 986*)—DISPOSITION OF TAXES COLLECTED—LIABILITY FOR TAXES NOT COLLECTED.

St. 1903, § 2969, provides that cities of the first class shall levy, assess, and collect a certain tax annually for city purposes, which tax shall be passed to the credit of the school fund as the same is collected, and shall be paid over to the school board in regular weekly installments, the first payment to be made within one week after the collection of the taxes shall have been commenced. A city refrained from assessing taxes on a water company in consideration of its furnishing water to the city without charge. After this arrangement had continued for a number of years, the city sued the water company for the taxes unpaid, and the court decreed that the water company was entitled to a credit for the value of water furnished, which exceeded the claim for taxes, and the court decreed a cancellation of tax bills. Held, that the city was not liable to the school board for the amount of taxes found due by the decree, as the outcome of the suit did not amount to a collection of taxes, and the statute does not contemplate that the city shall be liable to the school board for the amount of taxes levied, and not actually collected.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 936.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Jefferson County, Chancery Branch, Second Division.

"Not to be officially reported."

Action by the Louisville School Board against the City of Louisville. From a judgment dismissing the action, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

See, also, 119 Ky. 574, 84 S. W. 729.

Wallace A. McKay, D. W. Sanders, and C. H. Harrison, for appellant. A. E. Richards and Elmer C. Underwood, for appellee.

CARROLL, J. This appeal seeks the reversal of a judgment dismissing the action brought by the appellant against the city of Louisville to recover $45,192 of taxes which it claimed the city owed it. The controversy arose in this way: For many years the Louisville Water Company furnished water to the city for fire protection free of charge, under an act that provides "it shall be the duty of the Louisville Water Company to furnish water to the public fire plugs or hydrants of the city of Louisville for fire protection free of charge." Partly in consideration of this, the city did not assess any taxes against the water company, and for the further reason that the Louisville Water Company, although a separate corporation, was really the property of the city of Louisville. For many years this condition of affairs existed. Finally a suit was brought by the city to compel the water company to pay city taxes, and it was held by this court in City of Louisville v. McAteer, 81 S. W. 698, 26 Ky. Law Rep. 425, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 766, that the water company was liable. In the opinion it was said that: "In this suit the city should credit upon appellee's tax bills the reasonable price of the water it has used for the years for which the tax is being asserted, and for which it may not have paid. The basis of this credit should be upon such terms as the court may find from evidence if the parties cannot agree upon it. Credit should be given on the city's tax bills for each year's water rents so as to avoid penalties and interests so far as the water rents may go to extinguish the annual bill." Pursuant to the opinion of this court, the case was remanded for further proceedings, and, in a judgment rendered in conformity with the opinion, the lower court found that the taxes due the city from the water company for the years in question amounted to $223,224, and that the amount due the water company from the city for water was $389,091, thereby bringing the city out in debt to the water company in an amount more than $150,000. The judgment further recited: "And, it further appearing to the court that said water bills exceed in amount all of its unpaid tax bills for the years prior to and including the year 1903, it is now adjudged pursuant to the opinion and mandate of the Court of Appeals herein that said water bills be credited upon and applied to the payment of said tax bills, and that the said tax bills for the years prior to and including the year 1903 be canceled by said credits." In this action the school board insists that under the facts stated, it is entitled to receive from the city the same proportion of the taxes assessed against the water company as it received from taxes assessed against other property. The amount of taxes the school board is entitled to demand and receive from the city is fixed and regulated by statute (section 2969 of the Kentucky Statutes of 1903, which is a part of the charter of cities of the first class), reading as follows: "To raise money for the maintenance of the schools, the general council shall, in the year one thousand eight hundred and ninety-three, and annually thereafter, cause to be levied and collected a tax of not less than thirty-three cents on each one hundred dollars' worth of property assessed for taxation for city purposes. Upon the completion of the assessment of property for taxation, the amount levied as above shall, annually, be passed to the credit of the school fund upon the books of the city, and the said amount, as collected, shall be paid over to the board by the treasurer in regularly weekly installments, the first payment to be made within one week after the collection of said amount shall have been commenced, and the other payments to be made weekly thereafter, in current money, by the said treasurer, as collected."

Under this statute it is the duty of the general council of the city to levy for the benefit of the schools the tax specified, but the city does not become liable to the school board for any part of the tax so levied unless and until it has been collected. If the city should levy a tax upon any species of property, it could not be required to pay the school board's portion thereof until after the tax was collected. In other words, the liability of the city attaches, not by reason of the levy, but by reason of the collection of the tax. We think this is the manifest meaning of the statute, and that it is not susceptible of any other construction. The statute provides that the amount of tax collected shall be paid over to the board, in weekly installments, the first payment to be made within one week after the collection and the other payments weekly thereafter as collected. Nowhere do we find any statutory authority to support the contention that the city is liable for taxes not collected. If it was made to appear that the city levied a tax and obstinately or negligently failed to collect the same as it might have done, there would be some reason for holding the city liable for taxes that it could and should have collected. But this is not the state of case we are dealing with. The opinion of this court holding that the city had the right to levy and collect taxes from the water company also declared that the water company might set off against the city's claim for taxes any indebtedness to it by the city on account of water furnished. In short, the effect of the ruling was that the city and the water company had mutual existing accounts against each other, and that neither could collect its account until it had first settled the account of the other. Under this ruling, and the facts developed by it as expressed in the judgment of the court below, the levy by the city of taxes upon the property of the water company did not bring into the city treasury any revenue. It did not and it could not collect any sum in the way of taxes from the water company. Therefore the school board has no claim against the city on account of this matter.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

Wherefore the judgment of the lower court is affirmed.

GAMBRELL v. GAMBRELL.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Dec. 2, 1908.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 907*)—REVIEW—WANT OF BILL OF EXCEPTIONS.

In the absence of a bill of exceptions and evidence, it will be presumed that the evidence and instructions authorized the verdict rendered, and the court will review the sufficiency of the pleadings only.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3673-3678; Dec. Dig. § 907.*]

2. REPLEVIN (§ 93*)—VERDICT—CONFORMITY TO PLEADINGS.

Under Civ. Code Prac. § 388, providing that, in an action for possession of specific personal property, plaintiff may have judgment for its delivery, if it can be had, and, if not, for its value and for damages for the detention, a petition praying for judgment for the recovery of certain articles and also for $249 for property disposed of and for damages in the amount of $50 for the detention of said property was sufficient to support a verdict for $300.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Replevin, Dec. Dig. § 93.*]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1171*)—REVERSAL—AMOUNT OF RECOVERY—TRIVIAL EXCESS.

Where a verdict is for $300, instead of $299, the error of $1 is too small to authorize reversal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4546-4554; Dec. Dig. § 1171.*]

4. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 699*)—RECORD—BILL OF EXCEPTIONS.

Instructions of the lower court cannot be reviewed where not made part of the record by a bill of exceptions.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 2928-2930; Dec. Dig. § 699.*]

5. REPLEVIN (§ 93*)—VERDICT.

In an action of claim and delivery, if the chattels described as in the possession of defendant are surrendered to plaintiff before or at the time of trial, or if the proof shows that they were the property of defendant and not the property of plaintiff, it is not necessary for the jury to find concerning such articles, though it is the better practice to so find if the property belongs to defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Replevin, Dec. Dig. § 93.*]

6. REPLEVIN (§ 93*)—VERDICT.

In an action of claim and delivery, the verdict need not award to plaintiff such articles as have been disposed of by defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Replevin, Dec. Dig. § 93.*]

7. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1033*)—HARMLESS ERROR—ERROR FAVORABLE TO APPELLANT—VERDICT.

Defendant in an action of claim and delivery cannot complain that the jury failed to award plaintiff certain of the articles claimed, where it does not appear that they were taken out of defendant's custody by the writ.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4052-4062; Dec. Dig. § 1033.*]

8. TRIAL (§ 345*)—VERDICT—OBJECTIONS.

Where the verdict in an action of claim and delivery fails to award the property alleged to be in defendant's possession, he should move to have the jury make a more complete verdict, and he cannot wait until the jury is dismissed, and then avail himself of the error.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 819; Dec. Dig. § 345.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Knox County.

"To be officially reported."

Action by Mary Gambrell, as administratrix of the estate of Frank Gambrell, against Frank Gambrell. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

John H. Wilson, for appellant. S. A. Smith and W. R. Lay, for appellee.

O'REAR, C. J. Appellee brought this action of claim and delivery (detinue) against appellant for the recovery of certain mules, cows, wagons, hogs, and other chattels which she alleged belonged to her intestate's estate. Each article was described and valued as required by the Code of Practice. The petition also alleged that certain of the articles named, and valued at $249, had been disposed of by appellant, so that they could not be found. She prayed judgment for a recovery of the articles on hand, and for $50 in damages for the detention of the property. Appellant denied appellee's ownership of the property, and put in issue its value and the damages sustained by her for its detention. The answer further pleaded that the intestate had in his lifetime sold the property to appellant, who claimed it by virtue of that sale. The result of the trial before a jury was a verdict for appellee for the sum of $300 in money.

Appellant within three days moved the trial court to grant him a new trial. The only ground then asserted that can be reviewed upon this appeal was the failure of the jury to designate the specific property to be returned to the plaintiff and its value, and the damages awarded, if any, for its detention. The motion for a new trial was overruled. Time was taken to prepare and file a bill of exceptions, but the bill was not filed. The appeal prosecuted from the judgment therefore presents but the single question whether the judgment is authorized, or might be authorized, by the pleadings. For, in the absence of a bill of exceptions and evidence, it will be presumed that the evidence and instructions authorized the verdict rendered, provided the state of pleadings do. Section 388, Civ. Code Prac., upon the manner of giving judgment, reads: "In an action for the possession of specific personal property, the plaintiff may have judgment for its delivery, if it can be had; and, if not, for its value, and for damages for its detention. * * * " The petition in this case contained this prayer for relief: "Wherefore the plaintiff, Mary Gambrell, prays judgment against the defendant for the recovery of said mule, wagon, and harness. She prays for judgment against him for $249 for the property he has heretofore disposed of—one mule, steer, and four hogs—for damages in the amount of $50 for the detention of said property, for her cost herein expended, and for all proper relief." We cannot know from this record what facts were developed at the trial. It may have been that the mule, wagon, and harness which were alleged to have been in the possession of the defendant when the petition was filed had been surrendered by him to the plaintiff at the time of the trial, in which event there would have been nothing left on that score for the jury but to assess the damages for the detention of the property; or it may have been that the evidence showed that plaintiff was not the owner or entitled to the possession of these articles. At the same time, it may have shown that the articles missing were the property of the plaintiff to which she was entitled to the immediate possession, and that the reasonable damages for their detention was $50, and their value as claimed. In the latter event, the jury's verdict should have been for $299. The error of $1 in assessing the amount in the verdict is too small to be noticed as a ground for reversal.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

Copied into the record are what purports to be instructions presumably given on the trial. But these we cannot notice. They were not made part of the record by bill of exceptions or otherwise. Meaux v. Meaux, 81 Ky. 475, 5 Ky. Law Rep. 548; Forest v. Crenshaw, 81 Ky. 51, 4 Ky. Law Rep. 596; Meador v. Turpin, 4 Metc. 94; Higgins' Adm'r v. L. & N. R. R. Co., 38 S. W. 876, 18 Ky. Law Rep. 899; Tinsley v. White, 54 S. W. 169, 21 Ky. Law Rep. 1151. Nor, in the absence of a bill of exceptions, can the appellate court inquire into the propriety or correctness of the instructions that may have been given. Beaven v. Phillips, 83 Ky. 88.

If the fact was that the chattels described as on hand when the petition was filed were surrendered to the plaintiff before or at the time of the trial, or if the proof showed they were the property of the defendant, or not the property of the plaintiff, it was not necessary for the jury to find in their verdict concerning such articles, except that, in the instance next to the last supposed, it would have been better practice to have had the jury do so. But, as to the articles alleged in the petition to have been disposed of, it was needless for the jury to award them specifically to the plaintiff. They were gone. Code Civ. Prac. § 388, expressly allows the verdict and judgment to be for the value of the articles not to be had; and, as to the damages, they might without impropriety have been included in the general award of money. In such aspect there is no error in the form of the verdict. But, if the fact be that the evidence was such as to have warranted a deliverance by the jury as to the mule, wagon, and gears alleged to have been on hand, the failure of the jury to do so is a matter of complaint on the part of the plaintiff, as it does not appear that they were taken out of the defendant's custody by the writ. But, even if they had been taken from the defendant by the sheriff under the order of delivery, the defendant should have moved the court when the verdict was returned to have the jury make a more complete verdict. By waiting till the jury was dismissed, he could not avail himself of an error which was as much to the plaintiff's hurt as his in order to wrest from her a verdict otherwise unassailable. This record fails to show that appellant has been prejudiced in the slightest by the alleged error of which he complains.

Judgment affirmed.

LOUISVILLE & N. R. CO. v. MAHAN. (Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Dec. 1, 1908.)

1. TRIAL (§ 143*)—EVIDENCE—ISSUES—QUESTIONS FOR JURY.

Where the evidence is conflicting, the court cannot direct a verdict.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 342, 343; Dec. Dig. § 143.*]

2. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 149*)—INJURY TO SERVANT—NEGLIGENCE.

An employé ordered by the foreman in charge of the work to carry a machine which was too heavy for him was injured. The employé expressed doubt as to his ability to carry the machine, but the foreman insisted on his doing so. It was dangerous for one man to carry the machine, and to do so was in violation of the order of the superintendent. Held, that the employer was liable for the injuries sustained.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 291; Dec. Dig. § 149.*]

3. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 287*)—FELLOW SERVANTS—FOREMAN—QUESTION FOR JURY.

Whether one was a foreman when he ordered an employé to do a particular work resulting in his injury held, under the evidence, for the jury.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 1062-1064; Dec. Dig. § 287.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Muhlenberg County.

"Not to be officially reported."

Action by Jesse Mahan, a minor, against the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Browder & Browder and Benjamin D. Warfield, for appellant. Willis & Meredith, for appellee.

BARKER, J. The appellee, Jesse Mahan, aged 19 or 20 years, was a part of a bridge force in the employ of the appellant, Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company, and at the time he was hurt was engaged at work on the bridge spanning Clifty creek, in Muhlenberg county, Ky. J. W. Ellette was the foreman of the crew, and had general supervision of the work. One Parks was the assistant foreman, and, in the absence of Ellette, had charge and superintendence of the crew and work. The accident to appellant, Mahan, which constitutes the basis of this litigation, occurred (as claimed by appellee) as follows: There was in use in the work being done a "hydraulic jack," which, just before the accident, was on a flat car near the bridge. Wallace Butt, who generally was an ordinary workman in the crew, but who, appellee claims, was at the time temporarily in charge as foreman, told Mahan to shoulder the jack and carry it from the car to a point a short distance therefrom. The instrument weighed from 150 to 200 pounds, and had handles on each side, and the ordinary way to move it was to have it carried by two men, each holding a handle. Appellee states that, when he was told to shoulder the jack, he demurred on the ground that he thought it was too heavy, but he was told by his superior, Butt, that he (Butt) had himself carried it the day before, that other men had carried it, and that he (Mahan) could also carry it. Whereupon Mahan, in obedience to the orders of his superior, undertook to carry the instrument; it being placed upon his shoulder by Butt, who was on the car for that purpose. As soon as the jack was on his shoulder, Mahan found that he could not stand up under its weight, and undertook to throw it from him so as to escape injury, but, falling in this, was crushed to the earth, the jack falling on him, breaking his collar bone, and inflicting other serious bodily injuries. To recover damages for this accident he instituted this action against appellant, alleging that his injuries were caused by the gross negligence of his superior, Wallace Butt. Appellant answered, denying all the allegations of negligence charged in the petition, pleading that Wallace Butt was a fellow servant of plaintiff, and was not superior to him in authority, and also that the injuries occurring to plaintiff on the occasion in question resulted from his own negligence. A trial resulted in a verdict for the plaintiff in the sum of $800, and of the judgment based upon this verdict the railroad company is now complaining.

The chief complaint of the appellant is that the trial court erred in overruling its motion for a peremptory instruction at the close of all the evidence; but it seems to us that this position is untenable, and that the trial court correctly ruled on the motion for a peremptory instruction. The plaintiff testified that he was ordered by Wallace Butt to carry the jack; that he was afraid of its weight, but yielded to the orders of his superior upon the latter's assurance that the weight was not beyond plaintiff's strength. Several witnesses who testified for him agree that Parks had left the place from which the jack was to be carried, and had placed Butt in charge, and that the latter was temporary foreman at the time of the order to plaintiff to carry the jack. The evidence for the plaintiff also tended to show that the weight was much too great for the young man, and that it crushed him to the earth as soon as it was placed upon his shoulder. The evidence of the foreman, Ellette, who testified for the defendant, really strengthened the cause of appellee in several particulars. In the first place, it shows that he knew that the hydraulic jack was too heavy to be carried by one man, and that he had issued orders before the accident that it was not to be carried by one man again. This was because he had seen Parks carrying the jack on his shoulder, and it was to him, as well as the rest of the crew, that he issued orders that it was not to be so carried thereafter. On redirect examination, he was asked: "Q. Mr. Ellette, did you ever instruct this gang of workmen, of which Mr. Mahan was a member, how to carry these jacks? A. Yes, sir. Q. Tell what you told them. A. These jacks—we had two of them—they weighed about 150 pounds each, and I had seen Mr. Parks put this jack on his shoulder and tote it around the end of the car— Q. Go ahead, and tell how you came to give instructions after you saw Parks carrying it, what did you do, if anything. A. Told them the jacks was made for two men to tote, and didn't want to see any one man trying to tote it any more—" The witness said, on examination by the court, that he did not know whether Mahan heard or knew of his instructions or not. In answer to the question, "How ought they [the jacks] to have been carried?" he replied: "By the handle. Handles are put on with a band around the jack, handle on each side big enough for a man to get his hand in, and, of course, they can tote the jack like you do a bucket of water, swinging down in your hand. Q. Took only two men to carry it? A. Yes, sir; it required two men." On the subject of Parks' authority to appoint a man to take charge of a crew in his absence, Ellette was asked: "Q. Mr. Parks had the right when he went away to leave another man in charge, didn't he? A. Yes, sir." It thus appears from the defendant's own testimony that it was dangerous for one man to carry the hydraulic jack on his shoulder, and to do so was in violation of the superintendent's order. It does not appear, however, that the plaintiff knew anything of the order which had been given by Superintendent Ellette. It also appears that Parks had the authority to appoint Butt foreman when he left. Now, while it is true that the defendant's evidence contradicts Mahan and his witnesses in their testimony that Butt was appointed foreman by Parks, or that Parks had gone away from the work, and it also wholly contradicts them on the subject of Butt telling Mahan to carry the jack at all, and, on the contrary, tends to show that Mahan voluntarily undertook to carry the instrument by which he was hurt, yet this contrariety of testimony raised questions of fact which were properly submitted to the jury, and the court would not have been warranted in instructing them peremptorily to find for the defendant. The appellant in its brief insists that the appellee best knew whether he was able to carry the jack with safety, and that, having voluntarily assumed to carry it, he cannot recover for the injuries sustained thereby. We do not think the question involved here is thus to be disposed of; and the cases cited by appellant on this point are not apposite to the principle we have for adjudication. There is no evidence in the record that appellee knew he could not carry the jack. On the contrary, he merely expressed a doubt as to whether he could carry it safely, but was assured by his superior, who presumably knew more about the weight of the instrument than did the appellee, that he could carry it, and insisted upon his so doing.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

The case we have before us cannot be distinguished in principle from that involved in Illinois Central R. R. Co. v. Langan, 116 Ky. 318, 78 S. W. 32. There the employé was engaged with three others in moving steel-shafts weighing from 200 to 460 pounds each. The gang had moved several shafts weighing about 200 pounds, and had requested the freight clerk, who had charge of them, to obtain assistance for the removal of the larger shafts which weighed 460 pounds each. They stated to him that they could not in safety, or that it would be dangerous for them to attempt to, move these large shafts, which were about 20 feet long and from 4 to 6 inches in diameter, and which, because they were round and had been oiled or greased, were hard to handle. The freight clerk having failed to get the additional men after an effort so to do, told appellee and others of his gang, "Oh, go ahead," or something to that effect. In attempting to handle one of these larger shafts afterwards, it slipped or dropped from the hands of the carriers, and fell on Langan's foot, severely injuring it. A judgment for the employé in this case was affirmed; it being held that it was the duty of the master to furnish the servant a sufficient number of laborers to do the work at which he had been set. The reasoning of the opinion in that case is conclusive of the one before us. To the same effect are Dryden v. Pogue, 82 S. W. 262, 26 Ky. Law Rep. 523; Pullman Co. v. Geller, 107 S. W. 271, 32 Ky. Law Rep. 884.

The question whether or not Wallace Butt was the superior of appellee at the time the latter was hurt was properly submitted to the jury; the evidence upon this question being in dispute. Crabtree Coal Mining Co. v. Sample's Adm'r, 72 S. W. 24, 24 Ky. Law Rep. 1703.

We think the verdict was not excessive, and that the court in the instructions given fairly submitted the law of the case to the jury, and their verdict is fully supported by the evidence.

Judgment affirmed.

DELANO et al. v. SAYLOR et al.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Dec. 1, 1908.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 38*)—DECISIONS REVIEWABLE—AMOUNT IN CONTROVERSY.

The Court of Appeals has jurisdiction where the amount in controversy is a lien upon land, though less than $200.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 121, 178; Dec. Dig. § 38.*]

2. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 337*)—RESCISION OF CONTRACT—LIEN OF PURCHASER.

Under a contract of sale of land whereby a part of the price was advanced on condition that, if a good title could not be made, it should be refunded, such sum is a lien upon the land to secure its repayment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. § 985; Dec. Dig. § 337.*]

3. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 341*)—ACTIONS—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

Evidence in an action to recover the part paid of the price of land, because good title could not be made, held not to warrant a finding that there was either fraud or mistake in the execution of the contract, whereby a clause was omitted entitling vendors to have their attorney, in conjunction with the attorney for the purchasers, pass upon the title.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. § 1014; Dec. Dig. § 341.*]

4. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 18*)—CONTRACTS—VALIDITY—REASONABLENESS.

An option contract for the sale of land within a specified time, binding vendors to furnish a good title, and the purchasers, at their election, to take the land if the title was accepted and approved by their attorney, and providing that, if they should decline to take the land for any cause except insufficiency of the title, the sum advanced by them should be forfeited to the vendors, but that, if the title was defective and for that reason alone the purchasers refused to take, such sum was to be refunded to them, was not unreasonable.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Dec. Dig. § 18.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Harlan County.
"Not to be officially reported."

Action by Warren Delano, Jr., and another against John M. Saylor and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Reversed, with directions.

B. H. Sewell and Sampson & Sampson, for appellants. W. F. Hall and Greene & Van Winkle, for appellees.

CARROLL, J. On December 12, 1904, the following contract was entered into: "This agreement, made this 12th day of December, one thousand nine hundred and four, between John M. Saylor, and his wife, Louisa, F. R. Blanton, and Lavina C., his wife, and Jesse M. Blanton, and Serena C., his wife, all of Harlan Co., Ky., of the first part, and Richard B. Roane, of Pulaski, Va., and W. R. Ballou, of Pittsburg, Ky., parties of the second part, witnesseth: That the said parties of the first part, for and in consideration of the sum of one hundred and seventy five dollars ($175.00), the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, do covenant and agree that the said parties of the first part will, within thirty days after the exercise of this option by and upon request of the parties of the second part, or their assigns, grant and convey to the said parties of the second part, or their assigns, by deed in fee simple, clear of all liens, incumbrances and assessments, with general warranty of title, all that certain body of land more fully described as follows: On the waters of Jesse's creek, in Harlan Co., Ky., and bounded, on the north by land of Jackson Saylor and Wm. Osborn, on the south by land of said Roane and Ballou and others, on the east by land of F. G. Lewis and others (syndicate), on the west by land of James Brock and others, and containing 700 or more acres, subject to survey, and composed of three tracts—the Leander Russell tract, say 450 acres; the Sol A. Saylor tract, say 150 acres; and the John Brock tract, say 100 acres—in all, seven hundred acres, more or less. Upon the following terms and conditions: First: The said parties of the second part, their agent, attorney, or any person designated by them or their assigns shall have the right during the continuance of this agreement, to enter upon and take possession of the said land and make openings and excavations for the purpose of prospecting for coal or minerals. Second: The said parties of the second part shall have sufficient time to make surveys and examinations of title to said land, not to exceed six months or a reasonable time after the expiration of said six months, from the date of this agreement in which to exercise the option hereby granted, which reasonable time shall be named at the discretion or decision of said first parties. Third: If the title and surveys are satisfactory and accepted and approved by the attorney for the parties of the second part, or for their assigns, then the said parties of the second part, or their assigns, hereby agree to pay to the parties of the first part the sum of ten dollars ($10.00), per acre, for the said tracts of land as ascertained by said surveys upon the conditions above named. The said sum of one hundred and seventy five dollars ($175.00), paid as above stated, shall be credited upon the purchase price. Fourth: If the said title and surveys should not be satisfactory to the said parties of the second part, or their assigns, and not be approved by them or their said attorney, then the said parties of the first part bind themselves and agree to refund to the said party of the second part, the sum of one hundred and seventy five dollars ($175.00) paid as above set forth; and until such repayment shall have been made this agreement shall continue in full force and effect and binding upon the said first parties, and their heirs and assigns. Fifth: If the said parties of the second part should refuse to purchase the said property for any reason except non-approval of title, the sum of one hundred and seventy five dollars ($175.00), paid as above set forth, shall be forfeited to the said parties of the first part. It is understood and agreed that all costs and fees incurred in abstracting the titles of and in surveying these said tracts of land, shall be paid by said Roane and Ballou, or their assigns. Said parties of the first part are to have the free use of these said tracts of land for farming purposes only for 1905, by their paying the taxes for that year and keeping off depredations, and caring for these lands generally for 1905. This land shall be surveyed at the time the Sim W. Saylor tract adjoining it is surveyed and as soon as possible." This contract was signed and acknowledged by the grantors, was recorded in the proper office, and a few days afterwards was assigned by the grantees to Delano and Burr, the appellants herein.

In January, 1906, Delano and Burr brought this action against the grantors in the contract to recover the $175 mentioned as paid in the contract, and to enforce a lien to secure the same upon the land described. They alleged that, soon after the execution of the contract, they caused the land to be surveyed and the titles to be examined by their attorney, who found that the titles were defective, and for this reason they refused to take the land, and within the six months specified in the contract notified the grantors that the titles were disapproved and demanded the $175, payment of which was refused. The answer in one paragraph traversed the petition, and in another set up that the fourth clause in the contract was not a part of the contract which they entered into, and averred that, in place of the fourth clause, it was agreed between the parties that, as soon as the survey was made and the titles abstracted, the grantors and grantees were each to select an attorney, and the two attorneys were to pass upon the title and say whether or not it was marketable, and, if they decided it was, the grantees were to accept the title and pay the contract price, or forfeit the sum of $175; but that, by fraud or mistake, this condition in the contract was omitted, and the fourth clause, as it now appears and which was in the contract when first presented to them, was left undisturbed. They further averred that they were not given an opportunity to select an attorney to examine the title, but that the attorney for the grantees passed upon and refused to accept it. And, further, that their titles were not "defective or imperfect to any perceptible extent so as to render them unmarketable." In another paragraph they set up that, several days after the expiration of six months from the date of the contract, the grantees by their counsel prepared a list of exceptions to the title, and delivered the same to the grantors with the request that the defects be cured, and the assurance that, when cured, the title would be approved, and the trade closed, and that they were about to cure said defects, but, before they had time to commence to do so, they were notified that the titles had been rejected, and that the grantees would not take the land. A reply, that completed the pleadings, averred that the grantees had entered into the contract in good faith, without any notice either actual or constructive that there was any mistake in its execution, that they expended large sums of money in surveying the land and in causing the titles to be examined, and would have accepted the land except for the defects in the title.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes.

The point is made on behalf of appellees that this court has no jurisdiction because the amount in controversy is less than $200. But, if it is a lien upon the land, then, as has been often decided, this fact is sufficient to give this court jurisdiction without regard to the amount of money in controversy. As we understand the contract, the $175 was advanced as a part of the purchase price, with the condition that, if the land was not purchased because a good title could not be made, it should be refunded to the grantees. Under this state of case, if the grantees in good faith refused to accept the title because it was defective, then it is a lien upon the land to secure the payment of the amount advanced as a part of the purchase price. This question is fully settled in Bullitt v. Eastern Kentucky Coal Land Co., 99 Ky. 324, 36 S. W. 16. We do not think the evidence is sufficient to show fraud or mistake in the execution of the contract. The appellees testified that they could read and write, that they signed and acknowledged the contract as it now appears, but that it was agreed between them and C. T. Smith, who represented Roane and Ballou in procuring the contract, that there should be inserted in it a stipulation that each party was to select an attorney to pass upon the sufficiency of the title. These statements, denied by Smith, are not supported by, but, on the contrary, are at war with, the circumstances developed by the testimony. Although the grantees had at least two separate meetings with the attorney representing the appellants, at each of which their attention was called to defects in the titles discovered by him, they did not make any mention of mistake in the contract, or assert that they had the right to have their attorney, in conjunction with the attorney for appellants, pass upon the title. Nor does it appear that this alleged mistake was brought to the notice of appellants or their attorney until the answer was filed in this case. The writing was put on record. It was assigned by the original grantees to appellants, and it is incomprehensible why the appellees or some one of them did not, when the question of title was being discussed and the errors in it pointed out and the title declined because of these errors, insist or at least make some suggestion that they had the right to have the sufficiency of the title passed on by an attorney of their selection. It requires the most convincing evidence to annul or modify a written contract that has been signed and acknowledged before an officer and put to record; and, although a preponderance of the evidence from a numerical standpoint supports the contention of appellees that there was a mistake in the contract, other facts and circumstances in the case rebut this evidence to such an extent that we do not feel warranted in saying that there was either fraud or mistake in the execution of the paper.

Nor is there any evidence indicating that appellants refused to fulfill the contract for any other reason than because the title was defective. They expended considerable money in having the land surveyed and in examining the titles, and in other ways manifested their desire in good faith to take the land if the title was good. About the time the six months expired, either a few days before or a few days afterwards, the appellees by agreement met the attorney for the appellants, and he then pointed out to them the defects in the title. A few days afterwards another meeting was held, and a written memoranda of the defects was made out and handed to appellees, with the suggestion that, if these defects could be cured within a reasonable time, appellants would take the land. It does not appear, however, that any particular effort or indeed any effort was made on the part of appellees to cure the defects. This failure is attempted to be explained upon the theory that they were under the impression the title would not be accepted, although the defects were cured, and it is not disputed by them that there were defects in the title. Although other interviews between the parties were held after the second meeting, the defects were never cured.

It is further insisted that the contract was without consideration. We have carefully considered the contract, and we do not find it an unreasonable or objectionable one. It is simply an optional contract for the sale and purchase of land within a specified time, providing the title is satisfactory and the grantees desire to perfect the trade. The grantors bound themselves to furnish a good title, and the grantees were obligated to purchase and pay for the land at their election if the title was accepted and approved by their attorney. If the grantees for any cause except insufficiency in the title declined to take the property, the $175 paid by them was forfeited to the grantors. But, if the title was found to be defective, and for this reason alone the grantees did not take the land, the $175 was to be refunded to them. So that there are two essential features in this contract. The grantees by surrendering the $175 paid had the absolute right to decline to take the land; on the other hand, if they desired to exercise the option and take the land, and the grantors failed to tender a good title, the $175 was to be repaid. As heretofore stated, there is no serious dispute that the appellants desired to purchase and pay for the land, and only declined to do so because the title was defective. Nor is there any controversy that the title was defective, or concerning the proposition that in this particular the appellants acted in good faith and rejected the title because of serious defects in it.

Under these circumstances, the appellants are entitled to the relief sought in their petition, and the judgment is reversed, with directions to enter a judgment in favor of appellants for the amount claimed, giving them a lien upon the land to secure its payment.

DAVIDSON'S EX'R v. HIEATT et al.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Dec. 1, 1908.)

INSURANCE (§ 222*)—LIEN ON POLICY—ACTIONS TO DECLARE—JUDGMENT.

The judgment in an action to establish a lien on the proceeds of a life policy assigned to secure a debt the options under which had not then become available cannot be complained of because simply adjudging a lien on the proceeds and not further adjudging the right to surrender the policy when the options should become available and receive the amount due upon the option that would realize the most money and apply the proceeds to the debt.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases see Insurance, Dec. Dig. § 222.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Garrard County.

"Not to be officially reported."

Action by Leander Davidson's executor against William A. Hieatt and others. From a judgment in his favor, the executor appeals. Affirmed.

R. L. Davidson and W. I. Williams, for appellant. Greene & Van Winkle and R. H. Tomlinson, for appellees.

CARROLL, J. In November, 1898, the appellee Hieatt borrowed from Leander Davidson $300, for which amount he executed his note payable 12 months thereafter, with interest from date. As collateral security for the loan, Hieatt transferred and assigned to Davidson a policy of insurance on his life issued by the Equitable Life Assurance Society for the sum of $2,000. The policy was issued in September, 1898, and draws no dividends until after the completion of the tontine dividend period in September, 1909. At this time, if the policy has not been previously terminated by lapse or death, Hieatt has a right to exercise one of the following options: "(1) To withdraw in cash this policy's entire share of the assets; that is, the accumulated reserve which shall be $634, and, in addition thereto, the surplus apportioned by this society to this policy. (2) To convert the same into a paid-up policy for an equivalent amount, provided always that, if the amount of said paid-up policy shall exceed the original amount of insurance, a separate certificate of good health from one of the society's medical examiners shall be required. (3) To withdraw in cash the share of the accumulated surplus apportioned by said society to this policy, and continue the policy in force on the ordinary plan. (4) To continue the insurance for the original amount and apply the entire tontine dividend to the purchase of an annuity to reduce the subsequent premiums falling due upon this policy, provided that in any year in which the amount derived from such annuity, together with the annual dividend on this policy, shall exceed the amount of premium due thereon, the excess shall be paid in cash to said William A. Hieatt or assigns." Appellee Hieatt paid the premiums due in 1898 and 1899. The premiums due in 1900 and 1904, inclusive, Davidson paid, and Davidson having died in March, 1905, his executors paid the premiums due in 1905, 1906, and 1907. In this action, brought by Davidson and prosecuted after his death by his executors, it is sought to have a lien adjudged on the proceeds of the policy to secure the payment of the debt, and to give the executors the right to exercise at the time and in the manner provided in the policy the options therein reserved, in order that a sufficient sum may be realized to satisfy the note, as well as the premiums paid by Davidson and his executors. The assurance society having been made a party to the action, it was submitted for judgment, and the court rendered a personal judgment against Hieatt for the amount of his note, with interest, and for the amount of the premiums paid by Davidson and his executors, with interest, and further adjudged that the appellant's executors "have a lien on the said policy of assurance and the proceeds thereof for the payment of this judgment and the costs of this suit, and all premiums hereafter falling due on said policy that are paid by the plaintiff, and that all dividends on said policy, all annuities arising therefrom, and all proceeds thereof shall be first applied to the satisfaction of this judgment until the same is fully satisfied. That said policy of assurance shall not be withdrawn from the files of this suit, except upon the order of this court entered of record, and shall not be surrendered to said assurance society except and until this judgment is satisfied in full."

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

The appellants except to the judgment of the court because it simply adjudges a lien on said policy and its proceeds to secure the payment of this judgment, and does not adjudge to them "the right to exercise on the completion of the tontine dividend period of said policy of insurance the options therein reserved to the defendant Hieatt to withdraw in cash from said assurance society said policy's entire share of said society's assets; that is, the accumulated reserve which will be under the terms of the policy §634, and, in addition thereto, the surplus apportioned by said society to this policy, and apply the proceeds so arising therefrom to the satisfaction of this judgment, and any surplus that might be left after the satisfaction of this judgment to be paid by them to Hieatt." In short, appellants do not complain of the judgment as far as it goes, but they insist that it does not give them all of the relief to which they are entitled; their contention being that the court should have adjudged them the right to surrender the policy to the assurance society in September, 1909, at which time the options under it become available, and the right to receive from the company the amount due upon the option that would realize the most money, and apply the proceeds so far as necessary to the satisfaction of the judgment in their favor. At the term of the court that convenes during or first after the maturity of the options in September, 1909, we assume the court will grant appellants the full relief they are entitled to, which is the relief they insist should have been incorporated in the judgment appealed from. The rights of appellants are carefully protected by the judgment. Hieatt cannot exercise any option, or take any action concerning the policy, that would defeat them in the collection of their money or prolong its payment. Nor can the assurance society by any arrangement with Hieatt or others, or on its own initiative, do anything prejudicial to the rights of appellants. If the judgment is not satisfied in September, 1909, the court should, and we have no doubt will, direct that the policy be surrendered to the company and that it be required to pay into court, or to the parties in interest, if they agree about it, the amount due upon that option which in the judgment of the court will realize the largest amount of present money. And when this is done out of the sum so received the judgment obtained by appellants should be first satisfied. It being admitted that no money can be collected under the options until September, 1909, we are unable to perceive in what particular the rights of appellants were prejudiced by the judgment giving to them all the relief available at this time. The court might have anticipated its action in 1909, and have entered a judgment to become effective at that time, but its failure to do this is not at all prejudicial to appellants.

Wherefore the judgment is affirmed.

WARD, Sheriff, v. WENTZ et al. COMMONWEALTH v. SAME.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Dec. 1, 1908.)

1. TAXATION (§ 611*)—ENJOINING COLLECTION—NOTICE OF RAISE—EVIDENCE.

Where the owner of land, in a suit to enjoin collection of taxes based on a raise of the assessment by the board of supervisors without proper notice, exhibits the notice actually served, which does not comply with Ky. St. 1903, § 4122, he overcomes the presumption that proper notice was given, and defendant must overcome the presumption that this was the only notice given by showing that one was given by posting on the land, as required by statute.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Dec. Dig. § 611.*]

2. TAXATION (§ 482*)—ASSESSMENTS—RAISE BY SUPERVISORS—NOTICE.

Notice of a raise in an assessment by the board of supervisors given, as required by Ky. St. 1903, § 4122, in case of nonresidents having no agent or attorney in the state, by posting in a conspicuous place on the premises, is necessary to give the supervisors jurisdiction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. §§ 854, 855; Dec. Dig. § 482.*]

3. TAXATION (§ 482*)—RAISE IN ASSESSMENT—FAILURE TO GIVE NOTICE—KNOWLEDGE BY OWNER.

The knowledge of the landowner's agent that an assessment had been raised by the board of supervisors did not dispense with the notice required by the statute to give them jurisdiction. Only his actual appearance before them to secure a reduction would have done this.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. § 854; Dec. Dig. § 482.*]

4. TAXATION (§ 335*)—ASSESSMENT—LISTING PROPERTY.

An assessment of land by the assessor is not invalid because the owner's agent did not comply with the statute in listing the land.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. § 562; Dec. Dig. § 335.*]

5. TAXATION (§ 467*)—ASSESSMENT—OMITTED PROPERTY.

One's land cannot be assessed as omitted property, there having been a valid assessment of all of it for the same year.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Dec. Dig. § 467.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Harlan County.
"To be officially reported."

Two actions, one by John S. Wentz and others against M. S. Ward, sheriff of Harlan county, to enjoin collection of taxes, the other by the Commonwealth, by, etc., against John S. Wentz and others, to have lands assessed as omitted property. From judgments in favor of Wentz and others, the other parties appeal. Affirmed.

H. C. Clay and J. B. Carter, for appellants.
Sampson & Sampson and Bullitt & Kelley, for appellees.

CLAY, C. These two cases are so related that the decision of one involves the decision of the other, and they will therefore be considered together. John S. and Mary D. Wentz, who are residents of Philadelphia, Pa., are the owners of a large boundary of land consisting of 12,893 acres, located in Harlan county, Ky. This land was assessed by the assessor of Harlan county in the year 1906 for taxation purposes for the year 1907 at $64,465. The assessment was evidently based upon a letter written to the county clerk by C. F. Blanton, agent of John S. and Mary D. Wentz, wherein he described the lands as "lands owned by John S. and Mary D. Wentz in Harlan county, Kentucky, lying on Loonies Ridge and Big Black Mountain, and the head waters of Lewis', Big Looney, and Clover Lick creeks, waters of the Poor fork or Oumberland river." This letter was mailed to the county clerk of Harlan county on October 20, 1906. In the assessment made by the county assessor of Harlan county the lands were described as 12,893 acres, situated on Loonies Ridge, in election precinct No. 4, valuation of each tract with the improvements $64,465. Thereafter the board of supervisors for Harlan county raised the assessment from $64,465 to $167,609. Following is the supervisors' notice of the raise in the assessment of the property, together with the sheriff's return thereon:

"Supervisors' Notice.

"John S. and Mary D. Wentz, you are hereby notified that the board of supervisors of Harlan county have raised your property from $64,465.00 to $167,609.00, and will reconvene at the courthouse in Mt. Pleasant, Harlan county, Kentucky, on January, the 21, 22 and 23 to hear any proof you may have to offer.

"[Signed] S. J. C. Howard, Supervisor.

"Sherman Blanton, Supervisor.

"Wilson Howard, Supervisor.

"H. C. Lewis, Supervisor.

"Asher Skidmore, Supervisor.

"The Return.

"Executed by sending J. F. Bullitt, agent for John S. and Mary D. Wentz a true copy of this summons, this Jan'y 18th, 1907.

"[Signed] M. G. Ward, S. H. C."

About January 22, 1907, C. F. Blanton, the agent of John S. and Mary D. Wentz, was in Mt. Pleasant, Harlan county, Ky. The board of supervisors was then in session. Blanton admits that at that time he knew the raise had been made, but he did not appear before the board to get a reduction. The Wentzes, through their agent, C. F. Blanton, tendered to the sheriff the amount of taxes based on the assessment made by the county assessor, but he declined to receive the same. The action of M. G. Ward, Sheriff of Harlan County, v. John S. Wentz, etc., is one wherein appellees seek to enjoin the collection of any taxes on the 12,893 acres of land based upon the valuation of the property in excess of the sum of $64,465; it being the contention of appellees that the raise from that sum to the sum of $167,609 was made by the board of supervisors without the notice to appellees, or their agent, required by the statute. In that section judgment was rendered in favor of appellees, and the sheriff of Harlan county appeals. After judgment in the above case the sheriff of Harlan county instituted an action against appellees for the purpose of having listed for taxation the 12,893 acres of land for the year 1907, on the ground that it was omitted property. Judgment was rendered against the Wentzes in the county court, and on appeal to the circuit court judgment was rendered in their favor, and the commonwealth, by M. G. Ward, sheriff, appeals.

The statute (section 4122, Ky. St. 1903) requires that the notice of a raise in the assessment by the board of supervisors in case of nonresidents who have no agent or attorney in the state shall be made by posting the same in some conspicuous place on the premises. While it is true that in an action to enjoin the collection of taxes based on a raise made by the board of supervisors without proper notice it is incumbent upon the party seeking the injunction to prove the absence of the notice required by the statute on the idea that the presumption is in favor of the validity of the board's action (Bell's Trustee v. City of Lexington, 120 Ky. 190, 85 S. W. 1081), yet we are of opinion that where the owner exhibits the notice that was actually served, and this notice did not comply with the statute, this fact was sufficient to overcome the presumption that proper notice was given, and it was then incumbent upon the sheriff to rebut the presumption that this was the only notice given by showing that a notice was actually posted on the premises. This the sheriff failed to do. We therefore conclude that appellees' proof of want of notice was sufficient. But it is contended by counsel for appellant that Blanton, the agent of the Wentzes, admitted that he knew the raise had been made by the board of supervisors, and that this actual notice took the place of that required by the statute. In 2 Cooley on Taxation, p. 484, the rule in regard to notice of an assessment where notice is required, or in regard to increase of assessment, is thus stated: "So all provisions designed to give him the opportunity of a review of the assessment, whether by the assessors themselves or on appeal from their conclusions, are exclusively in his interest. Every notice which the statute provides for that end, whether by publication or otherwise, must be given with scrupulous observance of all its requisites. The notice cannot be shortened a single day without rendering it ineffectual; the presumption being that the law has made it as short as was deemed consistent with due protection. A published notice cannot be received as the substitute for a notice to be personally delivered to the party concerned; and, where the notice is to be given personally and also by publication, a failure in either is fatal." The same authority, on page 626 of volume 1, further says: "Upon this subject there is a general concurrence of authorities in the affirmative. It is a fundamental rule that in judicial or quasi judicial proceedings affecting the rights of the citizen he shall have notice, and be given an opportunity to be heard before any judgment, decree, order, or demand shall be given and established against him. Tax proceedings are not in the strict sense judicial, but they are quasi judicial, and, as they have the effect of a judgment, the reasons which require notice of judicial proceedings are always present when the conclusive steps are to be taken. Provision for notice is therefore part of the 'due process of law' which it has been customary to provide for these summary proceedings; and it is not to be lightly assumed that constitutional provisions, carefully framed for the protection of property rights, were intended or could be construed to sanction legislation under which officers might secretly assess the citizen for any amount in their discretion without giving him an opportunity to contest the justice of the assessment." Following the rule above announced, it has been held that, where personal service is required, proof of giving it is a jurisdictional fact. Scott v. Brackett, 89 Ind. 418.

In the case of Negley v. Henderson Bridge Co., 107 Ky. 414, 54 S. W. 171, this court said: "Under these provisions of the statute neither the assessor nor board of supervisors can increase the valuation placed by the taxpayer upon property listed by him without notice to such taxpayer of such increase. The purpose of these provisions is to give the taxpayer an opportunity to appear before the board, and be heard upon the proposed increase. * * * The increase in the valuation by the assessor of the property listed by the plaintiff, without the notice so required by the statute, and the failure on his part to report the change made by him in plaintiff's list to the board of supervisors, are fatal to the validity of such assessment; and the chancellor properly enjoined the collection of the taxes on the difference between the valuation fixed by the taxpayer and the illegal assessment made by the assessor." In the case of Mt. Sterling Oil & Gas Co. v. Ratliff, Sheriff, 104 S. W. 993, 81 Ky. Law Rep. 1229, this court in approving the rule above announced used the following language: "The requirement of the statute as to the giving the notice to the taxpayer is mandatory, and, in the absence of the notice, the act of the board in assessing appellant's property was and is void. Hence appellant was not required to appeal to the county judge for relief, but had the right to enjoin the collection of the tax illegally imposed." Under our statute the board of supervisors is given large powers and a wide discretion. Where its procedure is in conformity to the statute, its action is conclusive. In view of the large powers given it, it should therefore proceed in strict conformity to the statute. The notice therein required is a jurisdictional fact, and, unless it be given, the board of supervisors has no power to act. Although appellees' agent knew the assessment had been raised, he did not appear before the board for the purpose of having it reduced. Such knowledge on his part did not dispense with the necessary notice required by the statute. If, however, he had actually appeared before the board of supervisors for the purpose of securing a reduction, this would have dispensed with the necessity for notice, as the entry of an appearance by a party to an action dispenses with the necessity for the service of process.

The next question to be considered is whether or not the assessment made by the assessor in the first instance, wherein the assessment was fixed at $64,465, was valid; and whether or not the land in question could be again assessed as omitted property. While it is true that the letter of the agent Blanton did not comply strictly with the provisions of the statute, we do not think this had the effect of rendering the assessment invalid. Under our statute the assessor has the power to obtain information from other sources, and to make an assessment without reference to the list given in by the taxpayer. When the assessment is made by the assessor, the owner cannot attack the assessment, not can the taxing power repudiate it. If, as contended by counsel for appellant, the assessment is invalid because appellees' agent did not comply with the statute in listing the land, this would open the door for the escape of taxation by all those who failed to comply with the statute. If there was a valid assessment made by the assessor of the lands in question, it necessarily follows that no power lies in the commonwealth to assess it as omitted property. It is not contended that the property sought to be assessed as omitted property in the action of Commonwealth, by, etc., v. John S. Wentz, etc., is different from that which was actually assessed by the assessor of Harlan county. The facts of this case are different from those developed in the case of Bell's Trustee v. City of Lexington, 120 Ky. 199, 85 S. W. 1081. In that case the bonds, notes, mortgages, etc., were simply listed in a lump sum. They were not exhibited to the assessor and he could not have made any valuation of them himself. It could not be determined from that assessment whether all of the notes, mortgages, etc., were assessed or not, or whether they were assessed at their fair cash value. In that case the court held that the rule was that, when one comes into equity asking relief from taxation, it is incumbent on him to show clearly that he has paid, or is willing to pay, all that he justly owes toward the public burden; that he must make a full, fair, and complete disclosure of the property he has, subject to taxation, so that the court may determine whether or not he is unjustly taxed. The records in these cases show that the land sought to be taxed as omitted property is the same land which the assessor of Harlan county had previously assessed. It is not contended that the Wentzes owned other or additional land. That being the case, the land in question could not be assessed again unless the assessment made by the assessor of Harlan county was void. As the assessment made by the assessor in the first instance was valid, the circuit court properly held that the same land could not be again assessed as omitted property.

For the reasons given, the judgments of the trial court in both actions are affirmed.

COLUMBIA TRUST CO. v. RECCIUS et al.
(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Dec. 2, 1908.)

1. LANDLORD AND TENANT (§ 291*)—FORCIBLE DETAINER—APPEAL AND TRIAL DE NOVO—LIABILITY ON TRAVERSE BOND.

Under Civ. Code Prac. § 464, providing that if a traverse bond shall be filed in forcible de-tainer under section 463, and the traverser shall fail to prosecute his traverse with effect, he and his sureties shall be liable for withholding possession and the reasonable expenses of the traversee, a recovery of rents on a traverse bond filed by a tenant cannot be had up to the time the next tenant takes possession, but is confined to the time that the traversee is kept out of possession by the traverser.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Dec. Dig. § 291.*]

2. LANDLORD AND TENANT (§ 291*)—FORCIBLE DETAINER—APPEAL AND TRIAL DE NOVO—LIABILITY ON TRAVERSE BOND.

Civ. Code Prac. § 464, providing that if a traverse bond shall be filed in forcible detainer under section 463, and the traverser shall fail to prosecute his traverse with effect, he and his sureties shall be liable for withholding possession and the reasonable expenses of the traversee, does not authorize a recovery on a traverse bond filed by a tenant of the sum paid by the landlord to compromise a claim for damages for failure to place another in possession of the property due to the tenant's failure to surrender possession.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Dec. Dig. § 291.*]

3. LANDLORD AND TENANT (§ 291*)—FORCIBLE DETAINER—APPEAL AND TRIAL DE NOVO—LIABILITY ON TRAVERSE BOND.

Civ. Code Prac. § 464, providing that a traverse bond shall be filed under section 463, does not authorize a recovery on such bond filed by a tenant of the sum paid by the landlord to a real estate agent to obtain another tenant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Dec. Dig. § 291.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Jefferson County, Common Pleas Branch, First Division.

"To be officially reported."

Action by the Columbia Trust Company against J. W. Reccius and another. From a judgment in its favor, the Columbia Trust Company appeals. Affirmed.

Trabue, Doolan & Cox and George Durell, for appellant. Fred Forcht, Jr., for appellees.

NUNN, J. Appellant instituted an action in the lower court against appellees for something over $1,100, the amount it alleged it had sustained in damages by reason of the execution by appellees of a traverse bond during the progress of a proceeding of a writ of forcible detainer. It alleged that it was kept out of the possession of a building owned by it for the term of four months, and that the reasonable rental value during that time was $183 per month; that it had contracted to pay $300 to its attorneys to represent it in the forcible detainer proceeding in the circuit court and the Court of Appeals, and that the amount was reasonable; that it had contracted with a tenant for the term of two years by which it was to receive $183 per month for the premises; that this tenant was to receive the possession on a day named after certain repairs were made; that, Reccius having failed to surrender the possession of the property, the tenant referred to declined to take possession and made a demand upon it for about $500 in damages for its failure to place him in possession of the property as per their contract, and that it had effected a compromise of the claim of the tenant by the payment of $100, and it sought to recover of appellees this $100. It also sought to recover $85, the amount it paid to a real estate agent to obtain another tenant. The lower court struck from its petition its claim for the $100 and the $85 items.

The testimony showed without contradiction that the term of appellee Reccius' lease expired on the 10th of April, 1903, and the possession of the keys and house were delivered to appellant's agent on the 23d day of May, 1903, showing the time that he withheld the possession to be 1 month and 12 days. The witnesses varied in their opinion as to the rental value of the property. Appellee Reccius had occupied it for about 10 years, immediately preceding, at the price of $125 per month; and appellant showed that it had made a contract with a tenant at the price of $183 per month, but it was also shown that there were several hundred dollars' worth of repairs to be made on the house before the tenancy commenced. The witnesses also failed to agree as to what a reasonable fee would be for appellant's counsel for defending the traverse in the circuit court and the Court of Appeals.

The lower court gave to the jury the following instruction: "It will be your duty in this case to find for the plaintiff in such sum as you may believe from the evidence represents the fair and reasonable rental value of the property in controversy during the time that the plaintiff was kept out of the possession of the property by reason of the execution of the traverse bond sued on herein at a rate not exceeding $183 per month, and you should find for the plaintiff in such a sum as you believe from the evidence represents the fair and reasonable value of the services rendered by counsel for the plaintiff in prosecuting the forcible detainer in the Jefferson circuit court, and also in the Court of Appeals of Kentucky, the amount to be measured by the scale of fees usually charged by the lawyers of the Jefferson county and Louisville bar, not exceeding, however, the sum of $300 for attorney's fees." The jury returned a verdict for appellant in the sum of $183 for 1 month and 12 days rent, and allowed it the sum of $75 as attorney fees. Appellant contends that the lower court erred in confining the jury in allowing rent to the time only that it was kept out of the possession of the property, that it should have been permitted to recover for all the time up to the time the next tenant took possession of the property, and that the court erred in refusing to allow it to recover the $100 and the $85 items referred to. This action was instituted on a bond prescribed by section 463 of the Civil Code of Practice. Section 464 provides what may be recovered from the principal and surety on the bond; that is, for the damages caused by the withholding of the possession of the property, as well as the reasonable expenses of the traversee in defending the traverse. Under these provisions of the Code we cannot understand how especially the surety on the bond could be made liable for the rents of the property after the possession was returned to the traversee. Reccius, as stated, only withheld the possession from appellant for 1 month and 12 days, for which a recovery was had. To permit appellant to recover for the time claimed would be in violation of section 464 of the Civil Code of Practice, and to establish such a rule as contended for would in every case bind the traverser and his surety to pay a reasonable rental value for the property until the traversee could obtain a tenant, even though it took twelve months or more.

The claim of appellant to the $100 and the $85 items cannot be recovered in an action on the bond. In our opinion the language of the Code will not authorize the recovery of such items of damages against a surety on the bond, for they are too remote and uncertain to be covered by the language used in the section of the Code referred to. If appellant is entitled to recover such damages, it must look alone to appellee Reccius. See Evans' Adm'r v. Cleaver, 29 S. W. 29, 16 Ky. Law Rep. 499, and Caldwell v. McVean, etc., 119 Ky. 30, 82 S. W. 992.

For these reasons, the judgment of the lower court is affirmed.

ETLY v. COMMONWEALTH.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Dec. 2, 1908)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1159*)—APPEAL—VERDICT—CONCLUSIVENESS—CREDIBILITY OF WITNESSES.

The jury may rely on the testimony of a witness, and the court on appeal cannot disturb the verdict on the ground that the witness was unworthy of belief because of the impeaching testimony.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3074-3083; Dec. Dig. § 1159.*]

2. HOMICIDE (§ 178*)—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

Where, on the trial of a husband for the murder of his wife, the prosecution relied on a witness who was impeached, and the circumstances showed the possibility of another committing the offense, evidence that the latter committed the offense was improperly excluded.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. § 307; Dec. Dig. § 178.*]

3. HOMICIDE (§ 178*)—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

On a trial of one for murder, evidence that another caused decedent's death is admis-

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

sible, though insufficient to justify his conviction if on trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. § 307; Dec. Dig. § 178.*]

4. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 649*)—CONTINUANCE—ADJOURNMENT PENDING TRIAL—ABSENCE OF WITNESSES.

Where the testimony of a witness who had been subpoenaed for accused, and who had been sworn and put under the rule, and who did not appear when called late in the afternoon and at the time the court usually adjourned, was important to accused, the refusal to grant an adjournment until the following morning to enable accused to produce the witness was erroneous.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1515; Dec. Dig. § 649.*]

5. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 687*)—RECEPTION OF EVIDENCE—REOPENING CASE—NEWLY DISCOVERED EVIDENCE.

Where, on the trial of a husband for the murder of his wife, the prosecution relied on the testimony of a witness who was impeached, and the circumstances indicated that another person might have committed the homicide, the refusal to permit accused to introduce newly discovered evidence on the morning following the conclusion of the evidence, to the effect that fresh print of a bloody thumb on the top of a board in the fence at the rear of the house was discovered, and that the blood was human blood, was an abuse of discretion prejudicial to accused.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1621-1625; Dec. Dig. § 687.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Jefferson County, Criminal Branch.

"To be officially reported."

John B. Etly was convicted of murder, and he appeals. Reversed and remanded.

John C. Strother and Clem W. Huggins, for appellant. Jas. Breathitt, Atty. Gen., and Tom B. McGregor, for the Commonwealth.

SETTLE, J. The appellant, John B. Etly, was indicted in the court below for the murder of his wife, Virginia Etly. The trial resulted in his conviction; the punishment awarded being confinement in the penitentiary for life. He was refused a new trial, and has appealed.

Mrs. Etly was murdered about midnight, November 8, 1906. The crime was brutal, both in its conception and execution, and naturally caused in the public mind great excitement and indignation. The family of appellant at that time consisted of himself, wife, and six children, the eldest, Anna Etly, being 14 years of age, and the youngest 11 months old. Appellant is 50 years of age, and his wife was perhaps 15 years his junior. The Etly home was a small house, consisting of three rooms, and shed room addition, situated on the west side of Brook street, near the corner of Brandies, in the city of Louisville; the locality being known as the "Bottoms." Policemen Reiss and Foe, whose beat included that locality, were summoned by appellant to his residence, which they reached about 12:45 o'clock. They found there appellant and all his family, save a son, W. J. Etly, 13 years of age, who was at an infirmary ill of typhoid fever; also two or three women of the immediate neighborhood, and Dr. Moir, a physician, all of whom had been hastily called to his home by appellant. To each and all these persons he described the condition in which his wife was found by him and the manner in which he was informed of it, and the same story was told by him when testifying in his own behalf in the circuit court. His version of the matter was that while asleep in the front room in bed with a little daughter, Beulah, 7 years of age, he was awaked by his eldest daughter, Anna Etly, who came to his room and told him something awful had happened to her mother; that he immediately left his bed, and went into the second room, where his wife was occupying a bed with the two younger children, and, going at once to her, discovered her throat had been cut and was profusely bleeding; that he tried to ascertain from her how it had occurred, and who had wounded her, but could gain no information as she was unable to talk; that he then tried by tucking the bed clothing about her neck to stop the flow of blood, but, failing in this, ran in his sock feet to where he could telephone a physician and the police, and to the houses of two or three of his neighbors to get their assistance, after which he at once returned to his own home, and, in conjunction with the women whom he had summoned, did all that could be done for the relief of his wife, who died shortly after his return. Anna Etly, who slept in the same room, but in a different bed from that used by her mother, at that time told substantially the same story told by her father, with the addition that she was awakened by a noise from her mother which sounded as if she were strangling; that one of the little children who had been in bed with the mother was standing out in the floor, asking or crying for water; that she (Anna) went to her mother, and, seeing blood on the bed and hearing the peculiar noise as of strangling continue, then walked to the door leading into the room occupied by her father, and asked him to come to her mother's assistance which he at once did. When the policemen reached the house, they proceeded to look through the rooms and about the premises, seeking a clue to the assassin, but found nothing upon which to rest a safe conclusion. At their request appellant showed them his razor and the table knives in the house, also a butcher knife used in the kitchen for cutting meat. The razor blade was both clean and dry, and the table knives too dull to have inflicted the wounds received by Mrs. Etly. The butcher knife, while furnishing no appearance of having been recently used, had on the blade near the handle a stain which the policemen thought might be blood, so they turned it over to a chemist for examination, who testified he was unable to say it was human blood. The three rooms of the Etly house, exclusive of the small shed room, are situated one behind the other, with a door in each of the two first rooms opening into the one behind it, and door in the third room opening onto a small back porch. There was a front door in the first room, through which passage was allowed to Brook street, and also a double window. The doors leading from the front to the second room, from the second to the third room, and from the third room to the back porch were found open immediately after Mrs. Etly was discovered to have been wounded, as was one of the double windows in the front of the first room. South of the Etly house was a vacant lot inclosed by a low board fence which was not over $3\frac{1}{2}$ feet in height. A panel of the picket fence separating the Etly house from the street had a day or two before the death of Mrs. Etly been removed to allow the hauling of dirt to fill the side and back of the Etly lot. On the night of and immediately following the killing of Mrs. Etly this loose or removed panel, which had previously been leaning against the fence at the side of the house, was found to have been placed against the wall of the house and under the open window at the front. The base of the window was from 5 to $5\frac{1}{2}$ feet from the ground, and a man, with the aid of the panel of fence leaning against the house, could easily have gotten through the open window into the front room and through its open door into the second room where Mrs. Etly slept, thence through that room and the third room out on the back porch, and from that point escape through the vacant or south lot, with but little danger of discovery. It is true no marks were found in the dust covering the lower sill of the open window, but the inspection of the window sill was apparently not made until the morning after the murder, and counsel for appellant insist that it is not unreasonable, in view of the number of people passing in and about the house the night of and morning following the murder, that dust should have again accumulated on the window, though displaced the night before. Besides, they argue that, according to the evidence, it was possible for one by the use of the loose panel of fence to step through the window without disturbing the dust on the sill. It appears from the evidence that two wounds were inflicted upon Mrs. Etly, each of which was fatal. One of these severed the carotid artery, and the other, a cut on top of and near the front of the head, penetrated the brain to a depth of $1\frac{1}{4}$ inch. Though in doubt as to the character of the weapon by which the cut on the head was inflicted, Dr. Kelly, the coroner, testified that it might have been produced by a butcher knife like that found at appellant's house, but it had more the appearance of having been inflicted by a dirk, or the corner blade of an ax or hatchet. He was, however, positive that the wound upon Mrs. Etly's head could not have been received while she was in a recumbent position, and it was his opinion that she was sitting up in bed or standing upon her feet when that particular wound was inflicted. Dr. Kelly was confident that the wound on the neck was produced by a sharp-edged weapon, and expressed the opinion that the butcher knife could have inflicted it. But it was in contradiction of Dr. Kelly, proved by the testimony of at least two persons, one a policeman, that at the time of the autopsy he, upon seeing the butcher knife, expressed the opinion that neither of the wounds upon the person of Mrs. Etly had been inflicted with it.

Notwithstanding the account given by Anna Etly on the night of her mother's murder of what she saw and heard of the tragedy, and its complete exoneration of her father from all connection with the crime, she later, and after several days' separation from him, and the family, told certain representatives of the commonwealth a wholly different story, which charged him with the murder of his wife, and this story she adhered to when testifying as a witness on his trial. The last version was to the effect: That while lying in her bed several feet from that of her mother, by means of a lamp dimly burning in the room, she saw her father walk through their room into the kitchen, return to the bed occupied by her mother, and lie down upon it, at which time he had a knife in his right hand which he drew across her mother's throat on the right side of the neck; this being the location of the wound as told by Dr. Kelly. That her father then got up and went back to the front room, and she hearing the commotion made by her mother went to her, and seeing her condition, walked to the door and called her father, who came in to the room and to her mother's bed, telling her (Anna) if she ever told what he had done, he would kill her in the same way, after which he went out and summoned the physician, neighbors and police. Certain physical facts were brought out in evidence by appellant to discredit this story of the girl. Among others that if Mrs. Etly when cut with the knife on the right side of the throat was, as the daughter testified, lying on her back and with her right side toward the south wall, the blood, naturally following the least resistance would have spurted on the headboard on her right or against the south wall, instead if in the direction of the west wall as it did, and on which some of it spurted as high as five feet. The head of the bed was in the direction of where the west and south walls cornered and the foot extending out into the room about midway between the west and south walls. Again, the girl testified to but one stroke of the knife by her father when she said he drew it across the right side of her mother's throat, whereas there was, as Drs. Kelly and Moir testified, another fatal wound on top of the head which penetrated the brain more than an inch, and which could not, according to their further testimony, have been inflicted unless Mrs. Etly was sitting up in bed, or standing upon her feet. Anna did not claim to have seen her in either position, but testified that she was lying on the bed throughout the attack upon her with the knife. It is further contended that Anna Etly's story of the crime was further discredited by her own conduct on the night of the murder. According to the testimony of some of the persons called to her home that night, when her father seemed overcome with grief because of the death of his wife, Anna sat upon his knee, and attempted to console him by telling him that she would help him raise the younger children. It is earnestly argued by appellant's counsel that Anna would not have so conducted herself towards her father, if he was, as she afterwards testified, such a monster as to kill her mother in her presence, and threaten her with a like fate if she informed on him.

It is also urged as a significant fact that Anna Etly continued to exonerate her father of the crime charged against him until she was placed under legal restraint, if not arrest, and became afraid the crime would be laid at her door, and, further, that the falsity of her last story was demonstrated by an affidavit which she gave her uncle, D. J. Etly, and one Hagan, after she was placed in the custody of the institution where she is yet confined. By the affidavit in question she repudiated the story implicating her father and reaffirmed the one told by her on the night of her mother's death, but later repudiated the affidavit, and returned to the story of her father's guilt. An attempt was also made, not wholly without success, to impeach the reputation of Anna. It was also proved that she was not fully subservient to parental control, and that her mother or father, perhaps both of them, shortly before the murder of the mother, whipped her on account of her disobedience. It does not seem to be contended by counsel for appellant that Anna Etly murdered her mother, but it is insisted that the evidence as strongly conducted to show her guilt as that of appellant; it being claimed that the resentment of the girl arising from the punishment for her disobedience inflicted by the mother, or by the father at the mother's instigation, together with the desire to be rid of the mother's constant surveillance and control, may have furnished a motive for the crime, whereas the evidence, it is claimed, furnished no proof of a motive on the part of appellant.

On the other hand, counsel for the commonwealth, while pointing to no proof of motive on the part of appellant, nevertheless insist that there was evidence conducing to show his guilt. For instance it is argued that the bed on which he claimed to have slept in the front room with his little daughter gave no appearance of having been occupied by him, and that only the side of the bed in which the little girl was seen appeared to have been used. Two or three witnesses testified as to the appearance of the bed. Whether their inspection was more than a casual look does not appear. None of them seemed to know which side of the bed appellant had occupied, whether his little daughter had lain upon the side that did not appear to have been used, or whether she moved, after he left the bed, to the place his body had occupied. It seemed to have been known to Anna Etly and her seven year old sister that appellant and the entire family retired that night at 9 o'clock, and that he lay down on the bed in the front room with Beulah. The conclusion deduced by appellant's counsel from this undisputed fact is that if the bed contained a single mattress, as the proof seemed to indicate, it was not impossible that appellant could have slept upon it three hours without materially disarranging it or the bed cover. A further fact relied on by counsel for the commonwealth as evidencing appellant's guilt was the presence upon his shirt sleeves and drawers of blood. It is argued by his counsel that his explanation of that matter was altogether reasonable; that is, that he received the blood stains upon his clothes in ministering to his wife when he reached her bedside after being awakened by Anna, and that to the unbiased mind it is not perceivable that the blood upon appellant's clothes afforded any stronger proof of his guilt than did the appearance of blood, which the evidence shows was noticeable upon the clothing of Anna, prove her guilty of the murder of her mother.

Counsel for the prosecution lay great stress upon the statement which Beam and wife claim to have received from appellant when he asked them to go to his home and give their assistance to his wife, which was that his wife had fallen upon a door knob and cut her throat, and insist that the absurdity of this statement is a circumstance that tends to show his guilt. Appellant denied the statement attributed to him by the Beams, and claimed to have said to them what he said to the other neighbors whose services he sought that night, viz., that his wife had been cut or somebody had cut her. His denial of the statement testified to by Beam and wife was in some measure supported by the two women of the neighborhood to whom he applied before going to the house of Beam who testified that he informed them somebody had cut his wife. This also seems to have been the statement he made to the policeman. There was also testimony from the persons summoned to appellant's home the night of the murder which tended to show that he was then apparently inclined to the belief that his wife had committed suicide; for before her death, and following an appeal to her to tell him who her assailant was, he asked her why she had done this, or words to that effect. It is also insisted for appellant that the evidence wholly failed to furnish a motive on his part for the crime, or show anything in his conduct at the time of, prior to, or following the assassination of his wife that was inconsistent with his innocence of the crime, and that not only was there no proof of a motive, but the evidence furnished indisputable proof of his good character, viz., that he was an honest, industrious, sober, and peaceable man, also that he apparently entertained a warm affection for and was invariably kind to his wife and children, was domestic in his tastes, and that he faithfully applied to the support of his family the wages of $9 a week he was earning.

We have set out at length the substance of the evidence contained in the record because of the appellant's contention that it wholly fails to prove his guilt. It is not our province to express an opinion as to the guilt or innocence of appellant, nor is it our purpose to further discuss the evidence except to say that it shows the commonwealth to have been mainly dependent upon the testimony of Anna Etly for the conviction of appellant, and it is patent that the verdict must have resulted from the jury's acceptance of her testimony. This, however, the jury had a right to do, and we cannot disturb the verdict upon the ground that Anna Etly was unworthy of belief; that being a matter the jury could alone determine. To authorize a reversal, there must have been error in some ruling of the trial court prejudicial to appellant's rights.

Numerous grounds are urged by appellant for a reversal of the judgment of conviction, one of which is that the trial court erred in excluding the testimony of divers witnesses conducting to prove one James Holt guilty of the crime for which appellant was indicted and convicted. Briefly stated, the facts to which appellant's avowals show the witnesses in question would, if permitted, have testified, were that Holt was a desperate character and dangerous man, who had committed numerous felonies; that the day before Mrs. Etly was killed Holt was discharged from a long confinement in the city workhouse, his committal to that penal institution having been effected through the procurement and testimony of his mother-in-law, whom he greatly hated, and that both the mother-in-law and Holt's wife were so very much afraid of him that during his confinement in the workhouse they moved their residence without advising Holt where they had moved; that late in the afternoon, and in the early part of the night on which Mrs. Etly was killed, Holt then being under the influence of intoxicating liquor, and in an angry mood said to the witnesses referred to that his mother-in-law had testified against him and caused his incarceration in the workhouse; that he intended to cut her throat and kill her, and inquired where she and his family had moved. It appears from the testimony heard by the jury that Holt's wife and mother-in-law had removed to Brook street in the "Bottoms," very near, perhaps next door, to the Etly residence, and, according to appellant's avowals, it would further have appeared by the testimony of the excluded witnesses that Holt late that afternoon learned of the place of residence of his wife and mother-in-law in the "Bottoms." By J. C. Jones appellant would, it appeared, have proved that he about dark of the day Mrs. Etly was killed met Holt near the Etly home, and pointed out to him at Holt's request the house next to that of Etly as the place of his (Holt's) wife and mother-in-law's residence. It appears from the affidavit of appellant that the witness Jones had been subpoenaed for appellant, and that he was present at the beginning and during some part of the trial, and had been sworn and put under the rule with the other witnesses. When called to testify, which was late in the afternoon and at the time the court usually adjourned, Jones did not appear, whereupon appellant, claiming to be taken by surprise at Jones' absence, asked that he be given until the next morning to produce and have him testify, which he alleged he could do, but the court refused to grant the adjournment, and over appellant's objection then completed the taking of the testimony. In excluding the testimony of the several witnesses in regard to Holt's conduct, and also in refusing to give appellant until the following morning to procure the attendance and testimony of Jones, we think the court erred. The excluded testimony was, we think, competent and of great importance to appellant. In connection with the admitted testimony in respect to the front window found open at the Etly house immediately after the assault upon Mrs. Etly, the open doors between the three rooms of the house, and the fact that the door leading from the rear room onto the back porch was then also found to be standing open, it might have been sufficient to satisfy the jury that Holt, in attempting to execute his threats against his mother-in-law, entered the Etly home, mistaking it for hers, and by a greater mistake inflicted upon Mrs. Etly the wounds of which she died, thinking she was his much-hated mother-in-law. As said in Sidney v. Commonwealth, 1 Ky. Law Rep. 120: "On the trial of one for murder evidence tending to show that others caused the death is admissible, though not sufficient to justify their conviction, if they were on trial." Morgan v. Commonwealth, 14 Bush, 106. We are of opinion that the lower court also erred in refusing appellant permission to introduce H. H. Wilson, who before the convening of the court on the morning following the conclusion of the evidence informed appellant's counsel that he and a man by the name of Nelson on the next or second day following the murder of Mrs. Etly discovered the fresh print of a bloody thumb on the top of a board of the plank fence at the rear of the Etly lot near the coal shed and between the Etly lot and the vacant lot south of it; that he and Nelson sawed off a piece of the plank containing the blood mark, and had it examined by Dr. Robins, a chemist, who pronounced it human blood. When the court met and before argument to the jury began, appellant by affidavit brought to the attention of the court this newly discovered evidence, which it was made to appear he could not have sooner discovered, and asked leave of the court to introduce it, but was not allowed to do so, to which ruling appellant excepted. While the trial court has a broad discretion in such matters, in view of the peculiar circumstances surrounding this case and the contradictory stories of Anna Etly, the commonwealth's principal witness, without whose testimony it could not have convicted the appellant, and the further fact that the evidence introduced with that offered was sufficient to create a strong probability that the murder might have been committed by a person other than appellant, we think the importance of the newly discovered evidence warranted its admission by the trial court, and that the court's refusal to allow its introduction was an abuse of discretion highly prejudicial to appellant.

The instructions seem to have correctly given the jury the law of the case. We refrain from discussing other alleged errors relied on by appellant, as they are not likely to be repeated on another trial, but for the reasons given in the opinion we think the ends of justice require that appellant should be granted a new trial; and to that end the judgment is reversed and cause remanded for such trial, consistent with the opinion.

DAVIDSON v. JENKINS et al.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Dec. 3, 1908.)

1. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 233*)—BONA FIDE PURCHASER—NOTICE—UNRECORDED DEEDS.

Where the deed of the subsequent purchaser did not embrace any part of the tract included in a prior unrecorded deed, the question whether the subsequent purchaser was a bona fide purchaser of the property conveyed by the prior deed did not arise.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Dec. Dig. § 233.*]

2. TRESPASS (§ 68*)—TRESPASS TO REAL PROPERTY—EVIDENCE—INSTRUCTIONS.

Where, in trespass for cutting timber, it was admitted that certain calls were the dividing line between the parties, and the evidence for plaintiff showed that he owned north of the line, and that the timber cut was removed from his land as alleged, and the evidence for defendant showed that the timber had been removed from the land south of the line, an instruction authorizing a verdict for plaintiff for the timber removed from the land as described in the petition properly submitted the issue.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trespass, Dec. Dig. § 68.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Pulaski County.
"Not to be officially reported."

Action by Isaac Jenkins and others against William Davidson. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Campbell & Williams, for appellant. Virgil P. Smith, for appellees.

CLAY, C. This action was instituted in the Pulaski circuit court by Isaac Jenkins and others, the children and heirs of David Jenkins, deceased, to recover damages for the cutting and carrying away of timber from a tract of land described in the petition. The appellant, William Davidson, defended on the ground that he was the owner of the land in question, and that he had not wrongfully or unlawfully cut the timber therefrom. The jury returned a verdict in favor of plaintiffs for $100, and from the judgment based thereon William Davidson appeals.

Both appellant and appellees claim under the B. Woodall patent of 200 acres. David Jenkins, the father of appellees, purchased from B. Woodall the northern portion of a 200-acre survey. Appellant claims title by virtue of a deed from William Edwards and wife. Edwards obtained title from James Stewart by deed, which was lost, but the execution of which was properly proved. Stewart obtained title by deed from B. Woodall and wife. There is some proof to the effect that the deed from Edwards and wife and that from Stewart to Edwards embraced all of the B. Woodall 200-acre survey; but the deed from B. Woodall and wife to James Stewart does not embrace all of the 200-acre survey, but embraces only that part which was left remaining after the previous conveyance to David Jenkins. Some contention is made that appellant was a bona fide purchaser of the property involved in the action without notice of the previous deed from Woodall to David Jenkins, inasmuch as the David Jenkins deed was not put to record until the year 1891, which was several years after appellant obtained his deed. This question, however, we do not think is involved in this case, for the reason that it does not appear that the deed from Woodall to Stewart embraces the 200-acre survey, or any portion thereof included in the deed from Woodall to Jenkins. During the course of the trial it was admitted that the calls "S. 89½° W. 130, more or less," constituted the dividing line between the land belonging to appellees and that belonging to appellant. The testimony for appellees is to the effect that the timber cut was standing north of this line, while that of appellant's witnesses other than himself is to the effect that it was south of this line. Appellant himself admits that he cut the timber believing that he owned the whole 200-acre survey. One of the appellees notified him not to cut nor remove any of the timber on that portion of the survey claimed by them. Appellant replied that all the survey belonged to him, and that he was going to cut the timber from all of it. An injunction was then sued out, and he stopped cutting the timber. What he had cut he left lying on the ground, mainly rotted. He did not know how much of it there was, or what it was worth. Would have taken all the timber off the whole 200-acre survey had he not been stopped by the injunction.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes.

The court instructed the jury to the effect that the plaintiffs were the owners of that portion of the 200-acre survey patented to B. Woodall in 1858 as set out and described in the petition and the deed from B. Woodall to D. Jenkins, and that they should find for the plaintiffs such a sum in damages as would fairly compensate them for any timber cut, destroyed, or removed from their said land as set out and described in their petition, not exceeding $150. Counsel for appellant contends that these instructions were erroneous; that the court should have instructed the jury that the call, "S. 89½° W. 130 poles to the hickory and birch in the Ivy Branch," was the dividing line between the property of plaintiffs and defendant, and that they should find for the plaintiffs damages only for such timber as they believed was cut by the defendant north of that line. While such an instruction might have presented the issue in a form more intelligible to the jury, it was in effect the same as the instruction given by the court. According to the proof in the case, appellees owned to the call "S. 89½° W. 130," and by telling the jury to find for the plaintiffs the value of such timber as was cut north of this line, was the same as directing them to find the value of such timber as was cut from the land described in the petition. We therefore conclude that the court did not err either in the instructions given or in refusing those offered by appellant.

For the reasons given, the judgment is affirmed.

ROETTGER et al. v. REIFKIN et al.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Dec. 10, 1908.)

LANDLORD AND TENANT (§ 318*)—RECOVERY OF POSSESSION—WRIT OF RESTITUTION—WRONGFUL ISSUE—MEASURE OF DAMAGES.

Where defendant landlord wrongfully procured a warrant of restitution to issue, and had a constable execute the writ, only compensatory damages could be recovered, and the measure of recovery was the damage to plaintiff's property by reason of the acts complained of.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Cent. Dig. § 1348; Dec. Dig. § 318.*]

"Not to be officially reported."

On rehearing. Petition overruled.

For prior report, see 113 S. W. 88.

HOBSON, J. The answer discloses the infirmity of the writ. Only compensatory damages may be recovered. The measure of recovery is the damage to the plaintiffs' property by reason of the acts complained of. The writ was not void, only an honest mistake was made in issuing it too soon.

Petition overruled.

LITTLE v. BERRY.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Dec. 2, 1908.)

1. ESTOPPEL (§ 95*)—EQUITABLE ESTOPPEL—ACQUIESCENCE.

Where the maker of a note, in order to secure plaintiff's signature as surety thereon, stated to plaintiff in the presence of defendant, who was also a surety, that his insurance and other property was sufficient to pay all his debts, in which statement defendant acquiesced, the latter by failing to disclose that he then held an assignment of the insurance to secure other debts was not estopped as to plaintiff to claim under such assignment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Estoppel, Cent. Dig. § 286; Dec. Dig. § 95.*]

2. ASSIGNMENTS (§ 48*)—EQUITABLE ASSIGNMENT.

Statements by the maker of a note in order to secure the signature of a surety thereon that his insurance and other property were sufficient to pay all his debts, without any offer to assign the insurance to secure the particular debt, did not constitute an equitable assignment of the insurance.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Assignments, Dec. Dig. § 48.*]

3. PLEDGES (§ 11*)—DELIVERY AND POSSESSION.

Ordinarily a pledge of personal property to secure indebtedness must be by a delivery of the thing pledged, or, in case of incorporeal property, a symbolical delivery, which is ordinarily by writing describing the thing pledged, and a mere promise of the debtor that he will hold certain property exclusively liable to a particular debt without delivery of it of any kind is not a pledge of such property.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pledges, Cent. Dig. § 29; Dec. Dig. § 11.*]

4. ASSIGNMENTS (§ 31*)—CHOSE IN ACTION.

An assignment of a chose in action to secure a debt implies generally some kind of a written acknowledgment by the assignor setting it apart to the payment of the particular liability, and, though in equity a parol assignment may be valid, the assignment, whether written or by parol, must in fact set apart the chose in action to the payment of a specified liability.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Assignments, Cent. Dig. § 61; Dec. Dig. § 31.*]

5. EVIDENCE (§ 354*)—BOOKS OF ACCOUNT.

Entries in a pocket memorandum book, kept by the maker of a note, of accounts with various persons, showing what notes he owed, some of which he had paid, and reciting that defendant held an insurance policy to secure him as surety, none of the entries being dated, and it not appearing when they were made, were not admissible as book entries in an action against defendant by a co-surety claiming to be entitled to participate in the assignment of the policy.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 1432-1483; Dec. Dig. § 354.*]

6. INSURANCE (§ 209*) — POLICIES — ASSIGNMENT—EVIDENCE.

An entry in a pocket memorandum book kept by deceased of a note given by him, reciting that defendant, a surety, held a $5,000 policy to secure him, the entry not being dated and the policy not being described, was not an assignment of the policy.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. § 479; Dec. Dig. § 209.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Hickman County.
"Not to be officially reported."

Action by T. P. Berry against W. S. Little. From the judgment, defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded for judgment dismissing the petition.

W. S. Little and Bennett, Robbins & Thomas, for appellant. R. B. Flatt, for appellee.

O'REAR, C. J. E. L. Dunnevant and W. S. Little were partners in farming and merchandizing. Dunnevant was indebted to A. M. Jones in the sum of $1,358.70 not connected with the partnership affairs, which was evidenced by note, with personal sureties. Appellee Berry was one of the sureties. Upon renewing the note, appellee refused to sign it, unless he was indemnified. Dunnevant thought he was solvent. He so represented to appellee, and assured him that, in the event of his death, his life insurance was ample to pay all his debts. Appellee still hesitated to renew the note, and was then promised that W. S. Little, the appellant, would also sign it as surety. Thereupon appellee and Dunnevant went to appellant, where the same conversation was had as to Dunnevant's life insurance being ample to pay his debts if he should die before satisfying them. There was also some talk about the probable outcome of a wheat crop, and possibly some other ventures of Dunnevant. Dunnevant died shortly thereafter without paying the Jones debt. This suit was brought by appellee against Dunnevant's administrator, appellant Little, and one Spicer, another surety, in which appellee charges that certain life policies of Dunnevant had been assigned by him to Little as indemnity to secure his suretyship upon the Jones debt, and that Little had collected them and applied them to other debts. It is also claimed in the petition that Dunnevant had equitably assigned this life insurance to appellee Berry, or to him and his co-sureties on the Jones debt as indemnity. The transaction between appellee, appellant, and Dunnevant above alluded to is the one in which it is claimed the last assignment took place. The circuit court held that the insurance policies had been assigned to secure the Jones debt, and, as appellant had collected $2,000 on account of that insurance, he was adjudged to pay to Jones' administrator so much of the insurance fund as represented one-third of the debt. The other surety, Spicer, who was also joined in the suit, made no defense, nor is he now complaining on this appeal. The question we are called upon by this record to decide is whether there was an equitable or other assignment of the insurance policies by Dunnevant to secure the payment of the note to Jones.

A written assignment of the policies is proven, by parol—the writing itself not having been produced—to appellant to secure him against loss by reason of the partnership enterprise between Dunnevant and appellant. Whether that assignment was sufficiently proven is not here for decision; for, though it may not have been, still, if the policies were not assigned to secure the particular indebtedness on which appellee was bound, he is not concerned in it. Nor is it pretended that there was an assignment of the policies to secure the Jones note or as indemnity to appellee, or to Little on that account, except by reason of what was said between the parties on the occasion of the last renewal of the note. It may be conceded that an equitable assignment might have been worked by the parol agreement of the parties without the assent of the insurer, and without the presence of the policies.

The question still remains: Was there such assignment. We quote the testimony of appellee on this subject; it being the only relevant evidence in the record offered to support his contention, which testimony is as follows: "He [Dunnevant] insisted on renewing the note, and he said that if I would go on it, that if he lived, he would be perfectly able to pay it, and, if he died, he had plenty of insurance to pay all his debts. And I told him that I did not expect Joe Spicer would be willing to do it, and he said that Wade would go on the note with Joe and me. And I still did not agree to do it, and he insisted and spoke about his insurance several times, and says: 'Now, you need not be a bit uneasy. I would not ask you to if I did not have plenty of insurance to pay all my debts if I die.' I said: 'Now, I will not do it until I see Mr. Little. I will see him.' He said, 'All right,' that Mr. Little was up home, and we would go and see him then. I went with him up to Mr. Little's and met Mr. Little out in the horse lot, and then Gene made about the same statement to Mr. Little that he had made to me. He said there in the presence of Mr. Little and myself that he was bound to have that note renewed, and that if he would go on it that he knew that we would not suffer. And then he still repeated that he had plenty of insurance to pay if he died, and, if he lived, he was confident that he would pay it all right. Then I asked Mr. Little what he thought of it. Him and Gene had been partners for a year or two on the Missouri farm, and I supposed that Mr. Little understood his financial condition better than I did. I asked him what he thought of it, and he said he thought that it would be safe. Then I said to Mr. Little: 'At least see that this note is paid when it becomes due.' And then Mr. Little said: 'I think Gene is all right; but I am going to stay with him until he pays out of debt.' That was just about the words he used. Mr. Smith: I object to all statements on the part of the administrator of E. L. Dunnevant. Mr. Bennett: Attorney for defendant, W. S. Little, objects to all of the above answer, because it is incompetent. Q. What did W. S. Little say, if anything, with reference to the wheat crop in Missouri, that Gene spoke of at the time which you say he said he would pay the note if he lived? A. I don't remember that he said anything particular about the wheat crop; but Gene remarked that he thought he would be able to pay it out of the crop. I don't know whether Mr. Little said he would or wouldn't. Mr. Smith: Note our objections to that. Q. What, if anything, did Little say in reference to insurance on the life of E. L. Dunnevant at that time? A. If he said anything, I don't remember it. I know he did not say anything. Q. When Mr. Dunnevant made the statement that, if he died, this note would be paid out of the insurance on his life, was Little present, and heard this statement? A. He was present. He was there talking. Q. What, if anything, did Little say when Dunnevant declared to you in his presence that, if he died, this note would be paid out of the insurance then carried on his life? A. He did not say anything. Q. At what juncture in the conversation did Little tell you that he thought Gene was all right? Was that before or after Gene made the general statement that you related above? A. Gene, he made the statement before, because, when he went up there, Gene commenced talking and related the whole thing to Mr. Little like he did to me. The main thing with me was letting one man out that was good and taking in one man that was not good, and, too, increasing my liability or whatever you call it. I told Gene that I would not be willing to do it until I saw Wade Little. My idea was that he was in a condition to know Gene's financial condition. And I supposed that if he was willing to do it that it would be safe, and he just made the statement to Little and to me. Little thought it was all right, and I did too. (Objections.) Q. At that time or before had the defendant, Little, said anything to you about his having or claiming any insurance on E. L. Dunnevant's life? A. He did not. Q. Or of Dunnevant having assigned to him any part of the insurance carried on his life? A. I did not know Mr. Little had any insurance on Mr. Dunnevant at all until after Mr. Dunnevant's death. Q. Then, if I understand you, when Dunnevant told you if he died his insurance would pay the note, Little said nothing? A. No, sir; he did not say anything." It will be observed there was no suggestion by the decedent that he would assign the policies of insurance to secure this debt. His whole talk was as to his ability, and the ability of his estate, in the event of his death, to pay all his debts. This debt was not specialized, nor was the insurance undertaken to be set apart, any more than the wheat crop or any other property of the principal to secure this particular debt.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

Some stress is laid upon Little not saying then that he already held an assignment of the insurance policies to secure him upon other liabilities. Nor does it appear that he was called upon to do so. He may not have had the assignment at that time. But, if he had, it was not necessarily or apparently inconsistent with decedent's statement that his insurance and other property would pay all his debts. Little and decedent may have then believed it would. There is no estoppel in the occurrence. Ordinarily a pledge of personal property to secure the pledgor's indebtedness must be by a delivery of the thing pledged, or, in case of incorporeal property, a symbolical delivery, which is ordinarily by writing describing the thing pledged. A mere promise of the debtor that he will hold certain of his property as exclusively liable to a particular debt, without delivery of it of any kind, cannot, upon most obvious principles of public policy, be deemed a pledge of such property. An assignment of a chose in action implies generally some kind of a written acknowledgment by the assignor setting it apart to the payment of the particular liability. But in equity a parol assignment may be valid. Newby v. Hill, 2 Metc. 530. However, whether in writing or by parol, the assignment must in fact set apart the chose in action to the payment of a specified liability. In this case there was no assignment. Nor was there in any sense a pledge of the policies as collateral or indemnity.

It is asserted that there was written evidence of the parol assignment, in this: Dunnevant kept a small pocket memorandum book on which he entered accounts with various persons, and entered also memoranda of other transactions. It was not a shopkeeper's book of accounts kept in the usual course of business, on which entries of sales were made in their order, such as admits the book entries as evidence in behalf of the keeper. In this book is found this memorandum in Dunnevant's handwriting: "A. M. Jones, Mayfield, Ky. note $1,358.70, No. int. T. P. Berry. Joe Spicer, W. S. Little. Little holds $5,000 policy to secure him." Preceding and following this entry are a number of others reciting what notes he owed, and some he had paid, with statements interspersed as to his interest in certain properties. None of these entries are dated. Nor is it shown when they were made. They are not such as entitle them to rank as original entries in a shopkeeper's books. A party cannot thus make evidence for himself against strangers. The book and its contents were not receivable as evidence against Little. Nor was this entry in itself an assignment of the policies. It does not describe them so that they might be identified. There being no competent evidence in the record as to the alleged assignment of the insurance policies in contest to secure appellee or appellant upon the note to Jones, it was error to have adjudged that the money collected upon the policies be applied to the payment of that note.

Judgment reversed, and cause remanded for a judgment dismissing the petition.

ILLINOIS CENT. R. CO. v. WILSON.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Dec. 3, 1908.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1097*)—LAW OF THE CASE.

The decision on appeal that a party is entitled to a farm crossing over a railroad track at a particular point is the law of the case on a subsequent trial involving the damages sustained in consequence of the obstruction of the crossing.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4358-4368; Dec. Dig. § 1097.*]

2. RAILROADS (§ 113*)—FARM CROSSINGS—OBSTRUCTIONS—DAMAGES.

A railroad company's roadbed passed through a farm separating the land on which the dwelling house and outbuildings stood from the land susceptible of cultivation. The owner had used a farm crossing, which furnished the only means of hauling crops from the cultivated portion of the farm to the other portion. An employé of the company obstructed the crossing with knowledge of the facts, together with knowledge that the owner had valuable crops standing on the cultivated portion of the farm, which portion, by reason of being low land, was subject to overflows. The crops were destroyed in consequence of an overflow. Held, that the railroad company was liable for the damages sustained.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Dec. Dig. § 113.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Ohio County.
"Not to be officially reported."

Action by Caleb Wilson against the Illinois Central Railway Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

H. P. Taylor and Trabue, Doolan & Cox, for appellant. Sweeney, Ellis & Sweeney, for appellee.

LASSING, J. This is the second appeal of this case. The suit was originally brought in equity. The lower court dismissed the petition, and plaintiff appealed. The judgment was reversed and case remanded for trial. See Wilson v. I. C. R. R. Co., 92 S. W. 602, 29 Ky. Law Rep. 170. Upon its return to the circuit court the case was transferred to the common-law docket, and upon a trial before a jury plaintiff recovered a verdict for $500. From the judgment entered upon that verdict, defendant appeals.

While this is the second appeal of this case, it is the third time that the subject-matter of this litigation has been before us on appeal. In 1892 Dan T. Wilson, who owned a large body of land in Ohio county, Ky., conveyed to the Owensboro, Falls of Rough & Green River Railroad Company, its successors and assigns, a right of way through his land 66 feet wide and about 2 miles long. As a part of the consideration for this conveyance, the railroad company obligated itself to fence both sides of the right of way through the land of the grantor, and put in all necessary farm crossings which the grantor might require, and to put in a side track at such place as he might designate and move it twice for him, if required by him to do so. Thereafter the grantee sold its road, including the right of way in question, to the Chicago, St. Louis & New Orleans Railroad Company, from which road the present company, appellant, leased it for 99 years, and appellant is now operating said road.

Dan T. Wilson complained that the terms of the agreement were not being complied with, and he brought suit in the Ohio circuit court against the railroad company for breach of contract, and recovered a judgment for $2,000. Later he and his wife conveyed to their son, the present appellee, about 105 acres of the land through which the right of way had been granted. The roadbed passes over the land which appellee bought from his father in such a manner that the dwelling house, barns, stables, and other outbuildings are separated from the bottom land, which was practically all of the farm which was susceptible of cultivation. About 25 acres of said farm lies upon the side of the railroad where the residence and other buildings are, but the remainder, which was bottom land, lies upon the other side of the railroad track. Some time before this suit was commenced, the railroad company had fenced the right of way on both sides through appellee's land, but had left an opening in its fence on each side at the point where the crossing, which is the subject of this litigation, is located. These openings in the fence were to afford appellee an opportunity to pass from the hill land, on which his residence and other buildings stood, to and from the bottom land on the opposite side of the railroad. Appellee, from the time he purchased this land from his father until some time during the latter part of 1902, used this crossing uninterruptedly. While it was being so used by him, and over his protest and objection, the servants of the railroad company closed the crossing by stretching barbed wire across the gates and fastening them so they could not be opened, and refused to permit the wires to be removed, or the gates to be opened, and thereupon this suit was instituted. The proof shows that the most of the land on the side of the railroad track opposite appellee's house is low bottom land.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes and subject to annual overflows; that at the time the crossing was obstructed appellee had valuable crops standing upon this land which he was then engaged in gathering and hauling across the railroad over the crossing in question; that, by reason of his being denied the use of the crossing, his said crops were wholly destroyed. He asked for damages in the sum of $1,500, and a mandatory injunction requiring the defendant company to remove the obstructions from the crossing. The railroad company answered, and, in addition to traversing the allegations of the petition, pleaded that Dan T. Wilson, the father of appellee, had reserved to himself the right of way in question, and that appellee had no interest in it. It further pleaded that Dan T. Wilson had previously instituted suit for $1,900 damages on account of the alleged breach of contract for the purchase of the right of way, and that he had recovered a judgment against the railroad company in said suit, and defendant pleaded these facts in bar of appellee's right to prosecute this action. The trial court took the defendant's view and dismissed the petition, but, upon consideration here, that judgment was reversed and the case remanded for a new trial; it being held, in substance, that a judgment in favor of Dan T. Wilson, for breach of the covenants of the deed could not be made to operate as a bar against plaintiff's right to recover damages for any injury he might have sustained by reason of the defendant company having closed the crossing.

Appellant's chief complaint now is that the crossing in question is neither suitable nor safe. Upon the former appeal this court, in speaking of this crossing, said: "The land lays so that there is but one practicable way to reach one side from the other by wagons without going over other persons' property. This only route appellant had been using some time and finally put in gates and was attempting to fix a crossing upon the railroad track so as to pass over it with convenience and safety, when appellee's (appellant here) servants closed up the opening he had made in the fences, and removed his lumber from the railroad track, refusing to let him use the crossing at all, or to construct a crossing at that point. * * * It follows that appellant (appellee here) was entitled to a crossing at the point at which he opened it." It thus appears that in the former opinion of this court in this case it was decided that appellee was entitled to a crossing over appellant's railroad at the very point in dispute. We think that this was correctly decided by the court; but, even if the court in the former opinion had erred, that opinion, under the doctrine of res judicata, must be considered as the law of this case. The question as to whether or not the crossing is a suitable or safe one is no longer open for consideration.

The only other question presented on this appeal is whether or not the verdict is supported by the evidence. The testimony abundantly shows that, at the time appellant stopped up this crossing and prevented its further use by appellee, its servants who did so knew that appellee had no other means of hauling his crops from his bottom land to his home, and that by reason of the overflow the crops would necessarily be damaged. In fact, the man who wired up the fence posts and stopped the use of the crossing testifies that at the time it was done the corn was being hauled from the bottom land, and that appellee told him that the flood would destroy his corn unless he could get it through. Notwithstanding this knowledge, the crossing was closed, and the crops destroyed. The damages awarded by the jury were authorized by the proof, and in our judgment were not excessive. Appellee is under the former opinion of this court entitled to the crossing at the place and in the manner in which he was then using it. If appellant desires that appellee should cross directly over its roadbed, and not in the manner in which it was alleged he was, it should construct a suitable approach on each side of its roadbed, so as to provide appellee with a safe and convenient crossing at that point, and, until this is done, appellee will continue to use the crossing in its present form.

The judgment is affirmed.

ALEXANDER v. GARDNER et al.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Dec. 8, 1906.)

1. INJUNCTION (§ 235*)—BOND—LIABILITY.

Under Civ. Code Prac. § 278, providing that an officer granting an injunction shall fix the amount and the terms of the bond to be given, or otherwise the bond shall obligate the party to pay the damages sustained, a bond executed by a party obtaining a temporary restraining order from the clerk, who did not fix the amount of the bond, conditioned on the obligors paying to the adverse party the damages "not exceeding _____ dollars," sustained by reason of the injunction, if wrongfully granted, imposes a liability to indemnify the adverse party to the extent of the damage sustained by the wrongful issuance of the order; the quoted words being surplusage.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Injunction, Cent. Dig. § 529; Dec. Dig. § 235.*]

2. PLEADING (§ 246*)—AMENDMENTS—REFUSAL TO PERMIT.

It is error to refuse to allow an amended petition containing matter germane to the cause of action set out in the original petition, offered by plaintiff before the filing of the answer.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. § 676; Dec. Dig. § 246.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Magoffin County.
"To be officially reported."

Action by William L. Alexander against R. A. Gardner and others. From a judgment granting insufficient relief, plaintiff appeals. Reversed, and remanded for a new trial.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Owen County.
"Not to be officially reported."

Owen O'Bannion was convicted of violating Act March 21, 1906 (Acts 1906, p. 429, c. 117), as amended by Act March 13, 1908 (Ky. St. 1908, § 3941a), relating to the sale of pooled crops, and he appeals. Reversed for new trial.

James H. Settle, for appellant. Jas. Breathitt, Atty. Gen., and Tom B. McGregor, Asst. Atty. Gen., for appellee.

CARROLL, J. The appellant, under an indictment charging him with a violation of the act of March 21, 1906 (Acts 1906, p. 429, c. 117), as amended by the act of March 13, 1908, now section 3941a of the 1908 edition of the Kentucky Statutes, was fined $216. He asks a reversal of the judgment entered against him for this amount.

These acts legalize the pooling of produce raised by farmers, and the selection of agents for the purpose of receiving, holding and disposing of the crops so pooled, and further provide that: "It shall be unlawful for any owner of such crop to sell or dispose of the same, and for any person to knowingly purchase the same, without the written consent of such agent; and upon conviction thereof he or they shall be fined in any sum or amount, not exceeding $250.00, for each offense, to be fixed by the jury in their discretion."

It is admitted that the appellant pooled his tobacco in the manner provided in these acts, and that the Owen County Burley Tobacco Society was an authorized agent to receive, hold, and dispose of the same. The agreement under which the tobacco was pooled is set out in the following writing: "This contract made and entered into this April 11, 1908, between the Owen County Board of Control, of the first part, and Owen O'Bannion, of the second part, witnesseth: For and in consideration of the party of the second part assuming all liability as to prizing and condition of tobacco hereinafter named, consent is hereby given for the said Owen O'Bannion to prize his own crop of tobacco, consisting of about 3,500 pounds, together with the following crops purchased by said second party, to wit: [Naming them.] Said second party is to prize said tobacco in good order, and is to take from each hogshead a good and perfect sample, and hold the said sample subject to the orders of the first party, and is to ship the said tobacco to the Farmers' & Shippers' Tobacco Warehouse, in Cincinnati, Ohio, for storage, and is to leave said tobacco in said tobacco warehouse until same is called for by first party. The said tobacco is to be held at all times subject to the orders and control of first party, and is to be sold in the ordinary channels and under the supervision of the Kentucky Burley Tobacco Society, and second party is to pay all storage and freight charges and other expenses that are charged against pooled tobacco of 1907 crop. The said tobacco is to be marked 'Owen County Pool,' together with the name of the shipper." It will be observed that this writing permitted O'Bannion "to ship the said tobacco to the Farmers' & Shippers' Tobacco Warehouse, in Cincinnati, Ohio, for storage"; and the president of the board of control of the Owen County Burley Tobacco Society testifies that O'Bannion "took the tobacco out of the state with the knowledge and consent of our board for the purpose expressed in the contract." It is further admitted that the tobacco, after being shipped to Cincinnati, O., as provided in the contract, was there sold by O'Bannion.

As the Owen County Burley Tobacco Society, in whose custody the tobacco was placed as agent to hold and dispose of, consented to its removal from this state, its removal did not constitute any offense or breach of the contract on the part of O'Bannion. The breach of contract and consequent violation of the statute was not committed until the tobacco was sold and disposed of by O'Bannion. The fact that it was the intention of O'Bannion, when he entered into the contract and obtained possession of the tobacco, to take it out of the state for the purpose of selling it, and that in pursuance of this intention he did dispose of it in Ohio, cannot affect the question of his guilt or innocence under the statute. It is a sale or disposal in violation of the contract that constitutes the offense. There must have been a sale or disposal of the tobacco by O'Bannion within this state before he could be convicted under the statute, assuming that it is valid—a question not before us on this record. It is manifest that, as the offense, if any, committed by O'Bannion took place in the state of Ohio, it is not punishable in this state.

Wherefore the judgment of the lower court is reversed, with directions for a new trial in conformity with this opinion.

PHILLIPS et al. v. WILLIAMS et al.

WILLIAMS v. PHILLIPS et al.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Dec. 4, 1903.)

1. DOWER (§ 59*)—ELECTION BETWEEN HOMESTEAD AND DOWER—EFFECT.

A widow may elect to take either homestead or dower in the land of her deceased husband, and where she takes the homestead she has no interest, except the right to occupy it so long as she lives.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Dower, Cent. Dig. §§ 91, 207; Dec. Dig. § 59.*]

2. HOMESTEAD (§ 145*)—RIGHT OF WIDOW—ABANDONMENT BY SALE.

Where a widow elects to take homestead in the lands of her deceased husband, she abandons the same by an attempted sale thereof.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homestead, Cent. Dig. § 268; Dec. Dig. § 145.*]

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

Virginia. Appellant took possession of it under his purchase, and occupied and used the whole property, which consisted of less than one-half acre. The buildings thereon consisted of an old and dilapidated house and stable. The court, in its judgment, charged appellant at the rate of $120 per year rent for the time he occupied the property. The testimony on this point was very conflicting. When he first took possession of the property it was not worth more than $6 or $7 per month, according to a preponderance of the evidence; but on account of the construction of a railroad into the town of Pikeville the property increased in value, and at the latter part of his occupancy, as the testimony shows, it was worth $10 or more per month. In our opinion, if appellant was chargeable with rent, the court should have, under the evidence, fixed the amount at $100 per year.

The important question to be considered is: Did appellant take any interest in the property by reason of his deed from Harriett Williams? By section 2132, Ky. St. 1903, it is provided that after the death of a husband the surviving wife shall have an estate for her life in one-third of all the real estate of which he died possessed in fee simple during coverture. The granting clause of the deed from Harriett Williams to appellant is as follows: "That said party of the first part, for and in consideration of the sum of $150.00, one hundred and fifty dollars, in hand paid, do hereby sell and convey to the party of the second part, his heirs and assigns, the following described property, to wit: All my right and entire interest in the following house and lot, my interest being the life estate in said property hereby conveyed," etc. There is nothing in the caption or habendum clause that conflicts with the granting clause in the slightest. The word "homestead" is not mentioned in the deed. There was no evidence introduced tending to show that she sold or attempted to sell her homestead right; nor was there any testimony tending to show that Mrs. Williams was ever put upon her election to take homestead or dower, or that she elected to take a homestead rather than a dower. The question, therefore, turns upon the language of the deed.

The lower court seems to have rested its decision upon the case of Deboe v. Rushing, 51 S. W. 613, 21 Ky. Law Rep. 423. The facts in that case are in some particulars unlike the ones in this case. In that case Mrs. Rushing abandoned the land, left her two infant children residing upon it, and ran off with a man. While the opinion does not show what interest she attempted to sell to Deboe from the language used we must assume that her attempted sale was of the homestead right, and that she had elected to take homestead, rather than a dower, although it had not been assigned to her by any legal proceedings. That portion of the opinion which gave Deboe the right to possess himself, under the purchase from the widow of the property after the arrival of the children at the age of 21 years and hold it until the death of Mrs. Rushing, has, by subsequent decisions of this court, in effect, been overruled. This court, however, did not establish that rule. The lower court had so decided in favor of Deboe, and there was no cross-appeal, and therefore this court permitted that part of the judgment to stand. Many of the opinions are cited in this case, and all of them, which touch the subject, hold that when a widow elects to take a homestead in lieu of dower, and abandons the homestead by a sale or otherwise, this ends her right to a homestead in the land; that she cannot change her mind and repossess herself of the homestead, or take dower therein instead of homestead, and the one to whom she attempted to convey gets nothing. No other construction can be placed upon that opinion and make it conform to the statutes upon the subject and other opinions by this court.

The case of Bryant v. Bennett, 61 S. W. 1004, 22 Ky. Law Rep. 1866, was where Ellen Fletcher, a widow, was left in possession of a house and lot worth less than $1,000. She sold it to Harvey Bennett, left it, and moved to Christian county, Ky. The granting clause of the deed was as follows: "I do hereby sell and convey my dower and life interest in the property as surviving widow," etc. The lower court in that case decided that Harvey Bennett took the homestead of Ellen Fletcher and was entitled to it so long as she lived. This court, in reversing the judgment, used the following language: "Section 1707 of the Kentucky Statutes of 1903 provides that the homestead shall be for the use of the widow as long as she shall occupy same. And it was held in Freeman v. Mills, 101 Ky. 145, 39 S. W. 827, 'that occupancy was a continuing condition precedent to the widow's right of homestead, and that a sale of her interest was a complete and irrevocable abandonment thereof, and that the purchaser acquired no title under his purchase.' We are therefore of the opinion that, under the law as expounded in that case, Mrs. Fletcher did not pass any title to the homestead by her conveyance to appellee, and he only acquired by virtue of his purchase her dower interest as surviving widow, and, in fact, the conveyance from Mrs. Fletcher to him only purports to convey her dower interest therein."

In the case of Freeman v. Mills, referred to in the above quotation, was where Mrs. Freeman instituted a proceeding in court to have assigned to her a homestead in the lands of her deceased husband. She was allotted 136 acres of the land, which included the residence and outbuildings. After this she attempted to sell this homestead to one Mills, and the children of Freeman instituted an action to recover the land because of the sale and abandonment of it by appellant, by his conveyance from the widow, took any benefit that was given her by the statute just quoted. As we construe the statute, it was enacted for the personal benefit of the widow, when she was grieved and in a helpless condition on the account of the loss of her husband. She had the right to the benefits of the property rent free, but she had no right to convey this privilege. Appellant by his deed received only her interest in the property as defined by section 2132, Ky. St. 1903, which was a one-third interest in the property during the life of the widow. As before stated, we are of the opinion that the lower court charged him too much per year as rent, and that he should only have been charged $100 per year for the time he occupied it after his purchase from the widow, and that is subject to be credited by the value of the lasting improvements placed on the property by him and the taxes he paid thereon.

At the time the widow elected to take dower in the property the house and lot, according to the proof, was not worth more than $1,200, one-third of which, $400, represented the value of this life estate. Under the repeated decisions of this court, the widow's election to take dower, or even to abandon the homestead, could not have the effect to defeat the infant of his homestead right in the property. It has often been decided by this court that there cannot be two homesteads, or a dower and a homestead, taken out of the same property. Therefore, if the widow elects dower, and if it is of greater value than $1,000, she must make provisions for the infant or infants. See Warren's Adm'r v. Warren, 104 S. W. 1199, 32 Ky. Law Rep. 82. But if her dower interest is worth less than $1,000, as in the case at bar, under the statutes as we construe them, the infant is given a homestead of $1,000 (as an infant cannot elect for himself, the law elects for him), but it must include the dower assigned to the widow; and if any of the property be left, then the excess should be apportioned among all the children, including the infant. The court should first charge appellant rent at the rate of $100 a year for the time he occupied the property under his purchase, credit it with the value of the improvements and taxes paid by him, and divide the remainder as follows: One-third to himself, one-half to the infant, one-sixth to U. K. Williams for himself and as vendee of the adult children, less one-fifth of one-sixth, which should be paid to the infant in addition to its one-half as before stated. It appears, however, that appellant Phillips paid some of the rent during the pendency of the suit, and he should be given credit by what he has paid.

The subject of litigation in the second-styled action is, in substance, as follows: When appellant, W. T. Phillips, purchased from the widow her dower at the price of $150, he executed to her a separate writing by which it was agreed that the widow should take steps to have the court sell the infant's interest in the property, and appellant was to purchase the adult children's interest at the lowest price possible, and if it could all be procured at a price not exceeding $850 he bound himself to pay to the widow $150 more. The widow transferred this writing to U. K. Williams, the eldest child of the deceased. He transferred it to his son, A. L. Williams, who instituted an action against appellant, Phillips, to recover the $150. Phillips answered, alleging that he had never been able to purchase any of the interests of the children, and made U. K. Williams a party, and alleged that he verbally agreed to sell him the interests that he owned at $30 per share, and asked that he be compelled to convey, and, in case U. K. Williams failed to do so, asked damages. Upon the trial A. L. Williams dismissed his action, and the court adjudged that appellant, Phillips, presented no cause of action against U. K. Williams. In our opinion the lower court committed no error in the disposition of this case.

For these reasons the judgment in the first-styled case is reversed, and remanded for further proceedings consistent herewith; and the judgment in the second-styled case is affirmed.

HOWELL et al. v. UNION GROCERY CO. (Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Dec. 9, 1908.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1009*)—REVIEW—EQUITY SUIT—FINDINGS.

While the findings of the chancellor on questions of fact in a creditors' suit are entitled to considerable weight on appeal, the Court of Appeals will form an independent judgment and determine whether the facts authorize the judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 8970; Dec. Dig. § 1009.*]

2. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES (§ 300*)—OWNERSHIP OF PROPERTY—EVIDENCE.

In a suit to subject property standing in the name of another to a judgment against H. evidence held insufficient to show that any part of the price of the property had been paid by H.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fraudulent Conveyances, Dec. Dig. § 300.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Carter County.
"Not to be officially reported."

Suit by the Union Grocery Company against J. W. Howell and others. Judgment for complainant, and defendants appeal. Reversed, with directions.

Theobald & Theobald, for appellants. H. R. Dysard, for appellee.

CARROLL, J. The appellee, Union Grocery Company, brought this suit in equity, upon a return of "No property found," against J. W. Howell, for the purpose of sub-

TEXAS & N. O. R. CO. v. PARSONS.

(Supreme Court of Texas. Dec. 9, 1908.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 301*)—INJURIES TO THIRD PERSONS—RELATION OF PARTIES.

That one was a deputy sheriff does not show that his act in injuring a trespasser was official.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 1212; Dec. Dig. § 301.*]

2. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 301*)—INJURIES TO THIRD PERSONS—RAILROAD WATCHMEN.

That one was a railway watchman does not show that his act in injuring a trespasser was that of a servant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 1212; Dec. Dig. § 301.*]

3. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 301*)—RAILROADS—DEPUTY SHERIFF AND WATCHMAN—CHARACTER OF ACTS—HOW DETERMINED.

In an action against a railway company for injury to a trespasser inflicted by a deputy sheriff and watchman, whether the latter's acts were official or those of a servant must be determined by all the circumstances and evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 1212; Dec. Dig. § 301.*]

4. SHERIFFS AND CONSTABLES (§ 18*)—DEPUTIES—APPOINTMENT FOR PRIVATE PURPOSE.

A sheriff cannot appoint or detail deputies to act as guards or watchmen over railroad property, except to prevent threatened injury thereto.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sheriffs and Constables, Dec. Dig. § 18.*]

5. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 330*)—RAILROADS—EXISTENCE OF RELATION—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

Evidence in an action against a railway company for injury to a trespasser held to show that the person who inflicted it was employed by the company as a watchman, and was acting in that capacity when he shot plaintiff.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Dec. Dig. § 330.*]

6. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 304*)—RAILROADS—TRESPASSERS—DUTY OF WATCHMEN.

A railway watchman who was conducting trespassers out of railway yards owed them the duty to not injure them through negligent or reckless use of his revolver.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Dec. Dig. § 304.*]

7. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 301*)—RAILROADS—INJURY TO TRESPASSER—WATCHMAN'S MISTAKE—EFFECT.

That in shooting at one who approached him a railway watchman believed him to be a companion of trespassers the watchman was conducting off the premises does not alter his relation to the company as affecting its liability to one of the trespassers who was struck by the bullet.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Dec. Dig. § 301.*]

8. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 330*)—RAILROADS—INJURY TO TRESPASSER—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

Evidence held to sustain a judgment against a railway company for injury to a trespasser shot by a watchman employed by the company.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Dec. Dig. § 330.*]

Error from Court of Civil Appeals of Sixth Supreme Judicial District.

Action by Rush J. Parsons against the Texas & New Orleans Railroad Company.

From a judgment of the Court of Civil Appeals (109 S. W. 240) affirming a judgment for plaintiff, defendant brings error. Affirmed.

Baker, Botts, Parker & Garwood, and Lane Jackson, Kelley & Walters, for plaintiff in error. John Lovejoy, J. W. Parker, and J. B. Bisland, for defendant in error.

BROWN, J. The Texas & New Orleans Railroad Company owned and operated in 1903 a railroad from Houston to a place called Echo in Orange county, at which latter place were located a depot, shops, and yards. The yards extended about two miles in length and in width sufficient to embrace five separate tracks, all being inclosed by a fence on each side the length of the yards. Within the inclosure were all improvements and buildings which were located at Echo, including a hotel at which the railroad employees boarded. The railroad company had a large number of hands employed in the shops and otherwise about its yards. At times there were many cars standing upon the tracks inside of the yards, loaded and unloaded. A large number of transient persons, tramps, etc., collected about the place and frequently built fires outside and near to the fences. On several occasions they interfered with the railroad men in their work and it was not infrequently the case that depredations were committed upon the property, cars were broken into, etc. These conditions became so bad that the yardmaster reported to his superior officer, who applied to R. M. Johnson, then sheriff of Orange county, to appoint two deputies to be located at said place, Echo, to serve in protecting the property and premises of the said railroad company from trespassers and from depredations, and to enforce the law against all persons who might violate it. Johnson at first declined to make the appointment, on the ground that he could not afford to pay the deputies for their services. The railroad company agreed that it would pay the monthly salaries of each deputy so appointed, and upon this agreement Charles A. Futch and one Prejean were appointed and stationed as deputy sheriffs at said place. The only instruction that Johnson gave to the deputies was to enforce the law, and there is no evidence that any officer of the railroad company gave to said deputies any instructions. It seems to have been assumed by the deputies that they were to act as watchmen over the railroad property, and they so acted. One of them was on watch in the day, and kept the yards under supervision, going from point to point protecting the property from trespassers; the other was on guard or watch during the night, and likewise made the rounds as often as was necessary among the cars that might be standing upon the tracks to protect the property against depredations and the inclosure against trespassers. It was the duty of the said watchman, if they saw persons trespassing upon the yard of the company, to put them out of the inclosure, which they did whenever such trespassers appeared. The two appointees of the sheriff continued their services from the times of their appointment up to December 18, 1905, something more than two years, during which time their wages or salaries were paid by the month by the railroad company.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

On the 18th day of December, 1905, Parsons, with a number of other persons entered a box car on the Texas & New Orleans Railroad at Beaumont, and remained in it until the car reached Echo about 2 o'clock the next morning. An employe of the railroad company came to the car and saw that there were persons inside, and when he opened the door of the car and told them to get out they refused to do so, whereupon he shut the door and moved the car down to a point near the hotel where Futch was, and, by direction of the yardmaster, telephoned to Futch to come over; there were some hobos in a car. Futch went over to the car, and when the railroad employe opened the car door Futch had his pistol in his hand and ordered the men in the car to get out, which they did. He then told them that he did not intend to arrest them and had not arrested them for riding in the car, but he intended to put them off of the company's property, and ordered them to walk down the track towards the end of the yard. He told them if they did not move along that he would shoot just to see them jump, or some such language. After they had gone about 300 yards down the track they met another man going in the opposite direction, who asked Futch for a match, and also asked him when a train would go west. Just what occurred is somewhat in doubt, as the witnesses differ about the facts, but taking Futch's statement, he took the man who approached him to be one of the party that he was marching down to the end of the yard and ordered him to stop, not to come to him, but to go to his crowd. The man had nothing in his hands, made no threats, but Futch thought he was trying to get hold of him and fired at him, the ball striking Parsons in the leg, inflicting a wound that made amputation of the limb necessary. Futch testified that he did not receive any orders from the railroad officials, and the yardmaster testified that he never gave him any orders. It was also proved that the railroad officials at one time tried to get Johnson, the sheriff, to remove Futch because the latter would not obey orders of the railroad officers.

The first question which presents itself is, in what character did Chas. A. Futch act at the time the injury was inflicted on Parsons? The fact that Futch was a deputy sheriff does not prove that his acts were official, neither would the fact that he was likewise a watchman, employed by the railroad company, prove that his acts were those of a servant; that question must be determined by all the circumstances and facts placed in evidence. Dickson v. Waldron, 135 Ind. 507, 34 N. E. 506, 35 N. E. 1, 24 L. R. A. 483, 41 Am. St. Rep. 441.

The lawless condition of things at Echo, and the exposure of the property of the railroad company to depredations by the tramps who assembled there, prompted the railroad company to apply to the sheriff of Orange county for the appointment of two deputies, the purpose of the company being to secure protection for the private property of the corporation. The sheriff had no authority to appoint or to detail deputies to act as guards and watchmen over the property of the railroad. S. L., I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Hackett, 58 Ark. 381, 24 S. W. 881, 41 Am. St. Rep. 105. In that case the court said: "An officer of the law cannot engage as such officer to guard the property of a private individual or corporation not in the custody of the law." We do not mean to say that an officer may not watch property to prevent threatened injury. It follows that whatever authority Futch had to guard and watch over the property of the railroad company and to expel from its premises trespassers thereon must have been derived from the company and not from the sheriff. Futch testified that he had authority to expel persons who were trespassing upon the property of the company, and that he had exercised that authority during his stay there, and it appears from the testimony that he had been so engaged continuously for about two years' time. During the time that Futch was so engaged the railroad company had paid his monthly wages without objection. It does not appear that there was any business to be transacted by Futch at that time and place except that which pertained to the property of the railroad company, except that on a few occasions one of the deputies may have served a subpoena or some process from the court. From the continued performance of this service for the railroad company for two years, which he could not have done as deputy sheriff, and the payment for the services by the railroad company, the conclusion is natural that Futch was employed by the railroad company to serve it as a guard and watchman over its property, and that while so engaged he was acting as its agent and servant.

Notwithstanding Futch was both deputy sheriff and watchman for the railroad company, it does not follow that the railroad company would be responsible for his acts done in his official character. It therefore becomes necessary to inquire in what capacity Futch was acting at the time the shot was fired. When Futch was called to remove the men from the car, he might lawfully have arrested them for violation of the statute against unlawfully riding in such cars. Laws 1895, p. 178, c. 113. Futch testified that when he ordered the men to get out of the car he told them that he did not intend to arrest them, and did not arrest them for any violation of the law, but that he intended to put them off the company's property, which he could not have done as deputy sheriff, but was authorized to do for the corporation. It therefore appears that at that time he was acting as the agent and servant of the railroad company. Brill v. Eddie, 115 Mo. 605, 22 S. W. 488. In the case last cited a policeman who was authorized to make arrests for violations of ordinances of the city took hold of a boy who was riding a train in violation of such ordinances and pulled him from the car. The policeman had the authority to arrest the boy for the offense, but he did not intend to arrest him, only intended to take him off the car and put him out of the yard. The policeman was also an employé of the railroad company, and charged with the duty of keeping boys off the yard and away from the company's property. It was contended that, he being a policeman, the railroad company was not responsible for his act, and the court said, in substance, that if it appeared from the evidence that he was acting officially and was arresting the boy, then the company would not be responsible; but as it appeared from the policeman's evidence, and also from other circumstances, that he did not intend to make any arrest, but simply to remove the boy from the car and from the railroad company's premises, the court held that his act was not official, but that of a servant of the company. We think the evidence in this case shows that at the time Futch marched the men, including the plaintiff, down the railroad track to put them off the company's property, he was acting in the capacity of watchman and agent of the company, and if he fired the shot which caused the injury while in the performance of or in furtherance of that duty, then the railroad company must be held liable for the consequences.

It is contended that Futch departed from the service of the railroad company and became involved in a difficulty with a third person, and that he did not fire the shot in the discharge of any duty due to the railroad company. The following charge was asked by the railroad company, and was refused: "Gentlemen of the jury, you are instructed that if you find from the evidence that, on the occasion of plaintiff's injury, the defendant Charles A. Futch had required the plaintiff and his associates to leave the premises and yard of the defendant railway company, and that while they were in the act of departing therefrom another person, unknown to plaintiff and his associates, approached the defendant Futch, and that a personal controversy thereupon ensued between such person and the said defendant Futch, and that as result of such controversy the defendant Futch discharged his pistol, and thereby inflicted injury upon the plaintiff, but that such injury of the plaintiff was not intentional, nor for the purpose of coercing him or his said companions to leave the said yard and premises of defendant railroad company, then, and in such event the plaintiff is not entitled to recover, and if you so believe, you will return your verdict in favor of the defendant railroad company." If the charge had been given, the jury must have found for the railroad company, although they believed Futch was negligent or reckless in firing the pistol. Futch had plaintiff under his control, and he owed it to him and his associates not to injure them through negligent or reckless use of his gun. Under the requested charge the jury must have found for defendant railroad company, although they believed Futch acted recklessly in firing his pistol, and the evidence would justify that conclusion. The charge was properly refused.

The facts stated by Futch show that at the time he fired the shot he did it for the purpose of compelling the man at whom he fired to return to the parties that he had under control and whom he was putting off the yards. Futch believed that the unknown man was one of the party that he had started to put off the yard, and, so believing, he had ordered him to rejoin the company in order that all might be put off the grounds, and upon his refusal to do so he fired at him. Futch's evidence does not show that he had at any time abandoned the purpose he had when he started with the men from the car to take them down the track to the end of it and across the bridge. To do this he sought to keep them together. The fact that he was mistaken as to the unknown man's relation to the others does not affect his relation to the railroad company.

We are of opinion that the evidence is sufficient to sustain the judgment of the court whereby the railroad company was held liable to Parsons for the injuries inflicted upon him by Futch. We therefore affirm the judgments of the district court and court of Civil Appeals.

MISSOURI, K. & T. RY. CO. OF TEXAS v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Texas. Dec. 9, 1906.)

1. STATUTES (§ 110½*)—TITLE—SUFFICIENCY.

Under Const. art. 3, § 35, requiring the subject of a bill to be expressed in its title, Act March 25, 1907 (Laws 80th Leg. pp. 92, 93, c. 41), making it unlawful for railroad companies to run trains outside of yard limits with less than full crews of a specified number of men each, is invalid for insufficiency of its title. "An act to protect the lives and property of the traveling public and the employes of the railroads in the state of Texas."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Dec. Dig. § 110½.*]

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

roduced. Nearly all of the cases relied on are of this class, and the general language used was with reference to titles such as were under consideration. Other cases deal with statutes treating in a comprehensive way of subjects which are themselves comprehensive and which require titles equally broad. For instance, the title "An act to adopt the common law of England" is regarded as sufficient for a statute the body of which corresponds with it. Other instances might be given. The reason is that the titles truly and adequately express the subjects of the acts—that which they purport to do. We should have a different question if, under the title just stated, an act were passed merely to adopt the rule in Shelley's Case. The question then would be whether or not the title expressed the subject of the act. While it is true that the Constitution does not define the degree of particularity with which the title of an act shall express the subject, it is equally true that it does require the subject of the act to be expressed in the title. In this the statute under consideration so clearly fails to comply with the requirement that we must hold it to be invalid.

It follows that the judgment should be reversed, and that the cause should be dismissed.

WINN v. STATE.

(Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. Nov. 18, 1908.)

1. WITNESSES (§ 345*)—CHARACTER—PRIOR CONVICTIONS—REMOTENESS.

Where, in a prosecution for homicide, accused was a witness in his own behalf at the trial in May, 1908, it was error to permit the state, in order to discredit him, to prove that he had been indicted for killing a Mexican in 1887 or 1888, and had pleaded guilty to theft in 1894, in the absence of evidence that he had not reformed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. § 1126; Dec. Dig. § 345.*]

2. HOMICIDE (§ 166*)—TRIAL—EVIDENCE.

Where, in a prosecution for homicide, the state claimed that the killing resulted from defendant's animosity toward decedent and W., because he believed they had burned his barn, it was incompetent for the state to prove a complete alibi for deceased and W. so far as the barn burning was concerned, unless the circumstances so proposed to be proved were known to defendant when he accused deceased and W. of burning the barn.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Dec. Dig. § 166.*]

3. HOMICIDE (§ 116*)—SELF-DEFENSE.

Where accused claimed that he killed deceased in self-defense, the circumstances surrounding the killing must be viewed from defendant's standpoint, and it is immaterial whether subsequent evidence showed him to have been in danger or not.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. § 159; Dec. Dig. § 116.*]

4. HOMICIDE (§ 116*)—SELF-DEFENSE.

If the danger appeared real to the defendant, and under the belief that it was real he shot and killed deceased, believing his own life was in danger, or his person of serious bodily injury, the homicide was justified.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 158-163; Dec. Dig. § 116.*]

5. HOMICIDE (§ 39*)—MANSLAUGHTER.

If defendant met deceased, and defendant's previous belief that deceased had burned his barn and threatened his life caused sudden anger or resentment, rendering his mind incapable of cool reflection, and defendant thereupon killed deceased as deceased pointed a pistol at defendant, the offense was manslaughter.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Dec. Dig. § 39.*]

Appeal from District Court, Limestone County; L. B. Cobb, Judge.

S. H. Winn was convicted of manslaughter, and he appeals. Reversed and remanded.

James Kimbell and Harper, Jackson & Harper, for appellant. F. J. McCord, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

BROOKS, J. Appellant was convicted of manslaughter, and his punishment assessed at three years' confinement in the penitentiary.

Bill of exceptions No. 1 shows that after the state had closed its evidence counsel for appellant asked the court to retire the jury, and requested the court to instruct the state's counsel not to ask the defendant, when he was put on the stand as a witness in his own behalf, about having been indicted for killing a Mexican in Leon county, Tex., in or about 1887 or 1888, nor to ask the appellant about having pleaded guilty to theft of hogs in Robertson county in the district court in 1894, unless the state expected to further attack the appellant's character, either for his general reputation for truth and veracity, or by showing other offenses committed by defendant after said time, because said transactions were committed too long ago to affect defendant's standing now. The court refused to so instruct the state's counsel, and notified counsel for appellant the same was a proper question for the state to ask the appellant. Thereupon the jury was recalled, and the appellant was placed upon the stand as a witness in his own behalf, and upon cross-examination counsel for the state asked the appellant if he did not kill a Mexican in Leon county in or about 1887 or 1888, and was indicted and tried therefor, and he further asked him if he did not in July, 1894, plead guilty to theft of hogs in Robertson county. Appellant then and there objected. The court permitted the same to be asked appellant, to which ruling of the court appellant excepted, because said testimony was immaterial to any issue in the case, and would not tend to prove any fact, and it was not permissible to prove these two isolated transactions, happening so long ago, because they were too remote to show moral turpitude. The trial took place in May, 1908, and under a long line of author-by an unbroken line of authorities. We hold that said testimony was inadmissible.

Bill of exceptions No. 4 complains of the following charge of the court: "If the defendant killed the deceased through sudden terror or fear, under an unreasonable belief that his life was in danger, his offense, if any, was no more than manslaughter. If he acted under a reasonable belief that his life was in danger, he should be acquitted." Appellant's objection to this charge is that it limits the jury's right to turn appellant loose only on the ground that his life was in danger, when the jury might have believed that deceased only intended to inflict on defendant some serious bodily injury, or they might have believed that in the condition of the pistol that he could not have inflicted any injury and that his life was not in danger; that this charge takes away the appearance of danger, and limits the jury to the killing as they see it, and not as viewed by the defendant at the time of the killing. The court in addition should have told the jury that the circumstances must be viewed from defendant's standpoint, and it was immaterial whether subsequent events showed he was in danger or not. If the danger appeared real to the defendant, and under the belief that it was real he shot and killed deceased, believing his life was in danger, or his person of serious bodily injury, he would be entitled to an acquittal; but if he met the deceased, and his previous belief that deceased had burned his barn and had threatened his life caused sudden terror, anger, rage, or resentment, such as rendered his mind incapable of cool reflection, coupled with the conduct and acts of deceased at the time, then appellant would be guilty of manslaughter.

For the errors discussed, the judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded.

BROOKS v. STATE.

(Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. Nov. 18, 1908.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1144*)—APPEAL—RECORD—PRESUMPTIONS—SUBSTITUTED INDICTMENT.

Where accused was convicted on a substituted indictment, and the record on appeal fails to show that the substitution was made by permission of the court, the conviction will be reversed, as the rule of presumptions cannot be indulged in to verify the substituted indictment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2746, 3018; Dec. Dig. § 1144.*]

2. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION (§ 14*) — LOST INDICTMENT—RECORD ENTRIES.

Record entries of an order permitting substitution of a lost indictment may be amended nunc pro tunc, even at a subsequent term.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indictment and Information, Dec. Dig. § 14.*]

Appeal from Bowie County Court; Sam H. Smelser, Judge.

F. M. Brooks was convicted of swindling and he appeals. Reversed and remanded.

F. J. McCord, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

BROOKS, J. Appellant was convicted of swindling, and his punishment assessed at imprisonment in the county jail for one day and a fine of $25.

The record contains no statement of facts. Appellant filed a plea to the jurisdiction of the court, the first ground of which is that the substituted indictment or pretended substituted indictment nowhere shows that said cause was transferred by the district clerk of Bowie county to the county court of Bowie county; and, second, because said pretended substitute indictment fails to show that any order was ever made by the district judge of the Fifth judicial district, and of which Bowie county is one of the counties composing said district, transferring said cause to the county court of Bowie county; and, third, because there nowhere appears on the face of said pretended substitute indictment that any order was ever asked as required by law for said substitution or ever granted by the court; and, fourth, because said county attorney, Patrick G. Henry, has never made a written suggestion to the court, as required by law, that an indictment, if any, was ever filed in this cause. The indictment appears to be in the usual form, and immediately following same, in this transcript, we find the following statement: "I, Patrick G. Henry, county attorney of Bowie county, Texas, representing the state in said cause, do hereby state that the foregoing indictment in the case of State of Texas v. F. M. Brooks, No. 2,879 upon the docket of this court, is substantially the same as the original indictment which has been lost, and is the same which I have prayed the court to substitute for said lost original." Signed officially by the county attorney.

This record fails to show that the substitution of the lost indictment was made by permission of the court, and is, therefore, fatal on this appeal. Graham v. State, 43 Tex. 550. Presumptions cannot be indulged in to verify the substituted indictment; but the record entries may be amended nunc pro tunc, even at a subsequent term. Turner v. State, 7 Tex. App. 596. For further authorities on this question, see article 470, White's Ann. Code Cr. Proc. In the absence of a proper order of the court authorizing the substitution, the motion of appellant is well taken.

The record not showing that the court had jurisdiction to try the case under the substituted indictment, it follows that the judgment must be reversed, and the cause remanded, and it is accordingly so ordered.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

effect that they were in fact going fishing at the time they met deceased, when the fatal difficulty occurred. This testimony may have been cumulative. If we could consider the statement of facts, it would be clearly so. Without the statement of facts, therefore, we are of opinion that the application is not in such condition as to require us to reverse the judgment on account of the loss of this testimony. There is enough, perhaps, within the bill of exceptions, to show that this was cumulative, and the statement of the parties as to their purpose in going in the direction they were traveling at the time of the difficulty. The application for continuance and the bill fail to show that the evidence was not cumulative.

The second bill was reserved to the testimony of the witness Duke in regard to the purchase by appellant's father of some shells loaded with buckshot on the morning of and prior to the homicide in the evening; the theory being that there was no conspiracy shown, or at least not sufficient evidence introduced as a predicate for the conspiracy in order to admit the purchase of shells loaded with buckshot in the absence of defendant. This bill further shows, in this connection, the state had shown by John Davis, Milage Davis, and George Davis, each, certain statements and conversations made by the father of appellant, who was indicted as a principal in the same transaction in a separate indictment, these statements being made in reference to the deceased, and the bill refers to the statement of facts in order to show what those witnesses testified with reference to those conversations, acts, and doings of M. B. Dobbs, father of appellant, as made or done in the presence of defendant, all of which refer to the deceased. As the bill is presented, and in the absence of statement of facts, no error is shown in admitting this evidence. The same question was passed on, as we understand the former appeal, cited supra.

Another bill of exceptions was reserved to the court overruling some exceptions of appellant to certain questions asked the mother of appellant on cross-examination. The bill discloses that she testified on the former trial for her husband, M. B. Dobbs. The stenographic report of her testimony was used by the state's attorney in asking questions, and from that report it seems he asked questions of the witness. After reading such questions and answers as he desired her to answer, and at the conclusion of such questions she stated she did not remember that she so testified upon the trial of her husband. The state did not offer this in evidence—simply used it in asking questions, apparently for the purpose of laying a predicate for impeachment. When this was done, appellant then introduced all of her testimony before the jury as taken on the trial of her husband, including the very questions and answers that had been read to her by the state's counsel. As the bill shows the matter, we fail to see any error.

With reference to the testimony of the witness Bass, in the absence of the testimony introduced on the trial, we are of opinion that the matter is not so presented as to show any material error. Without the facts before us we are of opinion the bill of exceptions does not sufficiently show such error as would require a reversal of the judgment, even if any is shown at all.

The error in the charge suggested for reversal, in the absence of the statement of facts, will not be revised. These may have sufficiently presented the issues suggested by the testimony.

As the record is presented, we find no error which would require a reversal. Therefore the judgment is affirmed.

BROOKS, J., absent.

On Rehearing.

DAVIDSON, P. J. At a former term of the court the judgment herein was affirmed, without reference to the statement of facts, on the theory that the statement of facts could not be considered, having been filed after the time allowed by the court, to wit, 20 days. Upon a review of the matter we are satisfied now that that conclusion was erroneous. The judgment of the court allowed 20 days, whereas the act of the Thirtieth Legislature authorized 30 days, in which to file statement of facts. The theory upon which the affirmance was had was that 30 days were allowed appellant, but that it did not compel him to take that time if he saw proper to take less time, and, having obtained an order for that purpose, he would be confined to the time requested by him and set forth in the judgment. A review of the question convinces us that that conclusion was erroneous. We now follow the rule announced by the Court of Civil Appeals in Garrison v. Richards et al., 107 S. W. 861, and St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. of Texas v. Nelson, 108 S. W. 182. We are of opinion, upon a review of these cases, that they announced the correct doctrine. The judgment of affirmance, without reference to the statement of facts, is set aside, and the case will be now decided upon its merits. A sufficient statement of the case will be found in the former appeal, as reported in 51 Tex. Cr. R. 113, 100 S. W. 946.

Appellant sought a continuance of the case on account of the absence of quite a number of witnesses. This was overruled, and process ordered for the absent witnesses, except Henry Honzell, who was alleged to reside in Parmer county. Process was served on all of the absent witnesses, and they were brought into court, except Henry Honzell. By him it was proposed to be shown that on the evening of the homicide appellant and pocket, where the evidence tended to show a conspiracy between them.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1002-1010; Dec. Dig. § 424.*]

8. WITNESSES (§ 268*) — CROSS-EXAMINATION.

Accused's wife having testified that she saw the homicide and to facts tending to show that decedent was the aggressor, the state could ask her on her cross-examination whether she saw decedent's son, who was with him, and ask her whether decedent was driving a horse or a mule, and just where she was when the encounter occurred, and concerning her opportunity to see the killing, to test her credibility.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. §§ 931-948; Dec. Dig. § 268.*]

4. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 404*) — DEMONSTRATIVE EVIDENCE—DECEDENT'S CLOTHING.

It was proper to exhibit decedent's shirt, and to allow a witness, who was about decedent's size, to put it on in the jury's presence, where such exhibition aided the jury in determining the controversy as to the situation of the parties when the homicide occurred, though some of the facts sought to be shown were conceded.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 891; Dec. Dig. § 404.*]

5. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 822*) — INSTRUCTIONS — BURDEN OF PROOF.

An instruction that if the jury believed beyond reasonable doubt that accused intentionally and unlawfully killed decedent, and found that the facts did not establish express malice beyond reasonable doubt, and that the facts established beyond reasonable doubt that the homicide was not of the grade of manslaughter and was not justified on the ground of self-defense, as manslaughter and self-defense were therein after defined, then the facts did not tend to mitigate or justify the act, and there was nothing to reduce the killing below murder, "as these expressions are used in the above charge on murder in the second degree, and you may find implied malice and that the offense is murder in the second degree," was not erroneous, as shifting the burden of proof and as infringing the doctrine of reasonable doubt, when considered with other instructions distinguishing murder in the first and second degrees, defining implied malice and manslaughter, and giving accused the benefit of any doubt as to the grade of the offense committed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1990-1995; Dec. Dig. § 822.*]

6. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 809*) — INSTRUCTIONS.

The instruction was not erroneous, as being confusing and misleading.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1961-1967; Dec. Dig. § 809.*]

7. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 763*) — INSTRUCTIONS — PROVINCE OF COURT AND JURY—WEIGHT OF THE EVIDENCE.

The instruction was not erroneous, as being on the weight of the evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1731-1748; Dec. Dig. § 763.* Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 579, 603, 631, 648.]

8. HOMICIDE (§ 295*) — INSTRUCTIONS — MANSLAUGHTER.

An instruction on manslaughter was not erroneous, as limiting the jury, in determining provocation or adequate cause, to things happening at and immediately before the difficulty, where, in connection therewith, the court instructed that any condition or circumstance creating sudden passion, whether accompanied by bodily pain or not, is deemed adequate cause; that, where there are several causes to arouse passion, it is for the jury to determine whether all such causes combined might do so; and that, in passing upon the sufficiency of the provocation and on the effects of the passion on accused's mind, the jury might consider all the evidence in the case.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 606-609; Dec. Dig. § 295.*]

9. HOMICIDE (§ 300*) — INSTRUCTIONS — SELF-DEFENSE.

Where accused and his son were charged with homicide as principals, the son having done the shooting, an instruction on self-defense was not erroneous, as infringing the doctrine of apparent danger and as omitting to direct the jury to judge the case from the son's standpoint in passing on the question of appearances of danger to accused, where the court instructed that a reasonable apprehension of death or great bodily harm will excuse one in using all necessary force to protect his life or person; that it is not necessary that there be actual danger, if he acts upon a reasonable apprehension of danger as it appears to him from his standpoint; and that in such case one acting under such real or apparent danger need not retreat to avoid the necessity of killing, and where the same doctrine was applied in another paragraph to the connection of the son with the case as creating reasonable apprehension of danger in his mind.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 614-632; Dec. Dig. § 300.*]

Appeal from District Court, Titus County; P. A. Turner, Judge.

M. B. Dobbs was convicted of homicide, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Ralston & Ward and Sam D. Snodgrass, for appellant. F. J. McCord, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

RAMSEY, J. This is the second appeal in this case. A report of the first appeal will be found in 51 Tex. Cr. R. 629, 103 S. W. 913. The companion case of Milton Dobbs is reported in 51 Tex. Cr. R. 113, 100 S. W. 946. A full statement of the case and the facts of the killing are deemed unnecessary. The record is quite voluminous, and many reasons are urged why the case should be reversed.

1. The testimony shows that the deceased was killed on a public road leading from Pittsburg to Mt. Vernon, a short distance from appellant's home. It is claimed by the state that appellant and Milton Dobbs knew that the deceased would pass near where he was killed, and that they met him there for the purpose of injuring or killing him. Appellant's theory was that the meeting was accidental, and that immediately on their meeting the deceased assaulted appellant; that they engaged in a scuffle over a shotgun, which was broken, deceased retaining the barrel, and was in the act of striking appellant with it when he was shot by his son to prevent death or serious injury to appellant, his father, as shown by the testimony of appellant's wife. There is much testimony in the record tending to show a very tions in respect to the little boy of deceased, who was with him, and developed from her, in substance, that she had not seen the boy. They also asked her in reference to whether deceased was driving a horse or a mule. They also asked her many questions in respect to just where she was when the fatal encounter ensued and her opportunity of seeing the killing. We think all the matters were so inextricably and closely connected with matters testified to on direct examination that her testimony would under any fair rule be admissible. This court has gone quite far enough in limiting the scope of the cross-examination of the wife. We think, however, in this case there can be no doubt that the matters inquired had such relation to the direct testimony of the wife, and were so necessarily important to elucidate the truthfulness of her testimony in chief, and so obviously related thereto, as not to be the subject of substantial complaint. This case is easily distinguishable from the cases of Stewart v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 106 S. W. 685, and Jones v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 110 S. W. 741.

4. Again, complaint is made of the action of the court in permitting the state to offer in evidence the clothing worn by the deceased when shot. Before this was done Dr. J. B. Florence had given minute and particular testimony as to the location and range of the shots which killed Micham, the deceased, as well as the exact location of the powder burns on the shirt, both at the point of entrance of the wound and on the shirt sleeve. After this had been done the state introduced the sheriff, D. H. Carpenter, who produced the bloody shirt that deceased wore at the time he was shot, and testified it was in the same condition as it was when taken off the deceased, except the blood on the shirt was now dry and it was wet when taken off. At the instance of the district attorney the witness put on the shirt in the presence of the jury, and showed them a large hole in it that he testified was burned there by powder. The witness also, at the instance of the state, testified there was blood on the collar of the shirt. The production of this article of clothing was objected to by appellant, and appellant also objected to the witness Carpenter putting said shirt on in the presence and sight of the jury, upon the following grounds: "Because said shirt did not tend to explain any controverted issue in this case, and it is only offered for the purpose of inflaming the minds of the jury against the defendant in this case; that the defendant had not controverted any fact proven by the state as to the location and character of the wound on the deceased, nor had not controverted any fact proven by the state as to the location or extent of the powder burn on the shirt, but that the defendant's counsel did, in making his objection to the introduction of said bloody shirt in evidence, state to the court, in the presence of the jury, that the defendant admitted that the wound was located exactly as the state's witness, Dr. J. B. Florence, testified it was located, and that the defendant did not controvert any fact proven by the state as to the location of the said wound." These objections were by the court overruled, and testimony admitted, as we have briefly indicated.

This bill of exceptions was approved, with a lengthy explanation by the court substantially as follows: "It had been proven that the deceased was about the height and size of said witness Carpenter. A wound was found on the side of deceased's head, near the top. It was about two inches long and went to the skull. This wound was found for the first time by Dick King after he had shaved him and was combing his hair preparing the body for burial. This was about 2 or 3 o'clock in the morning after deceased was killed. The state contended that defendant struck deceased on the head with his double-barrel gun, and broke the gun, and inflicted this wound on the head, and knocked him out of his buggy, and that Milton Dobbs then shot him. There was a great deal of evidence about the wound. Was it contuse or incisive? What was its length and depth? When and how and by whom was it found? Defendant proved by physicians that such a wound would bleed immediately and profusely—would saturate the hair and shirt with blood. Much testimony as to color, amount, and length of the deceased's hair. There was much testimony, and very conflicting, as to the blood in the hair and on the shirt of the deceased—some witnesses saying the whole collar, bosom, and shoulders of the shirt were saturated with blood; others saying there was no blood on the shirt and none on his hair. The defendant contended that this wound was not inflicted in the manner contended by the state—no blood in his hair, nor on his face, nor on his shirt; that the wound must have been inflicted after death, because it did not bleed. It may have been inflicted in putting the body in the wagon, or while hauling it home in a wagon over rough roads, or in some way after death. It was a sharp issue whether or not the shirt was bloody. I allowed the shirt to be introduced in evidence on this issue. It was bloody all over the collar, shoulders, and bosom. This shirt could not have been bloodied from the wound in the side. Where the blood was on the shirt showed conclusively that the blood came from the wound in the head. The wife of the defendant testified that the husband was down on the ground, and that the deceased was standing over him with the gun barrels drawn in a striking position, when Milton Dobbs shot deceased to save his father. The state contended that the holes in the shirt sleeves and in the body of the shirt could not have been made by one shot, and there was only one, if Mrs. Dobbs told the truth. Carpenter being in size just stance which is capable of creating and does create sudden passion, such as anger, rage, sudden resentment, or terror, rendering the mind incapable of cool reflection, whether accompanied by bodily pain or not, is deemed adequate cause; and where there are several causes to arouse passion, although no one of them alone constitutes adequate cause, it is for you to determine whether or not all such causes combined might be sufficient to do so. In passing upon the sufficiency of the provocation and on the effects of the passion upon the mind of the defendant, you may consider all the evidence in this case."

7. Finally, it is objected that the charge of the court submitting the law of self-defense is erroneous, in that, as framed, it is an infringement of the doctrine of apparent danger, and that it nowhere told the jury that they would judge the case from Milton Dobbs' standpoint in passing on the question of appearances of danger to M. B. Dobbs. This criticism seems not to be borne out by the record. Among other things, in connection with the law of self-defense, the court instructs the jury as follows: "A reasonable apprehension of death or great bodily harm will excuse a party in using all necessary force to protect his life or person, and it is not necessary that there should be actual danger, provided he acted upon a reasonable apprehension of danger as it appeared to him from his standpoint at the time, and in such case the party acting under such real or apparent danger is in no event bound to retreat in order to avoid the necessity of killing his assailant." The same doctrine is applied in another paragraph to the attitude and connection of Milton Dobbs with the case and the facts and circumstances as raising and creating reasonable apprehension of danger in his mind.

The case seems to have been well tried, and, as we believe, there was no error committed by the trial court. It is therefore ordered that the judgment of conviction be, and the same is hereby, in all things, affirmed.

JONES v. STATE

(Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. Nov. 18, 1908.)

CRIMINAL LAW (§ 594*)—CONTINUANCE—ABSENT WITNESSES.

A first continuance should have been granted for want of several witnesses residing in a city in the country; the application stating the house residence of each, and that defendant expects to prove by them a complete case of self-defense, and showing that a proper subpoena issued for them, and the sheriff's return showing they were not found, and defendant and another having at the trial sworn to a perfect self-defense.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1321-1332; Dec. Dig. § 594.*]

Appeal from Criminal District Court, Dallas County; W. W. Nelms, Judge.

Irene Jones, alias Irene Harris, appeals from a conviction. Reversed and remanded.

F. J. McCord, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

BROOKS, J. Appellant was convicted of murder in the second degree, and her punishment assessed at 15 years' confinement in the penitentiary.

There is but one question that we deem necessary to pass upon in this case, and that is appellant's first application for continuance. The same has all the legal requisites of a first application, and asks for a continuance for the want of three or four witnesses who reside in the city of Dallas, and the application shows that proper subpoena had been issued for same; but the return of the sheriff shows the witnesses not found. The application states the residence of each witness in the city, street and number, and says that said testimony is desired, and that appellant expects to prove by said witnesses a complete case of self-defense. Appellant and her sister, during the progress of the trial, swore to a case of perfect self-defense. This is the condition of this record. It follows that the court erred in refusing to grant the continuance.

The judgment is accordingly reversed, and the cause is remanded.

HOLLOWAY v. STATE

(Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. Nov. 11, 1908.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 829*)—TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS.

Requested charges that a mere invitation or request to a woman to have carnal intercourse did not constitute an attempt to commit rape, and unless accused at the time attempted to use such force to accomplish his purpose without her consent as would have been sufficient, considering the relative strength of the parties, was sufficiently covered by a charge that a mere invitation from a man to a woman to have intercourse does not constitute a punishable offense, and if accused requested prosecutrix to have intercourse, but did not attempt to have carnal knowledge of her by force without her consent and against her will, he should be acquitted.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2011; Dec. Dig. § 829.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1169*)—APPEAL—HARMLESS ERROR.

In a prosecution for attempt to commit rape, prosecutrix's answer to a question whether she knew what accused meant by his remark, when she ran off at the time of the attempted rape, "If it is all right with you, it is all right with me," that she knew very well what he meant, was not reversible error; she not having given her opinion as to what he meant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 1169.*]

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

3. RAPE (§ 46*)—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

In a prosecution for attempt to commit rape, evidence that the morning after the alleged attempt accused and another were approaching the house of prosecutrix's father, and when they saw him come out in the yard with a gun they turned and rapidly rode away, was admissible to show guilty knowledge, though it had not been shown that accused or his companion knew the person with the gun, or that he was prosecutrix's father.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Rape, Cent. Dig. § 54; Dec. Dig. § 46.*]

4. RAPE (§ 46*)—ATTEMPT TO COMMIT RAPE—EVIDENCE—WEIGHT.

That accused and his companion did not know the relationship between the person with the gun and prosecutrix only went to the weight of the evidence, and not to its admissibility.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Rape, Dec. Dig. § 46.*]

5. WITNESSES (§ 329*)—CROSS-EXAMINATION—TO TEST CREDIBILITY.

In a prosecution for attempt to commit rape, after accused had induced prosecutrix to ride with him to a place where he stated her husband was sick, a question, on cross-examination, to a witness who had furnished liquor on which prosecutrix's husband became intoxicated at the time of the alleged rape, whether, if he promised accused to keep prosecutrix's husband at his house while accused raped her, he would come into court and tell about it, and a question to another witness, who was seen with accused on the night of the rape at the place where prosecutrix's husband was drunk, whether he should tell of it in court if he kept watch while accused went to rape prosecutrix, were proper, to test the credibility of the witnesses.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. § 1104; Dec. Dig. § 329.*]

6. WITNESSES (§ 329*)—CROSS-EXAMINATION—SCOPE.

Great latitude is allowed on cross-examination; any question tending to show the credibility of the witness regarding the matter testified to, or the probability of the testimony, being proper, if it does not call for hearsay.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. § 1104; Dec. Dig. § 329.*]

7. RAPE (§ 46*)—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

In a prosecution for attempt to commit rape, where the evidence showed that accused had on a white hat at the time, the state could prove the color of the hat he had on at the examining trial, and that during that trial he exchanged the white hat for a black one.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Rape, Dec. Dig. § 46.*]

8. RAPE (§ 45*)—EVIDENCE—COMPETENCY—EXCLUSION AS RES INTER ALIOS ACTA.

In a prosecution for attempt to commit rape, where the evidence showed accused had on a white hat at the time, testimony that the witness noticed accused had on a white hat on the day of the examining trial, and that when he alighted from the train witness remarked, "There he is now, with the same white hat he had on the night of the offense," was highly prejudicial and inadmissible, as res inter alios acta.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Rape, Dec. Dig. § 45.*]

9. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 419*)—EVIDENCE—HEARSAY.

The testimony was also inadmissible as hearsay.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 419.*]

10. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 448*)—EVIDENCE—OPINION EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

In a rape prosecution, where the evidence showed that accused wore a white hat at the time of the rape, testimony by a witness that he remarked, when accused came to the preliminary examination, that prosecutrix would surely identify accused, because he then wore the same white hat, was inadmissible as opinion evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 448.*]

11. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 719*)—TRIAL—ARGUMENT—IMPROPER STATEMENTS.

In a rape prosecution, statement by the state's attorney in argument that if the jury found accused not guilty he might enter their homes and take their wives away and rape them, and that accused and one of his witnesses were gambling companions, being out of the record, were improper.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1669; Dec. Dig. § 719.*]

12. RAPE (§ 15*)—"ATTEMPT TO COMMIT RAPE"—"FORCE."

Under Pen. Code 1895, art. 640, providing that if it appears, on a trial for rape, that the offense, though not committed, was attempted by the use of any of the means stated in articles 634, 635, and 636, but not so as to make it an assault to commit rape, the jury may find accused guilty of an attempt to commit rape, and article 634, making the definition of "force" in assault and battery applicable to the crime of rape, in which case it must be sufficient to overcome resistance, considering the relative strength of the parties, etc., in order to constitute an "attempt to commit rape," there must have been an intent to use such force as would constitute rape or an assault to commit rape, but the attempt to apply the force must have failed, so that it did not amount to rape or an assault to commit rape.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Rape, Cent. Dig. § 14; Dec. Dig. § 15.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 1, p. 627; vol. 3, pp. 2868-2870.]

Appeal from District Court, Gonzales County; M. Kennon, Judge.

J. T. Holloway was convicted of an attempt to commit rape, and he appealed. Reversed and remanded.

P. J. Greenwood and J. W. Rainbolt, for appellant. F. J. McCord, Asst. Atty. Gen., and R. F. Nixon, Co. Atty., for the State.

BROOKS, J. Appellant was tried and convicted of an attempt to rape, and his punishment assessed at five years' confinement in the penitentiary.

The testimony of the prosecutrix, Marcy Smith, is in substance as follows: "About 11 o'clock at night, on March 1, 1907, some one came to my house and holloed, and I went and woke up my father-in-law, Mr. E. W. Smith, and told him that some one was at the front gate, and for him to see what he wanted. Mr. Smith went out to the front gate, and came back and delivered me a message to the effect that my husband was sick and wanted me to come to Mr. George Gray's house, where he was. My father-in-law, the baby, and myself started; Mr. Smith carrying the baby. After we had started on the road leading to Mr. Gray's house, a man whom I took to be Tonnie Gray, riding horseback, said to my father-in-law to let him carry the baby, and, after he (the defendant) had the baby, he said to me to get up behind him on his horse, as he could carry me to Mr. George Gray's much quicker than I could walk, and I refused, saying that I was afraid of the horse; but the defendant insisted on me riding, saying that the horse was perfectly gentle, and that he would not run. I was excited and worried about my husband's condition, and wanted to get to him as quick as I could. I consented to ride behind the defendant, believing at the time that he was Tonnie Gray, and I got behind him, and we started off in an ordinary gait for a short distance, and then started off in a gallop, and we had not gone very far before the defendant turned off to the right, off of the well-traveled road on a dim path leading in the direction of an old lake, called Sour Lake, where some out-houses were situated, belonging to Mr. Henderson; and I immediately told him that he was not on the road leading to Mr. Gray's house, and for him to let me down, and that I didn't want to go any further, and he said, 'No,' and continued to go in a lively gait, and said to me, 'Your husband was not sick, but drunk,' and that his name was Johnson, from Luling, until we got to an old gate leading into a field, and then stopped, and he got down to open the gate and handed me my baby before getting off the horse, and then I jumped off the horse and started to run, when the defendant said to me, 'It is all right with me, if it is all right with you,' and I said, 'No,' and broke and ran in the direction of Mr. John Glover's house as fast as I could, and he ran after me some distance, and then got his horse and followed me through the brush. I was very much excited and crying, and ran all of the way to Mr. John Glover's house, the distance of 300 or 400 yards, and woke them up, and called for Mrs. Glover, and told her all that had transpired, and then I went into the house, and I was crying, and Mr. Glover asked me what was the matter, and I told him that some one had insulted me, and he asked me who it was, and I told him I did not know his name, but he said his name was Johnson, from Luling. Shortly after I got in the house my father-in-law came to the house, and I told him what had happened, and returned to my home with him. I did not find out that it was not Tonnie Gray that had offered to take me to my sick husband until the defendant turned off of the main road, and then I saw my mistake. This defendant was dressed in a dark suit of clothes, with a white broad-brim hat on, and had boots on with his breeches in his boots, and was riding a brown horse. I identified this defendant at Harwood, on the day of the examining trial, to be the man who committed this crime on me, shortly after he had committed the crime, and I now identify him as the man. This occurred in Gonzales county, on the 1st day of March, 1907. The defendant had on a black hat on the day of the examining trial, and I have testified to the same facts to-day as I did on the examining trial, and I have always said that he run after me and tried to catch me at the gate." The husband of the prosecutrix testified, in substance, that he was away from home on the night of the attempt to rape, drinking, but not sick. The defendant, Holloway, and one Leehin, were at the home of George Gray the night of the alleged crime, prior to its commission. They were there drinking. The husband of prosecutrix was quite drunk. This is, in substance, the testimony for the state. The defense relied upon an alibi.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes.

Appellant asked the court to give the following charges, which were refused, to wit: "A mere invitation extended by a man to a woman to have carnal intercourse with her, or a request from him to her for that purpose, does not constitute the crime of attempt to rape. Therefore, even though you should believe from the evidence in this case that the defendant made such proposition to the prosecuting witness, then you will acquit the defendant, unless you further find that said defendant at such time attempted to use such force to accomplish his purpose as, if not prevented, would have been sufficient to accomplish such purpose." The other charge is as follows: "In this case you are charged that a mere proposal from a man to a woman to have carnal knowledge of her does not constitute an offense under the law, and before you can convict the defendant you must find that in addition to such proposal, if any was made, that the defendant by his acts evidenced an intention to have carnal knowledge of said Marcy Smith, by force and without her consent; and unless you so find that at said time he evidenced by his acts an intention to have such carnal knowledge with said Marcy Smith by the use of such force as might be necessary, considering the relative strength of the parties, and without her consent, and unless you so find beyond a reasonable doubt you will acquit the defendant." In the main charge the court gave the following: "A mere invitation or request from a man to a woman to have carnal intercourse with him does not constitute an offense punishable under the law. So, if you should find from the evidence that on the occasion under investigation the defendant did request or invite the said Marcy Smith to have carnal intercourse with him, but fail to find from the evidence, beyond a reasonable doubt, that he also made an attempt to have carnal knowledge of her by force and against her will and without her consent, as the term 'attempt' has hereinbefore been defined, you

Charles Leehin testified for the defendant, the county attorney asked him the following question: "Now, Charles, if it is a fact that you did go off up there in the brush to keep watch while Bud Holloway (meaning defendant) went down to Albert Smith's house and took his wife out and raped her, you would come into court and tell all about it, wouldn't you?" To which question appellant presented practically the same objections he did to the above testimony, all of which being overruled, the witness answered that, "If I should do such a thing, I would crawl into a hole and never show my head again." The evidence in this record shows that Charles Leehin was a companion of appellant. They were seen together at George Gray's the night of the attempt to rape. They left there together, or at least the circumstances suggest that they did. The evidence further shows that George Gray was furnishing the whisky or wine upon which the prosecutrix's husband became drunk. In the light of this evidence we do not think it was amiss for the county attorney, on cross-examination, to propound the questions above copied. It was a legitimate cross-examination of the witness to test his credibility. The answer of Charles Leehin indicates that he would be ashamed if he did such a thing. This would be a circumstance to give credence to his testimony, and would not be a fact of which appellant could complain. Great latitude is allowed on cross-examination. Any question that throws light upon the credibility or probability or veracity of a witness concerning the matter that he is called upon to testify to, that is not hearsay, is admissible on cross-examination. We must say that this testimony comes clearly within the rule.

Bill of exceptions No. 7 shows that while W. O. Brown was testifying in rebuttal for the state, and had testified that he was in Harwood on June 16, 1907, the day upon which the examining trial of defendant was had, and after the witness had testified that he saw defendant get off the train that day, said witness was asked by R. F. Nixon, county attorney, who was conducting the examination for the state, the following question: "If he noticed the kind of hat the defendant had on when he got off the train." To which appellant objected, because it was irrelevant and immaterial testimony; because said question was calculated to and did raise in the minds of the jury a prejudice against the defendant—which objections being overruled, the witness stated that "when the defendant got off the train that evening he had on a white hat." Thereupon the county attorney asked the following question: "How came you to take notice of the kind of hat the defendant had on that day?" Appellant objected to this, because irrelevant and immaterial, and because it could prove no fact in this case and was calculated to and did prejudice the minds of the jury against the defendant, which objections were overruled and the witness answered: "You (meaning R. F. Nixon, county attorney) and I were there near the depot waiting for the train to come in. We said, one to the other, that we did not believe that the defendant would come to his trial, and wondered if he would have on the same white hat that he had on the night of the commission of the alleged offense, and when he stepped out on the platform of the car I remarked, 'There he is now, with that same white hat that he had on the night the offense was committed, and that Mrs. Smith will surely identify him now.'" Said witness was further asked the following question by state's counsel: "What kind of a hat did the defendant have on the next time you noticed him that evening?" To which question and answer the same objections were interposed as stated above. The witness answered: "The next time I saw the defendant he had on a black hat, which was shortly after he reached the town of Harwood." It was permissible for the state to prove the character of clothing and color of hat appellant had on, on the day of the examining trial, since the record shows that on the night of the attempt to rape he had on a white hat. It is further permissible and proper to prove that during the progress of the examining trial, or at any time during the trial, he changed the white hat and put on a black one; but it was very improper to permit the witness to state that "we did not believe that the defendant would come to his trial, and wondered if he would have on the same white hat that he had on the night of the commission of the alleged offense, and when he stepped out on the platform of the car I remarked, 'There he is now, with that same white hat that he had on the night the offense was committed, and that Mrs. Smith will surely identify him now.'" This was hearsay evidence, out of the presence of the defendant. In no way could he be bound by the statement. It is what the law terms "res inter alios acta," and highly prejudicial. Certainly it is not proper for the witness to express a doubt as to whether the defendant would come to his trial, thereby indicating his opinion that defendant was guilty and therefore would flee. Nor was it proper to say that "Mrs. Smith would surely identify him now." This is an opinion, and highly prejudicial to the rights of appellant. As stated, if the witness saw him change hats, or saw him have on a hat of any character or color, he could testify to this fact, but certainly cannot give, in that connection, an opinion, as above stated. It follows, therefore, that the court erred in admitting this part of the witness' testimony. As stated by appellant, it was highly prejudicial to the rights of defendant, was hearsay, and utterly inadmissible.

Bill of exceptions No. 8 shows that the county attorney, in his closing argument to the jury, used the following language: "If to use force, such as is defined in article 634, we might then conclude that what was done by the accused in this case was an attempt to commit rape, because, as we have said above, rape can be accomplished on a girl under 15 years of age with her consent. But our statute is particular in regard to this matter, and requires that the proof must show that the defendant intended to use that particular force which is defined in article 634. To these acts and intentions our Code has affixed a penalty. This offense is called an 'attempt to commit rape.' This offense has been defined, and the punishment affixed, and we know of no other attempt to commit rape, except as named in article 640." That portion of the above-cited opinion, however, in reference to an assault on a female under 15 years of age, has no application to the case now at bar, and, in fact, has been overruled by subsequent decisions of this court; but we cite same as being a proper, terse, and logical presentation of the distinction between an attempt and an assault to rape. For further definitions of an attempt to rape, see Melton v. State, 24 Tex. App. 284, 6 S. W. 89, Moon v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 45 S. W. 806, and Walre v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 64 S. W. 1061.

For the errors pointed out, the judgment is reversed, and the cause is remanded.

MORGAN v. STATE.

(Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. Nov. 18, 1908.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 596*)—CONTINUANCE—CUMULATIVE EVIDENCE.

The general rule that a second or subsequent application for a continuance will not be granted to obtain testimony which is only cumulative does not apply where the testimony sought is cumulative of that of accused; and hence, in a murder case, where accused claimed that he acted in self-defense, a continuance to obtain an absent witness, who would testify that before the difficulty she had communicated to accused threats made against him by decedent, was erroneously denied on the ground that the testimony would be cumulative, in that another witness had testified that he had communicated the threats to accused's mother, and accused had testified that his mother had communicated them to him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1328-1330; Dec. Dig. § 596.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 595*)—CONTINUANCE—ABSENT WITNESS—MATERIALITY OF TESTIMONY.

Accused claiming self-defense, the testimony of the absent witness was material.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1324; Dec. Dig. § 595.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 614*)—CONTINUANCE—STATUTORY PROVISIONS—"CANNOT BE PROCURED FROM ANY OTHER SOURCE KNOWN TO THE DEFENDANT."

The statutory provision that a second or subsequent application for a continuance in a criminal case must show that the absent testimony "cannot be procured from any other source known to the defendant" does not contemplate accused's testimony as another source, but refers to other sources besides accused himself.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 614.*]

4. HOMICIDE (§ 203*)—EVIDENCE—DYING DECLARATIONS—SENSE OF IMPENDING DEATH.

Before dying declarations can be admitted in evidence, it must be shown that they were made under a sense of impending death, but they need not be stated at the time of making to be so made, it being sufficient if it appear in any manner that they were made under that sanction; and hence, where decedent had been fatally shot, and had lain for more than an hour before the arrival of a physician, who told him that he could not live, that nothing could be done for him, and the physician told him that if, knowing that he was going to die, he had any statement to make, to do so, and decedent immediately, without any dissent or suggestion that he believed himself to be in any other than a dying condition, made a statement, it sufficiently appeared that the statement was made under the sense of impending death.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 430-437; Dec. Dig. § 203.*]

Appeal from District Court, Madison County; Gordon Boone, Judge.

Joe Morgan was convicted of manslaughter on a charge of murder, and appeals. Reversed and remanded.

E. A. Berry, for appellant. F. J. McCord, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

RAMSEY, J. Appellant was indicted in the district court of Madison county, charged with the murder of one John B. Williams, which is alleged to have been committed on or about April 26, 1907. On trial he was convicted of manslaughter, and his punishment assessed at confinement in the penitentiary for a term of two years.

Appellant submits three assignments and propositions on which he relies for a reversal: First, the court erred in overruling his application for a continuance; second, the misconduct of two members of the jury trying him; and, third, that the court erred in admitting the testimony of Dr. J. E. Morris as to the dying declarations of the deceased. We think the court erred in overruling appellant's application for a continuance. In view of the fact that the case is to be reversed, it becomes unnecessary to discuss the assignments of error in respect to the supposed misconduct of the jurors named. Again, we think there was no error in the action of the court in overruling the objection to the testimony of Dr. Morris. In view of the importance of the issues raised, and the fact that a correct statement of the law may in future become important, we shall discuss at length the first and third errors assigned. Briefly stated, the evidence of the state tended to show that the appellant and deceased had become involved in a difficulty on the morning of the homicide and a few hours be-the defendant was evidently acting under the immediate influence of sudden passion produced by the assault and battery committed upon him by deceased in the first difficulty, and the jury having found the defendant guilty of manslaughter, and the jury having before it the evidence of threats made and communicated as shown by the record, uncontradicted by the state, it does not appear to the court that the testimony of the said Sue Morgan could reasonably have had any other effect than that of the uncontradicted testimony of the witness Webber and the defendant on said issue."

It will be noted by reference to the statement of the court that it is not claimed that the testimony of the witness Webber went to the extent that he had communicated the threats in question to appellant; nor, indeed, that there was testimony of communicated threats by any person other than appellant. It is clear, as stated by the court, that if the testimony of his mother related only to the subject of the misconduct of the deceased with his sister there could be no just reason for reversing the case on account of the absence of this testimony, because, having been convicted of manslaughter only, and having received the lowest punishment known to the law, if the killing was unlawful, the production of any amount of testimony as to insulting conduct or words towards his sister could not reduce the offense below the grade found by the jury, and the absent testimony, therefore, could not have changed the result. But it is to be noted that it was proposed to be proved by the missing witness that she had, a short time before the fatal difficulty, in person communicated the threats made to Webber to the appellant. The fact that Webber testifies he had made a statement of these threats to Sue Morgan would seem to rebut any suggestion that she would not, if present, testify to the facts stated as well as any suggestion that such testimony was probably untrue. Appellant claimed that he acted in self-defense. On this issue proof of communicated threats was of the highest importance. What weight the jury would have given to this testimony, if produced, we cannot say; nor do we believe that the court below was justified, or that we would be justified, in holding that such testimony should be treated as immaterial. The rule ordinarily is that a second or subsequent application for a continuance will not be granted for testimony which would be only cumulative. Harvey v. State, 35 Tex. Cr. R. 545, 34 S. W. 623. This rule, however, is subject, as our decisions have declared, to an exception where the testimony sought by the continuance is cumulative of that of the appellant. In the case of Phipps v. State, 34 Tex. Cr. R. 560, 31 S. W. 397, which was a case of murder, the conviction was reversed in part on account of the failure of the court to grant a second application for a continuance. In that case, as in this, self-defense was claimed. The appellant there testified to certain demonstrations and conduct on the part of the deceased from which an inference of his threatened attack might, if believed, be drawn. It was averred in the application for a continuance that Phipps could prove by the absent witness, Bob Linebarger, that defendant had ordered deceased out of his house the third time, and that immediately thereafter deceased leaned his body forward and moved his right hand towards his hip pocket as if to reach for a pistol. Passing on this case, the court, speaking through Judge Davidson, says: "In our opinion, the diligence shown was sufficient, and under the circumstances of this case the evidence was very material. It is true, if we refer to the statement of facts, that several of the witnesses say that they did not see Linebarger there; but it appears that all the time there was a great deal of excitement, that there were a number of persons in the store, and that they all immediately ran out when the difficulty began. So we see nothing unreasonable in the statement that Linebarger was there, and may have seen what was alleged. As stated before, all of the witnesses who were in the store when the difficulty began ran out, and evidently much of what they saw occurred while they were in the act of running, and while they were outside of the store, and getting out of the way. The only witness who testifies to these particular demonstrations is the defendant himself, and the jury might not be disposed to lend credit to his statement, though it is not gainsaid by other witnesses, except in a negative way; and, if this testimony was calculated to corroborate the statement of the defendant himself, under the circumstances of this case it certainly would have been very valuable to him, and the court should have awarded him an opportunity to procure same by continuing the cause until next term of the court." In the case of Gilcrease v. State, 33 Tex. Cr. R. 619, 28 S. W. 531, in passing on an application for continuance, Judge Hurt says: "An application to continue was made for the want of testimony of the witnesses to prove threats made by the deceased to kill defendant, which were communicated to him; also to prove that deceased, as well as his brother, had guns at the place and time of the shooting. The theory of the state was that appellant, unprovoked, killed the deceased; that of the defendant was self-defense. Both theories were supported by testimony; hence a conflict in the testimony as to who was the aggressor—who began the violence. Threats, whether communicated or not, in such a conflict, are of very great importance, as they tend to solve the problem at issue. The state's witnesses deny that the deceased was armed with a gun at the time he was shot. If this be true, appellant was in no actual danger when he shot deceased, and self-defense was not in the case. The application should have been granted, opinions of the medical or other attendants, stated to him, or from his conduct, or other circumstances of the case, all of which are resorted to, in order to ascertain the state of the declarant's mind. We think, tested by this rule, that it is placed beyond doubt that this young negro boy, when he made the declarations in question, must have done so under a sense of impending death. The wound, as the evidence discloses, was a horrible one. He had lain for more than an hour in the wagon where he was shot. On the arrival of the physician he was told that he could not live, that nothing could be done for him, and that, knowing he was going to die, if he had any statement to make, for him to make it. Immediately following this, without any dissent or suggestion that he believed himself to be other than in a dying condition, he makes the statement offered in evidence. We think there can be no doubt that this was a sufficient predicate under the authorities.

For the error noted above, the judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded.

PRYSE v. STATE.

(Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. Nov. 18, 1908.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 697*)—TRIAL—RECEPTION OF EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY OF EXCEPTION.

A bill of exceptions relating to testimony elicited on defendant's cross-examination to prove his failure to testify on his preliminary trial, which states that his counsel remarked, "I believe we can explain these things in our argument," and that there was no further objection to the examination, does not show a proper exception to the testimony.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1649; Dec. Dig. § 697.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1091*)—APPEAL—RECORD—BILL OF EXCEPTIONS—CONSTRUCTION.

A bill of exceptions, which recites that defendant's counsel having interrupted the district attorney's argument several times, not as objections, but more as corrections of statement, the court directed counsel to make no further interruptions except on permission of the court, and that no further interruptions were made, nor any request for permission to interrupt, and that no exception was taken and the court heard no complaint until the motion for a new trial, shows that defendant did not except to the argument.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 1091.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 706*)—EVIDENCE—PRESUMPTIONS—FAILURE TO TESTIFY.

Testimony elicited on defendant's cross-examination to prove his failure to testify on his preliminary trial is inadmissible, if a proper exception is made.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 706.*]

4. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 364*)—EVIDENCE—RES GESTÆ.

Statements made by defendant on reaching jail, about 30 minutes after he shot deceased, that he did it to protect his life and property, are not a part of the res gestæ, but are self-serving declarations.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 817; Dec. Dig. § 364.*]

5. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1169*)—APPEAL—HARMLESS ERROR.

To prove defendant's failure to testify on his preliminary trial is reversible error, if proper exception is taken.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 1169.*]

6. WITNESSES (§ 405*)—CONTRADICTION—TESTIMONY SUBJECT TO CONTRADICTION.

Testimony elicited on defendant's cross-examination to prove his failure to testify on his preliminary trial, being illegal, cannot be contradicted.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. § 1273; Dec. Dig. § 405.*]

7. HOMICIDE (§ 340*)—APPEAL—HARMLESS ERROR—INSTRUCTIONS.

A conviction of manslaughter will not be reversed for error in charging on murder in the first and second degree.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 716-720; Dec. Dig. § 340.*]

8. HOMICIDE (§ 124*)—EXCUSABLE HOMICIDE—DEFENSE OF PROPERTY.

A person has a right to use all the force necessary to protect his property, and in doing so, if his life or person becomes in danger of death or serious bodily injury, he has a right to kill to protect his person and maintain possession of his property.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 184-187; Dec. Dig. § 124.*]

9. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 782*)—TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS.

A charge that, if the jury acquit defendant "altogether," they should find him not guilty, is not objectionable as requiring them to acquit him of any wrong whatever before they could find him not guilty.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 782.*]

Appeal from District Court, Potter County: J. N. Browning, Judge.

J. M. Pryse was convicted of manslaughter, and he appeals. Reversed.

J. W. Crudginton and Reeder, Graham & Williams, for appellant. F. J. McCord, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

BROOKS, J. Appellant was convicted of manslaughter, and his punishment assessed at two years' confinement in the penitentiary.

The evidence shows that appellant walked into a saloon in Amarillo and remained there the greater part of the day drinking. Appellant finally proposed to treat all in the house, among others, the deceased, who was a Mexican. After the parties took a drink the appellant, having expressed a desire to go off on the train, was informed that he had but 10 minutes to reach the train. Appellant replied, "I want to talk to this party a while," and he and the deceased started back, and went into a little room at the back part of the saloon building, and in about a minute the shooting occurred. Appellant:

after he shot the Mexican, and immediately on reaching the jail, his person was searched by one C. J. Huskey, deputy sheriff, and certain articles on his person taken therefrom; that he then and there discovered that his pocketbook, which had contained two $10 bills, was not on his person, and that he (defendant) at that time informed said deputy sheriff that he had said pocketbook containing said bills in his hand at the time he entered the room in the saloon with the Mexican, and that immediately on entering the room the Mexican sought to take from him said pocketbook, and that the Mexican at that time drew a knife and attempted to use it on the defendant in his effort to take said pocketbook, and that the defendant, under these circumstances, shot and killed the Mexican, believing it necessary to protect his property and his life, and for no other purpose, and, further, that he had not seen the pocketbook or the money since he (defendant) and the Mexican were struggling over it in the saloon.

Before approving this bill of exceptions the court makes the following explanation: "The testimony sought to be elicited by the question set out in this bill was not res gestæ, but was self-serving declarations, pure and simple, because the witness showed by his own evidence that, after he killed the Mexican in a room with no one present but themselves, he (defendant) walked out into the barroom, where he silently waited some time for an officer to come, and then, after the officer came and made a cursory examination of the killing and walked out of the saloon in charge of defendant, traveled several blocks to the county jail, and there, after he had been searched by the officer, the defendant claims to have mentioned, for the first time, that his pocketbook and money were missing. No offer was made to prove that defendant made any request of the officer or any one else to go to the place of the killing and search for the missing articles, although the defendant testified in substance that the pocketbook was dropped while in the struggle with deceased. The undisputed testimony showed that the Mexican was instantly killed; that the room, in which the killing occurred, was immediately closed and kept closed until the justice of the peace arrived to hold an inquest over the body of the deceased, and no one entered the room until the justice and his assistants entered it, which appeared from the testimony to have been something like an hour after the killing."

It will be seen from the explanation of the court that the testimony is not res gestæ, since appellant remained about the saloon some time before making this statement, and, furthermore, did not make same until he reached the jail with the officer. The court does not say how long this was, but the circumstances related in the explanation show it must have been something like a half hour or an hour. At any rate, we are not informed how long it was. Appellant in his bill says about 15 minutes, but the court does not approve this statement, and hence to that extent appellant has no bill. But, as we understand the explanation, it shows that many things intervened before the statement was made, and much time also elapsed before said statement was made. Furthermore, the testimony would not be admissible on a theory, as appellant insists, to contradict the inference that the district attorney drew from the failure of the appellant to testify in the examining trial, since said testimony was not legal testimony; defendant having failed to testify in the examining trial. If proper exception had been made, and the court had not sustained it, it would have been reversible error to have proved said fact. Therefore, when illegal testimony is introduced, it does not afford a basis for introducing testimony to contradict.

Bill of exceptions No. 3 shows that appellant attempted to prove by C. J. Huskey the same facts in reference to the statement of appellant at the jail above discussed.

We find in the motion for a new trial that appellant insists that the court erred as contained in various other bills of exception; but we have discussed all the bills of exception we find in this record.

The thirteenth ground of the motion for a new trial complains that the court erred in charging on murder in the first degree. The fourteenth ground of the motion complains that the court erred in charging on murder in the second degree. Neither of these objections are tenable, in view of the fact that appellant was convicted of manslaughter.

The fifteenth ground of the motion for a new trial complains that the court erred in charging on manslaughter. The sixteenth ground of the motion complains that the charge is contradictory and misleading, in that, among other things, the court informed the jury, in substance, that any person who killed another to prevent a forcible taking from him and his possession of his property, under a belief that it was necessary so to do to protect his said property, would be guilty of manslaughter. After telling the jury that an attempt to forcibly take money or other personal effect from a person would be adequate cause in law, and would, if not otherwise justifiable, reduce a homicide to manslaughter, the court proceeds and gives the following charge: "Now, if you believe from the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant with a deadly weapon, under the immediate influence of sudden passion aroused by adequate cause, as the same has been hereinbefore explained, and not in defense of himself against an unlawful attack reasonably producing a rational fear or expectation of robbery, death, or serious bodily injury, with intent to kill, did in Appeal from District Court, Maverick County; B. C. Thomas, Judge.

Fred S. Franks was convicted of murder in the second degree, and appeals. Affirmed.

Walter Gillis, Henry I. Moore, Sanford & Douglas, and C. K. McDowell, for appellant. F. J. McCord, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

DAVIDSON, P. J. Appellant was convicted of murder in the second degree; his punishment being assessed at 10 years' confinement in the penitentiary.

On the evening of the 8th of May, 1906, about 4 o'clock, appellant and deceased, Stanley, had a personal difficulty on the street in a little country village, called Juno, in Val Verde county. Appellant had just bought a small ranch, containing three sections of land, from Babb, and went to the store, under the control of deceased, and made a couple of purchases and borrowed \$6.05 with which to pay the wages of one of his employes, Sam Williams. When he made the trade with Babb it was understood that the stock then in the pasture should remain, at least some of it, and two horses belonging to the deceased were mentioned among the stock. Appellant did not agree to pasture the two horses, and in that connection made some remark about not liking the deceased, but that, although he did not like him, he would have the cheek or gall to borrow money from him. There is further evidence that appellant had been trading at the store, under control of the deceased, and on two previous occasions some words had occurred between them in regard to a settlement—one in regard to a settlement, and the other in regard to some premiums that had been offered as prizes in regard to the sale of some goods that had been purchased. Babb informed the deceased of the remarks appellant had made. Deceased accosted appellant in regard to it, which ended in a difficulty between them, in which deceased had his knife in his hand, and caught the bridle of the horse which appellant was riding, and later threw a rock of considerable size at him, and struck his hand. Appellant rode away, remarking: "Stanley, will you wait for me two hours?" When appellant made this remark, Stanley said: "All right." Williams rode away with appellant, and started out in the direction of appellant's ranch house, which is some $2\frac{1}{2}$ or 3 miles southwest of the little town of Juno. While riding along together, this witness urged appellant to drop the matter, or go to law with it, and let the law take its course, and that he would be a witness through it all. Appellant replied to this: "You just keep your damn mouth shut. You will be a witness soon enough. This is not the first time Stanley has run over me, and he need not think that he can live in Juno and run over me that way." When this conversation occurred between the parties they were about three miles from the appellant's ranch. This witness rode on with the appellant until they reached the Babb pasture and there separated—witness for the purpose of driving some cattle to water—and appellant went on to the house at his ranch, changed horses, got his gun, and returned to a point somewhere in the neighborhood of a half mile from Stanley's residence. The gun that he procured was what they call a 30-30 Marlin rifle. Deceased in the meantime had gone home, it being about sundown, and after going to the house prepared himself to do the chores around the place, and among other things to milk the cow. He and his wife went to the cowpen, which is something about 135 or 140 feet from deceased's house. Deceased was engaged in milking, and his wife was sitting nearby. She observed a man coming through the pasture towards the cowpen and called her husband's attention to it; but he kept on milking, and did not heed her, and paid no attention to what she said. Again she spoke to him, and he paid no attention. Finally appellant had reached a cross fence between deceased's property and one on the west belonging to and known as the "Bill West place."

Mrs. Stanley's testimony at this point is as follows: "There is a road leading from the gate in front of the Bill West place up through the Bill West lot and north of his house back to his barn, and the person that I saw when I first observed him was coming right along this road or pathway, a little north of the Bill West house. No one was living at the Bill West house at that time. The house was vacant. Mr. West had moved out about a week before. When I first saw this person coming along this pathway, I saw that he had something in his hand, but at first I did not know what it was, but I thought it was some one stealing wood, and I said to Mr. Stanley, 'There is a man.' It looked as though it was some one taking something out of that place. Mr. Stanley paid no attention, but went on milking, and I kept on watching the party as he came on down in an easterly direction bearing towards our fence until he stopped at a place that I afterwards pointed out to Mr. Ratchford when he was there to make a map. I know where there are some small bushes in the Bill West yard. I think this person stopped along here near the fence—right against the fence. He came carrying his gun in his hands, and was peeping and stooping. There was a plank fence around the cowpen. Some time before this person got there to where he stopped, I discovered that what he had was a gun. I did not know anything about my husband having had a difficulty with the defendant at that time. As he was coming along, and after I could see that he had a gun, I said to my husband: 'It is a gun. Some one has been hunting.' I said this because I noticed it was a man with a gun, and supposed he had been hunting. When the man got up there to the place where he stopped, he said to me, 'Mrs. Stanley that after the difficulty, about 4 o'clock, appellant went to his ranch, some three miles from town, changed horses, got his Marlin rifle, returned, and hitched his horse, as he states on this trial, about 700 yards from deceased's house, and on the examining trial about three-fourths of a mile, went through the pasture between sundown and dark, within 120 feet of the deceased and called for him. Finally deceased arose from where he was milking his cow, and according to Mrs. Stanley's testimony appellant fired two shots at him; one of them proving fatal. According to appellant's theory, at this point he went to talk to deceased, and deceased started in the direction of his house as if to get a gun, and he then shot, with no intention to kill deceased, but to shoot him in the leg, or as some of the testimony puts it, shoot off his leg. Under this state of facts appellant urged that the court erred in not charging the law of self-defense. This case does not come within the rule of the case of Shannon v. State, 35 Tex. Cr. R. 2, 28 S. W. 687, 60 Am. St. Rep. 17. When appellant approached deceased, he called him and told him to come there, and under one phase of the testimony deceased did not respond, but started towards his house. This in no sense required the court to charge self-defense. See Lynch v. State, 24 Tex. App. 350, 6 S. W. 190, 5 Am. St. Rep. 888; Bush v. State, 40 Tex. Cr. R. 539, 51 S. W. 238; Courtney v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 57 S. W. 654; Herrington v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 63 S. W. 563.

Appellant also contends there was error in not charging the jury with reference to appellant's intent in shooting at the deceased, which he states was not for the purpose of killing. We are of opinion that under the facts of the case this was not necessary. Appellant shot for the purpose either of killing or of inflicting serious bodily injury. He shot with a Marlin rifle at a distance of less than 40 yards, which proved fatal. If appellant shot with a view of killing he would be guilty of criminal homicide, or if he shot under the circumstances as detailed by himself it is patent that it was intended to inflict upon deceased serious bodily injury. The court charged the jury, if the shot was fired for the purpose of killing or inflicting serious bodily injury, which in its necessary and probable consequences might result in his death, he would be guilty, if actuated by malice, of murder in the second degree, and in substance, if otherwise, he would be guilty of manslaughter, if his mind was at the time incapable of cool reflection.

The court submitted a charge on the theory of manslaughter. Considerable criticism is indulged in regard to this charge, especially that part of it which instructs the jury that it must be a sudden passion, and not produced by former provocation, and cites quite a number of authorities in support of this proposition. Many of these authorities discuss the question of insulting conduct to a female relative, when the insulting conduct did not occur in the presence of the accused. That line of cases has no bearing upon the questions here. The statute requires passion, and that it must be engendered by provocation, and that it must grow out of provocation at the time of the difficulty, and must not be the result of a former provocation. This is the statute, and is the law until the Legislature changes it.

The court also instructed the jury, in regard to cooling time, that if appellant's mind was aroused to such a degree of anger, rage, sudden resentment, or terror as resulted or may have resulted from the difficulty something like two hours before the shooting, to the effect that if his mind had not cooled and that it was still agitated to incapability of cool reflection by reason of that, they would give him the benefit, and find him guilty of manslaughter. There was no adequate cause occurring at the time of the difficulty, unless it is under appellant's statement that he thought deceased was going to his house, 135 or 140 feet away, to get a gun. This would not constitute adequate cause. Therefore we are of the opinion that the provocation, if any existed by reading of this record, was the previous difficulty in the evening in which the deceased is said to have attacked, or sought to have attacked, appellant with his knife, and, falling in this, threw a rock at him and struck him on the head, which produced pain. To meet any exigencies of the case, and favorable to appellant, although this difficulty was two or three hours prior to the homicide, the court gave him the benefit of that adequate cause as a basis of acquitting him of murder and convicting him of manslaughter under the theory of cooling time. This was as favorable as appellant was entitled to have the jury charged under the facts. It may be more than seriously doubted, under the facts of the case, if appellant's mind was in any manner moved other than by revenge; for he testified that he was a very fine shot and that he fired the first shot three feet in front of him (deceased) in order to stop him, and falling in this, he shot him in the leg while he was moving in the direction of the house, as appellant supposed, to get the gun. This shows a very cool and calm condition of the mind, it occurs to us, and precludes the idea of a mind that was excited beyond the point of cool reflection.

Taking the charge as a whole, we are of opinion there is no sufficient error under our decisions to require a reversal of this judgment, and that the facts show that appellant rode three miles, changed horses, because the one he was first riding was wild to get another horse upon which he could carry his gun, and returned to somewhere between a half and three-quarters of a mile, and went up the pathway to the pen where deceased was in the habit of milking his cow in the evening, calling him up from behind,

Action by William Seidel against the Mutual Reserve Life Insurance Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

West, Chapman & West and Fowler & Fowler, for appellant. G. E. Pope, for appellee.

FLY, J. This is a suit instituted by appellee to recover of appellant $282.63 evidenced by a promissory note for $282.63, given by appellee to one Underwood, an agent for appellant, in payment of the first premium on a policy for $10,000, which policy was rejected by appellee when it was tendered to him by appellant. The cause was submitted to the court, and judgment rendered in favor of appellee for the amount of his claim.

It was alleged by appellee that he made an application to appellant on one of its printed forms, at the instance and solicitation of its agent, for a policy of insurance for $10,000, and at the same time executed his note payable to the agent in the sum of $282.63 to pay the first premium. It was further alleged that appellee had an agreement with the agent that he would not accept the policy after its issuance, unless he so desired, and that he might reject said policy and that the note was to be held by Underwood, and, in case appellee concluded not to accept the policy, then the note was to be delivered to appellee, and he was not to be bound by the same. It was alleged that a fraud was perpetrated by appellant's agent in obtaining the execution of the note, and that on the day of its execution, before the policy was issued, he had sold the note to the First National Bank of Goliad, which was an innocent purchaser of the same, and that the money realized therefrom was sent to and accepted by appellant. The testimony of appellee substantiated the allegations of the petition. He did not accept the policy when it was sent to him through the mail, but promptly rejected it and demanded return of the note. He afterwards learned of the negotiation of the note by the agent of appellant. There is no provision in the application or policy copied into the record that restricts the power of Underwood, the agent of appellant, in the making of verbal agreements with those seeking insurance. The parts copied into the record have reference to other matters, and do not touch upon the powers of the agent. Such being the case, Underwood was held out to appellee and the general public as fully authorized to make any contract that appellant could make. The insurance company could no doubt have entered into the agreement charged to the agent, and therefore the question must be considered as though it entered into the agreement with appellee.

There are allegations of fraud upon the part of the agent, and, though they are not as full and explicit as might be desired, in the absence of special exceptions being urged to the allegations, they will be considered sufficient to form the basis for the introduction of evidence. In this connection it may be stated that the fraud of the authorized agent will invalidate a contract entered into by him on behalf of his principal, though in perpetrating the fraud he acted without the knowledge or consent of the principal. Henderson v. Railway, 15 Tex. 560, 67 Am. Dec. 675; Wright v. Calhoun, 19 Tex. 412; Aultman v. York, 7 Tex. 261, 9 S. W. 127; McFarlane v. McGill, 16 Tex. Civ. App. 298, 41 S. W. 402. This principle applies to the ostensible as well as the actual agent; for, having put an agent in a position where he may perpetrate a fraud upon innocent parties, the principal will not be allowed to profit by such fraud by the claim that he had not authorized the perpetration of the fraud. Appellant in this case, having clothed Underwood with authority to solicit and obtain insurance on the lives of persons, is responsible for the fraudulent as well as fair means resorted to by him in the line of his agency. Mechem, Agency, § 743, and note. It is the general rule that a promise to perform some act in the future will not amount to fraud in the eyes of the law; and although it may have been the propelling inducement to the execution of the contract, and though it may have been totally disregarded, it could not be made the basis for a rescission. There is, however, an exception to the rule recognized in Texas, in this: that if at the time the promise is made it was the design and intention of the party making it to disregard it, and no intention to perform it, and it was only made to deceive and entrap the other party, then such promise in case the refusal to perform took place would amount to such actual fraud as would justify and authorize the rescission of a contract induced by such promise. Railway v. Titterton, 84 Tex. 213, 19 S. W. 472, 31 Am. St. Rep. 39; Collinson v. Jefferies, 21 Tex. Civ. App. 653, 34 S. W. 28; O'Brien v. Camp (Tex. Civ. App.) 101 S. W. 557. Now, if this be an act of deceit, and not to rescind the contract, the action could not be maintained against appellant unless it was impliedly authorized by it, for an incorporated body cannot, it is stated, be held for false representations even of its directors, unless it authorize such representations. Railway v. McKinney, 55 Tex. 176. In this case, while there is no direct prayer for rescission, the effect of granting the relief sought by appellee is to destroy the contract of insurance, and render it null and void. It is to all intents and purposes a suit to rescind the insurance contract and return the premium paid by appellee. The facts in this case indicate clearly that the promise to hold the note the garnishment was pending; that the market price of the rice declined 35 cents a sack between January 22 and March 15, 1904; that on March 16th the said suit against Moore & Bridgeman was tried, and it was adjudged that the debt sued on did not exist. The present action was instituted by Moore & Bridgeman against the appellee, the surety on the garnishment bond, the petition alleging substantially the above facts, and that Aultmann, Miller & Co., the principal in said bond, was beyond the jurisdiction of the court, and was insolvent, and prayed for damages in the sum of $1,933.76, alleging as the measure of damages the difference between the market price of the rice on January 22, 1904, when the writ was served, and March 15, 1904, when it was decreed in the county court that Moore & Bridgeman were not indebted to Aultmann, Miller & Co. The petition also alleged that the garnishment suit was dismissed on May 9, 1905, that the rice in question was converted into money under orders of the county court, and sold for $14,566.91, which was held by the Port Arthur Milling Company under orders of the court, as garnishee, until the garnishment proceeding was dismissed on May 9, 1905, and thereby the said Moore & Bridgeman were wrongfully and unlawfully deprived of the use of the said property from January 22, 1904, until May 9, 1905, to their damage in the sum of 6 per cent. interest on said sum between said dates. The amended petition set up substantially all the above facts, and alleged that plaintiffs' cause of action had been assigned to Fleming & Fleming, who were admitted to prosecute the action. The court sustained demurrers to the petition, and, on plaintiffs declining to amend, dismissed the cause.

Appellants' propositions are: "(1) A garnishee holds property of the defendant in his possession after service upon him, as a receiver or officer of the court, and he cannot thereafter change the form of the property, and thereby place an additional burden upon it; nor has he the right to sell and dispose of it, although he may have authority from the defendant to do so. (2) Sureties on attachment and garnishment bonds are liable for actual damages resulting from a wrongful issuance and service of such writs. (3) Where a writ of garnishment is wrongfully sued out and served, and money of the defendant is thereby wrongfully detained in the possession of the garnishee, the defendant is entitled to recover as actual damages 6 per cent. interest on the money during the period it is unlawfully held by such garnishment proceeding." The above propositions are indisputable, but they find no application in this case. This is an action against the surety on the garnishment bond, and its liability for damages extends no further than to consequences which followed as the proximate result of the suing out of the writ. Shinn on Attachment & Gar. § 184. If, notwithstanding the service of the writ upon the milling company, it had the right to proceed to fulfill its contract with Moore & Bridgeman, but it saw fit not to do so for a reason unfounded in law, such act cannot legitimately be attributed to the suing out of the writ, so as to charge the surety for the consequences thereof. That, notwithstanding the writ, the milling company had the right, and was obligated, to proceed with the performance of its contract previously entered into with Moore & Bridgeman is well settled. Mensing v. Engelke, 5 Tex. 537, 4 S. W. 202; McClellan v. Routh, 15 Tex. Civ. App. 344, 39 S. W. 607; Shinn, Att. & Gar. §§ 487, 516. The garnishment operated merely to substitute the plaintiff in garnishment pro tanto, to the rights of Moore & Bridgeman. The wisdom of the above rule is clearly vindicated in the conditions exhibited in this proceeding, when a different rule would arrest the performance of a contract involving large interests on a garnishment for a few hundred dollars.

Our conclusion is that the surety on the bond is not liable for the consequences to plaintiffs of a course which the garnishee elected to pursue under a mistaken and unwarranted view of the obligations of the writ.

The judgment is affirmed.

CHEMICAL NAT. BANK v. KIAM.†

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Nov. 7, 1908.
Rehearing Denied Nov. 25, 1908.)

1. MARSHALING ASSETS AND SECURITIES (§ 1*) —RELATION OF PARTIES.

Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 68, "a," 30 Stat. 565 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 34), provides that, in all cases of mutual debts or mutual credits between the estate of a bankrupt and a creditor, the account shall be stated, and one debt shall be set off against the other, and the balance only shall be allowed or paid. The payee of a note, having on deposit in his bank sufficient funds of the maker to pay the note, transferred such note, and before maturity thereof became a bankrupt. Held, that the maker and transferee did not stand in the relation of debtor and creditor merely, so as to exclude the doctrine of marshaling of assets and securities, and the maker was entitled to compel the transferee to first resort to the assets of the bankrupt estate, and to collateral security delivered to him by the payee prior to bankruptcy, and to enforce such right, was entitled to an injunction, restraining the prosecution of a suit on the note by the transferee until such transferee had exhausted his remedies against such assets and securities.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Marshaling Assets and Securities, Cent. Dig. § 1; Dec. Dig. § 1.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 920*)—REVIEW—PRESUMPTIONS.

In an action on a note, in which defendant on cross-bill was granted an injunction staying the suit until plaintiff had exhausted ot. r

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

† Writ of error denied by Supreme Court.

securities, it will be presumed, on plaintiff's appeal from the restraining order, that the court found, in accordance with an allegation of the cross-bill, that the award of an injunction would not delay or inconvenience plaintiff in the collection of the note.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3717; Dec. Dig. § 920.*]

B. MARSHALING ASSETS AND SECURITIES (§ 8*)
—ENFORCEMENT OF RIGHT—INJUNCTION—EXISTENCE OF REMEDY BY SUBROGATION.

The payee of a note, having on deposit in his bank sufficient funds of the maker to pay the note, transferred such note, and before maturity thereof became a bankrupt. Held, that the maker was entitled to an injunction restraining the prosecution of an action on the note until plaintiff, the transferee, had exhausted other securities which were delivered to him by the payee prior to bankruptcy; the right of subrogation to such securities affording defendant a less practical, prompt, and efficient protection.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Marshaling Assets and Securities, Cent. Dig. § 11; Dec. Dig. § 8.*]

Appeal from District Court, Harris County; Norman G. Kittrell, Judge.

Action by the Chemical National Bank against Edward Kiam. From a restraining order in favor of defendant on his cross-bill, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

O. T. Holt and W. H. Haynes, for appellant. Baker, Batts, Parker & Garwood, for appellee.

PLEASANTS, C. J. The appellant brought this suit to recover upon a note for $10,000 executed by appellee in favor of T. W. House, and transferred by House to appellant.

Appellee answered by general demurrer and general denial, and by cross-action sought affirmative relief. The allegations of the cross-bill are, in substance, that the note sued on was transferred to appellant by T. W. House, along with other notes payable to said House, and certain stocks and bonds owned by him as collateral to secure the payment of notes due by said House to appellant, of the aggregate amount of $110,000; that since the transfer of said notes and other collateral to appellant, the said House, who was engaged in the banking business in the city of Houston as a private banker, has been adjudged a bankrupt, and his estate is now being administered in the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of Texas by J. S. Rice, trustee appointed by said court; that at the time House was so adjudged a bankrupt the appellant had in its possession, as collateral to secure House's said indebtedness to it notes, stocks and bonds of value in excess of said indebtedness, and in addition thereto had a cash deposit in its hands of $36,131.44, which it was duly authorized to apply to said indebtedness; that since said adjudication in bankruptcy appellant has applied said cash upon said indebtedness, and has made collections upon other of the notes held by it as collateral, and has applied same upon said indebtedness, the total amount of collections and cash deposit so applied being $85,979.89, leaving a balance due on said indebtedness of House to it of not exceeding $24,920.11; that to secure said balance due it by said House appellant has in its hands, in addition to the note herein sued on and the other notes transferred to it by House as aforesaid, stocks and bonds of the aggregate value of $78,900; that said stocks and bonds have a fixed, definite cash market value of not less than the amount above stated, and that under the terms of the assignment from House to appellant it is fully authorized to sell said securities without notice, and apply the proceeds to the payment of any indebtedness due it by House; that the note herein sued on was not due at the time House was adjudged a bankrupt, and that appellee at said time had on deposit in the bank of said House the sum of $16,860.42; "that under the law the defendant is entitled, against the said T. W. House and his estate and the trustee thereof, to a lien on the note herein sued upon for the payment of the amount due from said estate of House to this defendant on account at the date of the bankruptcy of the said House, and is entitled to have the note sued on herein canceled, and the amount thereof set off, and applied to the payment of appellee's claim against the estate of the said House; that the note sued on herein, therefore, is charged with a double lien, to wit, a lien in favor of said appellant to secure the payment of the indebtedness of said House to it, and a lien in favor of the appellee to secure the payment of his claim against the estate of said House; that said stocks and bonds are not subject to a double lien or double liability, no one having a lien upon them except appellant, and that in equity the appellee is entitled to have the assets in the hands of appellant to secure its indebtedness marshaled, and to have said stocks and bonds, upon which no lien exists in favor of any person except appellant, first sold or realized upon, under the terms of said contract between said House and appellant, and the proceeds applied to the payment of the remainder of the indebtedness of said House to appellant, before appellant is entitled to resort to the note sued on in this cause, and if said stocks and bonds should produce sufficient funds, as appellee alleged they would do, to pay off the remainder of said indebtedness of House to appellant, then appellant could not in equity collect the note sued on and apply the proceeds to payment of its claim, but appellee would be entitled to have said note canceled and surrendered to him, and the amount thereof set off and entered as part payment of his claim against said House's estate. It is further alleged that, among the notes of said House's customers held by appellant as collateral, there are many which are not subject to any equities or rights of set-offs on the part of the makers of said notes, and these notes furnish additional security to which said appellant should resort before attempting to enforce collection of the note sued on in this case; but that, ignoring appellee's rights and equities, appellant has reached some kind of agreement or understanding with said trustees of said House's estate and his attorneys, to the effect that appellant would not proceed to realize upon said stocks and bonds and notes, upon which it, and it alone, has a lien, but instead would proceed to bring this suit for the unjust and inequitable purpose of obtaining judgment against appellee and cutting off and depriving him of his equitable rights in the note herein sued upon, to wit, his right to have said notes subjected to a lien in his favor, and set off and applied to the discharge and payment, pro tanto, of the claim and account which this defendant has against said estate of House on his deposit account, as before explained; that to permit this would work a manifest wrong and injury upon appellee, and deprive him of his right of set-off without producing any benefit whatever to the estate of said House or to said plaintiffs. It is further alleged that appellant has filed a claim in the bankruptcy court, admitting that it holds the stocks and bonds and notes, above referred to as collateral, to secure the payment of an alleged indebtedness of T. W. House to it; that if appellant be required to proceed upon the other collateral held by it, it will be able to collect its notes in full, without realizing upon the note herein sued upon, and thereupon this note will revert to the estate of said House, and defendant will be enabled to assert his right to said note as a security for the payment, pro tanto, of his account against said House's estate, but that the estate of House is insolvent, and will not pay its general creditors exceeding 40 cents on the dollar, and if the appellant is allowed to proceed and take judgment against the appellee on the note sued on herein and exact payment thereof from him, he will entirely lose the benefit of his security, and will be obliged to accept 40 cents on the dollar, or less, upon his indebtedness against the said House, but if appellant is required to realize upon said stocks and bonds, they will more than pay off the indebtedness of said House to appellant, and it will be compelled to return the note sued on to the trustee of said House, and the said trustee will be compelled to settle with appellee by surrendering said note and deducting the amount thereof from his claim against said

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

House, and appellee will only be required to accept dividends on the remainder of his said claim against House after deducting said note."

The prayer of the cross-bill is for process, and that the court will enter an order staying proceedings in this suit, and grant an injunction restraining the appellant, its agents, attorneys, employees, and successors from proceeding further with this suit, or in any manner attempting to institute suits, actions, or proceedings of any kind, in any court or tribunal, for the purpose of attempting to collect the note sued on in this case, until the further orders of the court may permit; that the court will require appellant to make an exhibit, showing in detail all amounts owing by the estate of said House to appellant on the notes and indebtedness before mentioned, showing all collections made by it from the securities which it held at the time House became bankrupt, showing, also, a complete list of the securities it now holds of said House, which are not subject to a lien in favor of any other person by way of security, set-off, or otherwise, including a complete list of the stocks and bonds held by it, and that the court will further order that, before proceeding further with this suit, or with any action or proceeding to collect the indebtedness sued on herein, it shall realize upon said stocks and bonds, and other securities in its hands which are subject only to a lien in its favor, and if said stock and bonds and other securities which are subject only to its lien produce a sufficient amount to pay off the remainder of the indebtedness of House to it, then the further prosecution of this suit, or of any suit, by the appellant to collect the indebtedness herein sued on may be permanently stayed and enjoined, and that appellant be directed and required by the court to turn back the note sued on herein to said trustee, or to deliver the same to the appellee, in order that the amount thereof may be set off and applied pro tanto to the appellee's claim on the estate of T. W. House. This cross-bill was verified by affidavit of appellee. Appellant replied to appellee's cross-bill by general demurrer and general denial, and by special plea, in which it admits that it holds the note sued on as collateral to secure an indebtedness due it by T. W. House, which it alleges is about $50,000. It is further alleged in said special plea that appellant holds collateral of the face value of about $133,000, including the note sued on to secure the payment of said indebtedness, said collateral consisting of promissory notes, stocks, and bonds, but alleges that some of the notes are almost worthless—the makers have been adjudged bankrupts—that if appellant is forced to sell the stocks and bonds held by it at this time, the same will have to be sacrificed and sold at a discount, which loss will fall on the creditors of the bankrupt estate of T. W. House. This pleading is not verified.

The cause was heard on the pleadings, the substance of which has just been stated, and the court entered an order reciting that: "The court, being of the opinion that the proceedings in this suit ought to be suspended temporarily until the said plaintiff (appellant) shall exhaust its recourse against the stocks and bonds held by it as collateral to secure the indebtedness of the estate of T. W. House, bankrupt, to it, as prayed for in the defendant's cross-petition, and it appearing that the defendant has given bond in the sum of $25,000, the amount fixed by the court, and that said bond has been approved by the clerk of this court, it is therefore ordered, adjudged, and decreed by the court that said plaintiff, the Chemical National Bank, its agents, and attorneys be and they and each of them are hereby enjoined and restrained from the further prosecution of this suit until the said Chemical National Bank shall have exhausted its recourse against the stocks and bonds held by it as collateral to secure the indebtedness of the estate of T. W. House, bankrupt, to it; that further proceedings in this suit be and the same are hereby suspended temporarily, and the suit shall stand continued, from term to term of this court, without further order, until said plaintiff shall have exhausted its remedies against said collateral, as hereinbefore provided, after which this cause shall stand for the further orders of this court." Then follows a description of the stocks and bonds referred to, which it is unnecessary to set out. This appeal is prosecuted from the order above set out. We are strongly inclined to the opinion that no appeal lies from this order, and that therefore the appeal should be dismissed; but, as both parties insist that the order is one from which the right of appeal is given by our statute, and that we have jurisdiction, we have deemed it proper to resolve the doubt in favor of our jurisdiction.

Under the single assignment presented in its brief appellant assails the order above set out, on the ground that the doctrine of marshaling securities, upon which said order is based, can only be applied as between creditors, and appellee, being a debtor of appellant, cannot invoke such doctrine against it. It is unquestionably true that the doctrine of marshaling securities has, as a general rule, no application as between a debtor and creditor; and, as between a creditor and one who occupies, as to him and the subject-matter of the suit, only the relation of an original and primary debtor, there can be no exception to this general rule. We think the facts of this case, however, distinguish it from those cited and relied on by appellant, in which the general rule above stated is enforced. Appellee and appellant are both creditors of the estate of the bankrupt, T. W. House, and by the plain and unambiguous terms of the bankrupt statute, as against said estate and its general creditors, appellee had the right to a credit, at par, of a sufficient amount of the sum due him by said estate to cancel and discharge his indebtedness thereto evidenced by the note sued on. Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 68, subd. "a," 30 Stat. 585 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3450); Collier on Bankruptcy, p. 573; In re Little (D. C.) 6 Am. Bankr. Rep. 682, 110 Fed. 621; Meyer v. Dickinson (D. C.) 5 Am. Bankr. Rep. 593, 107 Fed. 86; In re Shults (D. C.) 13 Am. Bankr. Rep. 84, 132 Fed. 573, while this right to have his claim against said estate paid in full to the amount necessary to discharge his note may not be considered technically as giving him a lien upon said note, it gave him such an interest in the note as entitled him, we think, to invoke, as against appellant, who holds said note only as collateral security, the equitable doctrine of marshaling securities which, to quote from 19 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 1256, "depends upon the principle that a person having two funds to satisfy his demands shall not by his election disappoint a party having but one fund. The general rule is that, if one creditor, by virtue of lien or interest, can resort to two funds, and another to one of them only, the former must seek satisfaction out of that fund which the latter cannot touch." Again, on the same page, the author says: "The basis of the doctrine of marshaling is the equitable principle that a person having a right to satisfy his debt or claim out of two funds, to but one of which another person can resort, shall be compelled first to exhaust the fund to which the other cannot resort before coming upon the one available to both. Thus the person having an interest in the double fund is prevented, by a court of equity, from exercising his right to enforce that interest to the prejudice of a person having an interest in the single fund only. In cases where the claim of paramount creditor would, if satisfied out of the single fund, defeat wholly or in part the claim of the other creditor, a court of equity, proceeding upon the principle that such an exercise of the paramount creditor's power would be most unjust and unconscionable, will interfere, not, indeed, to alter or destroy the power, but to prevent it from being made an instrument of injustice." Again, on page 1259, the same author says: "The right of marshaling is not founded on what may be considered as a contract between debtor and creditor, but rests upon a natural and moral equity that the will and caprice of one creditor, who has within his reach a double fund, shall not be allowed to determine whether another creditor is to be disappointed of his payment." Still further the same author, on page 1263, says: "If the senior creditor will not thereby be unreasonably delayed or inconvenienced or prevented from obtaining full payment of his debt, he may be restrained by injunction from proceeding against the doubly charged security."

The doctrine of marshaling of securities, as well as the principle upon which it rests, as stated in the above quotation, is recognized and applied in authorities too numerous to cite, and has been expressly applied by decisions of the higher courts of this state. Brown v. Thompson, 79 Tex. 58, 15 S. W. 168; Cultivator Co. v. National Bank, 22 Tex. Civ. App. 643, 55 S. W. 765; Willis v. Holland, 18 Tex. Civ. App. 689, 36 S. W. 329; Wahrmund v. Edgewood Distilling Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 32 S. W. 228. In support of his order the trial judge must be presumed to have found that the allegations of appellee's cross-bill to the effect that appellant would not be delayed or inconvenienced in the collection of its debt by requiring it to first exhaust its other securities before proceeding to enforce the collection of the note sued on are true; and, such being the case, no wrong or injustice will be done appellant by the enforcement of said order. It seems clear from the authorities before mentioned that, unless the fact that appellee occupies the dual relation of a debtor to appellant, as well as that a creditor with appellant of their common debtor, T. W. House, so shortens the arm of equity as to render it impotent to prevent appellant from using its power as a paramount creditor as an instrument of injustice to appellee, the trial court did not err in granting the relief prayed for by appellee. In none of the cases relied on by appellant to sustain its contention did the debtor bear any relation to the party against whom the doctrine of marshaling of securities was invoked other than that of a primary debtor, who had no lien upon, and no interest in, the subject-matter of the suit other than that of maker of the obligation sued on. In the case of Rogers v. Meyers, 68 Ill. 92, the maker of the note sought to enjoin suit for its collection by an assignee thereof until such assignee should first foreclose a mortgage on real estate given by the maker to secure the payment of said note, the equity of redemption in said real estate having been previously purchased by a third party at sale under execution against the maker of the note and mortgage. In deciding the case the court says: "We are unable to perceive any right held by Meyers to which appellant has any just claim to be subrogated. He is legally and equitably bound to pay the debt to Meyers, and should pay the bank (the purchaser of the equity of redemption) or lose the property they have purchased. We do not see that the principle that, where a creditor has a lien on two funds, and another creditor has a lien on one of those funds, the former will be required to satisfy his claim out of the fund upon which the other has no lien can be applied in this case. That is a rule that may be invoked as between different creditors, but has, so far as we are aware, never been applied as between debtor and creditor. There is no pretense that appellant does not justly owe the debt, nor is any just reason urged why he should not pay it, or why it should not be enforced in the suit at law. We can see no ground for enjoining the suit on the note and the court below did right in dismissing the bill, and the decree is affirmed." As before said we think this case easily distinguishable from the one we are considering, in that no other relation than that of debtor to creditor was shown between the party invoking the doctrine of marshaling securities, and the defendant who was sought to be enjoined from the collection of his debt and the plaintiff had no lien of any kind upon said note, nor interest therein, other than as the maker. The case of Haas v. Bank of Commerce, 41 Neb. 754, 60 N. W. 85, can be distinguished in the same way.

There is no merit in the contention that, because appellee may upon payment of the note be entitled to subrogation pro tanto to appellant's rights in the other securities held by it, he is therefore not entitled to the remedy of injunction. The remedy by subrogation not affording as practical, prompt, and efficient protection to appellee as the relief afforded by injunction, its existence cannot defeat his right to injunction. Sumner v. Crawford, 91 Tex. 129, 41 S. W. 994.

We are of opinion that the judgment of the court below should be affirmed, and it has been so ordered.

Affirmed.

PACIFIC EXPRESS CO. v. JONES.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Nov. 19, 1908.)

1. CARRIERS (§ 105*)—DELAY—SPECIAL DAMAGES.

To render a carrier liable for special damages from a failure or delay in transportation of freight, notice of the conditions from which such damages will result must be given the carrier at the time the contract of carriage is made.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 451-452½; Dec. Dig. § 105.*]

2. CARRIERS (§ 105*)—TRANSPORTATION OF FREIGHT—DELAY—SPECIAL DAMAGES—NOTICE.

Where special sawmill machinery was ordered from Marshall, Tex., through an intervening concern to be manufactured and shipped from Huntsville, notice given to the carrier's agent at Marshall of special damages resulting from delay in transportation was insufficient to charge the carrier therewith, in the absence of any proof that the machinery ever reached Marshall or was under the control of such agent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Dec. Dig. § 105.*]

3. CARRIERS (§ 104*)—TRANSPORTATION—DELAY—BURDEN OF PROOF.

Where notice of special damages from the delay of freight was given to the carrier's agent

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

Company to Walter Conley & Co. at Tyler for the last order.

Complaint is made that the damages allowed in this case are too remote and are not such as might reasonably be considered within the contemplation of the parties at the time the contract of carriage was made, and that, in the absence of notice, such damages cannot be recovered. We think the objections here urged must be sustained. It is evident from the undisputed facts that there were three shipments made for the benefit of the appellee. The first consisted of a shipment of the broken pieces from the McPhail Hardware Company to Walter Conley & Co. at Tyler; the second, from the latter company to Benton McMillan at Huntsville; and the third, the new casting from McMillan to the McPhail Hardware Company at Marshall. No complaint is made of any delay in any of those shipments except the last. It is conceded that the damages in this case are of such a character that they could not be recovered in the absence of notice given to the appellant; but it is also insisted that such notice was given, and, in order to sustain this contention, appellee relies upon the communication from Jones to appellant's agent at Marshall after the order was sent to McMillan at Huntsville and after the first piece was delivered by McMillan to appellant's agent at Huntsville for shipment to Marshall. The undisputed facts show that, when McMillan delivered the new piece of machinery to the appellant's agent at Huntsville, no notice whatever was given of the use for which it was intended or the damages that might result from delay in its transportation. The general rule is that, in order to render a carrier liable for such special damages resulting from a failure or delay in the shipment of freight, notice of the conditions from which they would result should be given the carrier at the time the contract of carriage is made. M., K. & T. Ry. Co. v. Belcher, 88 Tex. 549, 32 S. W. 518; Bourland v. C., O. & G. Ry. Co., 99 Tex. 407, 90 S. W. 483, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1111; Wells Fargo & Co. v. Battle, 5 Tex. Civ. App. 532, 24 S. W. 353. In the Belcher Case above cited the court uses the following language: "The rule seems to be settled that plaintiff, in order to recover special damages for breach of a contract, must show that at the date of the contract defendant had notice of the special conditions rendering such damages the natural and probable result of such breach under circumstances showing that the contract was to some extent based upon or made with reference to such conditions. Waller v. Railway, L. R. 4 C. L. Ir. 876; Harvey v. Railroad Co., 124 Mass. 421, 26 Am. Rep. 673. Various reasons have been assigned for the limitations thus placed upon the right to recover such damages. For instance, it is against such special or extraordinary liability by declining to make the contract, by inserting stipulations protecting himself against such liability, by charging additional compensation to cover the extra risk, or by making immediate extra preparation to guard against the breach; and, again, it has been said the plaintiff 'ought not to be allowed to obtain an advantage which he has not paid for.' It is true that in both the Bourland Case and Wells Fargo & Co. v. Battle the court permitted a recovery of special damages for delay in the delivery of freight upon notice given to the receiving agent after the contract of carriage was made. But it will be observed that such recovery was limited to those damages which accrued by reason of the delay caused by the receiving agent after he received the notice of the consequences of delay in the delivery of the freight. In the Bourland Case the court says: "The notice relied on in such cases subsequent to the contract appears to have been given at a time when its effect, if held sufficient, would have been to impose an additional liability resulting from the contract itself, to that within the contemplation of the parties when they made it. In none of them were the facts like those in the present case, in which the contract to carry to Washita had been fully performed, and the property was at the point of destination, and could have been delivered when the notice was given. All that remained to be done was to make delivery, and this it was then in the power of the carrier to do at once. It had no right to demand extra compensation for a transportation already performed for making delivery, nor had it the right to refuse or delay delivery because of the conditions of which it then received notice. No extra or unusual preparations were necessary for delivery, or, if there were, the defendant was at the time in as good a position to make them as it would have been, had the notice been given when the contract was made." And, again, it is said: "The charge of the trial court, when applied to the evidence, was substantially correct, and stated the rule which we regard as controlling this case. It refers, it is true, to notice given to the agent at Washita before the arrival of the cars containing the cake, and, if there were anything in the case requiring the distinction between notice before arrival and that given while the cars were at Washita, questions might arise which we find it unnecessary to determine at this time. The first notice given was on the very day when the cars reached Washita and were ready for delivery. The charge requires that the freight should have been within the control of the agent when the facts making the delivery so important were brought to his knowledge, and evidently refers to the one transaction which took place on the 21st of

, and means that the notice then given have been either before or after the sale of the cars, so that the agent knew facts while controlling them." Had it been shown in this case that the failure to deliver the piece of machinery was due to the performance of any duty devolving upon appellant's agent at Marshall, then, under the rule announced in the language quoted, the appellee would have the right to recover special damages. But it is not shown that the freight ever reached Marshall or under the control of the agent at that place. In the absence of evidence sufficient to establish those facts, the notice given to Marshall agent was not notice to the appellee.

The appellee insists that the burden is upon the express company to show affirmatively that the freight did not reach its destination or was not there when Jones gave notice of the damages he was suffering from the delay; and that, it having failed to discharge this burden, we should assume that the machinery had arrived and was within the control of the agent at that place. To do this would be presuming negligence under conditions unwarranted by law. Courts are not called upon to adopt such extreme measures in order to protect shippers from imposition by carriers. In every instance the shipper has it within his power to protect himself against all damages, both general and special, caused by delays or losses in shipment, by giving notice to the carrier when the contract is made. If he fails to avail himself of this privilege, he must suffer the consequences of his own neglect. The carrier has the right to be apprised of the importance of its undertaking and of the consequences that may follow from a failure or delay in the transportation of freight at the time it is called upon to perform the service. It is also insisted by the appellee that he should recover because of the failure of the appellant to notify him that the piece of machinery was lost. Liability for such failure should be determined by the same rules of law that govern in fixing and measuring the damages that might be recovered for losing freight. It is not contended that any fraud or deception was practiced by the Marshall agent. We cannot assume that he knew that the article was lost; and, unless it is shown, there certainly would be no basis for an award of special damages on account of the failure to notify Jones that such was the case.

There is nothing in the record that tends to show that the agent at Marshall was more than the local agent charged merely with the duty of receiving and transmitting the goods delivered to him for shipment over the appellant's line, and of receiving and delivering goods which were consigned to parties at Marshall. We cannot assume that he had any control over any of the other agents in the employ of the appellant at other points on its line. The item of $6 allowed for the time and expense lost and incurred by the appellee in making successive calls for the freight at the appellant's office cannot be allowed, for the additional reason that the evidence fails to show that any notice of the value of that time or the attendant expense or the distance that would have to be traveled in making calls was communicated to the appellant's agent. On the contrary, it appears from the pleadings of the appellee himself that the freight was consigned to the McPhail Hardware Company, whose place of business was in Marshall, and who could probably call without any material loss of time. The item of 75 cents does not appear to have been pleaded by the appellee. While it is among the items in the account, yet it is not alleged in the pleading that such expense was incurred. City of Bowling Green v. Bowling Green Gas Co. (Ky.) 112 S. W. 917.

We think the judgment of the trial court should be reversed, and judgment here rendered in favor of the appellant. The judgment is accordingly reversed and rendered.

LEAZEN v. STATE

(Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. Dec. 9, 1908.)

Appeal from Criminal District Court, Dallas County; W. W. Nelms, Judge.

John Leazen, alias General Kuze, was convicted of an offense, and he appeals. Affirmed.

F. J. McCord, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

DAVIDSON, P. J. The record is before us without a bill of exceptions or statement of facts, and as presented there are none of the questions suggested for reversal which can be revised.

The judgment is affirmed.

DOTY et al. v. MOORE.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. April 2, 1908. On Rehearing, Dec. 3, 1908.)

1. ATTACHMENT (§ 117*)—AFFIDAVITS.

An attachment affidavit averring that the attachment was not sued out to injure or harass the defendants was not defective for failure to negative that the writ was sued out to injure or harass one or less than all the defendants, as required by Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1907, art. 187.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Attachment, Cent. Dig. § 241; Dec. Dig. § 117.*]

2. TRIAL (§ 194*)—INSTRUCTIONS—WEIGHT OF EVIDENCE.

Where, in an action between partners for contribution, one of the defenses was that the partners and the creditor had mutually divided the debt, and that each partner had given security to the creditor for his portion, an instruction that the members of a firm are each liable for all the firm's debts, and that the separation of the indebtedness, etc., did not release the other members of the firm unless the creditor had released the individual members of the firm therefrom, was erroneous, as on the weight of evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Dec. Dig. § 194.*]

3. TRIAL (§ 194*)—INSTRUCTIONS—WEIGHT OF EVIDENCE.

Where, in an action for contribution between partners, it was claimed that the debt had been divided between the partners with the consent of the creditor and security given for the part chargeable to each, and it was proved that each member executed a mortgage to secure his portion of the debt, an instruction that if the agreement was made, and two of the partners were released by the creditor from payment of more than one-fourth each of the debt, and that the other two partners were released from paying more than half of the indebtedness, the jury should find for defendant, was erroneous, as on the weight of the evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Dec. Dig. § 194.*]

4. ASSIGNMENTS (§ 55*)—EXECUTION—CONSIDERATION.

Where plaintiff and C. both testified to an assignment of C.'s claim against defendants in controversy to plaintiff, and that, though nothing had been paid for it, its value was to be considered in a settlement between plaintiff and C., plaintiff acquired C.'s interest in the claim and could recover therefor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Assignments, Dec. Dig. § 55.*]

Appeal from District Court, Jefferson County; E. E. Easterling, Judge.

Action by Sam Moore against N. B. Doty and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Reversed and remanded.

Crook, Da Ponte & Lawhon, for appellants. Fleming & Fleming and Glass, Estes & King, for appellee.

WILLSON, C. J. In 1904 N. B. Doty, H. W. Doty, one Walkinshaw, Sam Moore, and one Corliss were partners as farmers, and as such grew a crop of rice in Jefferson county. They were to share equally in the profits and in the losses. At the end of the year the copartnership was dissolved. For supplies, etc., furnished, it was then indebted to the Port Arthur Rice Milling Company in a sum in excess it seems of $7,000. This indebtedness afterwards was paid in part by N. B. and H. W. Doty, and in part by Moore and Corliss. Claiming that he and Corliss, whose right he had acquired, had paid $2,190.60 more than their proportionate part of the debt, Moore brought his suit against the Dotys and Walkinshaw to recover of them the part of the sum properly chargeable against them. In the same suit Moore sought a recovery on account of threshing he claimed the Dotys and Walkinshaw were liable to pay him for. He procured the issuance of a writ of attachment which was levied upon certain mules, wagons, etc., as the property of the Dotys and Walkinshaw. The property so levied upon was replevied by appellants, the Dotys and Walkinshaw, J. M. Herbert and J. H. Beard becoming the sureties on their replevy bond. On the verdict of a jury in favor of appellee on May 13, 1907, a judgment was rendered in favor of appellee against Walkinshaw and the sureties on the replevy bond for the sum of $1,451.40, against H. W. Doty and said sureties for the sum of $634.20, and against N. B. Doty and said sureties for the sum of $427.63. From the verdict so rendered the Dotys, Walkinshaw, and the sureties on the replevy bond prosecute this appeal.

In his affidavit made to procure the issuance of the writ appellee averred that the attachment was "not sued out for the purpose of injuring or harassing the defendants." On the ground, among others, that the language quoted did not negative the fact that the writ may have been sued out to injure or harass one, or a less number than all, of the defendants, a motion to quash the attachment was urged. It was overruled and the action of the court in overruling it is assigned as error. On the same ground the sufficiency of an affidavit made for a like purpose was questioned in Lumber Co. v. Bank, 91 Tex. 103, 41 S. W. 67. Because in disposing of the case it was not thought necessary to do so, the question was not decided. But the view taken by the Supreme Court of the question was clearly indicated, and we think should be held as controlling in this case. In discussing the question Chief Justice Gaines said: "Could a prosecution for perjury be maintained upon such an affidavit upon proof that the intent was to injure or harass one defendant, and not the others? Unless the intent is to injure or harass both, is the affirmation false? It would seem not, and, if not, the purpose of the statute is defeated." Appellee insists that the reason given for the ruling in the case cited does not apply in this one, because it is made to appear from his affidavit made a part of his answer to the motion to quash the attachment that he in fact did swear in his affidavit made to procure the issuance of the writ that it was "not sued out for the purpose of harassing the defendants or either of them," and that it was due to a clerical error that his affidavit for the writ did not so show. In support of this contention Wells Bros. v. Chipman, 3 Tex. Civ. App. 104, 22 S. W. 225, is relied upon. There the word "plaintiff," instead of the word "plaintiffs," was used in one part of the affidavit. The court said: "It sufficiently appears from the recitals in the affidavit that Lockhart [the affiant] appeared as attorney for the plain-terest in such land, were barred by the statute of limitations, and stale demand, as pleaded by the plaintiffs.

In the trial the defendants, appellants in this court, offered in evidence the transfer indorsed on the bond for title, and which was obscured by the paper pasted over it, as above stated, without proof of its execution. To the introduction of this transfer plaintiffs objected on the grounds "that there was no proof of its execution and delivery in its original or present condition; that it appeared suspicious on its face, and such suspicions were not explained." The trial court sustained the objections, excluded the transfer, and this is made the basis of appellants' first assignment of error. It is contended that, as the transfer was over 30 years of age, it proved itself and needed no explanation, because of the paper pasted over it. We are of the opinion there was no error in the exclusion of this evidence. The rule laid down by Mr. Greenleaf in regard to the admissibility of an ancient instrument, without proof of execution, and which has been approved and followed by the courts of this state, is that such instrument must be free from just grounds of suspicion, must come from the proper custody, and have been acted upon so as to afford some corroborative proof of its genuineness. 1 Greenl. on Ev. § 510; Stroud v. Springfield, 28 Tex. 649. Just what corroborative evidence will be necessary to authenticate the instrument, if there are circumstances of suspicion connected with it, will depend upon the particular facts in each case. The circumstances of corroboration, however, in such case must be at least sufficient to raise a reasonable presumption of genuineness. Stroud v. Springfield, supra. The practical obliteration of the transfer offered in evidence by the paper which had been placed over it cast such doubt and suspicion upon its genuineness as called for a satisfactory explanation of it by appellants. The rule of evidence announced has not been complied with in this case. There is no evidence that the bond for title with the transfer in its original form was delivered to J. O. Hicks and Mary A. Hicks, or to one of them, or was ever in their possession, or in the possession of either of them, in the lifetime of the said J. O. Hicks as an instrument of conveyance. Nor is there any evidence that J. O. Hicks ever claimed the land in controversy under the said transfer; and it is apparent, we think, that his wife, Mrs. Hicks, was not claiming under it. In Holmes v. Coryell, 58 Tex. 680, after laying down the rule with reference to the admissibility of a deed 30 years old substantially as we have stated it above, it is said that such deed "must come from the proper custody, among other reasons, mainly that its delivery may be evidenced by the possession of the person claiming under it." The possession of the land by Hicks and wife antedates the transfer in question about two years, and the evidence tends to show that it began in subordination to the rights of R. B. Tutt, and aside from said transfer, which cannot be considered, we see nothing in the record that would justify the conclusion that the holding of the land by J. O. Hicks and Mrs. Hicks after his death was not consistent with the claim of Mrs. Hicks that her father, R. B. Tutt, gave her said land. The mere fact that the land was inventoried as a part of the estate of J. O. Hicks, in view of the other facts, was insufficient to authorize such conclusion. The burden of explaining the suspicious change made by covering up the transfer was upon appellants, who offered said transfer in evidence, and not upon appellees, as contended by counsel for appellants.

The second and third assignments are to the effect that the trial court erred in finding the property in controversy to have been the separate property of Mary A. Mayfield. We think the evidence is sufficient to support the court's finding. It appears that the legal title to the property in controversy was in the said Mrs. Mayfield and had been for twenty-five years or more before her death, during all of which time she claimed it as her own. It was also shown, without objection, that Mrs. Mayfield stated repeatedly to different persons who testified at the trial that her father gave her the land, and that during her occupancy valuable improvements were made upon it; and consistent with her declarations that she had received the land as a gift and her asserted separate right thereto, and inconsistent with any recognition on her part, or claim of the appellants that said land was the community property of herself and her second husband, J. O. Hicks, she on different occasions and to different persons after the death of the said Hicks sold parcels of said land, apparently dealing with it as her separate property, the deeds to which were placed upon record and possession taken. There is also evidence to the effect that up to the time of Mrs. Mayfield's death appellants never claimed to appellee or to Robert Mayfield that the land in controversy was other than the separate property of Mrs. Mayfield, and seemingly recognized it as such, for that the evidence shows that Robert Mayfield continued to reside on the land after the death of Mrs. Mayfield and divided the rents arising from the land between the appellants and appellee, upon the basis of ownership, as alleged by appellees, which was accepted by them without protest or claim by either that she owned a greater interest; that is, Robert Mayfield paid to appellees one-third of said rents, to Mrs. Morgan one-third, and to Mrs. Witherspoon and Mrs. Workman one-third.

It is also assigned "that the court erred in his fifth conclusion that the defendants were barred by limitation as against any the sureties of a postmaster for loss caused by his embezzlement of money order funds, etc., should be construed with reference to the federal laws imposing a liability upon postmasters in such cases, in determining what constitutes an embezzlement within the contract, and not under the state statutes defining the offense.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Dec. Dig. § 430.*]

3. POST OFFICE (§ 38*)—OFFENSES—"EMBEZZLEMENT" OF MONEY ORDER FUNDS.

Under U. S. Comp. St. 1901, § 4046, making every postmaster guilty of embezzlement who converts to his own use any money order funds, any appropriation of such funds by a postmaster to his own use is embezzlement, regardless of the intent or purpose of the conversion.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Post Office, Dec. Dig. § 38.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 3, pp. 2350-2358; vol. 8, p. 7649.]

4. POST OFFICE (§ 37*)—OFFENSES—ILLEGAL DISPOSITION OF POSTAGE STAMPS—"EMBEZZLEMENT."

Under U. S. Comp. St. 1901, § 4053, making it embezzlement for a postmaster to neglect to account for stamps intrusted to his care, it is not necessary that there be an intent to convert, as under the state statutes; a mere neglect to account for stamps constituting embezzlement.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Post Office, Dec. Dig. § 37.*]

Appeal from Gregg County Court; Edwin Lacy, Judge.

Action by Larkin P. Griffin and others against D. H. Zuber and another. From a judgment for one of defendants, plaintiffs appeal. Reversed and remanded.

Turner & Campbell, for appellants. Young & Stinchcomb, for appellees.

HODGES, J. This is a suit instituted by the appellants, as sureties on the bond of D. H. Zuber, to recover of the Fidelity & Deposit Company the sum of $220.44. The facts show that during the year 1903 D. H. Zuber was appointed postmaster at the town of Kilgore; that the appellants were sureties on his bond as such; that they became such sureties with the understanding that they were to be indemnified against certain liabilities that might arise by reason thereof. Shortly after the induction of Zuber into office, for the purpose of indemnifying the appellants, he executed a bond with the Fidelity & Deposit Company as surety, conditioned: "Whereas, Daniel H. Zuber has been appointed Postmaster at Kilgore, Texas, and whereas, the rules and regulations of the Post Office Department of the United States required said Daniel H. Zuber (hereinafter called 'postmaster') to file with it a bond, with approved sureties, guaranteeing the faithful discharge of all duties incumbent upon him by reason of his appointment as Philip E. Barton, George A. Erwin, William A. Crim and Richard W. Wynn, Jr. (hereinafter called the 'assured'), all of the state of Texas have qualified or consented to qualify as sureties upon said bond, conditioned as above on behalf of said postmaster with the express understanding that a bond of indemnity would be given them, indemnifying them to the extent of the sum of two thousand ($2,000) dollars collectively, and no further, from loss which might accrue to them by reason of any personal act or acts of larceny or embezzlement committed by the said postmaster in the discharge of his duties as postmaster as aforesaid; and whereas, for a valuable consideration the Fidelity & Deposit Company of Maryland (hereinafter called the 'company'), a corporation of the state of Maryland, Baltimore, Maryland, has consented to join with said postmaster in a bond of indemnity, indemnifying said assured, as aforesaid: Now, therefore, in consideration of the foregoing premises, and the payment of five ($5.00) dollars per annum to the company, receipt of which is hereby acknowledged, the said postmaster for himself his heirs, executors and administrators, and the said company for itself, its successors and assigns, jointly and severally, do hereby covenant, promise and agree to indemnify and keep indemnified the said assured to the extent of the sum of two thousand ($2,000) dollars collectively, and no further, during the period beginning December 23, 1903, and ending December 23rd, 1907, from and against any and all loss which they might be put to, incur or suffer, by reason of any personal act or acts of larceny or embezzlement committed by the said postmaster in the performance of the duties of postmaster, and committed during the continuance of this bond and discovered at any time within six months after the expiration or cancellation of this bond, or in case of the death, resignation or removal of the said postmaster from the said office prior to the expiration or cancellation of this bond, within six months after such death, resignation or removal," etc. Zuber remained postmaster at Kilgore until the 21st day of March, 1906, at which time he either resigned or was removed from office. It was then found that he was short in his account with the government in the sum sued for. This sum was paid by his sureties, the appellants in this case; and they bring this suit against Zuber and the Fidelity & Deposit Company for reimbursement.

The testimony shows further that Zuber, as postmaster, kept two accounts—one called "the money order account," of which he was required to make monthly reports to the Post at any time became guilty of the offense of embezzlement within the meaning of the statute governing the duties and prescribing penalties for their violation, he would be amenable to the federal law, and that law should determine the meaning of the word "embezzlement" as used in the bond. Whatever may be the interpretation placed upon the word "embezzlement" in common parlance, or whatever signification it should have in construing the statutes of the different states, we think in this controversy the sense in which it is used in the federal statute governing Zuber's line of duty should be the one to which we must look for the proper construction. Whether or not Zuber is guilty of having embezzled any of the funds committed to his custody must be determined by the laws of the United States made for his guidance in handling those funds. Section 4046, U. S. Comp. St. 1901, provides: "Every postmaster, assistant, clerk or other person employed in or connected with the business or operations of any money order office who converts to his own use in any way whatever, or loans, or deposits in any bank except as authorized by this title, or exchanges for any other funds any portion of the money order funds, shall be deemed guilty of embezzlement." Section 4053 provides that "if any officer, agent, postmaster, clerk or other person employed in any branch of the postal service," etc., "and any person intrusted by law with the sale of postage stamps or of stamped envelopes, who shall refuse or neglect to account for the same, or who shall pledge or hypothecate or unlawfully dispose of them for any purpose, shall be deemed guilty of embezzlement," etc. From the foregoing extracts it will be observed that the offense of embezzlement may arise from two different courses of conduct in regard to public funds. The law undertakes to define specifically the conduct which is prohibited, and then denominates it "embezzlement," and fixes the penalty. It follows, therefore, that, when one is guilty of the acts there denounced, he is guilty of embezzlement within the meaning of the term as used in this bond. Zuber, as the postmaster at Kilgore, was intrusted with money order funds as well as postage stamps and stamped envelopes. If he converted the one, or failed to account for the other, he was guilty of embezzlement. We think section 4046 was intended to absolutely prohibit any appropriation by the postmaster or any other employe of any of the money order funds coming into his hands as such. U. S. v. Gilbert, Fed. Cas. No. 13,205; State v. Silva, 130 Mo. 440, 32 S. W. 1007. So guarded is the law in this respect that it makes it embezzlement to deposit any of the funds in any bank except as authorized by that title, or to exchange them for any the purpose was fraudulent or otherwise. In the first case above cited the court says: "It would seem that the agreed statement of facts substantiates the embezzlement by both these methods, and although it is true that the funds were subsequently paid in to the Cleveland post office, and although it may also be and probably was true that these funds when thus converted were intended and expected to be replaced, so that the government should sustain no loss, which go very far towards mitigating the offense, yet it is obvious that the enforcement of this section in all its strictness is essential to this class of government funds, and to the discouragement of postmasters from even temporarily using them for private purposes. The intention of replacing them, however honestly entertained, cannot be accepted as an excuse or an apology for violating the law, as one may be disappointed by unexpected circumstances, and thus not only endanger the moneys of the government, but involve himself in difficulty and criminal prosecution. The law intends that funds of this character should be kept absolutely separate and sacred as the best method not only of keeping the funds themselves secure, but of guarding the officers themselves from temptation and delinquency. The diversion of money order funds in any way whatever prohibited by this section, or for any time, however short, constitutes embezzlement under this act, and is punishable as such." The conversion of money order funds is the forbidden act; and when that act is knowingly done the offense is complete, it matters not what the intention of the wrongdoer may have been in doing it, or as to making reparation in the future. Section 4053, relating to accounting for postage stamps and stamped envelopes, is equally as guarded in its language. Here even the neglect to account for those articles is made an offense denominated "embezzlement."

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

In view of the facts developed in the trial of this case, and the construction which the court announced in his conclusions of law he had placed upon the term "embezzlement," we think the judgment should be reversed. We think the court was in error in placing so restricted an interpretation upon the term, unless he meant by the language used a criminal intent within the meaning of the federal law which should determine what should constitute embezzlement as applied to the particular facts of this case. It would appear, however, from the authorities upon which he seems to rely, that he adopted the general signification of the term; and, if so, this probably determined the character of the judgment he rendered.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded.

contemplation of the parties at the time, that the show case be allowed only as a premium or inducement for the purchase of the goods and full payment of the debt. The assignment is overruled.

The case is ordered affirmed.

SPRINGMAN v. HAWKINS et al.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Nov. 6, 1908.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1003*)—REVIEW—PREPONDERANCE OF EVIDENCE.

The Supreme Court will not reverse a judgment merely because the record shows that the evidence preponderates in favor of the losing party or against findings, and an assignment of error which only complains that the preponderance of the evidence is against a finding upon which judgment was rendered will not be considered.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3383; Dec. Dig. § 1003.*]

2. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 254*)—VENDOR'S EQUITABLE LIEN.

A vendor who has delivered possession has an equitable lien upon the land for the unpaid purchase money, though he has taken no distinct agreement or separate security for it, and though the deed recites full payment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. § 641½; Dec. Dig. § 254.*]

3. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 281*)—VENDOR EQUITABLE LIEN—WAIVER—BURDEN OF PROOF.

In a suit to enforce a vendor's equitable lien, the burden is on the purchaser to show waiver of the lien.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. § 792; Dec. Dig. § 281.*]

4. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 266*)—VENDOR'S EQUITABLE LIEN—WAIVER—EVIDENCE.

Waiver of a vendor's equitable lien is not shown merely because the clause in the form used providing for the retention of a lien was eliminated in drawing the deed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 713, 723; Dec. Dig. § 266.*]

5. EVIDENCE (§ 419*)—PAROL EVIDENCE—CONSIDERATION FOR DEED.

Parol evidence is admissible to show the real consideration for a deed, a recital in a deed as to the consideration not being conclusive between the original parties; and it is unnecessary to allege fraud, accident, or mistake as a ground for failing to express the full consideration in the deed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 1912; Dec. Dig. § 419.*]

Appeal from District Court, Houston County; Benjamin H. Gardner, Judge.

Action by J. D. Hawkins and another against George Springman. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Aldrich & Crook, for appellant. Adams & Adams, for appellees.

ing that they had sold to appellant 67 acres of land of the Marsh survey, 110 acres of the W. H. L. Burton survey, and 213 acres of the William Watson survey, in Houston county, executing and delivering to him their general warranty deed therefor for the recited consideration of $866.66, and for the further consideration, which was not recited in the deed, of the assumption and agreement by appellant to pay two-thirds of four outstanding vendor's lien notes against the land, that upon the delivery of the deed to appellant he executed and delivered to appellees his check on Robinson Bros. of Palestine for the amount of the recited cash consideration, and immediately went into possession of the land, and then stopped payment of the check, and refused to pay same or any part thereof, and refused to surrender the land to appellees; that the check was protested at the expense of $1.00, and that the check, having been given in part payment for the land, constituted a vendor's lien on the same. They prayed for judgment for their debt and for foreclosure of the lien on the land. Appellant answered, admitting the execution and delivery of the check sued on and that it was given for the purchase money of the land sued for, and for certain personal property situated on the land, and further pleaded that believing he was getting a good and perfect title to the property, free from all liens and incumbrances, he executed and delivered the check in question, but afterwards discovered, and charged the fact to be, that at the date of the sale there was an unsatisfied vendor's lien on the land for the sum of $1,600 and interest, and that since the sale to him the land had been sold in satisfaction of said lien, and that the purchasers of same under the foreclosure proceedings held the superior title, and that appellant's title so acquired by him from appellees had wholly failed; that the appellees had designedly and wrongfully concealed from him the existence of said outstanding vendor's lien notes for the purpose of cheating and defrauding him and of obtaining said sum of $866.66; and that they did actually deceive and lead him to believe that he was getting a good title to the land free from incumbrance. He prayed that, in the event appellees recovered against him on said check, he be given judgment on the warranty for a sum equaling the amount of the check. Appellees by their first supplemental petition charged that appellant had actual notice of the outstanding vendor's lien notes, and had agreed and assumed to pay two-thirds of the amount of same as part of the consideration for the land. The case was tried by the court without a jury and resulted in a judgment for erest, and protest fees; and from the judgment appellant prosecutes this appeal.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

The trial judge filed his findings of fact, which are fully sustained by the evidence in the record, and which findings are as follows:

"(1) I find that the plaintiff sold to defendant certain personal property and land fully described in plaintiff's petition, and that the consideration was the check for $866.66 sued on, and the assumption by the defendant of two-thirds of the $1,600 vendor's lien notes held by Robinson Bros.

"(2) I find that defendant, Springman, knew of the vendor's lien notes held by Robinson, and bought the land subject to such vendor's lien, and that he agreed to pay the part of said notes which Woodworth and Hawkins were bound to pay (that is, two-thirds of such notes) as part of the purchase price that he was to pay for the land, and that he stopped the payment of the check sued on.

"(3) I find that when Springman first raised objection to the trade, which was after the deed was made to him, that the plaintiffs offered to give back the check if he would deed them back the property, and that Springman refused to do this, and that at this time he had suffered no loss, nor had he paid anything on the purchase price. After stopping the payment of the check, Springman contracted to sell the two-thirds interest in said property for $2,000 to A. K. Fretz.

"(4) I find that Springman went into possession of the property and refused to give it up to Hawkins and Woodworth, and has ever since been in possession of all of the property. He has used up much of the personal property, and refuses to pay the check for which this suit is brought.

"(5) I find that the property a two-thirds interest in which was sold to Springman by Hawkins and Woodworth was worth at the time of that sale the sum of $3,000 or more.

"(6) I find that suit was brought by Robinson Bros. and their lien was foreclosed and the land sold, and that Robinson Bros. became the purchasers thereat.

"(7) I find that defendant stopped payment of the check, forcing protest, and refused either to cancel the trade or pay the consideration, and that the costs of protest was $6.10."

By his first and second assignments of error appellant attacks the trial judge's first and second findings of fact, the ground of his contention being that the preponderance of the evidence shows that appellant did not know of the existence of the outstanding vendor's lien notes, and that he did not assume or agree to pay two-thirds of the amount of same.

This court will not reverse a judgment merely because it may appear from the record that the evidence preponderates in favor of the losing party or against the finding party. Appellant's only complaint is that the preponderance of the evidence is against a finding of a trial court, upon which judgment was rendered, is not sufficient to require consideration. Railway v. Lee, 52 Tex. Civ. App. 23, 74 S. W. 349; Railway v. Rowell (Tex. Civ. App.) 45 S. W. 763; Railway v. Holland, 27 Tex. Civ. App. 397, 66 S. W. 68. The assignments will not be considered.

Appellant's third assignment is as follows:

"The court erred in its conclusion of law as follows: 'I find that defendant is bound to plaintiffs for the amount of check, with 6 per cent. interest from its date, and costs of protest. I find that plaintiffs are entitled to their judgment for said amount and foreclosure of their attachment lien, and judgment is entered to that effect'—because the uncontradicted evidence shows that plaintiffs executed and delivered to defendant a warranty deed to the land described in plaintiffs' petition, in which the consideration was recited, the sum of $866.66, and that this deed was written upon a blank in which a vendor's lien was provided for, but that the vendor's lien clause was stricken out of said deed, showing clear intention on the part of both vendors and vendee that no lien existed, and that the recited consideration was the full consideration, and it was not competent to contradict said deed by parol testimony." The evidence shows that the deed recited the payment of $866.66 as the consideration for the land, and that no express vendor's lien was retained; that in payment of said sum appellant gave his check on Robinson Bros., and that through his own initiative the check was not paid on presentment, nor was said sum of money otherwise paid to appellees; that in drawing the deed a blank form of deed was used in which was a clause providing for the retention of an express vendor's lien, but that this clause was stricken out before the deed was executed. It is well-established law that the grantor of land who has delivered possession to the grantee retains an equitable lien upon the land for the unpaid purchase money, although he has taken no distinct agreement or separate security for it, and even though the deed recites that the consideration has been fully paid (Marshall v. Marshall [Tex. Civ. App.] 42 S. W. 354), and it rests upon the vendee, in a suit brought by his vendor to enforce such a lien, to show that the equitable lien with which the land stands charged has been waived. This, we think, was not established in the case under consideration by the mere fact that the clause in the form used, providing for the retention of the lien, was eliminated in drawing the deed. The further contention that parol evidence of the consideration other than that recited in the deed was not admissible is without merit. As said in Johnson v. Elmen, 24 Tex. Civ. App. 45, long-recognized principle of law that parol evidence is admissible to show the real consideration for a deed, and in an action * * * between the original parties to the instrument the recital in the deed of the amount of the consideration is not conclusive, nor is it necessary that allegations of fraud, accident, or mistake should be made to account for the failure to express the full consideration in the instrument. This is a common-law rule, and is well established as is the general rule that parol evidence is inadmissible to contradict or vary the terms of a written instrument. 2 Whart. on Ev. 1044; Greenl. on Ev. §§ 284a, 285; Hitz v. Bank, 111 U. S. 725, 4 Sup. Ct. 613, 28 L. Ed. 577; McLean v. Ellis, 79 Tex. 398, 15 S. W. 394; Allison v. Pilkins, 11 Tex. Civ. App. 655, 33 S. W. 293; Taylor v. Merrill, 64 Tex. 494; Womack v. Womble, 7 Tex. Civ. App. 273, 27 S. W. 154; Garrett v. Robinson (Tex. Civ. App.) 43 S. W. 288; Lanier v. Foust, 81 Tex. 186, 16 S. W. 994."

There being no reversible error presented, the judgment of the district court is affirmed.

Affirmed.

BRANDON v. TEXARKANA & FT. SMITH RY. CO.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Nov. 19, 1908.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 286*)—ACTIONS—QUESTIONS FOR JURY.

In an action against a master to recover for a servant's injuries, plaintiff alleged negligence of the master in requiring him to go under a locomotive boiler and remove a plug therefrom for the purpose of washing the boiler, knowing that it required a skilled person to do such work and knowing plaintiff to be unskilled, and that plaintiff did not know it required a skilled person to safely do the work, and that plaintiff was unacquainted with the construction of the boiler or how to safely remove the plug, and that plaintiff was not aware of the danger to unskilled persons in attempting to remove the plug. Evidence was given that plaintiff was employed as a common laborer to load cinders on cars, and that while he had worked a number of years around railroad offices and shops he had never except once been called upon to wash a locomotive boiler, and that he knew nothing about such work; that, when he was injured, he was told to go into a pit underneath a locomotive and remove a plug from the locomotive, and wash the boiler; that he knew nothing of the dangers of such employment or how to avoid them; that, while endeavoring to perform the work, he was injured by boiling water from the locomotive. Held, that the evidence raised an issue which should have been submitted to the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 1044-1049; Dec. Dig. § 286.*]

2. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 225*)—ASSUMPTION OF RISK.

A servant assumes a risk ordinarily and usually incident to his service, but, if the service he is directed to perform is one not does not assume the risk of dangers incident thereto of which he was ignorant, and which are not patent to persons of ordinary intelligence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 655-658; Dec. Dig. § 225.*]

3. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 156*)—WARNING SERVANT.

A master, in the absence of circumstances suggesting ignorance on the part of a servant, may assume that the servant appreciates risks ordinarily incident to the employment, and the master need not warn the servant about risks of that nature, nor instruct him how to avoid them, but he must warn the servant of dangers incident to a service not within the scope of his employment, and which are not patent to persons of ordinary intelligence, and instruct how to avoid them, and he is not excused from warning and instructing concerning those dangers by the fact that the danger is incident to such service.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 312; Dec. Dig. § 156.*]

Appeal from District Court, Bowie County; P. A. Turner, Judge.

Action by Sterling Brandon against the Texarkana & Ft. Smith Railway Company. From a judgment entered on a directed verdict, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

The action was for damages for personal injuries alleged by appellant, the plaintiff below, to have been suffered by him as the result of negligence on the part of appellee. The trial court peremptorily instructed the jury to find in favor of appellee; and from a judgment entered in accordance with a verdict so finding, this appeal is prosecuted.

In his petition appellant alleged that about August 5, 1906, he was employed by appellee as a common laborer to load cinders on cars under the direction of appellee's foreman, one Gilroy; that on the date mentioned he was required by Gilroy as such foreman to engage in washing boilers and locomotives placed over a pit in appellee's roundhouse used for the purpose, and in performing such service to go into said pit under a boiler so placed, and there remove a plug from the bottom of the boiler; that, in obedience to the directions given him to do so, he went into said pit under said boiler and removed said plug; and that, when he did so, hot water and steam were discharged from the boiler, whereby he was scalded. He further alleged that to so remove said plug was, as was known to appellee, but unknown to him, dangerous work; that to safely remove the plug required the service of a person skilled in such work, and acquainted with the construction of the boiler; that he was not skilled in such labor, and had no knowledge of the way in which the boiler was constructed, and that defendant knew how said boiler was constructed and that an unskilled person could not safely remove the plug, and knew that appellant was unskilled in he boiler was constructed. He further alleged that the engine and boiler he was directed to wash was defective, in that it had no blow-off cock by means of which the hot water and steam could be released and discharged from the boiler without going into the pit and under same. He then alleged, as the specific acts and omissions constituting negligence on appellant's part, the following:

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

"First. In failing to have said engine equipped with a blow-off cock, so that steam and not water might have been released and discharged from said boiler without entering said pit, and going under said boiler and removing said plug with a wrench.

"Second. In requiring and directing plaintiff to go under said boiler and remove said plug, defendant knowing the danger incident thereto, and knowing of plaintiff's want of knowledge of such danger, and in failing to advise plaintiff of the danger, and failing to advise plaintiff of the increased danger by reason of the absence of a blow-off cock, and in failing to direct him how to safely do such work.

"Third. In requiring plaintiff to go under said boiler and remove said plug, knowing that it required a skilled person to safely do so, and knowing plaintiff to be unskilled, and knowing that the plaintiff did not know it required a skilled person to safely do the work, and knowing that the plaintiff was unacquainted with the construction of said boiler, and knowing plaintiff's want of knowledge of how to safely remove said plug, and knowing that the plaintiff was not aware of the danger incident to unskilled persons attempting to remove said plug."

From the evidence it appeared that in August, 1906, when appellant was hurt, appellee had between the rails of its track inside its roundhouse in Texarkana a pit about 3 feet deep, 2½ feet wide, and 60 feet long used in washing boilers of locomotive engines. One Gilroy, as appellee's master mechanic, was in charge of the roundhouse, and employed and discharged men performing service there. Several months before appellant was hurt Gilroy employed him to shovel cinders outside the roundhouse. A few weeks before he was hurt, appellant was transferred from this work to work inside the roundhouse, where, he testified, he cleaned up the office, kept up with the material used to repair cars, raked fire out of the fire pans of engines, etc. Up to the time he was hurt he had never, he testified, washed out but one boiler, and the steam and hot water had been removed from it, and cold water was then running through it. He had worked for 16 years for a railroad at its depot in Little Rock as assistant mail transfer clerk, had worked for a lumber company around its planer and mill, and had worked for appellee as a track or section hand on its line of railroad, but, he testified, had no worked at a roundhouse, and did not know "anything about roundhouse work at all." On the morning he was injured he was directed by Gilroy to wash, or assist one Dell Hudson in washing, a boiler to an engine placed over the pit. As to the circumstances attending the injury suffered by him, appellant testified as follows: "We was short of men that day. * * * Mr. Gilroy told me I had to wash the boilers that morning. I had washed one boiler before that. I never did wash more than one. I did not know anything about boiler washing. I had washed one before that, that they had let the water out and had the cold water running through. * * * Mr. Gilroy told me that morning to go out there and wash that boiler. And I went out there, and couldn't find anywhere to let the water out of it, and I went back and told him about it, and he told me to take a wrench and loose the plug on the side; and I couldn't do that, couldn't get none of those plugs loose on the side. They was all gummed up so tight. He told me to go down in the pit and see if I could get one loose, * * * to take the wrench and a hammer and go down in the pit and beat on it, and see if I could knock the rust off, so I could turn it. * * * He did not tell me anything, after I told him there wasn't any place, no blow-off pipe, to let the water out, just told me to go down in the pit and see if I could loose the plug down there, and let it out. I did that. I went down in the pit and loosed the plug, and about the time that * * * I made one turn on it, and Dell (Hudson) was up there on the bank, looking down on me, and he hollered at me, and by that time the water and the pressure of the hot water and steam scalded this arm and this side and both legs as I crawled out of the pit. I did not know it was dangerous to go down in that pit and unloose that plug. They had blowed off the steam on the engine that morning. * * * I didn't know how long it took the water to cool. I thought it was about cool. As to how it came out when I unloosed the plug, why, it just blowed out. The mud blew all in my face so I couldn't see." On his cross-examination appellant testified that he went to work at about 7 o'clock on the morning he suffered the injury, and had not been working longer than about 30 minutes when he heard the engine blowing off steam; that it was between 9 and 10 o'clock on that morning when he was injured; that he didn't know when he went in the pit to remove the plug whether the water in the boiler was then hot or not, but knew it was hot when the steam was blowing off two or three hours before that time; that Gilroy didn't tell him the way to let the water out was to loosen the plug while in the pit, and then get out of the pit and remove it, but that Dell Hudson did tell him that was the way to do it to keep from getting wet, and that that was the way he in the pit to loosen the plug, and then get out of the pit and unscrew it until it came out. From the testimony of the witnesses Linam and Gilroy it appeared that the plug was tapering in shape, and made to fill a hole $2\frac{1}{2}$ inches across. To keep the boiler from leaking it was necessary to screw in the plug very tight, and the plug, it seems, was shaped to taper, so that the further it was screwed in the tighter it would get. The force of the steam came on the plugs. "Sometimes when they are in tight," testified Gilroy, "they are hard to get out. After you get it started, why you can screw it out with your fingers." As to the shape of the plug appellant testified: "As to the small end of the plug, or the end where it starts, starting in very loose, and not being as large as the back or shoulder part. I never noticed about that." There was testimony that boiler washing was a trade or business distinct from common labor like that appellant testified he was employed to do, and that in doing it there was danger of getting burned or scalded. Gilroy testified that he knew that the water in the boiler was hot at the time appellant was engaged in removing the plug.

Thos. N. Graham and Hart, Mahaffey & Thomas, for appellant. Glass, Estes & King, for appellee.

WILLSON, C. J. (after stating the facts as above). On the allegations of negligence made in the third paragraph of the specifications set out in the above statement, we think the evidence raised an issue which should have been submitted to the jury. As the law is, appellant, of course, should be held to have assumed the risks ordinarily and usually incident to the service he contracted to perform for appellee. The latter had a right, in the absence of circumstances suggesting ignorance thereof on the part of appellant, to assume he understood and appreciated those risks, and should not be held to have owed him the duty to warn him about same nor to instruct him how to avoid them. But, if the service Gilroy directed him to perform and which he was engaged in performing at the time he was injured was a service not embraced within the scope of his contract with appellee, appellant should not be held to have assumed dangers incident thereto of which he was ignorant and which were not patent to persons of ordinary intelligence, and appellee should not be held to have been excused from the duty of warning him of their existence and instructing him how to avoid them. The reason generally assigned as a basis for the doctrine of risk assumed on the part of the employé, that by seeking the employment he holds himself out as qualified by the necessary experience and knowledge to perform its duties, does not exist where he is required by the master to he contracted to perform. And the risks of such added service cannot be said to have been contemplated by the servant at the time he sought the employment covered by his contract, and his compensation cannot be said to have been fixed with reference to them. As to such added service the employé should be held to have assumed only such risks incident thereto as were known to him at the time or as should be said to have been obvious to a person of ordinary intelligence. As to other risks, the employer should be held to owe him the duty to warn and instruct him. 1 Labatt's Master & Servant, §§ 240, 460, 270; Railway Co. v. Newman, 27 Tex. Civ. App. 77, 64 S. W. 790; Railway Co. v. Wrenn, 9 Tex. Civ. App. 628, 50 S. W. 210; Oil Co. v. White (Tex. Civ. App.) 54 S. W. 432; Railway Co. v. Utley, 27 Tex. Civ. App. 472, 66 S. W. 311; Railway Co. v. Renz, 24 Tex. Civ. App. 335, 59 S. W. 280. "So far," says Mr. Labatt, "as the essential fact of an increase of danger is concerned, it is obvious that this situation may be brought about by the transfer of the servant to a new environment, or by the imposition of new duties in the old environment, no less than by a change in the inherent quality or in the arrangement of the instrumentalities themselves, or of the materials handled. It follows, therefore, that when the servant is thus required to work amidst new surroundings or to undertake new duties, the master becomes at once chargeable with the obligation of giving him instructions in any case where there is a real augmentation of the risk, owing to the fact that the servant has not sufficient experience or intelligence to enable him to safeguard himself." Master & Servant, § 240. In such a case the master has not the right to assume that the servant understands and appreciates the danger incident to the added service. 1 Labatt's Master & Servant, § 460. It would seem, therefore, that if washing or assisting in washing the boiler was not a service embraced within the terms of appellant's employment, and if the dangers incident to the work were not obvious and were not known to appellant, it was appellee's duty to warn him of the dangers to be encountered in doing the work, and to instruct him how to avoid those dangers. And it would follow, if there was evidence tending to establish such a state of the case, and an absence of a warning to appellant, that the peremptory instruction complained of should not have been given. Viewing the record, as we think it should be viewed, from the standpoint most favorable to appellant, and without tending in the least to intimate the weight which should have been given to it by the jury, we think it must be said that there was such evidence. The witnesses Linam and Hudson testified that boiler washing was a trade or calling in itself. Appellant testified that he was employed to work as a common laborer around the roundhouse, and not as a of foreclosure of his mortgage, which was accordingly done, and judgment entered for plaintiff thereon, from which this appeal prosecuted.

The appellant urges by his first assignment at the court below erred in the trial of a cause in excluding all the evidence offered by him tending to prove each and all the allegations of his cross-bill, and in remptorily instructing the jury to find a verdict against him thereon. It will therefore be seen that the question raised is whether or not the fact of appellant's having given a mortgage which authorized the plaintiff to take possession of the engine with the usual power of selling same in default of payment of his debt would preclude defendant from recovering damages for the seizure of the same by sequestration upon showing that the grounds stated to obtain the writ were untrue, and, further, that the same was maliciously sued out, by reason of which defendant suffered damages. This question has been heretofore determined adversely to appellant's contention. In the case of Wedig v. San Antonio Brewing Ass'n et al., 25 Tex. Civ. App. 158, 60 S. W. 567, Justice Collard, in delivering the opinion of the court, said among other things: "It will be seen by the terms of the mortgages that the brewing company, defendant, had the right to take possession of the property, and sell it to pay the debt secured thereby, or any part of the debt. The petition shows that the debt had not been paid in full, and the right to take the property into possession cannot be questioned. The exercise of that right and securing it by process of the court could not be ground for damages"—citing Harling v. Creech, 88 Tex. 300, 81 S. W. 357. The Wedig Case was one in which, as in this, the plaintiff had executed a mortgage for the security of a debt, and the defendant, the debt being past due, had sued out a writ of sequestration and taken possession of the property thereunder, and the suit was brought by the plaintiff to recover damages for the alleged illegal suing out of said writ, and depriving him of possession of said property by reason thereof; the court saying, further, in said opinion that the defendant is only charged with doing an act which the contract declared it could do, and it is difficult to see how it would render itself liable for doing it. In the case of Singer Manuf. Co. v. Rios, 96 Tex. 174, 71 S. W. 215, 60 L. R. A. 143, 97 Am. St. Rep. 901, on certified question from this court to the Supreme Court, it was held that the provision in a chattel mortgage that the mortgagee may enter the mortgagor's premises and take possession of property on default of payment is valid and constitutes a defense against an action for trespass in so taking even though without the consent of the mortgagor; and Judge Gaines in reviewing the case of Harling v. Creech, supra, held that that case announced a correct doctrine. We therefore think that there was no error on the part of the trial judge in excluding said testimony so offered by defendant, and in directing a verdict in behalf of plaintiff, as he did, and therefore overrule this assignment.

Appellee urges an affirmance of the judgment of the court below with damages, and insists that the record discloses a manifest purpose on the part of appellant to delay the enforcement of the judgment of the court below by resorting to an appeal and the suspension of the execution of said judgment without any reasonable cause for complaint against the same. Nothing is shown in support of this contention except that the appeal bond and transcript were filed by appellant, respectively, on the last days that the same could lawfully have been filed, and that no briefs were filed in the court below and none were filed in the appellate court at the time of the filing of the transcript. Appellant before the submission of this cause, however, had duly prepared and filed his brief herein, and no postponement of the cause was occasioned by his failure to file said brief. The law having given the appellant a definite time within which to file his appeal bond and transcript, and the same having been filed within that time notwithstanding the fact that each of these acts was done on the very last day on which he had the right to do them, still we do not believe that these facts alone would constitute such delay on his part as would justify the belief that the appeal was taken merely for delay; and, so believing, we decline to sustain appellee's contention and overrule the same.

Believing no error has been shown in the action of the trial court, its judgment is affirmed.

LOUISIANA & T. LUMBER CO. v. DUPUY et al.†

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Oct. 24, 1908.
Rehearing Denied Dec. 3, 1908.)

1. BOUNDARIES (§ 46*)—LOCATION BY PARTIES.

Where the exact location of a boundary line is uncertain, and it is located by an agreement of the abutting owner, knowledge on the part of a person who subsequently purchases a part of the property that the agreed line is not the true line will not defeat his right to hold to said line if he purchases on the faith of such agreement.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Boundaries, Cent. Dig. §§ 222, 250; Dec. Dig. § 46.*]

2. BOUNDARIES (§ 41*) — ESTABLISHMENT — TRIAL.

In an action by a purchaser of property to try title to land lying between a boundary line previously fixed by former owners and the

† For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

† Application for writ of error dismissed by Supreme Court for want of jurisdiction.

versy, believing it belonged to such survey, in good faith, paying value therefor, and acted on the agreement fixing the location of said line, not knowing of any mistake, if there was mistake, then the owners of the other survey would be estopped to deny that the boundary line was not properly located. There was no evidence in the case tending to show that defendant at the time of its purchase had any notice of any mistake in the location of the agreed line. Held, that the instruction did not mislead the jury into the belief that, unless defendant was shown to have purchased without knowledge of any such mistake, it could not find that plaintiffs were estopped to dispute the agreed line.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Boundaries, Cent. Dig. § 41.*]

3. BOUNDARIES (§ 46*)—ESTABLISHMENT—LOCATION BY PARTIES.

Where an uncertain boundary between two surveys is fixed by agreement of the owners, and defendant purchased the land on one side of the agreed line believing that the same belonged to the survey owned by his vendor, and in good faith paid value therefor, and acted on the agreement locating the line, not knowing that there was any mistake, the owners of the other survey would be estopped to deny that the boundary line fixed by agreement was not properly located.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Boundaries, Cent. Dig. §§ 222, 250; Dec. Dig. § 46.*]

4. BOUNDARIES (§ 46*) — ESTABLISHMENT — AGREEMENTS.

After an uncertain boundary line had been fixed by agreement of the abutting owners, one of them sold to defendant, and an action was subsequently brought by a purchaser of the property on the opposite side of the line to try title to the strip of land between the line as fixed by agreement and the original line. Held, that an instruction to find for defendant if the boundary line was fixed by agreement as alleged, regardless whether the purchaser of the property on the other side of the line at the time of his purchase knew of the agreement fixing such line, was properly refused.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Boundaries, Cent. Dig. §§ 222, 250; Dec. Dig. § 46.*]

5. BOUNDARIES (§ 33*)—ESTABLISHMENT—EVIDENCE.

After the location of an indefinite line separating two surveys had been fixed by agreement by the adjoining owners, defendant purchased property in one survey, believing that the line so fixed was the proper line. Plaintiffs, who were the successors in interest of the purchaser of the other survey, brought an action to try title to the strip between the agreed line and the original line. Defendant claimed that plaintiffs were estopped to dispute the line as located by the agreement. Held, that the burden was upon defendant to show that at the time plaintiffs' predecessor purchased the property he had knowledge of the agreement.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Boundaries, Cent. Dig. § 151; Dec. Dig. § 33.*]

6. BOUNDARIES (§ 41*) — ESTABLISHMENT — TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS.

An indefinite line between two surveys was fixed by agreement of the owners and defendant purchased the interest of one owner, believing that the line so fixed was the proper line. Subsequently plaintiffs' predecessor in interest purchased the land in the other survey, and plaintiffs brought an action to try title to the land between the original line and the line as agreed on. Held, that instructions ignoring plaintiffs'

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Boundaries, Dec. Dig. § 41.*]

7. TRIAL (§ 255*)—INSTRUCTIONS—REQUEST—NECESSITY—BURDEN OF PROOF.

The failure of the trial court to charge that the burden of proof was on plaintiff is not reversible error, in the absence of a request by defendant to so charge.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 627–631; Dec. Dig. § 255.*]

8. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 242*)—BONA FIDE PURCHASERS—BURDEN OF PROOF.

The burden is on the party asserting equitable title against a legal title to show that when the legal title was acquired, the purchaser had notice of the equity sought to be asserted.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 603–605; Dec. Dig. § 242.*]

Appeal from District Court, Houston County; Benjamin H. Gardner, Judge.

Action by Mrs. Wiley Dupuy and others against the Louisiana & Texas Lumber Company. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants' appeals. Affirmed.

Nunn & Nunn, for appellants. Aldrich & Crook, for appellees.

PLEASANTS, C. J. This is a suit by the appellees, the widow and heirs at law of M. C. Dupuy, deceased, to recover 9.7 acres of land alleged to be a part of the Allen Latham survey, in Houston county. The suit is brought in the form of an action of trespass to try title, but the only issues raised by the evidence are those of boundary and estoppel.

Plaintiffs were entitled to recover the land sued for if it was a part of the Latham survey, unless they were estopped from such recovery by facts pleaded by defendant. Defendant claimed the land is a part of the S. Hudson survey, which is the older of the two surveys, and the line of which is called for in the field notes of the Latham as one of its boundary lines. It is further alleged in defendant's answer: "That there was uncertainty and confusion as to the true location of said boundary line, and that on account of the confusion of the calls in the patent of the said S. Hudson survey, and the uncertainty as to its true boundary lines heretofore, to wit, on or about _____ day of _____, 1900, and just before the defendant Louisiana & Texas Lumber Company purchased the land in this suit, and with the view of making said purchase from the then owners of the said S. Hudson survey, as part of the Allen Latham survey, it became necessary that the dividing lines between these two surveys should be established and agreed upon by the parties concerned as a condition on which the said Louisiana & Texas Lumber Company would purchase the same and to this end and to this purpose B. F.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Index.

for defendant to prevail in its equitable claim growing out of the estoppel alleged to have arisen from the agreement as to the boundary line, the burden was upon it to show that at the time M. C. Dupuy purchased he had knowledge of such agreement. Edwards v. Brown, 68 Tex. 329, 4 S. W. 380, 5 S. W. 87; Baldwin v. Root, 90 Tex. 552, 40 S. W. 3; Fordtran v. Perry (Tex. Civ. App.) 60 S. W. 1000.

The assignments from No. 4 to No. 7, inclusive, complain of the refusal of the court to give special charges requested by the defendant. All of these charges ignore appellees' right to recover, regardless of the agreement as to the location of the boundary line, provided it was not shown that M. C. Dupuy at the time he purchased had knowledge of such agreement, and for that reason were properly refused. There is no reversible error in the failure of the court to charge that the burden of proof in this case was upon plaintiffs. If such a charge was proper in this case, the failure of the court to give it would not, in the absence of a request therefor, constitute reversible error.

The eighth assignment complains of the verdict on the ground that it is not supported by the evidence, in that the undisputed evidence shows that the boundary line between the Hudson and Latham surveys had been fixed by agreement between the owners of said surveys, and, as so fixed, the land in controversy was a part of the Hudson survey, and that M. C. Dupuy knew of this agreement at the time he purchased. The statement under this assignment does not support it, in that it does not show that M. C. Dupuy had notice of the agreement as to the location of the boundary line at the time he purchased. The statement is that there was no evidence that Dupuy did not have notice of the agreement at the time he purchased. As before stated, this was not sufficient to defeat Dupuy's title. No rule is more fully settled by the decisions of this state than that which requires a party asserting an equitable against a legal title to show that at the time the legal title was acquired the purchaser thereof had notice of the equity sought to be asserted against it. The cases cited by appellant Linnartz v. McCulloch (Tex. Civ. App.) 27 S. W. 279, Bremner v. Case, 60 Tex. 153, and Rogers v. Petrus, 80 Tex. 427, 15 S. W. 1093, are all cases in which a junior title was asserted against a senior; and the holding in such cases that it devolved upon the purchaser of the junior title, in order to establish his claim, to show that he purchased without knowledge of the senior title, is not only not in conflict with the rule above stated, but is in harmony therewith. In all of these cases the holder of the senior title held the superior legal title, and purchased without notice of the senior recorded deed.

We are of the opinion that the judgment of the court below should be affirmed, and it has been so ordered.

Affirmed.

SWOPE v. LIBERTY COUNTY BANK & C.
(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Nov. 11, 1908. Rehearing Denied Dec. 2, 1908.)

1. EVIDENCE (§ 411*)—PAROL EVIDENCE—VARYING CONTRACTS—INCOMPLETE CONTRACTS.

Parol evidence is generally inadmissible to vary or contradict the terms of a written instrument, but if the contract, as expressed in the writing, is incomplete, parol evidence is admissible between the parties to show the entire agreement; but, where a part of the contract is expressed in writing, with the intention that it shall be complete as to that part, the general rule is applicable to that part of the contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 1874-1899; Dec. Dig. § 411*.]

2. EVIDENCE (§ 397*)—PAROL EVIDENCE—AFFECTING WRITINGS—PRESUMPTION AS TO COMPLETENESS.

If an element of a transaction is mentioned or covered by a writing, it is assumed that the writing was meant to embrace the whole intention of the parties on that element, so that parol evidence is inadmissible to vary it; but, if a particular element is not mentioned, it is assumed that the writing was not intended to embrace that part of the transaction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 1756-1765; Dec. Dig. § 397*.]

3. EVIDENCE (§ 411*)—PAROL EVIDENCE—AFFECTING WRITINGS—VARYING CONTRACTS—COMPLETE CONTRACTS.

An applicant for an insurance policy gave his note for the first premium when the policy was issued, and as a part of the contract secured a statement reciting the payment of the note, and the agent's receipt therefor, and the receipt provided that it should not be valid unless the applicant was promptly examined by the company's medical examiner, the payment to be returned if the policy was refused on examination. The applicant refused to take the examination, and in an action to recover the amount of the note, sought to show that the note and agreement were executed under a verbal agreement with the company's agent that the applicant might investigate the policy offered, and, if satisfactory, would accept it, and that the company refused the issue of the policy offered by the agent. Held, that the contract being complete on its face, and covering the entire transaction, the parol evidence offered to vary it was inadmissible.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 1874-1899; Dec. Dig. § 411*.]

Appeal from Liberty County Court; I. S. Simmons, Judge.

Action by the Liberty County Bank against T. C. Swope and Robert E. Bowen, in which each of defendants filed a cross-action against the other. From a judgment for plaintiff against both defendants and in favor of defendant Bowen on his cross-action and against the defendant Swope on his cross-action.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Index.

tur affirmed, and judgments in the cross-movements reversed, and judgment directed for plaintiff on his cross-action.

evens & Pickett, for appellant. J. F. Mey and Marshall & Marshall, for appellee.

HILL, J. The Liberty County Bank sued Robert E. Bowen, as the maker, and T. C. Swope, as the indorser, on a negotiable promissory note made by the former to the latter, December 17, 1906, for $329.40, payable January 1, 1907, with interest from maturity at the rate of 8 per cent. per annum, and for 10 per cent. additional if not paid at maturity, and collected by an attorney or by proceedings. Plaintiff's petition is in ordinary form, alleging that the note, at maturity, was transferred by the payee bank for a valuable consideration. Defendant answered by a general denial and, admitting the execution of the note to Swope, the answer contains a cross-bill against him, in which it is alleged: That the note was deliverable to take effect as an obligation only in accordance with a verbal agreement and contract, made between him and Swope, to whom the note was executed. That the circumstances under which it was made and the agreement were, substantially, that the note was intended to be used as the first premium due on an insurance policy, if Bowen decided to take out a policy in the Mutual Life Insurance Company, which Swope was then representing as its agent; that at the time it was signed it was agreed between him and Swope that he should examine and investigate a proposition of insurance offered him by Swope in said company, upon investigation, he (Bowen) decided to accept the insurance, he would make application therefor by taking and submitting to the insurance company an examination of his physical condition, and, in the event he should do so and be accepted by the company, the note would become of full legal effect. That it was further agreed that Swope should hold the note on the condition, and not negotiate the same until Swope should be advised and notified (Bowen) that the proposition of insurance offered had been accepted and an application taken; and that Swope expressly and stipulated with him to hold the note on the conditions and for the purpose stated. That within a reasonable time after the investigation of Swope's proposition regarding to taking out the insurance, Bowen learned it was impossible of performing the insurance company, and that it was impossible to issue a policy granting and carrying out Swope's flattering offers. Whereupon Bowen immediately notified Swope that he would not accept such proposition, nor take the examination, and requested him to return the note. Bowen then learned that Swope, without transferring and selling the note was wrongful, and, in violation of said contract, was effected by Swope for the purpose of defrauding him, and that he is informed and believes that plaintiff purchased the note in the usual course of trade for a valuable consideration, without notice of his equities, and is an innocent holder thereof. That by reason of the premises the note was only conditionally delivered to take effect, and that he (Bowen) had the right under said agreement to reject the note and thereby prevent it from becoming an obligation, and that, in his exercise of such right, the note became void and of no effect as between him and Swope. The answer concluded with a prayer that, in the event plaintiff should recover against him, he have judgment over against Swope for the amount recovered and for costs, etc. The defendant Swope answered Bowen's cross-bill by general and special exceptions, a general denial, and pleaded specially: That the note sued on was executed on the day it bears date for the sum of money therein stated, and was thereafter, before maturity, for value assigned by him to plaintiff. That when executed, he was agent of the State Mutual Life Insurance Company, and that through him, as such agent, Bowen made application to the company for a life insurance policy in the sum of $10,000, which application was in writing and signed by him. That at the time, and as a part of the same transaction, Bowen executed the note in payment of the first premium due on the policy, and, in addition thereto, and as a part of the same contract, a further written agreement in writing was made between him, as agent for the insurance company, and Bowen, which is substantially as follows: "Statement to be Signed by Applicant upon Payment of Premium, or Any Part Thereof. Dated at Devers, Texas. Dec. 15, 06. I hereby declare that I have paid to T. C. Swope $329.40, and that I hold his receipt for same, corresponding in number hereto, on the form used by the Mutual Life Insurance Company, on application for insurance, and that I agree to the terms of said receipt. No. 44931. [Signature of Applicant] Robert E. Bowen." And that the said receipt mentioned was at the same time signed by this defendant as agent of said company, and delivered to the said defendant, Bowen, the same being in writing and constituting a part of said agreement and contract, and is in substance as follows, to wit: "Received from Robert E. Bowen, at Devers, state of Texas, this 15 day of December, 1906, the sum of three hundred & twenty nine & 40/100 dollars, the sum declared by applicant in his application to have been paid, on the following conditions and agreements: First. That if a policy be issued on the application for insurance made by the above, this day, to the State Mutual Life Insurance Company, correspond-company shall accept this receipt towards payment of the first premium on the said policy. Second. That this receipt will not be valid if issued for any sum in excess of the sum declared by applicant in such application to have been paid; it will not be valid if erasures or additions have been made in the printed form; and it will not be valid unless the person to whom it is issued is promptly examined by an examiner of the State Mutual Life Insurance Company. Third. That if a policy be not issued on said application within sixty days from this date (and only in that event) said sum will be returned on surrender of this receipt to the company. Fourth. That the liability of the company under this receipt shall not exceed the sum declared by the applicant in his application to have been paid, and that this receipt is non-negotiable, and cannot be assigned or transferred. No. 44931. [Agent must sign here] Tom C. Swope, Agent." That according to the terms of said contract, Bowen was to promptly submit himself to an examination to a physician acting as examiner for the company, and if the examination proved satisfactory to the company, the policy applied for would be issued to him in accordance with the terms of said contract; but that Bowen, after entering into said contract, delayed and postponed and finally refused to have himself examined, although Swope repeatedly requested him to be, in order that the company could determine whether it would accept his application, rendering it impossible for defendant Swope, as agent of the company, to comply with and carry out the terms of the written contract, which he would have performed had Bowen complied with his agreement in regard to having himself examined, as was incumbent on him before the policy could be issued. This answer concluded with a prayer that, in the event plaintiff recovered against defendant Swope by reason of his indorsement of the note, he have judgment over against his codefendant for such sum as should be adjudged against him (Swope) in plaintiff's favor, for costs, etc.

Bowen replied to this answer of Swope, by a general demurrer and general denial. The case was tried before a jury, and resulted in a judgment in favor of plaintiff against both defendants, and in favor of defendant Bowen on his cross-action over against Swope for the amount adjudged in favor of the bank against the former as maker of the note sued on. From this judgment in favor of Bowen against him, Swope has appealed.

The undisputed evidence shows that the note sued on, the application for insurance, and the receipt described in the answer of Swope, were all executed at the same time and place, were parts of the same transaction between Swope, as agent of the insurance company on the one hand, and Bowen on the other, in regard to the contemplated written instruments, and that the three documents, taken as a whole, expressed the written agreement between the parties in regard to the contemplated insurance for which the note was given in payment of the first premium.

The contention of appellant under his first and second assignments of error is that these writings, when taken together, constitute a complete and entire contract, plain and unambiguous, the terms of which cannot be varied or contradicted by a contemporaneous parol agreement between the parties, and that therefore the court erred in admitting the testimony offered by the appellee to prove the allegations in his cross-bill as to the verbal agreement made between the parties at the time the note was executed. Such testimony having been admitted over the objection of appellant embodied in the assignments, we can see no escape of the appellee Bowen from this contention. Unquestionably, the three instruments referred to are parts of the same transaction, and, as between the appellant and Bowen, are to be viewed as an entirety, just as though they were all written together on the same piece of paper for the purpose of expressing the terms of the agreement between them. It is a general rule that parol contemporaneous evidence is inadmissible to contradict or vary the terms of a valid written instrument. If, however, all the terms of a contract, such as would make it complete, are not expressed in the writing, parol evidence is admissible between the parties for the purpose of showing the entire agreement between them. But where a part of a transaction has been embodied in a single writing, with the intention that it shall express the agreement as to such part of it, the rule against disputing the terms of the document is applicable to so much of the transaction as is so embodied. If the particular element in the transaction upon which parol evidence is offered is mentioned, corrected, or dealt with in the writing, then presumably the writing was meant to represent all the transaction on that element. If it is not, then probably the writing was not intended to embody that element of the transaction. Wigmore on Ev. § 2430. Applying this test to the writings, taken as a single instrument, it is apparent that it was intended to evidence the facts that application had been made by Bowen to the insurance company, represented by Swope as its agent, for an insurance policy on his life; that the applicant was to stand a medical examination satisfactory to the company before the policy would be issued; that the note sued upon was executed for the first premium due; that it was taken and considered as so much money to be appropriated by Swope to the payment of the premium in the event of Bowen's standing the satisfactory examination within the time designated, with the understanding that it less he alleges and proves that he has sustained some special injury thereby which is different in kind and degree from that which results to the public at large. 2 Cooley on Torts, pp. 1292-1294; Jones on Easements, par. 543. In this suit the special injuries relied upon consist in the permanent injury to the freehold—the depreciation in the market value of the realty. This is the only injury alleged or proven. It therefore follows that unless the condition and proximity of the excavation not only interfere with the legitimate travel upon the avenue to such an extent as to interrupt its free use, but the conditions by which this is produced are permanent and not subject to be remedied, then there was no evidence which could have been made the basis for a recovery of the damages sought. It is only when the injury is permanent, or the nuisance complained of is from its nature permanent, that the damages are to be measured by the depreciation in the market value of the realty affected. Rosenthal v. Railway Co., 79 Tex. 328, 15 S. W. 268; Sanders v. Miller (recently decided by this court) 113 S. W. 996; Beatrice Gas Co. v. Thomas, 41 Neb. 662, 59 N. W. 925, 43 Am. St. Rep. 711. In the case last above cited the court said: "The inquiry should have been as to whether or not the defendants had caused a permanent and irremediable injury to plaintiff's property. If so, he was entitled to compensation in this action for all injury, present or prospective. If, on the other hand, the injury was temporary in its character, and capable of being avoided in the future without permanent injury to the plaintiff's freehold, the case was one of a continuing nuisance, and damages should have been restricted to the commencement of the action."

In those cases where the depreciation in the market value of the realty is made the basis of measuring the damages, a recovery is permitted for prospective, as well as present, injuries. This is justified solely upon the theory that, so far, at least, as the complaint is concerned, the conditions which have caused the injury are lasting and irremediable. Applying that rule of law to the facts here involved, it will be seen that it is not enough to warrant a recovery in this case that it be shown that Britton avenue is menaced by a dangerous nuisance, but it must further appear that this situation is necessarily or in all probability permanent. Here we must distinguish between the cut or excavation as a fixture, and the danger arising from its proximity to the highway in an unguarded condition. While the railway company had the right to make the excavation in the manner it did, because it was guilty of negligence, not necessarily in making the excavation, but in not restoring the highway to a safe condition by sufficiently guarding travelers against the precipice. It will not be contended that the maintenance of this excavation in an unguarded condition was essential to the proper and legitimate use of its property by the railway company. If the highway bordering thereon is rendered unsafe for travel, we see no reason why the company at the instance of the proper parties, those receiving special injury, may not be compelled to restore it to a safe condition. The facts in evidence in this case, if found sufficient to show an interference with travel on Britton avenue, present a situation which can be remedied, or a nuisance that may be abated. Sanders v. Miller (recently decided by this court) 113 S. W. 996, and cases cited. For those reasons no damages are recoverable for prospective injuries, such as are necessarily implied when the depreciation in the market value of the realty is made the basis; and in this case, no other special injuries having been alleged or proven, there was no issue upon which a jury would have been authorized to pass.

We need no better illustration of an injustice made possible by erroneously adopting the depreciation of the realty as a measure of damages in this class of cases than is here presented. If the precipice caused by the railway excavation is a menace to travel upon Britton avenue so grave as to practically amount to an obstruction of that highway, the undisputed facts show that this condition may be remedied, either by the appellants, or other interested parties, constructing a fence or a sufficient guard along the south line of the avenue, between it and the excavation, or by compelling the railway company to erect and maintain a sufficient guard. This might be done as well after as before appellants had obtained a judgment for permanent injury to their realty as before. They would not be compelled to remain idle and permit the obstruction to continue merely because they had recovered such a judgment for future damages. Thus we would have damages awarded for injuries that never accrue.

There is no evidence going to show that travel on Britton avenue had ceased or had been lessened by the presence of the excavation. One of the appellants' witnesses testified that it was impassable by reason of the ditch or drain caused by some of the property owners concentrating the flow of water across the avenue toward the cut.

We do not think there is any good reason for changing our former holding, and the motion for rehearing is therefore overruled.

in contemplation of her approaching death, as would give the said Peter W. Peterson a portion thereof greater than he would have received by her voluntary disposition. To this end the said Peter W. Peterson, who is masterful and overbearing in character, and his said accomplices, excluded from access to his said mother all of her other children, who were then within such a distance as to have enabled them to have visited her, and withheld from all of them information as to her true condition up to her death, and admitted none to see her except those who were indifferent, or those who were conspiring with him for the said purpose; that said Peter W. Peterson falsely insinuated to his mother that she had been cheated and defrauded in the sale of her interest in certain Texas lands to five of her children, and awed and intimidated her with threats of placing her under guardianship as incompetent, and deprived her of the advice and consolation of her other children, which she greatly needed, and, while thus subdued and under his exclusive influence, persuaded her that unless some special provision was made for him he, under the laws of Texas, would be cut off from an equal share with the other children of the paternal and maternal inheritance, whom he falsely represented as intending such course. Moreover, the said Christine Peterson had long been partly deaf, and was illiterate, and had lost her memory, and all of her faculties were so impaired as to render her incapable of the ordinary means of communication with others in respect of business matters on October 16, 1902. If the said Peter W. Peterson on said date obtained any apparent consent to or acquiescence in any form of transfer to himself of said instruments, it was such as resulted from her physical and mental impairment, as aforesaid, and from said fraud and from undue influence, as above alleged, and not from the true consent of said Christine Peterson, and that only such persons were present at the time thereof as were so conspiring, as aforesaid, with said Peter W. Peterson. That the two notes in controversy constitute about four-elevenths of all the property of the said Christine Peterson which she owned on and prior to October 16, 1902, and at the time of her death. That the said Christine Peterson had five children besides the said Peter W. Peterson and this defendant, and that her affection for all of them was such as to render it her true will that all of her children should share equally in her estate after her death. That there was no valuable consideration for the transfer of the said notes to Peter W. Peterson, and that the said Peter W. Peterson is a man about 10 times the wealth of his said mother, while she had several children who had no property or wealth whatever. That, if there said notes, the same was made with the purpose of obtaining to said Peter W. Peterson the benefits of the chances of litigating the claim of the said Peter W. Peterson herein set up as belonging to plaintiff, without affording this court the means of adjusting all the equities between the parties in respect of other undue advantages obtained by said Peter W. Peterson in the disposition of his mother's estate by acts done or apparently done on the 16th day of October, 1902, and defendant says that this court ought not to entertain plaintiff's suit unless the said Peter W. Peterson will come in and subject himself to the jurisdiction of this court in order that the equities may be adjusted in respect of the subject-matter and other property of the estate of the said Christine Peterson. The defendant says he holds the notes sued for, for the benefit of himself and the other children of the said Christine Peterson, deceased, who each own a one-seventh undivided interest therein which interest he is ready and willing to pay over to each of the said children out of the proceeds to be collected on the said notes, or the defendant is ready and willing to surrender the said notes to any proper representative of the estate of the said Christine Peterson who will show a better right thereto than defendant has." Christine Maurer and her husband, E. H. Maurer, Tillie A. Waterman and husband, W. H. Waterman, Mary Swanson and her husband, Gus Swanson, Ella D. Pivito and her husband, M. E. Pivito, and Frank H. Peterson intervened as parties defendant, and for their answer adopted the allegations contained in the answer of Charles J. Peterson.

The case was tried before a jury, which rendered a verdict in favor of defendants upon which judgment for them was duly entered. The plaintiff in error's motion for new trial having been overruled, he perfected this appeal.

The evidence was uncontradicted that Peter W. Peterson and all the defendants except E. H. Maurer, W. H. Waterman, Gus Swanson, and M. E. Pivito were the children and heirs at law of Christine Peterson; that the said Christine Peterson prior to her death which occurred on October 16, 1902, had lived in the home of her son Peter W. Peterson for a considerable length of time; that for some time before her death she suffered with, and died from the effects of, cancer, and that from the ravages of the disease great physical weakness resulted; that three days before her death she assigned the notes and mortgages sued for to Peter W. Peterson, and that he thereafter assigned the same to the plaintiff in error. The evidence was not sufficient to raise the issue of unsoundness of Mrs. Peterson's mind at the time she executed the assignments, unless the statement 1901, that his mother was "a little feeble-minded," and the testimony of a physician who had never seen or attended Mrs. Peterson who, in answer to a hypothetical question, stated that the judgment of a woman of the age and condition of Mrs. Peterson at the time she executed the assignments would be very much impaired and very easily influenced, and, if she was weak-minded as early as the first part of the year 1901, her case would be diagnosed as a case of senile insanity, was sufficient to raise that issue. On the question of undue influence exercised by Peter over his mother to induce her to execute the assignments, the testimony offered by defendant, if admissible, was sufficient to raise that issue.

By his first assignment of error the appellant complains of the action of the court in giving the following special charge requested by the defendants: "If you believe from a preponderance of the evidence that on the 6th day of October, 1902, Christine Peterson's mind was affected as the result of disease and age, or disease alone, so as to render it difficult for her to exert her will freely and assert her true intentions against the wishes of those to whose influence she was subjected, then you are instructed that the burden of proof is on the plaintiff to show by a preponderance of the evidence that the advantage obtained by Peter W. Peterson over her other children in procuring the assignments in question was fairly obtained and without undue influence." The burden of proof was upon the plaintiff to make out his case as alleged, and upon his making proof of the existence of the notes and mortgages, and the execution and delivery of the assignments pleaded by him, the burden was discharged. If, then, the defendants desired to avoid the force and effect of the assignments as alleged and proved by plaintiff, it was incumbent upon them to allege and prove such facts as would defeat plaintiff's right of recovery; and this they attempted to do by charging and offering proof to show that the assignments were void because Christine Peterson's mind at the time she signed them was so impaired as to render her incapable of contracting, and that the assignments were obtained by Peter W. Peterson by fraud and duress and undue influence exercised by him over her. This is in accord with the familiar principle that the burden rests upon the party who has the affirmative of the issue. While the weight of the evidence may have shifted from side to side according to the nature and strength of the proof offered in support or denial of the defense pleaded, the burden still rested upon them to prove the facts alleged by them upon which they sought to defeat plaintiff's cause of action. Clark v. Hillis, 67 Tex. 148, 18 S. W. 356; Howell v. Hanrick, 83 Tex. 94, 29 S. W. 762, 30 S. W. 866, 31 S. W.

704.

By the fourth paragraph of the charge the court instructed the jury as follows: "Now, bearing in mind the foregoing definition of undue influence, if you believe from a preponderance of the evidence before you that Peter W. Peterson secluded his said mother in his home, excluded from her presence her children, who were in such distance as to have visited her, and denied her an opportunity to consult them about the disposition of her property, and while thus secluded, and while she was so mentally and physically impaired, or either, as alleged in defendants' answer, if you believe from a preponderance of the evidence that she was so impaired, awed, intimidated, or coerced, as alleged in defendants' answer, and by undue influence, as that term has been hereinbefore defined, procured from her the assignments or transfers of the mortgage and notes described in plaintiff's petition, and but for such undue influence, if you believe from the evidence that such influence existed and was exerted to procure said assignments or transfers, the same would not have been made, you will find for the defendant and interveners, and so say by your verdict. Or if you believe from a preponderance of the evidence before you that the said Peter W. Peterson secluded his said mother, as alleged in defendant's answer, and excluded her other children in the vicinity from her presence, and while thus secluded falsely insinuated to his said mother that she had been cheated and defrauded of her interest in certain Texas lands by five of her children, or awed and intimidated her by threats of placing her under guardianship as incompetent, or deceitfully persuaded her that unless some special provision was made for him, under the laws of Texas, he would be cut off from an equal share with the other children in the paternal and maternal inheritance, and falsely represented to her that his brothers and sisters were intending said course, and that his said mother was coerced by said threats, or relied upon said representations or insinuations, or any of them, and by reason of the aforesaid means, or any of them, was induced to execute said transfers or assignments of said notes and mortgages, and but for said means or some of them would not have so executed said assignments or transfers, you will find for the defendant and interveners, and so say by your verdict." In this charge it seems that all facts and circumstances that go to sustain appellees' cases are marshaled in consecutive form, and present the facts upon which they relied at such length and in such manner, and in such graphic array and persuasive form as to give too much emphasis to the particular circumstances referred to. In giving the charge we think the court was in error, and the fourth and fifth assignments court. The plaintiffs in error have filed a motion for rehearing, and on reconsideration of that question a majority of this court have reached the conclusion that our holding was error, and that the motion for rehearing should be granted. This view of the majority is based upon the conclusion now reached that the authorities cited in the original opinion do not sustain the holding there made, and that the case of Whitcomb v. Smithson, 175 U. S. 635, 20 Sup. Ct. 248, 44 L. Ed. 303, is directly in point, and supports their present conclusion that the case was not removable to the federal court. The writer, however, is of the opinion that the former holding was correct, and therefore dissents from the majority on this proposition. Our former holding rendered it unnecessary to pass upon the merits of the case, but the present holding of a majority of this court requires the consideration of the whole controversy, which we proceed to do. Some of the parties have been eliminated from the suit, and the only parties now are M. E. Huber and daughter, Georgia, plaintiffs in error, and the railway company, defendant in error. The plaintiffs in error allege negligence on the part of defendant in killing Huber, in that: (1) In operating its engine at a high and dangerous rate of speed upon a public street; (2) in operating its engine at a greater rate of speed than permitted by an ordinance of the city; (3) in operating its engine without keeping a lookout for the safety of persons using the street; (4) in not ringing the bell; (5) in not ringing the bell as required by an ordinance of the city of Dallas; (6) that the track was located in dangerous proximity to a building, constituting a snare and a trap to people using the street at the place of accident; (7) that defendant failed to furnish a flagman at that place; (8) that defendant discovered the peril of deceased, and failed to use the means at hand to prevent the accident. The defendant pleaded the general denial and contributory negligence, in that Huber came to his death by his own carelessness, negligence, and want of care "(1) in using no pains to observe the approaching engine, which could have easily been observed had he exercised care for his own safety; (2) by trying either to pass immediately in front of the engine, and in dangerous proximity thereto, or by his attempting to board the engine when it was passing a position he occupied on the sidewalk; (3) by allowing himself to become in an intoxicated and helpless condition, and while in such condition attempting to either cross immediately in front of or to board a moving train." A trial resulted in a judgment for the railway company, and the plaintiffs prosecute this appeal.

Plaintiffs in their second assignment of error complain of the following portion of the evidence before you that the said Lawrence Huber's death was the direct and proximate result of the defendant's negligence and that his death was not contributed to by negligence on his part, you will find for plaintiffs; but, if you find that the said Lawrence Huber was guilty of negligence that directly and proximately contributed to his death, you will find for the defendant, although you may find that the defendant was also guilty of negligence that contributed to his death." The contention is that "said charge required the jury, before finding a verdict for plaintiffs, to find too many prerequisite facts in that: (1) Defendant was not in the exercise of ordinary care for plaintiff's safety; (2) that the failure of the defendant to exercise ordinary care for plaintiff's safety was the proximate cause of the accident; (3) that the deceased was not guilty of negligence proximately contributing to his death; (4) the burden of proof is placed upon plaintiffs, by the manner of the framing of that paragraph in the charge, to show that the deceased was not guilty of contributory negligence, whereas, the law only required plaintiffs to show, by the burden of proof, that defendant did not exercise ordinary care for the safety of the deceased, and that its failure to exercise ordinary care for the safety of the deceased in crossing the track of defendant was the proximate cause of the death of the deceased, because if the failure of said defendant to exercise ordinary care for the safety of the deceased proximately resulted in the accident, then the negligence of the deceased could not have been the proximate cause of the death of the deceased. Therefore the court erred in requiring the jury to find four issues in favor of plaintiff by a preponderance of the evidence, before authorizing the jury to find a verdict for plaintiffs, when only two issues were required to be found by the jury to entitle the jury to find a verdict for the plaintiffs." We think some of the objections to the charge of the court complained of are well taken. Before a recovery could be had by plaintiffs, it was necessary for the evidence to show that death resulted from the negligence of defendant; and, as contributory negligence was pleaded, and evidence introduced sufficient to raise that issue, it was also necessary for the jury to believe that deceased was not guilty of contributory negligence in order to warrant them in finding a verdict for plaintiffs. While this is true, the charge is so framed as to place the burden of proof on plaintiffs to show that deceased was in the exercise of due care at the time of the accident, and not guilty of contributory negligence. It is the settled law of this state that the burden of proof is on defendant to establish plaintiff's contributory negligence. To this rule, however, there are two exceptions:

was never issued to him, but issued to Anderson Washington instead, and that said policy was to be an eight-year policy payable in eight premiums of $62.70 annually, but instead the policy issued provides for twenty payments of $62.70 each." "Wherefore," the citation further recites, "defendant Anderson Warbington says that the defendant Kansas City Life Insurance Company and W. B. Lawrence have failed to comply with the contract, and he prays that, if the plaintiff J. T. Harris recover judgment against him for the amount of the notes, then that he have judgment over and against the said Kansas City Life Insurance Company and W. B. Lawrence for the amount of said judgment." The specific reason assigned by appellant why the citation was not sufficient to support the judgment is that the judgment was for $149.35 and 10 per cent. interest from July 6, 1907, its date, whereas the citation states the demand to be for $137 and 10 per cent. interest from March 1, 1907. It may be that in computing interest accrued, or otherwise, an error was made, and that the judgment was rendered for a greater sum than it should have been for. If it was, appellant's remedy was by an appeal or certiorari to have had the error corrected. As against a merely erroneous judgment relief by injunction cannot be had, if a remedy by appeal or certiorari was available. Fitzhugh v. Orton, 12 Tex. 4; Anderson v. Oldham, 82 Tex. 231, 18 S. W. 557. It has been held, even as against a void judgment, that relief by injunction should not be granted if an appeal or certiorari lies. Railway Co. v. Ware, 74 Tex. 47, 11 S. W. 918; Reast v. Hughes (Tex. Civ. App.) 33 S. W. 1003; 1 High on Injunctions, §§ 173, 277, et seq. And see Bond v. Pacheco, 30 Cal. 534; Ziel v. Dukes, 12 Cal. 479. The reason alleged by appellant for not appearing and defending against the recovery complained of, and for not resorting to the remedy by appeal or certiorari, we think is entirely insufficient. If it chose to rely upon Harris' assurance that, because he was asking no judgment against it, it need not appear and defend the suit, in face of the fact that it was advised by the citation that appellee was seeking a judgment against it, in the event Harris recovered against him, it ought not to be heard now to complain that it was misled. On the facts alleged, if appellant was misled, it cannot be said to have been misled as the result of an accident or a mistake, or any fault on appellee's part, but it must have been as the result of its own inexcusable neglect to acquaint itself with the contents of the citation served upon it.

The judgment is affirmed.

1908. Rehearing Denied Dec. 9, 1908.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 931*)—REVIEW—PRESUMPTIONS.

On appeal from a judgment for plaintiff in an action on a health policy providing for indemnity only for illness beginning after 60 days after the policy issued, it must be presumed that the court found that the sickness sued on began after that period, where there was evidence to that effect.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3764; Dec. Dig. § 381*.]

2. INSURANCE (§ 648*)—HEALTH INSURANCE—EVIDENCE—PHYSICIAN'S REPORT.

In an action on a health policy, preliminary reports furnished insurer by a physician are not admissible to show the nature of the disease which confined insured.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Dec. Dig. § 648*.]

3. INSURANCE (§ 559*)—PROOFS—SUFFICIENT—WAIVER.

By refusing to pay benefits payable in cases of confining sickness because the fact proof showed that assured had not been confined for the required period, insurer waives any objection to the sufficiency of the proofs conforming to the requirements of the policy, but did not admit the truth of the statement in the proofs.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. § 1391; Dec. Dig. § 539*.]

4. INSURANCE (§ 451*)—HEALTH POLICY—CONSTRUCTION—CONSISTENCY OF CLAUSES.

A health policy specified an indemnity for confining illness, and a subsequent clause provided for one-fifth of the specified benefits for disability from paralysis and other specified diseases. Held, that the clauses were both effective and not repugnant; the latter being in the nature of an exception or qualification of the former.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Dec. Dig. § 451*.]

5. INSURANCE (§ 646*)—HEALTH POLICY—ACTION ON—BURDEN OF PROOF.

In an action on a health policy specifying an indemnity for confining illness, but providing in a subsequent clause for one-fifth of the amount for a disability from specified diseases, the burden was on insurer to show that assured's illness was one embraced by the latter clause.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. § 1664; Dec. Dig. § 646*.]

6. INSURANCE (§ 645*)—HEALTH POLICY—EXCEPTIONS—NECESSITY FOR PLEADING.

In an action on a health policy specifying an indemnity for confining illness, excepting disabilities resulting from paralysis, etc., in which case one-fifth of the amount is payable, insurer cannot show that it was paralysis which confined insured without pleading that fact.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. §§ 1634, 1638; Dec. Dig. § 645*.]

Appeal from District Court, Galveston County; Geo. E. Mann, Judge.

Action by Elizabeth Hayes against the General Accident Insurance Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

W. F. Kelly, for appellant. Wm. B. Lovhart, for appellee.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter's Index.

129 Mo. 30, 31 S. W. 382 (50 Am. St. Rep. 427), as follows: "If such instrument contain in it first a general clause, and afterwards a separate and distinct clause, which has the effect of taking out of the general clause something that would otherwise be included in it, a party relying on the general clause in pleading may set out that clause only without noticing the separate and distinct clause which operates as an exception, but, if the exception be incorporated in the general clause, then the party relying on it must in pleading state it together with the exception." It follows from this that it devolved on the defendant to allege and prove that the illness was one of those enumerated in the latter clause. This was not done. The defenses alleged were: (1) A false warranty that the insured was in sound physical condition and had no physical infirmity or defect. There was evidence that the statement was true. (2) That the disease which confined the assured was contracted before the policy was issued. This there was evidence to negative. (3) That the proofs of illness furnished the company did not notify it of illness by which the assured was necessarily and continuously confined to the house and therein regularly attended by a physician; but, on the contrary, the illness was according to the proofs furnished defendant a nonconfining illness and one which the policy provides should be compensated for at the rate of $7 per month. It appears that the preliminary proof named "heart disease" and the final proof stated "heart disease and paralysis." The sufficiency of the proofs as being such as the policy contemplated was waived by defendant in passing on the final proof, not finding fault with the same, but directing a settlement upon the basis of a nonconfining sickness, claiming that the proof indicated that this was the case. There was no evidence to show that neither heart disease nor paralysis was a nonconfining illness in support of this plea, and this is a matter not the subject of judicial cognizance. In none of the pleas is any mention of the clause "h" or of "paralysis." The question, as before stated, is whether or not defendant was entitled to the benefit of testimony that the disease was paralysis, not having pleaded it. On this subject the decisions have not been uniform. The cases of Insurance Co. v. Troy Ass'n, 77 Tex. 225, 13 S. W. 980, and Insurance Co. v. Boren, 83 Tex. 97, 18 S. W. 484, would sustain the right; but the principle of these opinions is against the weight of authority and has not been adhered to. See Insurance Co. v. Rivers, 9 Tex. Civ. App. 177, 28 S. W. 452; Insurance Co. v. Watt (Tex. Civ. App.) 39 S. W. 200 (writ of error denied); Casualty Company v. Jennings (Tex.

defense, see Banking Co. v. Stone, 39 Tex. 129. The petition was based upon the general clause in the policy as for a confining disease, and the proof sustained this. The judgment, so far as the plaintiff's pleading and the proof were concerned, is sustainable. The only just objection we perceive to the judgment is that the court ignored the fact that the disease was paralysis, but under the authorities we are constrained to hold that it was correctly ignored.

Affirmed.

SAUNDERS v. ALVIDO & LASERRE et al
(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Nov. 19, 1908.)

1. INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 297*)—CIVIL DAMAGE LAWS—PERSONS ENTITLED TO SUIT—"PERSON AGGRIEVED."

Under Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 3540, authorizing suit on a liquor dealer's bond by the person aggrieved by its breach, an action for the unlawful sale of liquor to a minor may be brought by the sister of the minor where the mother of such minor died when he was very young, and the minor was left by the mother with the request to the sister that she take care of and raise him, and gave the possession and custody of the minor to the sister, the father being a drunkard and without a home, and disqualified to care for and raise the minor, and the sister assumed the care and support of the minor and in all respects cared for him as his mother; she being a person aggrieved within the meaning of the statute.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Cent. Dig. §§ 432-434; Dec. Dig. § 297.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 1, pp. 273-278; vol. 8, pp. 7503, 7504.

2. PARENT AND CHILD (§ 15*)—PERSONS IN LOCO PARENTIS.

The rights and duties of one standing in loco parentis are the same as those of the parent, and any cause of action accruing to a parent by reason of such relationship will, under similar circumstances, accrue to one standing in loco parentis.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Parent and Child, Dec. Dig. § 15.*]

3. INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 306*)—CIVIL DAMAGE LAWS—PLEADING.

In an action on a liquor dealer's bond to recover for the unlawful sale of liquor to a minor, plaintiff alleged that she was the sister of the minor; that the mother died when he was very young; that at the time of her death the father of the minor was alive, but a drunkard without a home, and incapable of taking care of and raising the said minor; that the mother just preceding her death gave to the plaintiff the custody of the minor, and requested her to take him and adopt him into plaintiff's family, and to rear, manage, and control him until he reached his majority; that she took said minor and cared for him, and assumed all the responsibilities and duties of a parent toward him, and provided for him such educational advantages as was within her power, and has had him several times since taking him into her care the management and control of his actions. Held that the petition showed both a moral and legal obligation on the plaintiff to maintain, control, fact that he has acquired the habit of drinking strong and intoxicating drinks, such habit having been largely acquired in defendant's place of business; and having squandered his earnings, as well as moneys given and furnished him by plaintiff in the place run and operated by defendants as herein alleged, the said minor has thereby and by reason thereof entailed upon plaintiff great additional burdens and expense, anxiety, worry, and annoyance."

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Index.

The statute under which this suit is brought has been often construed by our courts, and the meaning of the term "person aggrieved," as used in said statute to designate those upon whom the right of action is conferred, has been declared to be any person whose legal rights have been invaded by the breach of the bond provided for in the statute. In the case of Peavy v. Goss, 90 Tex. 89, 37 S. W. 317, it is held by our Supreme Court that the parent or person standing in loco parentis has the right to maintain an action under this statute for the unlawful sale of liquor to a minor. It is true that in the case cited the plaintiff was the parent of the minor, and it was unnecessary in the decision of the question presented to hold that one standing in loco parentis would have the same right as the parent, but, under the construction given the statute that the right to sue was conferred upon any person whose legal rights were invaded by the alleged breach of the bond, it necessarily follows that a person standing in loco parentis would have the same right as a parent to maintain a suit of this character. The rights and duties of one standing in loco parentis seem to have been uniformly held by the courts to be the same as those of the parent, and any cause of action accruing to a parent by reason of such relationship would under similar circumstances accrue to one standing in loco parentis. Schrimbs v. Settegast, 38 Tex. 302; Williams v. Hutchinson, 3 N. Y. 312, 53 Am. Dec. 304; Whitaker v. Warren, 60 N. H. 20, 49 Am. Rep. 302; 17 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law (1st Ed.) 342. The allegations of the petition before set out show that the plaintiff has stood in the place of both father and mother to the orphaned minor, Orion Hill, since the death of his parents; that she has maintained, nurtured, and provided for him as her own child since his infancy, and they have at all times stood to each other in the relation of parent and child. Under these facts, it is the duty of plaintiff to look after the moral training of said minor, and she has the legal right to keep him away from temptation. This legal right of plaintiff was invaded if, as alleged in the petition, appellees sold liquor to said minor in violation of law, and such invasion aggrieved."

We do not think this holding is in conflict with the decision in the case of Choate v. Vilha et al., 40 Tex. Civ. App. 598, 89 S. W. 1082. In that case the court in effect finds that the allegations of the petition do not show that the plaintiff was in loco parentis to the minor to whom the liquor was alleged to have been unlawfully sold. The court says: "The petition does not allege that the plaintiff has adopted the minor, or that he has in any wise obligated himself for the minor's support, maintenance, or education. In fact, for aught that appears in the petition, all that plaintiff has done for the minor may have been done for an adequate consideration furnished by the minor or someone else; or the custody, control, and maintenance of the minor, which he alleges he has had for four years, may have been voluntary on his part, and does not necessarily confer upon him the legal right to control the actions of the minor." It is, we think, perfectly clear that this conclusion cannot be reached from the allegations of the petition in this case. We think the allegations in the petition above set out show both a moral and legal obligation on the part of plaintiff to maintain, control, and care for the minor just as his parents would be required to do if they were living, and from this obligation the reciprocal right to maintain an action for injury to said minor arises.

From the language in the next to the concluding paragraph in the opinion in the case last cited the court seems to clearly recognize that the right of action in cases of this character is not restricted to the natural parent and the legal guardian or person who has legally adopted the minor, but inures to one who "by contract or otherwise has the legal right to control his actions."

It follows from these conclusions that the judgment of the court below should be reversed and the cause remanded; and it has been so ordered.

TEXAS & G. RY. CO. v. PATE (Court of Civil Appeals of Texas, New Orleans, 1908.)

1. PLEADING (§ 204*)—GENERAL DENIAL OF PETITION ALLEGING CAUSE OF ACTION ALTERNATIVE.

If a petition consist of a general denial of facts relied on, followed by an allegation elaborating the same matter, it will be demurrable if the specific allegations are insufficient, under the rule that, if specific allegations as to the same facts are combined, the general will be controlled by the specific allegations, but where a person states such facts affirmatively, and without qualification, as if proven would establish absolute liability of a railroad under

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reports.

ough insufficiently, to state facts showing injury to the animal resulting from negligent operation of the train, the two issues being distinct and not involving the same proof, the action as a whole would not be demurrable cause of insufficiency of the second issue presented.

Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, et. Dig. §§ 486-490; Dec. Dig. § 204.*]

APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1040*)—REVIEW—HARMLESS ERROR—ERROR CURED BY REFUSAL TO SUBMIT ISSUE.

Where the court overruled exceptions to issue presented by the petition, its subsequent refusal to submit the issue cured any error in its previous ruling.

Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 1040.*]

RAILROADS (§ 447*)—ACTIONS FOR INJURIES TO ANIMALS—INSTRUCTIONS.

In an action against a railroad for killing an animal, a charge which in effect required the jury to find before plaintiff could recover, that an animal was killed by the locomotive or cars of defendant by striking the animal, and that the right of way was not fenced in at the time defendant was not objectionable as authoring recovery whether the animal was struck by the locomotive or not.

Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, et. Dig. § 447.*]

APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1066*)—REVIEW—INSTRUCTIONS.

If the charge confined the finding as to the place to the place where the animal was found dead, defendant could not complain there, where it had neither alleged nor proved that it had fenced its right of way.

Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 1066.*]

RAILROADS (§ 448*)—ACTIONS FOR INJURIES TO ANIMALS—EVIDENCE.

In an action against a railroad company for killing an animal, evidence held sufficient to go to the jury, though only circumstantial.

Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, et. Dig. § 448.*]

Appeal from Panola County Court; J. H. Long, Judge.

Action by A. D. Pate against the Texas Gulf Railway Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Young & Stinchcomb and H. N. Nelson, for appellant. Brooke & Woolworth, for appellee.

LEVY, J. By his pleading the appellee claimed that his certain mule of the value of $150 was struck and killed by the locomotive of the appellant company. The case was properly before the county court on appeal. In accordance with the verdict of a jury, judgment was rendered in favor of the appellee.

By its first assignment of error the appellant complains of the overruling of the general demurrer to the pleading of the appellee. The allegations in the pleading could properly be construed as being the intendment to make, first, a general allegation of the facts alleged, and then following it with a special allegation elaborating the same matter, it would seem that the allegations would be demurrable as being within the rule that if general and specific allegations as to the same matter are combined the general will be referred to, construed, and controlled by the specific, and will be insufficient if the specific allegations are insufficient. But the intendment of the pleading would not, in our opinion, justify such construction. The effect of the allegations by proper interpretation is to seek a recovery against the appellant company for the value of the mule killed, either in statutory liability, or negligence in the operation of the locomotive, as the evidence might develop the facts to be. The averments, as will be seen, firstly, stated such facts, if proven, as would establish absolute liability under the statute, and were plead affirmatively and without qualification; and, secondly, endeavored, though insufficiently, to state such a state of facts as would show injury to the mule resulting from negligent operation of the train. The first state of facts averred for recovery is not legally dependent upon nor constituted in negligent operation of the train, but regardless of such negligence. The issues that would be thus presented would be distinct issues, and not involved in the same matter of proof. If it were proven in the case that the mule was killed by the cars of appellant and the line of railway was not fenced in, then appellee would be authorized to recover the value of the mule. If, however, the mule was killed by the cars of appellant and the evidence were to show that the line of railway was fenced, then, before recovery would be authorized to the appellee, there must be the further proof of negligent operation of the cars causing the injury. It follows that the liability of appellant in the case might be decreed upon either state of facts as proven, if either ground be sufficiently stated in the pleading. The first ground, being affirmatively and positively pleaded, would not fall under the demurrer to the second ground, because of the fact that the second ground was not sufficiently pleaded. It is suggestive to quote the language employed in the opinion in the case of Floyd v. Patterson, 72 Tex. 202, 10 S. W. 526, 13 Am. St. Rep. 787: "We also think that our system of pleading permits a plaintiff, who is doubtful about the particular facts which he can establish, to plead in the alternative, without rendering his pleading demurrable for inconsistency or multifariousness." In the case of Ewing v. Duncan, 81 Tex. 230, 16 S. W. 1000, the court, in passing upon an assignment involving a ruling upon a general demurrer, uses this language: "Courts sit to try causes upon positive averments, and not to hear and determine issues presented by allegations which affirmatively show that the pleader is in doubt as to the truth of the matter alleged. An exception exists

For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

The second assignment is to overruling exceptions to the pleading. The exceptions were directed to the "second" ground set out in the petition and we think it was subject to the exceptions made. But the court refused to instruct the jury upon this "second" ground as a liability to appellant and submitted only the state of facts pleaded in the first averment. If the right result on the exceptions was reached when the court refused to instruct the jury, it substantially met the previous erroneous ruling of the court in respect thereto, and operated to remove any injury to the appellant on which a reversal could be predicated.

By the third assignment it is contended that the charge, as complained of, authorized a recovery irrespective of whether the mule was struck by the locomotive or not. The charge, construed as a whole, requires the jury to find, before they could return a verdict for appellee, that the mule was "killed by the locomotive or cars of defendant company by striking said mule," and, further, that the right of way was not fenced in at the time by the appellant company. The charge might be subject to the criticism that it confined the finding as to the fencing to be "at the place where the mule was found dead." But in the absence of any contention on the part of appellant made by pleading and proof that it had fenced in its right of way, an objection to the charge in this latter respect could not avail.

The fourth and last assignment of error urged is to the refusal to give a peremptory instruction to find for the appellant. While the evidence offered to support and sustain a finding by the jury that appellant's locomotive struck and fatally injured the mule rested in circumstantial evidence, it was reasonably sufficient and cogent enough to require the trial court to pass the issue to the jury for a decision. The court did not err. The case was ordered affirmed.

SANDERS v. MILLER.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Nov. 19, 1908.)

1. NUISANCE (§ 4*)—ACTIONABLE NUISANCE.

It is not enough to give plaintiff a cause of action for damages that his premises are depreciated in value as unsightly or undesirable by defendant digging near them, on his own premises, a large open excavation for surface water.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Nuisance, Dec. Dig. § 4.*]

2. NUISANCE (§ 4*)—EXCAVATION FOR SURFACE WATER.

The mere construction of a large excavation for surface water on defendant's premises sect pests having been produced.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Nuisance, Cent. Dig. § 80; Dec. Dig. § 4.*]

3. NUISANCE (§ 50*)—ABATABLE NUISANCE—DAMAGES.

Even if an excavation for surface water on defendant's premises near plaintiff's residence is a nuisance as liable to produce unhealthy conditions, it is an abatable nuisance, the pool not being for a public use, so that plaintiff cannot recover, as for a permanent injury, the depreciation in the market value of his property, but only any damages to date.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Nuisance, Cent. Dig. § 126; Dec. Dig. § 50.*]

Appeal from District Court, Bowie County; Hon. P. A. Turner, Judge.

Action by G. G. Miller against W. W. Sanders. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals. Reversed and rendered.

Smelser & Vaughan and M. L. Harkey, for appellant. Hart, Mahaffey & Thomas, for appellee.

HODGES, J. The appellee filed this suit in the court below, seeking to recover the sum of $1,000 which he claimed as damages resulting from the depreciation in the value of his homestead by reason of the digging of a pool near it by the appellant. It appears from the testimony that the appellant, Sanders, owned a lot consisting of about six or eight acres on the opposite side of a street, in the town of De Kalb, from a lot owned by the appellee and upon which the latter resided. Some time during the month of September, 1907, Sanders dug a pool upon his premises, making it about 30 feet by 60 or 70 feet, and the depth is variously estimated at from 3 to 6 feet. According to measurements, the pool is within 42 feet of the residence of the appellee, but wholly upon the land of the appellant. The case was tried before a jury, and a verdict rendered in favor of the appellee, assessing his damages at $250, and judgment entered accordingly. In his charge to the jury the court instructed that the measure of damages, if any, would be the difference between the value of the appellee's property before the construction of the pool and immediately afterwards. There are various assignments of error in the record, complaining both of the judgment of the court and of the charge presented on the measure of damages.

The testimony shows that suit was instituted after the pool was completed, but before any water had collected in it. It also shows that at the time of the trial there had been some water collected in the pool, but it had disappeared either by evaporation or absorption, and the pool was then nothing more than a dry tank. In the lot, a short distance from the pool, was the barn of the

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

thus explains an actionable nuisance: "Anything wrongfully done or permitted which injures or annoys another in the enjoyment of his legal rights." In Burditt v. Swenson, 17 Tex. 489, 67 Am. Dec. 665, our Supreme Court discusses the definition of nuisance, and adopts the following: "To constitute a nuisance it is not necessary that the annoyance should be of a character to endanger health. It is sufficient if it occasions what is offensive to the senses and which renders the enjoyment of life and property uncomfortable. Even that which does but cause a well-founded apprehension of danger may be a nuisance." As an illustration of what may be termed "sufficient to cause a well-founded apprehension of danger," the court refers to the case of Cheatham v. Shearon, 1 Swan (Tenn.) 213, 55 Am. Dec. 734, where it was held that a powder house located in a city, and containing stored therein large quantities of gunpowder, constituted a nuisance. In Joyce on Nuisances it is said: "The unauthorized or unreasonable use of, or the neglect of properly and reasonable using, one's own property, to the detriment, hurt, annoyance, discomfort, injury, or damage of another in his property or legal rights, or of the public, is a nuisance. A use made by one of his own property which works an irreparable injury to another's property, or which deprives his neighbor of the reasonable and comfortable enjoyment and use of his property, or which violates the unwritten but accepted law of decency, or which endangers or renders insecure the life and health of his neighbor, is a nuisance." Joyce on Law of Nuisances, § 11. Again, in section 19, the same author says: "It is difficult to define just what degree of injurious annoyance must be reached in order to warrant the court in determining what circumstances constitute a nuisance. A mere tendency to injury is not sufficient. There must be something actually appreciable which of itself arrests the attention, that rests not merely in theory, but strikes the common sense of the ordinary citizen. The determination, however, of the question rests in sound judgment, and depends upon common sense in each case. So in a New Jersey case the court said: 'But the question remains: What degree of discomfort is necessary to constitute a nuisance? It is clear that everything that renders the air a little less pure, or is to any extent disagreeable, is not necessarily a nuisance. The word "uncomfortable" is not precise; in fact, no precise definition can be given. Each case must be judged by itself. If property cannot be enjoyed unless the health is endangered thereby, a nuisance exists.'" The authority referred to to sustain the proposition announced in the last sentence is Campbell v. Seaman, a New York case, found in 63 N. Y. 568, 20 Am. Rep. 567. That was an ac-property by reason of offensive gases and smoke emanating from a burning brick kiln. It appears to be a well-considered case, and a large number of authorities are reviewed by the court in reaching a conclusion. In discussing the use which one person may make of his property regardless of its effect upon the rights of his neighbor the court said: "But every person is bound to make a reasonable use of his property, so as to occasion no unnecessary damage or annoyance to his neighbor. If he makes an unreasonable, unwarrantable, or unlawful use, so as to produce material annoyance, inconvenience, discomfort, or hurt to his neighbor, he will be guilty of a nuisance to his neighbor, and the law will hold him responsible for the consequent damage. As to what is a reasonable use of one's own property cannot be defined by any certain general rules, but must depend upon the circumstances of each case. A use of property in one locality and under some circumstances may be lawful and reasonable, which, under other circumstances, would be unlawful, unreasonable, and a nuisance. To constitute a nuisance the use must be such as to produce a tangible and appreciable injury to neighboring property, or such as to render its enjoyment specially uncomfortable or inconvenient." Admitting the location by Sanders of the pool in such close proximity to Miller's lot has operated to cause a depreciation in the value of the premises, that fact alone is not sufficient to give a cause of action for damages. It is not every injury to the property of another that creates actionable liability. Before such injury becomes the basis of a cause of action, there must be a substantial invasion of, or interference with, the legal rights of the owner. There must be something more than merely making the premises unsightly or undesirable. Dunn v. City of Austin, 77 Tex. 139, 11 S. W. 1125; H. & W. T. Ry. Co. v. Reasonover, 36 Tex. Civ. App. 274, 81 S. W. 329; Van De Vere v. Kansas City, 107 Mo. 83, 17 S. W. 695, 28 Am. St. Rep. 396; Trulock v. Merte, 72 Iowa, 510, 34 N. W. 307; Westcott v. Middleton, 43 N. J. Eq. 478, 11 Atl. 490; Monk v. Packard, 71 Me. 309, 36 Am. Rep. 315; McCann v. Strang, 97 Wis. 551, 72 N. W. 1117; Lewis on Eminent Domain, § 236; 2 Cooley on Torts, p. 1249; 4 Sutherland on Damage, § 1037. In the case first above cited the court says: "Nor will the court interfere when the thing complained of is not in existence, but may be called into existence by threatened acts of the defendant in the exercise in his lawful domination over his property, and it is uncertain, dependent upon circumstances in the future whether it will or not operate injuriously."

The question presented in this case, then, is: Was the mere construction of the pool the creation of a nuisance? That it is not a nuisance per se we think admits of no consance. A pool or stagnant water, produced by a railway embankment might be regarded as a permanent nuisance, while one created by excavations made by a private person for private use would not be so considered. If the nuisance here complained of is an abatable one, the plaintiff below would be entitled to recover only such actual damages as he had sustained up to the time of the trial, and not the depreciation in the market value of his property. Rosenthal v. Railway Co., supra; 4 Waits on Actions and Defenses, p. 776. The appellee not having alleged any damages except the depreciation in the value of his realty, the judgment in his favor cannot be permitted to stand if we conclude that the pool if a nuisance is an abatable one. An abatable nuisance may be regarded as one which is practically susceptible of being suppressed, or extinguished, or rendered harmless, and whose continued existence is not authorized under the law. It does not necessarily mean that, in order to abate a nuisance, the structure or thing which has caused the injurious results should be destroyed. It may be rendered harmless without resorting to such extremes. Green v. Lake, 54 Miss. 540, 28 Am. Rep. 378. In the case of a nuisance caused by stagnant water whose chief evil consists in affording a breeding place for mosquitoes, the occasional application of some known substance which would effectually prevent such results might be all that would be required to abate the nuisance. Or the pool itself might be drained or refilled. The evidence shows that this can be done in this instance with only a few days labor. We have no hesitancy in holding that in the case before us if the pool should develop into a nuisance it is one which may be abated, and therefore the measure of damages submitted by the court was not the proper one. We are also of the opinion that the appellee, not having alleged or proven any actual injuries resulting from the presence of the pool, has not shown any actionable damages which would authorize a judgment in his favor. It is immaterial, in so far as it affects the right to abate a nuisance, that some affirmative action is required on the part of the wrongdoer to accomplish that end. If he has erected a structure, or made an excavation, which has become a nuisance, he may be compelled to remove the one or fill up the other or do some affirmative act which will destroy the unlawful character which the structure or excavation may have assumed. State v. Goodnight, 70 Tex. 686, 11 S. W. 119; G. H. & S. A. Ry. Co. v. Tait, 63 Tex. 223; Seguin v. Ireland, 58 Tex. 133; Williams v. Davidson, 43 Tex. 1; Revell v. People, 177 Ill. 468, 52 N. E. 1052, 43 L. R. A. 790, 69 Am. St. Rep. 257, and notes; Nicholson v. Getchell, 96 Cal. 394, 31 Pac. 265; Van Bergen v. Van

1 High on Injunctions, § 804 and note 43; Jaggard on Torts, p. 802.

We think, for the reasons stated, that the judgment of the trial court was erroneous, and that the case should be reversed and a judgment here rendered in favor of the appellant. The case is accordingly reversed and rendered.

GULF, C. & S. F. RY. CO. v. MEENTZEN BROS.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Nov. 25, 1908.)

1. RAILROADS (§ 482*)—FIRES—PRESUMPTION—BURDEN OF PROOF.

Proof that sparks from an engine ignited property along a railroad track establishes a prima facie case of negligence and to defeat a recovery for the loss sustained, the railroad company must show that the engine was provided with the best approved apparatus for arresting sparks, and was properly operated.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Cent. Dig. § 1735; Dec. Dig. § 482.*]

2. RAILROADS (§ 482*)—FIRES—EVIDENCE.

That sparks from an engine ignited property along a railroad track may be shown by circumstances such as the passage of a train, sparks issuing from the engine, the ignition in a short time of the property, and its destruction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Cent. Dig. § 1730; Dec. Dig. § 482.*]

3. RAILROADS (§ 480*)—FIRES—PRESUMPTION—EVIDENCE.

To raise a presumption of negligence of a railroad company causing the destruction of property by fire set by its engine, there must be affirmative proof that the fire was caused by sparks from the engine.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Cent. Dig. § 1713; Dec. Dig. § 480.*]

4. RAILROADS (§ 482*)—FIRES—NEGLIGENCE—EVIDENCE.

In an action against a railroad company for loss of property by fire alleged to have been set by sparks from an engine, evidence held insufficient to authorize a recovery, in view of the fact that the meager circumstances showing that the fire was set by sparks were overcome by evidence showing freedom from negligence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Cent. Dig. § 1731; Dec. Dig. § 482.*]

5. RAILROADS (§ 482*)—FIRES—ACTION—ISSUES.

Where, in an action against a railroad company for loss of property by fire set by sparks from an engine, the evidence showed that the fire began outside of the railroad right of way, whether combustible matter was left on the right of way was not in issue.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Dec. Dig. § 482.*]

6. RAILROADS (§ 457*)—FIRES—OBLIGATION OF EMPLOYEES TO ASSIST IN ARRESTING FIRE.

Employees of a railroad company need not assist in arresting a fire on land adjacent to the railroad right of way unless the company had set the fire.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Dec. Dig. § 457.*]

Appeal from District Court, Jefferson County; L. B. Hightower, Judge.

Action by Meentzen Bros. against the Gulf,

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

All the witnesses swore that they had never known a spark from an oil-burning engine to reach the ground.

It is the law in Texas in cases of this character that, when sparks from an engine ignite property along the track, a presumption of negligence arises, and the injured party is authorized to recover for the resulting damages, unless the presumption of negligence is removed by the railroad company. In other words, proof of ignition of the property by sparks from a locomotive makes a prima facie case of negligence which must be rebutted by the railway company. In the case of Railway v. Levine, 87 Tex. 437, 29 S. W. 466, the Supreme Court states that, when proof is made of property being destroyed by fire started by sparks from an engine, the injured party should recover, "unless the railroad company shall prove that its engine was provided with the best approved apparatus for arresting sparks and preventing their escape, and properly operated." The basis upon which the foregoing proposition rests, however, is proof that the fire was caused by sparks from an engine. In cases of fires along railway tracks, it is seldom that the sparks are seen to fall upon the grass or other combustible material, and naturally circumstantial evidence must usually be depended upon to make out a case. Usually those circumstances are the passage of a train, smoke, or sparks, or both issuing from the engine, the ignition in a short time of the property and its destruction. In this case, however, the whole evidence is to the effect that an engine passed; no smoke or sparks shown to have been emitted; nothing but a high wind; the grass on fire a few minutes after the engine passed; the spread of the fire, and destruction of property.

It is said by the Supreme Court in Railway v. Timmermann, 61 Tex. 660: "The general rule may be fairly stated to be under the present state of the authorities that where the property is destroyed by fire along or near the railroad track, if it be affirmatively shown as a matter of fact that the fire did actually occur from sparks of fire emitted from the locomotive engine, then the burden, after such affirmative proof is made, rests on the railroad company to show that there was in fact no negligence on its part in causing the fire." In order to raise a presumption of negligence, there must be affirmative proof of the burning by the railroad company. There was no attempt to show that no one passed near the field just before or at the time of the fire, although it appears that there was a public road along the railroad very near the point at which the fire originated. One of the appellees swore that the public road was right where

ing. It does not appear that the engine was going up hill or laboring at the time so as to cause the emission of sparks. No evidence was adduced showing other fires had occurred in the vicinity, or, for that matter, anywhere along the line. Nothing appears but the bare facts that a train passed, and shortly afterwards the grass was on fire. There is authority, however, to the effect that the finding of fire near the track in a short time after a train passed is sufficient to throw the burden upon the railway company of showing that its engine did not start the fire, or, if it did, the company was not guilty of negligence. Railway v. Coombs, 76 Ark. 132, 88 S. W. 595; Railway v. Dawson, 77 Ark. 434, 92 S. W. 27; Railway v. De Busk, 12 Colo. 294, 20 Pac. 752, 3 L. R. A. 350, 13 Am. St. Rep. 221. This case of meager circumstances was met by uncontroverted evidence that sparks from oil-burning locomotives never ignited grass, that they never reached the ground in a live or burning state, and that it was utterly impossible for grass to be ignited by sparks from an oil-burning locomotive at a distance of fifty feet from the track. In addition, it was shown that the engine was being properly operated and was equipped with all the latest approved appliances used on oil-burning engines, and that such engines were much safer than coal-burning engines with the most approved spark arresters. The fire was shown to have begun outside of the right of way on appellees' land, and there could be no issue as to whether or not combustible matter was left on the right of way of appellant. The attacks on the charge of the court cannot be sustained.

The employees of appellant, even though they heard the cries for help made by appellees, and knew of the existence of the fire, were under no obligation which bound appellant to assist in arresting the fire, unless it appeared that appellant's engine had set fire to the property. Railway v. Platzer, 73 Tex. 117, 11 S. W. 160, 3 L. R. A. 639, 15 Am. St. Rep. 771. The evidence clearly showed that most of the damage occurred before the sectionmen passed and the fire was then at least 500 feet from the railroad.

Because the great preponderance of the evidence is against the verdict of the jury, the judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded.

FAIN et al. v. NELMS et al.
(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Nov. 4 1908. On Rehearing, Nov. 26, 1908.)

1. IMPROVEMENTS (§ 4*)—RIGHTS TO COMPENSATION—PURCHASER IN GOOD FAITH.
The owner of land having authorized D. to make sales of it, or prospective purchasers hav-

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

Survey located [such a distance] from Elkhart—fifty dollars.” Dick testified that as a rule the land company did not give local agencies, but that he secured their agency in this county and sold about 3,000 acres for them, and that it was the practice of the company to draw its own deeds, which are delivered at a certain bank in Austin, and the money due thereon is remitted there and that the company have the land surveyed and field notes made before the deeds are signed. On October 10, 1902, Dick and O'Connor wrote Nelms: “The agent for the land you bought here has returned, but the superintendent of the company is expected every day. The deed cannot be made until he returns. We will advise you as soon as the president arrives.” Dick with the surveyor, Young, went to the land, and, in company with Nelms, the land was surveyed out for Nelms by Young, but the line given Nelms for his land extended over on the Frost track 12.01 acres. This is the land in question. Nelms, believing this to be a part of what he was to get by his purchase, and relying upon said survey, went upon the 12.01 acres and made improvements upon it, and lived upon it until this suit was brought. There was a conflict in the evidence as to when Nelms went into possession of it, but there was ample testimony showing he did so very soon after the survey and more than 12 months before this action was brought. There was also testimony that the trade made with Dick was carried out, and he received a deed for the International & Great Northern land from parties to whom the New York & Texas Land Company had conveyed it substantially in accordance with the terms upon which he and Dick had agreed, and evidently in pursuance of such agreement. The company, it seems, made a conveyance of the land by field notes including the 12.01 acres to W. F. Woodward in August, 1903, and on November 7, 1903, Woodward conveyed to John Hood, who had in June, 1903, by agreement with Nelms of that date, conveyed the land to Nelms. This suit was brought in April, 1904.

We are of opinion that the several propositions (except the last one mentioned above) cannot be sustained. The owner of the International & Great Northern survey had authorized Dick to make sales, and, at least, parties desiring to purchase its lands had reason to believe that he was so authorized. Either one of these views of the evidence was sufficient to constitute one dealing with Dick a purchaser in good faith. The receipt given by him evidenced the transaction, and was under the circumstances a writing sufficient to warrant Nelms in entertaining the belief that he had secured the land; i. e., the International & Great Northern survey. By a survey made by a surveyor who, the testimony showed, was competent and of of that survey. That he relied upon this land being a part of his purchase, and in such belief and reliance, so induced, moved upon it, improved it, and lived upon it with his family, is supported by testimony; also that he moved upon it more than 12 months prior to the filing of the suit. This was sufficient, as far as good faith was concerned, to support his plea, unless he should be confined in his plea to land that was in fact within the International & Great Northern survey, and was incapable under a writing calling for the International & Great Northern survey to become an improver in good faith of land situated in another survey. In Butts v. Caffall, 24 S. W. 390, this court held: “If he [the defendant] was not negligent in ascertaining the correct boundary of the property claimed and exercised due diligence, such as a reasonably prudent and careful man would under like circumstances, to ascertain the location of his premises, and after the use of such care and diligence was mistaken as to its location, and if, while laboring under such mistake, he constructed his improvements on appellant's land, honestly believing it to be his own, he should be allowed to recover their value”—citing several cases. See, also, Gilley v. Williams (Tex. Civ. App.) 43 S. W. 1094. For the above reasons the several propositions cannot be sustained.

But the last of the above propositions (the third) appears to be well taken. There was no testimony that is pointed out to us by appellee, and none that we have found, which goes to show the value of the land as it was improved. There was evidence of what the land would be worth without improvements, but none as to its value as improved. It is true the value of the improvements was testified to, but it was held in McCown v. McCafferty, 14 Tex. Civ. App. 77, 36 S. W. 517, that this was not sufficient. This seems to be right. The jury could not be expected, from evidence of the value of the improvements alone, to arrive at how much the value of the land was enhanced by the improvements. Failure to introduce this proof was fatal to a submission of the plea, and the court should, for this reason, have given the peremptory instruction asked. And it is the duty of this court not to remand the cause merely for the purpose of giving defendants opportunity to supply the proof, which ought to have been made at the trial; but to render the proper judgment under the evidence as it stood. We see no indication in the record that the failure to make the proof necessary to warrant the submission of the plea was due to any action of the court. For the propriety of this action we refer to Eldson v. Reeder (Tex. Sup.) 105 S. W. 1113; Baggett v. Sheppard (Tex. Civ. App.) 110 S. W. 952; Henne & Meyer v. Moultrie, 97 Tex. 216, 77 S. W. 607.

the woods and cut all the timber out of the way of the house, and hewed my sills out of timber that was there. I also cut out some sleepers. I cut out the studding from small pines there on the land." No evidence was introduced as to the value of the timber and material used in making the improvements. The above is from appellants' statement under the third proposition. The assignment complains of the refusal of a charge to the effect that Nelms could not be allowed the value of said timber in estimating his improvements, and that, unless he had proved the value of the improvements, exclusive of the value of any timber taken from the premises, to find for plaintiffs. The cutting of timber on the land was damage to the land or waste which under the terms of the statute relating to improvements is authorized to be found separately, and under the charge the jury found it separately. The assignment could not be sustained.

The letters complained of by the fifth, sixth, and seventh assignments were admissible upon the issue of defendant's good faith.

The first assignment of error complains of defendant's being allowed to open and conclude the argument. As under the agreement the issues were reduced to the one of improvements in good faith, and the burden of proof at the trial was upon the defendants, the action of the court was in accordance with Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 1299.

The fourth assignment of error which complains of the argument of counsel it is deemed unnecessary to discuss in view of the reversal; likewise the eighth, which complains of excess in the verdict.

For the error indicated in the discussion of the second assignment, the judgment with reference to improvements is reversed and set aside, and judgment absolute in favor of plaintiffs for the land rendered by this court.

Reversed and rendered.

On Rehearing.

Upon further consideration, we have come to the conclusion that the judgment against defendant on his plea of improvements should not have been rendered by this court. We adhere to the ruling that, without some proof relative to the value of the land as enhanced by the improvements, the jury were apparently unable to determine such value. Proof of the value of the land and proof of the value or cost of the improvements alone are not enough to enable the jury to fix the enhanced value of the land by reason of the improvements. The land may or may not be enhanced to the extent of the value of the improvements. It may be that the market value of the land is not enhanced any by the improvements upon it. Circumstances or other testimony should be shown that would

The question that concerns us, however, is whether defendant's failure to introduce some evidence relative to that subject entitles him to have the plea of improvements adjudged against him, when the matter was submitted to the jury, and they have found that in good faith he has improvements of value upon the land. The verdict was in favor of defendant on the substantial facts entitling defendant to his improvements; the only defect being in the proof upon the subject of the extent of the allowance to which he was entitled. The statute (article 1027) reads: "When the judgment or decree of the court below shall be reversed, the court shall proceed to render such judgment or decree as the court below should have rendered, except where it is necessary that some matter of fact be ascertained, or the damage to be assessed, or the matter to be decreed, is uncertain, in either of which cases the cause shall be remanded for a new trial in the court below." Now, it appears to us that a judgment rendered against defendant on the entire plea would be contrary to what the jury have found upon ample pleading and evidence to sustain it, viz., that defendant has in good faith and in proper time made valuable improvements upon the land, it is fairly evident that defendant is entitled upon that finding to an allowance in some sum in respect to those improvements. The question is only what sum. That sum cannot properly be determined upon the record, although the court and jury undertook to determine it. We think that, under the circumstances, our duty is to carry into effect the verdict which entitled the defendant to his improvements, and which is a verdict for defendant on the substantial elements of his plea, and being unable to say that the proper sum was the sum found, or that it can be ascertained from the record, we conclude that the cause should be remanded to have the fact properly ascertained.

There being no dispute as to title, and the sole issue in this case being the plea of improvements, a proper disposition of the case here is to reverse the judgment and remand the cause.

Motion granted and judgment reversed and cause remanded.

KEISSINGER et al. v. HAY et al.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Nov. 14, 1908.
Rehearing Dismissed Dec. 5, 1908.)

1. LICENSES (§ 6*)—ORDINANCES—VALIDITY—AUTHORITY OF MUNICIPALITY.

An ordinance imposing a license fee on hackmen, and prohibiting the use of certain streets for hack stands between designated hours, prohibits the standing of such vehicles on the designated streets, but does not render owners of vehicles liable to prosecution for regulate stands for the vehicles, and to prevent the incumbering of streets.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Licenses, Dec. Dig. § 6.*]

2. LICENSES (§ 7*)—ORDINANCES—VALIDITY—AUTHORITY OF MUNICIPALITY.

An ordinance, prohibiting the use of streets by hackmen for the purpose of a public stand without obtaining a permit therefor and paying a license fee, reserving to municipal authorities the right to grant licenses to such persons as they deem proper, is not void on the ground that it gives the municipal authorities the discretion to say who shall and who shall not have permits.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Licenses, Dec. Dig. § 7.*]

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 121*)—ORDINANCES—VALIDITY—PERSON ENTITLED TO QUESTION.

One who has not been refused a permit under an ordinance, prohibiting the use by hackmen of the streets for a public stand without first obtaining a permit and paying a license fee, cannot urge the invalidity of the ordinance, because discretion is conferred on municipal authorities to say who shall and who shall not have permits.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 121.*]

4. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 121*)—ORDINANCES—VALIDITY—AUTHORITY OF MUNICIPALITY.

A person whose permit, granted under a municipal ordinance prohibiting the use by hackmen of streets for a public stand without obtaining a permit therefor and paying a license fee, has not been revoked cannot urge the invalidity of the ordinance because discretion is given to municipal authorities to revoke a permit for a violation of the ordinance.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 121.*]

5. LICENSES (§ 7*)—ORDINANCES—VALIDITY—REASONABLENESS OF FEE.

An ordinance imposing an annual license fee on hackmen of $2.50 for each vehicle drawn by one horse, and $5 for each vehicle drawn by two horses, and for each motor vehicle, does not impose an unreasonable license tax.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Licenses, Cent. Dig. § 15; Dec. Dig. § 7.*]

6. LICENSES (§ 7*)—ORDINANCES—VALIDITY—DOUBLE TAXATION.

An ordinance imposing an annual license tax, on hackmen of from $2.50 to $5 for each vehicle is not invalid as double taxation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Licenses, Cent. Dig. § 14; Dec. Dig. § 7.*]

7. INJUNCTION (§ 105*)—ENFORCEMENT OF MUNICIPAL ORDINANCES—CRIMINAL PROSECUTION—ADEQUACY OF REMEDIES.

Ordinarily an injunction will not lie to restrain a criminal prosecution; there being an adequate remedy at law.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Injunction, Cent. Dig. §§ 178, 179; Dec. Dig. § 105.*]

8. INJUNCTION (§ 105*)—ENFORCEMENT OF MUNICIPAL ORDINANCES—CRIMINAL PROSECUTION—ADEQUACY OF REMEDIES.

Injunction will not lie to enjoin the enforcement of an ordinance imposing a license fee on hackmen and regulating the use of streets

Appeal from District Court, Dallas County; J. C. Roberts, Judge.

Action by N. Kissinger and others against S. J. Hay and others. From a judgment of dismissal, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

M. M. Parks, J. M. Overstreet, and Ross M. Scott, for appellants. J. J. Collins and J. C. Robertson, for appellees.

RAINEY, C. J. This is an injunction suit brought by appellants to enjoin the board of commissioners of the city of Dallas from the enforcement of an ordinance of said city regulating the standing of move wagons, express wagons, hacks, and other vehicles let for hire upon the streets of said city, and providing a license fee therefor. A temporary injunction was granted. Defendant answered by exceptions, and moved to dissolve, upon a hearing of which the exceptions were sustained, the injunction dissolved, and plaintiffs' cause dismissed, from which this appeal is prosecuted.

Plaintiffs' petition alleged, in substance, that they were threatened to be prosecuted for a violation of the ordinance, and that they would be greatly harassed, annoyed, and oppressed, and that a multiplicity of prosecutions would follow, at great cost and expense to the appellants; that said ordinance is unconstitutional, unreasonable, and oppressive, and void, because it gives to the board of commissioners the discretion to say who shall and who shall not have a permit under the same, and because it is therefore discriminatory and partial; that the limits contained in the ordinance, and the fines and penalties attached for disobedience of it, are unreasonable, and that the enforcement of the ordinance would amount to the practical confiscation of appellants' property; that said ordinance practically excluded appellants from doing business in the city; that the license fee imposed by the said ordinance upon the appellants was, in effect, double taxation. Section 7, subd. 4, of the charter of Dallas (Sp. Act Leg. 1907, p. 584, c. 71, art. 2), gives to the city the power "to lay out, establish, open, alter, widen, lower, raise, extend, grade, narrow, care for, pave, supervise, maintain and improve streets, alleys, sidewalks, squares, parks, public places and bridges, and to vacate and close the same, and to require the removal from the streets and sidewalks of all obstructions, * * * signs, fruit stands, show cases, and encroachments of every character upon said streets and sidewalks." Section 43, of art. 14, among other powers confers the following: "To license, tax, and regulate draymen, hackmen, omnibus drivers, baggage wagon drivers, and ter County, Ark., its subcontractors Piggot & Prebble employed appellant to work on said railroad. His labor consisted in grading and leveling the roadbed. He received time checks for his individual labor to the amount of $66.70. He also bought time checks from other laborers to the amount of $106.03. On the 1st day of July, 1903, he recovered judgment before a justice of the peace in Baxter county against Piggot & Prebble for both amounts, and no part of said judgment has been paid. The object of this action on the part of appellant is to enforce a lien on the railroad of appellee for the payment of said sum of $66.70 and accrued interest. The chancellor found in favor of appellee, and a judgment was rendered in its favor for costs. The case is here regularly on appeal.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

W. S. Chastain, for appellant. T. M. Mehaffy, J. E. Williams, and Horton & South, for appellee.

HART, J. (after stating the facts as above). The chancellor evidently proceeded upon the theory that Piggot & Prebble, the subcontractors, were necessary parties to the action, and that is the question presented to us for determination. In the case of St. Louis, Iron Mountain & Sou. R. Co. v. Love, 74 Ark. 528, 86 S. W. 385, the court in construing sections 6661 and 6663 of Kirby's Digest, under which this action is brought, said: "It is clear that, where a contractor or subcontractor is the primary debtor, the suit should be against him to establish the liability and not against the railroad company primarily. They may both be joined in the suit, the contractor so that the debt may be established against him, and the railroad company so that the lien therefor may be adjudged against its property; but it does not follow that a personal judgment must be rendered against the contractor before a lien can be declared against the railroad company." See, also, S. B. Luttrell & Co. v. Knoxville, L. & J. R. Co., 105 S. W. (Tenn.) 565, and cases cited. In Jones on Liens, par. 1303, the rule is stated as follows: "A subcontractor who holds an open, unsettled, or disputed account against the principal contractor should obtain an adjudication of this before seeking to establish a lien against the owner, or at the same time that he seeks to do so. He should either obtain a judgment against the contractor before bringing an action to enforce the lien, or he should make the contractor a party to that action. The burden of ascertaining whether there is any defense to the action ought not to be put upon the owner of the property. He is not presumed to have any knowledge upon the subject. Further than this, if the contractor establishes his lien against the property, and the owner is comwith an adjudicated claim, and not with a mere open account."

In the present case the railroad company, which is the owner of the property, sought to be reached by the lien, has been furnished with an adjudicated claim. The account between appellant and the subcontractors became res adjudicata by the judgment of the justice of the peace from which no appeal was taken, and that is all that could have been accomplished by making the subcontractors parties to this action. Since the object in making the subcontractors parties to this suit was to fix the liability of appellant against them, and since that had already been established by a judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction, we are of the opinion that the chancellor erred in not enforcing a lien against the railroad of appellee in favor of appellant for the amount sued for; the undisputed evidence showing that it has not been paid.

The decree is therefore reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to enter a decree in accordance with this opinion.

GREER et al. v. COOK.

(Supreme Court of Arkansas. Nov. 16, 1906.)

1. INJUNCTION (§ 33*)—SUBJECTS OF RELIEF—SUITS—EVASION OF EXEMPTION LAWS.

When debtor and creditor reside in the same state, the creditor's attempt to evade the exemption laws of that state by suing in a foreign jurisdiction may be enjoined.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Injunction, Cent. Dig. § 70; Dec. Dig. § 33.*]

2. VENUE (§ 26*)—RESIDENCE OF PARTIES.

That an attorney to whom part of a claim was assigned for his services in collecting the claim was a resident did not prevent suit in another state, where the original creditor resided.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Venue, Cent. Dig. § 40; Dec. Dig. § 26.*]

3. ABATEMENT AND REVIVAL (§ 13*)—PENDENCY—RIGHT TO BRING NEW SUIT.

That suit on a claim was pending within the state did not prevent a new action thereon in another state.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Abatement and Revival, Cent. Dig. § 92; Dec. Dig. § 13.*]

4. INJUNCTION (§ 33*)—VEXATIOUS SUITS—RIGHT TO ENJOIN.

That a creditor sued a resident in a foreign jurisdiction solely to vex and oppress him does not authorize injunction against such suit; the remedy, if any, being at law for malicious abuse of process.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Injunction, Cent. Dig. § 70; Dec. Dig. § 33.*]

Appeal from Pulaski Chancery Court; Frank H. Dodge, Special Judge.

Action by W. H. Cook against W. L. Greer and another. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Reversed, with directions to dismiss.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes
118 S.W.—64

appence.

MCCULLOCH, J. Cook is a railroad locomotive engineer and resides in Pulaski county, Ark., and one Shilling, acting through his agent and attorney, Greer, sued him before a justice of the peace of Pulaski county, for a debt of $51.32 alleged to be due on open account for goods sold. Judgment was rendered in favor of Shilling for the alleged debt and cost, and afterwards a writ of garnishment was issued on the judgment and served on Cook's employer, the St. Louis, Iron Mountain & Southern Railway Company to seize his wages. He appealed from the judgment of the justice of the peace to the circuit court, and superseded the judgment.

While the case was pending in the circuit court, Shilling and Greer (an interest in the alleged debt having been assigned to the latter in payment for his services as collecting agent) assigned the claim to one Dart at Kansas City, Mo., for the sole purpose of having a new suit brought on the claim in Dart's name in the state of Missouri. The new suit was instituted at Kansas City, including garnishment proceedings against the railway company to seize the same wages of Cook covered by the garnishment in the Arkansas suit. Cook then instituted the present action in equity to enjoin the further prosecution of the Missouri action, alleging that it was being prosecuted in another state for the purpose of defeating his right of exemptions as a resident of the state of Arkansas. He also alleged in his complaint that he did not owe the alleged debt. The chancellor granted a perpetual injunction as prayed for, and also rendered a decree in Cook's favor for the sum of $75 damages found to have been sustained on account of the wrongful prosecution of the Missouri action. Shilling and Dart, being nonresidents of the state, were not made parties to the suit; Greer and the railroad company being the only defendants. It seems to be well established by authority that, when a debtor and creditor are resident of the same state, an attempt of the latter to evade the exemption laws of the state of their domicile by bringing suit in another state may be enjoined by a chancery court. Griffith v. Langsdale, 53 Ark. 71, 13 S. W. 733, 22 Am. St. Rep. 182; Note to Rader v. Stubblefield, 10 Am. & Eng. Ann. Cas. p. 26. And the same doctrine is often extended so as to prevent other evasions of the laws of the state of the domicile of the parties. But this court in the case above cited expressly limited the application of the rule to suits between parties residing in the same state, and refused to enjoin a resident of another state from suing in that state a citizen of this state, even though the effect of it was to prevent the latter from getting the benefit of his exemptions.

suit sought to be enjoined, nor does the proof show definitely where they reside, but it does show that Shilling, the original creditor, is not a resident of the state of Arkansas. He may have been a resident of the state of Missouri for aught the record discloses. It was the duty of appellee to allege and prove facts sufficient to entitle him to the relief sought, and, having failed to do so, the relief must be denied. It is true that Greer, to whom an interest in the debt alleged to be due from appellee had been assigned as compensation for his services in collecting it, resided in this state, but as his co-creditor resided in another state, they had the right to bring another action there to collect the debt.

The fact that an action was first instituted and was pending here, when the new action was commenced in Missouri, does not alter the case. Whether or not the bringing of a new action in a foreign jurisdiction operates as an abatement of the action here we need not decide. The result turns upon the right of the creditor to bring his action in another state without being open to the charge of having fraudulently evaded the laws of this state, and, if he had the right, in the first instance, to sue in another state, the fact that he had already instituted suit here does not cut off that right. The fact that the creditor instituted the suit in a foreign jurisdiction for the sole purpose of vexation and oppression does not authorize the interposition of a court of equity by injunction. The remedy, if any, is at law for the malicious abuse of process. Baxley v. Laster, 82 Ark. 236, 101 S. W. 755, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 983, 118 Am. St. Rep. 64. The case of Pickett v. Ferguson, 45 Ark. 177, 55 Am. Rep. 545, which is relied on by appellee to sustain the decree, has no application, for there the court of equity in this state had assumed jurisdiction of all the parties and the subject-matter of the litigation on other well-established grounds of equity jurisdiction, and, as an incident to the proper adjudication of the matters involved, enjoined one of the parties from prosecuting a suit in Tennessee involving the same issues. The injunction was granted at the instance of cross-complainants and this court approved it on the ground that, inasmuch as all of the necessary parties were not before the Tennessee court, complete relief could not be given them. No such state of facts exists in the present case. Here the jurisdiction of the chancery court was invoked for the sole purpose of granting an injunction to stop the prosecution of an action at law in a foreign jurisdiction.

We are clearly of the opinion that no grounds are shown for equitable interference, and the decree is therefore reversed, with directions to dismiss the complaint.

4. Defendant asked, and the court refused to give, an instruction telling the jury that the state had failed to show that the statement made by the defendant was material, and that they must acquit the defendant. The evidence is undisputed that Mallory was on trial charged with the crime of arson, and the state, to sustain this charge, introduced the defendant, who swore he saw him set fire to and burn the house charged in the indictment at the time and place therein mentioned. There is the testimony of two witnesses, and some circumstances in addition thereto, that this testimony was false. There was no other testimony on the subject. Chief Justice English said: "When there is no dispute about the facts sworn to, the question whether the testimony on which perjury is assigned is material is a question of law, to be decided by the court, and not of fact, to be passed on by the jury." Nelson v. State, 32 Ark. 192. The court left it to the jury to say whether the testimony was material or not; and, in view of the evidence just outlined, there could be no other finding than that it was material, but it would have been within the province of the court to have told the jury that the evidence was material. Certainly there is no prejudicial error in refusing to direct a verdict because the state did not introduce testimony to prove that alleged perjured testimony was material when it went to the very gist of the case, and was shown by the undisputed evidence in the case.

Finding no error in the case, the judgment is affirmed.

MATHY v. MATHY.

(Supreme Court of Arkansas. Nov. 2, 1908.
On Rehearing, Nov. 30, 1908.)

1. DIVORCE (§ 49*)—RECONCILIATION—CONDONATION.

Where a husband and wife met and confessed their past offenses to each other, and each forgave the other and resumed the marriage relation, they thereby condoned all past causes for divorce.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. §§ 172, 174, 176, 178; Dec. Dig. § 49.*]

2. HUSBAND AND WIFE (§ 48*)—CONVEYANCE BY WIFE TO HUSBAND—EFFECT.

A conveyance by a wife to her husband passes only the equitable title; the legal title remaining in her.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Cent. Dig. § 242; Dec. Dig. § 48.*]

3. DEEDS (§ 196*)—CONVEYANCE BY WIFE TO HUSBAND—INVALIDITY—PRESUMPTION—BURDEN OF PROOF.

Because of the confidential relation existing between husband and wife, a conveyance by the wife to the husband may be attended with a presumption against its validity for undue influence and will be closely scrutinized; the burden being on the husband to establish that it

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Deeds, Cent. Dig. § 589; Dec. Dig. § 196.*]

4. DIVORCE (§ 249*)—DISPOSITION OF PROPERTY—RESTORATION TO WIFE—LIEN.

Where a wife during her marriage conveyed property to her husband and he removed incumbrances therefrom, paid insurance, taxes, fixed charges and made permanent improvements, after divorce for her fault, the husband's equitable title should only be divested, and the property vested absolutely in the wife on her repaying the amounts so invested by him, with interest, less the net amount of rents which he received therefrom.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. §§ 706, 709; Dec. Dig. § 249.*]

Appeal from Garland Chancery Court; Alphonzo Curl, Chancellor.

Action by Della J. Mathy against Joseph Mathy, in which defendant filed a cross-bill. From a judgment denying relief to either party, defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded, with directions.

C. V. Teague, for appellant. S. W. Leslie, M. S. Cobb, and Wood & Henderson, for appellee.

HART, J. Della J. Mathy instituted an action for divorce against Joseph Mathy in the chancery court of Garland county on the 19th day of April, 1906, and the case is here on appeal.

The complaint alleges a marriage on May 8, 1885, in Chicago, Ill., a residence in Arkansas for the statutory period required for divorce, and for cause of divorce assigns cruel treatment and personal indignities. She prays for alimony, attorney's fees, and for general relief. On May 23, 1906, Joseph Mathy answered, admitting the marriage and residence in the state of Arkansas, but denies all the other material allegations of the complaint. On May 30, 1906, he filed his cross-complaint, alleging that appellee had been guilty of adultery with divers persons named in his cross-complaint. On June 9, 1906, appellee answered the cross-complaint. She denied adultery on her part, and charged appellant with adultery with various women named by her in her amended bill. Subsequently several amendments were made to the pleadings, which consisted in additional charges of adultery by each and a denial of the charges by the other. The chancellor found both parties equally at fault, and therefore rendered a decree dismissing both the complaint and the cross-complaint for want of equity. A large amount of testimony was taken on each side. On account of the vulgar details, we will refrain from making an abstract of the testimony. Besides, it would serve no useful purpose. A careful examination of the evidence leads us to conclude that, whatever may have been the sins of each against the marriage vows, about the beginning of the year 1905 they confessed

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

For the reasons given, the decree must be reversed and the cause remanded, with directions to enter a decree in accordance with this opinion. The chancellor may, if he deem it necessary, give leave to either party to introduce further evidence in regard to the amounts expended by appellant and the rents received by him on the Magnolia Hotel property.

On Rehearing.

The original opinion in this case will be so amended as to allow appellant all amounts expended by him in clearing the title and removing incumbrances from the property, insurance, taxes, and fixed charges against it paid by him, and all permanent improvements, if any, made by him, with the legal rate of interest from date of payment if the same be shown in an equitable accounting to be just charges. These amounts should be credited by the net amount of rents received by him.

In all other respects the motion for rehearing is denied.

HAMITER v. BROWN.

(Supreme Court of Arkansas. Nov. 16, 1908.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1002*)—REVIEW—QUESTIONS OF FACT.

The Supreme Court will not interfere with a finding by the jury on conflicting testimony.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3935-3937; Dec. Dig. § 1002.*]

2. BILLS AND NOTES (§ 350*)—BONA FIDE PURCHASERS—PRE-EXISTING DEBT—"DUE COURSE OF BUSINESS"—"HOLDER FOR VALUE."

One who takes negotiable paper in payment of an antecedent debt before maturity and without notice, actual or otherwise, of any defect, receives it "in due course of business," and becomes, within the meaning of commercial law, "a holder for value."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Cent. Dig. §§ 924-936; Dec. Dig. § 359.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 3, p. 2223; vol. 4, p. 3320.]

3. BILLS AND NOTES (§ 371*)—BONA FIDE PURCHASERS—DEFENSES—ACCOMMODATION PAPER.

A bona fide holder for value of accommodation paper taken in due course of business may enforce it against the makers although he knew when he received it that one of them was an accommodation surety.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Cent. Dig. § 964; Dec. Dig. § 371.*]

4. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1033*)—REVIEW—HARMLESS ERROR—INSTRUCTIONS.

A party cannot complain of instructions which are too favorable to him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4052-4062; Dec. Dig. § 1033.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Pulaski County; Edward W. Winfield, Judge.

Action by Leslie T. Brown against J. H.

Dan W. Jones, for appellant. E. M. Merriam, for appellee.

MCCULLOCH, J. This is an action instituted by appellee on three negotiable promissory notes executed to him by appellant as one of the joint makers with W. T. Tucker and T. H. Davis. Appellant and Davis signed the notes as joint makers, but were in fact only accommodation sureties for Tucker, which fact was known to appellee when he accepted the notes. Tucker was indebted to appellee for a sum of money collected as attorney for the latter, and appellee testified that the notes were delivered to him in satisfaction of the debt. Tucker admitted that he was indebted to appellee for money collected as the latter's attorney, but denied that the notes were delivered in satisfaction of this debt. He testified that he delivered the notes to appellee for the latter to use as collateral in borrowing money, and that he represented to appellant, when he requested him to sign as surety, that the notes were to be used only for that purpose. Appellant also testified that he signed the notes upon said representations made to him by Tucker that the same were for appellee's use as collateral in borrowing money. Appellee did not negotiate the notes, but kept them until maturity, and afterwards instituted this action on them.

There is no dispute in the evidence as to these representations being made by Tucker to appellant to induce him to sign the notes, and, as the verdict of the jury has settled in appellee's favor the conflict between his testimony and Tucker's as to the purpose for which the notes were delivered, we must treat it as settled that the notes were put into circulation by Tucker for a purpose not in accordance with his representations to appellant when he obtained the latter's signature. Appellant, then, has made out a defense, except as against a bona fide holder of the notes for value. Can appellee, who accepted the notes in payment of an antecedent indebtedness from Tucker, the principal, claim as an innocent holder for value? This court has answered that question in the affirmative. Tabor v. Merchants' National Bank, 43 Ark. 454, 3 S. W. 805, 3 Am. St. Rep. 241. In that case the court held that "one who takes negotiable paper in payment of an antecedent debt before maturity and without notice, actual or otherwise, of any defect thereto, receives it in due course of business, and becomes, within the meaning of commercial law, a holder for value." The fact that appellee knew when he received the notes that appellant was an accommodation surety does not affect his right to recover. Evans v. Speer Hardware Co., 65 Ark. 204.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

LOEB et al. v. GERMAN NAT. BANK.
(Supreme Court of Arkansas. Nov. 16, 1906.)

1. TRIAL (§ 11*)—CAUSES FOR PARTICULAR DOCKETS—EQUITABLE DEFENSES.

Defendants' answer in an action on notes states no equitable defense, and so does not entitle them to a transfer to equity, execution of the notes being admitted, and the answer merely averring that it is impossible for defendants to state, owing to the large number of transactions between the parties, the calculations of interest on various notes, various offsets, and appropriations of collateral to various notes, just what amount is due on the notes sued on; this being a mere invitation to have an accounting to ascertain whether or not there is a defense, and nothing appearing that could not be ascertained in a court of law without an equitable accounting.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 29; Dec. Dig. § 11.*]

2. CORPORATIONS (§ 123*)—STOCK—TRANSFERS—RECORDING.

Kirby's Dig. § 849, requiring the recording of transfers of stock, does not apply to transfers for collateral security, but only to actual sales.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 481, 491; Dec. Dig. § 123.*]

3. CORPORATIONS (§ 123*)—STOCK—TRANSFER—TRANSFER ON BOOKS.

Kirby's Dig. § 853, requiring stock of a corporation to be transferred on its books as it shall provide, does not invalidate, as between the parties, a transfer of stock as collateral by delivery of the certificates, without notice to the corporation or transfer on its books.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 481, 491; Dec. Dig. § 123.*]

4. CORPORATIONS (§ 123*)—STOCK—SUCCESSIVE TRANSFERS AS COLLATERAL—DUTY TO RECORD.

Where stock was transferred as collateral, first by W. to defendant, and then by defendant to plaintiff, any neglect in not having the transfer from W. to defendant recorded was that of defendant, so that plaintiff is not liable to defendant for loss of the stock on account thereof through W.'s selling it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 123.*]

5. CORPORATIONS (§ 123*)—CORPORATE STOCK—TRANSFER AS COLLATERAL—NEGLECT OF PLEDGEES—PLEADING.

The answer in an action on notes, alleging that W. transferred stock to defendant as collateral, and that defendant then transferred it to plaintiff as collateral, that plaintiff neglected to have the transfers recorded or transferred on the books of the corporation; that plaintiff, then and long afterwards knowing W. was insolvent, permitted him to sell and dispose of the stock; that it was plaintiff's duty to use ordinary diligence to preserve the collateral, but it failed to have the collateral recorded or transferred as required by law, or to realize on or protect it; and that but for the negligence of plaintiff, as herein stated, said stock would have been protected, appropriated, and applied on the notes—merely charges negligence, in that the stock was lost by plaintiff not having its assignment recorded and transferred on the corporation's books, and not that plaintiff turned the stock over to W. and by such surrender permitted him to sell it, which would have been a conversion.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 123.*]

Mere delay of plaintiff in enforcing collateral securities given it by defendant does not relieve defendant of liability, or make plaintiff liable for loss of the security.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pledges, Cent. Dig. § 78; Dec. Dig. § 30.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Pulaski County; Edward W. Winfield, Judge.

Action by the German National Bank against Joseph Loeb and another. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendants appeal. Affirmed.

On the 30th of April, 1906, the German National Bank brought suit against Joseph Loeb and Helen Loeb for a balance upon two promissory notes. On November 5, 1906, the defendants filed an answer and counterclaim. On March 15, 1907, the plaintiff filed a reply to the counterclaim, and on March 28, 1907, the defendant filed a motion to transfer to equity, which was as follows, to wit: "Defendants state that beginning in September, 1899, they borrowed money up to and including July, 1903, from the plaintiff; that from time to time during said period they executed to plaintiff about 75 notes, ranging in amount of from $500 to $12,000; that said notes were usually made payable from 30 to 120 days, and were discounted at the bank of said plaintiff by said defendants at the time of their execution, which notes were generally renewed from time to time during said period; that as many as 15 or 20 notes were so made and renewed during each year covering said period; that the average amount borrowed or renewed each year amounted to about $20,000, or an aggregate of approximately $90,000; that during said period they also indorsed notes at said bank for other parties to the amount approximately of from $65,000 to $75,000; that to secure said amounts, including the notes sued upon herein, and the indorsements made by them, they deposited with said bank from time to time certain collateral security, ranging in amounts from $15,000 to $25,000; that at all times during said period there was always a surplus of several thousand dollars in value of collateral in excess of the amount defendants were indebted to said plaintiff; that at various times during said period collateral so deposited were realized upon by said bank, and the amounts collected thereon was applied to the payment of the various notes and interest executed by defendants; that it is impossible for defendants to state, owing to the large number of transactions between the parties, the calculations of interest on the various notes, the various offsets, and appropriations of collateral to the various notes, just what amount is now due, if any, by said defendants upon the notes sued upon herein; that by reason of various loans, withdrawals, sales by the said Joseph and Helen Wolf of the 460 shares of stock in the Little Rock Building Association and the Ladies' Build-the track out of danger until the moment he suddenly started across, when he was instantly warned and struck before he could jump aside, and where there was nothing to indicate any infirmity preventing him from seeing the approaching train.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 596-612; Dec. Dig. § 252.*]

4. RAILROADS (§ 327*)—CROSSINGS—DUTY OF PEDESTRIAN.

Generally it is negligence for one approaching a railroad crossing to fail to look and listen for approaching trains.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Cent. Dig. §§ 1043-1056; Dec. Dig. § 327.*]

5. RAILROADS (§ 350*)—CROSSINGS—INJURY TO PEDESTRIAN—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—JURY QUESTION.

Whether one struck by a backing train at a public crossing was guilty of contributory negligence held, under the evidence, a jury question.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Cent. Dig. §§ 1166-1189; Dec. Dig. § 350.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Union County; Geo. W. Hays, Judge.

Action by D. Gill Russell against the Little Rock & Monroe Railway Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded for new trial.

T. M. Mehaffy and J. E. Williams, for appellant. W. E. Patterson, for appellee.

HART, J. D. Gill Russell brought this suit in the Union circuit court against the Little Rock & Monroe Railway Company to recover damages which he alleges he sustained by reason of the defendant negligently backing its train over him while he was crossing its railroad tracks at a public crossing in Huttig, Ark. The defendant answered, denying the material allegations of the complaint, and alleged contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff.

Russell, the plaintiff, testified substantially as follows: "I am 68 years old, and live at Felsenthal, Union county, Ark. I am an attorney at law. On the 28th day of August, 1906, I was at Huttig, in said county, and, desiring to go to Farmerville, I went to the depot for the purpose of taking one of defendant's trains to that place. While at the depot, the Monroe train came in, going north. I got tired of waiting for my train, and crossed over to the east side of the main track, intending to go to a neighbor's to borrow a horse to ride to Farmerville. I walked south on a towpath along the side of the main track towards a public crossing. When I got near the crossing, I turned around to see if the track was clear. I looked north and south, and did not see anything to interfere. The south-bound train was late. I knew that the rules and regulations of the railway company prescribed that trains on schedule time had the right of way, and also that north-bound trains had the right the main track in front of the depot, and was standing still. I walked leisurely along to the road crossing, which was about 25 steps distant. The public crossing was about 75 or 100 yards from the depot. When I got there, without looking back, I started across the track. As soon as I stepped on the track, some one hallooed 'Look out.' I looked up, and did not have time to jump to either side. I threw up my hands as the train carried me under. There was a man on the back end of the platform, but he looked like he did not know what to do. The train was backing rapidly, and wasn't making any noise. The train crew did not give me any warning, and, if they had rung the bell or blown the whistle, I would have heard it. I had a piece of cotton in my ear, but it was placed there loosely, and did not interfere with my hearing. I did not know of the approach of the train until the boy hollowed 'Look out' after I had stepped upon the railroad track. I was walking along the east side of the track because the path on the west side is too near the rails. My injuries were severe and are permanent. The accident happened in daylight." Other testimony was adduced by the plaintiff tending to corroborate his statement. The defendant adduced evidence to establish its defense. The defendant has appealed from a verdict and judgment in favor of the plaintiff.

Counsel for appellant base reversal upon the court giving, over their objection, the following instruction: "(6) The court instructs the jury that if they could find from the testimony that plaintiff was walking on or down defendant's track when the backing train struck and injured him, but that if any of defendant's train crew operating said train saw or could have seen plaintiff's danger in time to apprise him of it, or in time to stop the train after it appeared that plaintiff was in such danger and that from all appearance would not see or hear the train in time to avoid injury, and such trainmen failed to warn plaintiff or to stop the said train, although they may further find that plaintiff was at the time a trespasser on said track, they will find for the plaintiff." This instruction was erroneous in telling the jury that, if any of appellant's train crew could have seen appellee's danger in time to apprise him of it and failed to warn him, they should find for appellee, although they might further find that he was at the time a trespasser. It has been repeatedly held by this court that the servants of a railroad company owe a trespasser no duty except to exercise ordinary care, after discovering his perilous position, not to injure him. St. L. I. M. & Sou. R. Co. v. Raines (Ark.) 111 S. W. 262; St. L. I. M. & Sou. R. Co. v. Evans type, 200 lbs. of body type and all other fixtures in and now belonging to the Howard County Times office at Nashville, Arkansas. It being hereby expressly agreed and understood by and between the parties hereto that the title to said property shall be and remain in the said W. J. Old, until this note is fully paid, and that in case default is made in the payment of same he is hereby empowered without legal process to sell a sufficiency of said property to pay this note and interest.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. §§ 1418-1438; Dec. Dig. § 479.*]

4. SALES (§ 313*)—SELLER'S LIEN.

A seller's lien can only be created by suit, and only where the personalty is in the buyer's hands, and when it passes from the vendee the right is lost.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. §§ 878, 879; Dec. Dig. § 313.*]

5. SALES (§ 313*)—SELLER'S LIEN—WAIVER.

A seller waived the right to pursue the property and create a lien thereon by consenting to a mortgage by the buyer, also, defeating the rights of his transferee, after maturity of the note given for the purchase money, to enforce a lien.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Dec. Dig. § 313.*]

6. SALES (§ 477*)—TITLE RESERVED—WAIVER.

A seller waived a reservation of title, by consenting to a mortgage by the buyer, as to the mortgagee and those claiming under him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Dec. Dig. § 477.*]

7. TRIAL (§ 333*)—VERDICT—SUFFICIENCY.

In an action on a note and on a guaranty of its payment, a general verdict for plaintiff was not insufficient for not stating the amount of recovery, where the amount was not in dispute.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 784; Dec. Dig. § 333.*]

8. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1033*)—HARMLESS ERROR—INSTRUCTIONS.

Error in instructions, placing too great a burden of proof on plaintiff, is not available to defendants.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4056; Dec. Dig. § 1033.*]

9. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1176*)—REVERSAL—NEW TRIAL UNNECESSARY.

Error in directing a verdict for defendants, after a proper verdict for plaintiff, does not require a new trial, and judgment may be ordered on the first verdict.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4589; Dec. Dig. § 1176.*]

Battle, J., dissenting in part.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Howard County; Jas. S. Steel, Judge.

Action by E. M. Bell against W. J. Old and another. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded, with directions.

In 1902 Old was the owner of a certain printing plant, and sold a half interest in it to Turner for $400. Turner executed the following note:

"Nashville, Arkansas, July 21, 1902. On or before November 1, 1903, I promise to pay to the order of W. J. Old the sum of four hundred dollars with interest from date until paid at the rate of ten per cent. per annum. This note is given for a part of the purchase money for the following property, one Chandler and Price jobber, one Chandler & Price type, 200 lbs. of body type and all other fixtures in and now belonging to the Howard County Times office at Nashville, Arkansas. It being hereby expressly agreed and understood by and between the parties hereto that the title to said property shall be and remain in the said W. J. Old, until this note is fully paid, and that in case default is made in the payment of same he is hereby empowered without legal process to sell a sufficiency of said property to pay this note and interest.

"Witness our hands this 21st day of July, 1902. [Signed] H. A. Turner."

Note indorsed: "Transferred to E. M. Bell 1 yr. 5 Mo. 17 ds. 58.53. Credit by work 2-23-04 $105.59."

Subsequently Turner mortgaged the property to J. B. Hill to secure a loan of $375. This mortgage was made with the consent of Old, and Old delivered to Hill as additional security the Turner note. The money obtained from Hill was paid to Old. It was agreed, at the time that the Turner note was delivered to Hill, that when Turner paid Hill the mortgage debt, Hill should return the note to Old. When the mortgage became due, instead of paying it, Turner induced the Bank of Ozan to purchase it from Hill. The bank did not know that the Turner note contained a reservation of title, and consented that it be returned to Old, relying entirely upon the mortgage as its security for the note to Hill, which it then purchased. Turner defaulting in the payment of the mortgage note, the Bank of Ozan foreclosed the mortgage, and Hyatt purchased most of the property at the mortgage sale. After the Turner note had been returned to Old, Old entered into negotiations with Bell for the purchase of an undivided one-half interest in a livery stable, and, after pending for some time, a trade was made. Old delivered the Turner note to Bell in part payment of the purchase price of the stable, and, either during the negotiations, or when the sale was consummated—there is a conflict in the evidence upon that point—delivered the following guaranty to Bell:

"Know all men by these presents: That W. J. Old, of Nashville, Arkansas, to whom E. M. Bell has executed a bill of sale to me bearing even date herewith, for an undivided one-half interest in the livery property known as the 'Arkansas Stable,' situated in Nashville, Arkansas, have assigned, transferred, delivered and set over to E. M. Bell a certain promissory note for $400 with 10 per cent. interest from November 1, 1903, executed July 21, 1902, by H. A. Turner to me, and under term of said note a vendor's lien being reserved on certain printing press, type, and so forth, as described in said note, the transfer of said note being in part consideration of the purchase money for the livery prop-upon which verdict judgment was rendered for the defendants, and the plaintiff has appealed.

Sain & Sain, for appellant. W. P. Feazel, for appellees.

HILL, C. J. (after stating the facts as above). This case is a sequel to Hyatt v. Bell, 83 Ark. 360, 103 S. W. 748. The material facts in regard to the origin of this litigation may be found therein stated, the other material facts are in the preceding statement. An important matter in this case is the sharp conflict in the evidence as to whether the guaranty was canceled by agreement after its execution. This was submitted to the jury in several instructions. It must be taken, from the verdict returned by the jury under those instructions, that they found in favor of Bell upon that issue. The instructions were erroneous wherein they submitted to the jury the question of an election of remedies growing out of the suit of Bell against Hyatt. There was no election of remedies by virtue of that suit which would preclude Bell from maintaining this suit, and the court should have so instructed the jury as a matter of law, and only left for their determination the question of fact, above indicated, as to whether the guaranty was effective, or whether it had been canceled before the trade for the half interest in the livery stable was consummated.

The principle is well established that a vendor of chattels, who has reserved title until the purchase price is paid may, upon default of payment, retake the property, and thereby cancel the debt, or he may sue to recover the debt, and thereby affirm the sale, in which case he looks to the debtor, and not to the property; in the other case he looks to the property, and not to the debtor. But that principle does not apply here. The Turner note contained a reservation of title. The guaranty erroneously describes it as retaining a vendor's lien upon the printing plant. The two rights are different. A vendor's lien on personal property can only be created by suit, and only when the property is in the hands of the vendee. When it passes out of the hands of the vendee, the right to create a vendor's lien against it is gone. When the title to personal property is reserved, the title does not pass, and the property may be retaken upon default in the payment.

When default was made on the Turner note, which was owned by Bell, the property had passed out of the hands of Turner, having been mortgaged to Hill, which mortgage was purchased from Hill by the Bank of Ozan. This mortgage was made with the consent of Old, and he thereby waived any right to pursue the property and create a maturity of the note. But, as seen, that right did not in fact exist, as the note reserved the title, and not a lien; but his action in consenting to the mortgage of it was equally a waiver of the reservation of the title, in so far as the mortgagee, and those holding under him, were concerned. This action of his in consenting to the mortgage defeated Bell from recovering the property in the suit of Hyatt v. Bell. The guaranty by its terms only became effective in the event that the Turner note was not paid, and Bell had "to foreclose and enforce the vendor's lien therein reserved." Therefore, in order to make the guaranty effective, Bell was required to attempt to foreclose and to enforce a vendor's lien. The only action that was open to him was to seek to recover the property in a replevin suit, in order that he might then bring suit to enforce a vendor's lien or maintain his replevin suit upon the reservation of title. Old's action, as heretofore shown, in consenting to the mortgage, defeated that suit. There was no record notice of this conduct, and no showing that Bell had actual knowledge of it when he brought that suit. It was a fact developed in that litigation. To permit him now to defeat Bell's suit on the guaranty, on account of Bell having brought this necessary suit in order to hold the guaranty, would be to enable him to profit by his own act in derogation of Bell's rights, and to which Bell was not a party. The terms of the guaranty having required him to pursue this remedy, although the remedy may be erroneously described in it, before it became effective, required Bell to pursue the only course open to him; that is, to seek to recover the property. And now that he has exhausted that remedy, then the terms of the guaranty bring into being his remedy upon it, and he should be entitled to recover upon it. The jury has settled the only open question in the case—that is, whether the guaranty was canceled or effective—and having decided the latter, then it was the duty of the court to have entered judgment upon the verdict first rendered by the jury.

It is objected that said verdict is insufficient to render judgment upon it, because the amount of recovery is not therein stated. This amount is undisputed. The face of the note and the guaranty show that the principal was $400 with interest. There was a credit upon the note of $105.59. There was an allegation in the complaint, which was not denied in either answer, that the plaintiff had expended for costs $60 in his suit with Hyatt. The amount being undisputed, the court should have directed it inserted in the verdict, or rendered judgment upon the verdict as it stood for the undisputed amount.

The court committed two errors: First, in giving the instructions which he did, at the that she looked after the household and performed such duties as are usually done by the housewife or mistress of the house. Upon the death of John O'Neill, the said Annie gave directions for the obsequies, selected a lot in the cemetery for the burial, selected a casket, and attended the funeral."

The evidence sustains this finding of facts.

And the court declared the law of the case as follows:

"Upon the facts found, the court declares as matters of law:

"I. Prior to August 27, 1904, there was an impediment to the marriage of John O'Neill and Annie Lewis, consisting of the fact that the said John had a living wife from whom he was not divorced, and could not enter into a valid contract of marriage with the said Annie Lewis.

"II. Subsequent to the rendition of the decree for divorce August 27, 1904, the said John O'Neill and Annie Lewis continued to live together, just as they had for years prior thereto; there being no evidence that their relations were changed after this date of divorce. The court holds that their continuing to live together as husband and wife, holding themselves out as such, establishing a home, and other facts detailed by the evidence, are not sufficient evidence of a contract of marriage entered into between them, either before or subsequent to August 27, 1904. Except their living together and holding themselves out as man and wife as aforesaid, no contract of marriage existed between said parties.

"III. The claimant, Annie Lewis, is not entitled to dower and homestead in the property in controversy, under the laws of the state."

Assuming, without deciding, that marriages according to the common law are valid in this state, we find that there is no evidence before us that appellant and John O'Neill contracted such marriage, or any other marriage.

In Darling v. Dent, 82 Ark. 76, 82, 100 S. W. 747, this court said: "While it is true that, if it be shown that the relations between Darling and Mrs. Williams were illicit in the beginning, the burden is upon those asserting a valid marriage agreement to show that such an agreement was afterwards entered into, still there is no presumption that the relationship continued to be illicit. It is a matter of proof, and not of presumption, whether the relationship continued to be illicit, or whether it was changed to a legal or moral status." In this case there was no evidence that Annie and John O'Neill entered into any present agreement to take each other for husband and wife after he was divorced from a former wife on the 27th of their continued cohabitation after the divorce does not prove that they changed their intent, which was to live together without being married. The concomitants of their illicit relations are not sufficient, by their unasserted probative force, to prove that when they were at liberty to marry they embraced the opportunity. As Chief Justice Beasley said of such evidence, in Collins v. Voorhees, 47 N. J. Eq. 315, 20 Atl. 676, 14 L. R. A. 364, 24 Am. St. Rep. 412: "To treat evidence which was in all respects and to the utmost degree in accord with the original purpose as proving, proprio vigore, a change of such purpose, appears to be not only inadmissible according to the legal rules, but as being in logic ridiculous." Collins v. Voorhees, 47 N. J. Eq. 315, 20 Atl. 412, 14 L. R. A. 364, 24 Am. St. Rep. 412, and note; Harbeck v. Harbeck, 102 N. Y. 714, 7 N. E. 408; Ferrall v. Boardway, 95 N. C. 551; Jones v. Jones, 45 Md. 144.

Judgment affirmed.

LE GRAND v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Arkansas. Nov. 23, 1908.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 614*)—CONTINUANCE—DISCRETION OF TRIAL COURT—ABSENT WITNESSES.

In a bigamy prosecution, where a continuance was granted at the February term to enable accused to secure witnesses in another county, and subpoenas were issued in January for such witnesses and mailed to the sheriff of such county, but no returns were made thereto, the refusal of a subsequent continuance, requested at the third day of the August term, was not an abuse of the trial court's discretion, where it was not shown that the facts to be proved by the absent witnesses could not be proved otherwise, or why such witnesses had not attended, other than the failure to make return to the subpoenas, and no reason was shown for expecting to secure the witnesses in future.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 614.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1134*)—APPEAL—REVIEW—QUESTIONS CONSIDERED.

In a bigamy prosecution, where accused's marriage was proved by other competent evidence, it was unnecessary to determine on appeal whether his wife's testimony was competent for that purpose.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 1134.*]

3. BIGAMY (§ 9*)—EVIDENCE—PREVIOUS MARRIAGE—ADMISSIBILITY.

In a bigamy prosecution, testimony by the sister of accused's wife that they were married while visiting witness, and told her about it an hour afterward, and that accused said they were married, as did witness' sister in accused's presence, and that they lived together in that locality, was competent to prove the previous marriage.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bigamy, Cent. Dig. §§ 42, 43; Dec. Dig. § 9.*]

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 232*)—OBJECTIONS BELOW—SUFFICIENCY.

An objection to "the reading from the first paragraph of the answer" and the statement of the proposed proof on that point is too general to justify review, where the paragraph, though stricken out before trial, contained some matter which could properly be proved.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 232.*]

2. EMINENT DOMAIN (§ 133*)—CONDEMNATION PROCEEDINGS—FIXTURES.

Where plaintiff was seeking to condemn certain lots and not the improvements, a statement by the court that, if the improvements were a part of the realty as defendant contended, they must also be condemned, otherwise the improvements were not condemned and might be removed, was proper.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. § 358; Dec. Dig. § 133.*]

3. FIXTURES (§ 7*)—INTENT—EVIDENCE.

Where defendant constructed buildings for a planing mill on certain lots, and the machinery was securely fastened to the buildings and a basement constructed in which it rested, and defendant intending to use the mill as long as he lived and afterwards turn it over to his sons, the buildings and machinery constituted fixtures.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fixtures, Cent. Dig. §§ 7-13; Dec. Dig. § 7.*]

4. EMINENT DOMAIN (§ 262*)—REVIEW—INSTRUCTIONS—PREJUDICE.

Where, in a condemnation proceeding, the evidence was undisputed that machinery and buildings on the land condemned were a part of the realty, an instruction that, if the buildings on the land constituted a manufacturing plant with such machinery therein as was necessary to carry on the business, the jury should find for defendant the value of the land, buildings, and machinery, while inaccurate, was not prejudicial to plaintiff.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. § 686; Dec. Dig. § 262.*]

5. EMINENT DOMAIN (§ 262*)—REVIEW—INSTRUCTIONS—PREJUDICE.

In a condemnation proceeding, a statement in an instruction that to sell real estate at its market value sometimes requires effort and negotiation for some weeks and even for some months, while objectionable as abstract, was without prejudice.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. § 686; Dec. Dig. § 262.*]

6. EMINENT DOMAIN (§ 87*)—PERSONAL PROPERTY—DAMAGES—EXPENSE OF REMOVAL.

In proceedings to condemn land, damages to personal property or the expense of removing it are not proper elements of damage.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. § 232; Dec. Dig. § 87.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Sebastian County; Daniel Hon, Judge.

Condemnation proceedings by the Kansas City Southern Railway Company against D. A. Anderson. From a judgment awarding defendant less damages than he demanded, both parties appeal. Affirmed.

S. W. Moore and Read & McDonough, for appellant. Ira D. Oglesby, for appellee.

city of Sebastian belonging to D. A. Anderson. The defendant answered in several paragraphs. Only parts of it are material on this appeal. He alleged that the property was occupied and used by him as a manufacturing plant, for the manufacture of finished lumber and mill products, and as a planing mill and lumber yard, upon which was located and used in said business valuable machinery; that the property had a peculiar value as a site for such business. He alleged that the total value of his property sought to be taken was $18,000, and that, after purchasing said land for a manufacturing site, it was essential, in order to use the same to better advantage, that he should erect necessary and suitable buildings and place therein necessary machinery, all of which was done; that the buildings were erected and machinery placed therein and attached thereto, not to be removed therefrom, but as a permanent plant, and with the intent and purpose that same should remain and become a permanent accession to the freehold. He also alleged that at the time the petition was filed he had a large stock of lumber to be manufactured into dressed and finished lumber, and that said stock could not be used or sold in its present condition without great damage and loss, and that to remove it to a new location would cost him $900, and without being manufactured he would suffer great loss upon it. He prayed for special damages in the sum of $800 as a fair and reasonable cost and expense of moving the same. The issues went to a jury, and under directions of the court to make special findings they returned a verdict for $12,000, dividing it as follows: $6,000 for the lots, $2,800 for the machinery, and $3,200 for the buildings on the lots. Upon this verdict the court rendered judgment for $12,000, and the railroad company has appealed.

1. The first error assigned is in defendant's counsel reading to the jury from the first paragraph of the answer. This paragraph had been stricken out by the court prior to the trial. It contained many matters irrelevant to the issues, but contained allegations of other matters which might have been competent testimony. The record merely shows this: "Counsel for the plaintiff objected to counsel for the defendant reading from the first paragraph of the answer in this case and making a statement of the proof purposed to be introduced upon that point. Objection overruled by the court, and plaintiff excepted." If any part of the paragraph stricken out contained any matter which would be proper to prove, then this record shows no error, because it does not show what part he read from or made a statement of the proof purposed to be introduced under it. There are allegations in it which might not opening the case to the jury, and to by appellee's counsel at the bar, and there may be others not prejudicial. If it had been certain other irrelevant matters in the stricken out paragraph, certainly it would have been improper for counsel to have read them or offered to have proved them. This exception fails to lay its finger on the error.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

2. The defendant offered evidence as to the character of the machinery and improvements on the property tending to show that the same were intended to be permanent. This was objected to by the plaintiff and the court said: "You are seeking to condemn these two lots and not the improvements. If the improvements are a part of the realty, you condemn them; and, if they are not a part of the realty, you do not condemn them, and they may be moved off." This was a correct statement of the case, and the court then properly permitted evidence to develop whether the machinery was an irremovable fixture or personalty. It was shown that the building was built for the purpose of installing this machinery for a planing mill, and for this purpose exclusively; that good machinery was put in and securely fastened to the buildings, and a basement was constructed in which it rested; that it was built in this manner for the purpose of attaching it permanently to the soil, and that Anderson intended to continue in this business at this place as long as he lived, and afterwards to turn it over to his boys if they wanted it. There was testimony from him and his son as to the manner of construction, all tending to show that it was intended from its nature and character to be a permanent accession to the freehold. This was all the testimony upon the point, and the court gave this instruction: "If the jury find that the buildings on the land constitute a manufacturing plant with such machinery therein as is necessary to carry on the business of the plant, you will find for defendant the value of the land, buildings, and machinery." This cannot be commended as an accurate statement of the proposition, but, in view of the undisputed evidence, it cannot have been prejudicial to the appellant. Under the undisputed testimony, the machinery became a part of the realty under the tests applied in Choate v. Kimball, 56 Ark. 55, 19 S. W. 108, and in Ozark v. Adams, 73 Ark. 227, 83 S. W. 920. As said in those cases, "the intention of the permanency in the installation of the machinery is what fixes its character as an irremovable fixture"; and this intention is "inferred from the nature of the article affixed, the relation and situation of the party making the annexation, * * * the structure and mode of annexation, and the purpose or use for which the annexation has been made."

3. The court gave this instruction: "The rule by which you are to be governed in determining the value of the property taken is the highest price which it would bring ability and the occasion to buy are willing to pay. This does not mean the price that could be realized at forced sale upon short notice, but the price that could be obtained after reasonable and ample time, such as would ordinarily be taken by an owner to make sale of like property. To sell real estate at its market value sometimes requires effort and negotiation for some weeks and even for some months." This is almost literally the words used by the court in Little Rock Junction Ry. Co. v. Woodruff, 49 Ark. 381, 5 S. W. 792, 4 Am. St. Rep. 51. Objection is made to the last paragraph, wherein the court stated that "to sell real estate at its market value sometimes requires offer and negotiation for some weeks, and even for some months." This was but stating a well-known fact of which the courts have long taken cognizance, because it is common knowledge. It would be better not to have these abstract statements in instructions; but the court fails to see where any prejudice could have resulted from it.

4. Other questions are presented which largely go to the admission of testimony. Some of these are not properly abstracted so that they are brought for review, and others become immaterial in view of the undisputed facts as to the machinery being realty, and others unimportant, owing to the subsequent exclusion of some of the claims of the defendant. All the appellant's exceptions have been considered, but none of the others are found of sufficient moment to require discussion.

5. Defendant introduced testimony as to the value of the stock of lumber and other personal property sought to be condemned, and as to its depreciation in value and the cost of removing the same, over the objection of the plaintiff. At the conclusion of the testimony, the court decided to exclude all of this testimony, and did so, and told the jury that the sole question for their consideration was the value of the property sought to be condemned. The defendant excepted to this, and has cross-appealed upon this issue. There are some cases which sustain the appellee's position, and they may be found reviewed in Blincoe v. Choctaw, etc., Ry. Co., 16 Okl. 286, 83 Pac. 908, by the Oklahoma territorial Supreme Court (8 Am. & Eng. Ann. Cas. 689); but it will be seen by reference to the editors' notes in the latter report that the majority of the courts hold that compensation cannot be recovered in such cases, either for damages resulting to personal property or for the cost of removing it from the premises. The controlling principle is thus stated by the New Hampshire court: "As the title to all property is held subject to the implied condition that it must be surrendered whenever the public interest requires it, the inconvenience and expense incident to the surrender of the possession titled." Rahiet v. Railroad, 62 N. H. 661. Mr. Lewis thus states the law upon this subject: "Fixtures upon the property taken must be valued and paid for as part of the real estate, and any depreciation in the value of fixtures upon the part not taken is to be taken into consideration, the same as damage to the soil itself. * * * But the damages to personal property, or the expense of removing it from the premises, cannot be considered in estimating the compensation to be paid." 2 Lewis on Eminent Domain (2d Ed.) § 483. Many consequential losses to the landowner, such as injury to business, inconvenience, expense, and losses from interruption of business, are not recoverable as damages in condemnation suits. These may be found discussed in 15 Cyc. 733 et seq. In Hot Springs R. R. Co. v. Williamson, 45 Ark. 429, the court pointed out the difference between the Constitution of this state and some others. The Constitution of this state has broadened the right of the property owner to compensation, and included damage as well as taking and appropriating; and it is not necessary under it that there should be a physical invasion or spoliation of one's land in order to give a right of recovery. But this does not reach to damages to the business of the landowner which are incident to the enforced purchase of his property. These are not subjects for assessment in condemnation proceedings under the weight of authority and the sounder reasoning on the subject. The court was right in excluding this evidence and confining the issues to the damages for the land taken, and this included the machinery which had become irremovably fixed to the freehold.

The judgment is in all things affirmed.

CARPENTER v. CARPENTER.

(Supreme Court of Arkansas. Nov. 23, 1908.)

COVENANTS (§ 102*)—BREACH—WARRANTY—RIGHTS OF COVENANTEE.

That a purchaser of land under a warranty deed was divested of title in a suit by one claiming under a prior title, after notice to the warrantor to appear and defend and after a bona fide defense, shows his right to recover for breach of the warranty.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Covenants, Cent. Dig. §§ 157-168; Dec. Dig. § 102.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Craighead County; Frank Smith, Judge.

Action by W. A. Carpenter against J. T. Carpenter. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Allen Hughes and Chas. D. Frierson, for appellant. Lamb & Caraway, for appellee.

HART, J. This is a suit brought by W. A. Carpenter against J. T. Carpenter in the

The complaint alleges that on November 1, 1901, appellant conveyed to appellee the lands in controversy, and in his deed warranted and covenanted that he was the owner in fee simple of said land and had full and lawful right to convey the same; that appellant was not the owner of said land, and had no right, title, or claim thereto, but that Clove Carpenter was the rightful owner; that at the November term, 1905, of the Craighead chancery court for the Eastern district, in a case therein pending wherein Clove Carpenter was plaintiff and the appellee and others were defendants, a decree was rendered by said court, vesting the title to said lands in Clove Carpenter and divesting the title thereto out of the plaintiff. Judgment was prayed for the recovery of the purchase price of the land, $600, and interest. The answer admitted that the appellant, on November 12, 1901, made to the appellee the deed described in the complaint, with covenants as therein alleged, and that the defendant at the time aforesaid and for a long time prior thereto was and had been the owner in fee simple of the land described in the complaint, was in possession of the same at the time said deed was made, and forthwith delivered said land to the plaintiff; denied that at the date of said conveyance Clove Carpenter was the owner of the land, or had any right, title, or interest therein; admitted that at the November term, 1905, of the Craighead chancery court for the Eastern district, in a cause therein pending wherein Clove Carpenter was plaintiff and W. A. Carpenter and Penelope Carpenter, his wife, and J. C. Hall, as trustee for the New England Security Company, were defendants, a decree was rendered in said court, decreeing the title to said lands to be in said Clove Carpenter, and not in the plaintiff. A jury was waived, and the case was heard by the court sitting as a jury, and upon consideration of the evidence the court gave judgment for the appellee.

W. A. Carpenter testified substantially as follows: "I am a brother of J. T. Carpenter and a cousin to Clove Carpenter. Clove Carpenter is a son of J. W. Carpenter. I paid J. T. Carpenter $600 for the lands in controversy. Clove Carpenter brought suit against me for the lands, claiming to own them under a prior title. A few days after Clove Carpenter brought suit against me, I met my brother, J. T. Carpenter, and told him about the suit. He told me not to be uneasy; that Clove Carpenter could not get the land, but that, if he did, he would pay every dollar of my money back; that he had frequent conversations with his brother about the conduct of the trial; and that his brother was a witness in the case. The case was determined in favor of Clove Carpenter, and

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

The complaint makes the agreement and plat exhibits.

"On the 30th of May, 1888, Sutcliffe delivered to Fordyce a trust deed to said land. The deed reciting it was made in pursuance of the agreement before mentioned. On July 25, 1889, Sutcliffe conveyed to R. S. Giles all his title, claim, and interest in said land, subject to the contract between Sutcliffe and Fordyce. On the 20th of February, 1889, Giles and wife conveyed to Harr a one-fourth interest in said land, subject to the contract between Sutcliffe and Fordyce. All the deeds were made exhibits to the complaint.

"That on the 9th day of June, 1888, Fordyce, as trustee, conveyed to the Southwestern Improvement Association said tract of land, subject to the terms and conditions of the contract between Sutcliffe and Fordyce. That the defendant has sold and collected for said lots over $2,000, and has not accounted to plaintiff for his interest therein. The complaint then gives a list of the lots sold by the defendants.

"The complaint then alleges that the defendants have sold fractional parts of said ground in acreage property in violation of the agreement. It then recites the instances of the sales of the acreage property. It is further alleged that for 1 or 2 years the defendants settled with the plaintiff for his part of the land, but that for 15 or 16 years no settlement has been made, although he had a one-fourth interest in the proceeds of the sales.

"The complaint closes with a prayer that the defendants be enjoined from selling any more of the lots, that a master be appointed to state the accounts between the parties, that the remainder of the lots be sold by a commissioner, and that the trust estate be administered and the amount paid to plaintiff that was due him."

Both defendants answered.

On the 30th day of May, 1888, Richard Sutcliffe and his wife conveyed to S. W. Fordyce, trustee, the party of the second part, the N. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of section 32, township 1 S., range 4 W., to have and to hold, "and all and singular the rights, privileges, appurtenances, immunities, and privileges thereunto belonging or in any wise appertaining, to the said party of the second part, his heirs, successors, and assigns, forever, giving and granting unto said party of the second part, his heirs, successors, and assigns, the absolute right, power, and authority to sell and dispose of the property hereinbefore conveyed as to him may seem best, without restraint or condition, and without the necessity on the part of the purchaser to see to the application of the moneys realized therefrom, except as the application thereof is regulated and controlled by said contract dated January 3, 1888, hereinbefore referred to as the consideration for this deed."

into on the 3d day of January, 1888, by Richard Sutcliffe and S. W. Fordyce. It is in part as follows:

"First. Said Fordyce is to hold said property as trustee for the benefit of said Richard Sutcliffe, his heirs and assigns, to the extent of one half of the whole interest conveyed to him, and for the benefit of said Fordyce and his associates, their heirs and assigns, to the extent of the other half interest so conveyed.

"Second. Said Fordyce is to cause the said property to be platted in convenient shape for a town, with streets and alleys, with a railroad reservation such as is suitable and proper for the convenient handling of the business of said railway at said point, and file in the proper office said plat for record, and do all the same at his own expense, and will also put in a siding and platform where the depot at such town is located as soon as said platting is done as practicable."

The various conveyances of the land specified in the complaint were executed as therein stated.

The court found that there was no equity in plaintiff's complaint, and decreed that upon the payment by defendant into the registry of the court of $820, admitted by defendant to be due complainant, the complaint would be dismissed for want of equity; and plaintiff appealed.

A part of the land conveyed to Fordyce in trust was sold by the trustee as acreage. Appellant insists that he was without authority to sell in this manner. But we think he was authorized to do so. The deed conveying the land to him gives and grants "to him, his heirs, successors, and assigns, the absolute right, power, and authority to sell and dispose of the property conveyed as to him may seem best, without restraint or condition"; and the agreement, pursuant to which the deed was executed, provides: "Said Fordyce is to cause the said property to be platted in convenient shape for a town, with streets and alleys, with a railroad reservation such as is suitable and proper for the convenient handling of the business of said railway at said point." There is nothing in the deed or agreement prohibiting the trustee from selling by acres, if it should be to the interest of those concerned to do so.

It is next insisted that the property was sold at a sacrifice, and that for that reason the trust should be closed. Upon this subject this court, in Williams v. Nichols, 4 Ark. 254, 1 S. W. 243, said: "It is well settled that courts of equity have power to remove trustees for neglect or breach of duty. It is not, however, every mistake or neglect of duty or inaccuracy of conduct of trustees which will induce courts of equity to adopt such a course; but the acts or omissions must be such as to endanger the trust property, or to show want of honesty, or a want was not in the pleadings and to the evidence to sustain it the defendant had objected; and for that reason the judgment was reversed. St. L. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Vaughan, 84 Ark. 311, 105 S. W. 573. It was held that under the undisputed facts no other cause of action appeared, and this one had been improperly introduced. It must be held that the facts adduced on behalf of the plaintiff were sufficient to make out a charge of negligence. Mr. Hutchinson says: "He must at his peril inform the shipper of the necessary delay, that the shipper may exercise his own discretion as to the propriety of making the shipment." 2 Hutchinson on Carriers, § 496. This principle was applied in Kansas & Arkansas Valley Ry. Co. v. Ayres, 63 Ark. 331, 38 S. W. 515. While no negligence can be predicated upon the failure to get out the cattle earlier than they were shipped, yet the facts testified to by the plaintiff show that he was assured before 7 o'clock in the evening that he could get out his cattle right away, when, in fact, no regular train was due to leave until 9:30 the next morning, and no special train could be gotten to him short of eight or nine hours. Upon this he relied, and left his cattle loaded in the cars, instead of taking them out and caring for them during the delay, as he would otherwise have done. The undisputed testimony is that cattle kept loaded in cars standing still will be materially injured by such delay. Especially would this be true on a cold and rainy night in midwinter. There was sufficient evidence to have sent this question to the jury.

2. It is insisted that the third instruction given by the court of its own motion is erroneous, in that it assumes certain facts to constitute negligence when the jury alone, under proper instructions, should determine that. But the instruction, read in the light of the plaintiff's testimony and the undisputed evidence as to the effect of such delay and the long delay necessary to get them out at the time that the assurances were given of getting them out right away, prevent this criticism of the instruction being well founded in this instance. If it be error to assume these facts were negligence per se, that error has been concurred in by the appellant, for the fourth instruction given at its instance in another way and in better form submits the same facts to the jury as a predicate for recovery by the plaintiff if the jury believed such facts to be true.

3. It is urged that the representations of the agent were not the proximate cause of the damage; and it is argued that the evidence shows that the Kansas City Southern yards would not have held more than three cars of cattle, and that the damage could not have been averted had Vaughan known that the cattle would not be carried out right in a way that would have prevented the injury which they received, and this testimony presented a question for the jury to determine, and was properly submitted upon instructions given at the instance of the appellant.

4. The provision of the contract to the effect that notice in writing must be given of the damages is also invoked; but there was evidence tending to prove a waiver of this clause, and that question was sent to the jury under proper instructions, framed in conformity to the decision in St. L. I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Jacobs, 70 Ark. 401, 68 S. W. 248.

5. It is insisted that the verdict is excessive. The jury gave $734, which the court required the plaintiff to remit down to $600. The limitation of $16 per head stipulated in the contract is not exceeded by this verdict. According to the plaintiff's testimony, 20 of the cattle were dead and the balance seriously injured and depreciated in value. The difference in value he put at $872. The jury gave less than the testimony warranted, and the circuit court reduced that amount, for what reason is not shown. The court is unable to see wherein the verdict is excessive. It may be that the testimony was not accurate or truthful; but that was a matter to have been argued before the jury and not elsewhere.

Finding no error in the case, the judgment is affirmed.

On Rehearing.

Appellant's attorneys forcibly reargue the questions disposed of, but after a full consideration of them the court finds no reason for changing the decision or opinion. It is insisted that "the court erred in not upholding that clause in the contract which provided that the plaintiff would waive and release the defendant from any and all liability for or on account of delay in shipping the stock after delivery of the same to the defendant's agent, and from any delay in receiving this stock after tender of delivery, as set forth in the seventh instruction requested by the appellant and refused by the trial court." This contention was not specifically discussed in the opinion, because it was thought that it was necessarily disposed of in the discussion of the other issues. It was held on the former appeal of the case that the railroad company exercised reasonable diligence in furnishing facilities and in transporting the cattle to the destination after delivery to it. Had it been held otherwise, then the question on the contract would have been pertinent. After the reversal of the cause, the complaint was amended so as to allege negligence, in that the station agent induced plaintiff to deliver the cattle to the defendant on the assurance that a train would state law, or in violation of the state's statute; and he is charged in this indictment for the selling in violation of the state law."

The circuit judge then continued with the following, which is made the subject of the second assignment of error:

"I charge you, gentlemen of the jury, that this certified copy read to you here is a copy of the record showing that a special tax stamp from the federal government has been issued to Walter Bayless, for the period from July 1, 1907, to July 1, 1908. And under the statute read in your hearing the possession of this special tax stamp makes out a prima facie case against the defendant, and without more, under this indictment, if you find this defendant has obtained this special tax stamp privilege from the federal government. Therefore, in face of the fact that he has obtained this special tax stamp, the burden is on him to show that he has not sold liquor under this license, because I charge you that under the statute this is a prima facie case against him, and it shifts the burden upon him to show that he has not violated this statute by selling liquor under this privilege obtained from the government. And I charge you that this is a competent paper to be considered by you, and a copy of such license, or of the record that he had obtained such license."

The act bearing upon the question is chapter 355, page 1079, of the Acts of 1903. Section 1 of this act reads:

"That in a prosecution for a violation of the law prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors within four miles of a schoolhouse, commonly known as the 'Four Mile Law,' the fact that defendant has paid the internal revenue special tax as a retail liquor dealer, or is in possession of an internal revenue tax stamp as a retail liquor dealer, shall be prima facie evidence of sales of intoxicating liquors within the meaning of the four mile law, during the time for which he has paid the internal revenue special tax, or that is covered by the internal revenue special tax stamp possessed by him: Provided, revenue license in this act shall not be construed to mean license for use of manufacturers and druggists or others in manufacturing or compounding or otherwise than for use in sales at retail under state law."

It is insisted that our statute upon the subject of admitting certified copies does not cover the case of a certificate of records from the office of the internal revenue collector of the United States.

The sections of the Code upon this subject are found in Shannon's Code, §§ 5573 to 5591, inclusive.

We shall now group such of the sections records and entries, official bonds, or other papers belonging to any public office, or, by authority of law, filed to be kept therein, are evidence in all cases."

"Sec. 5576. The term 'records' used in the foregoing section includes any record of any county, common law, circuit, criminal, or chancery court, and, in general, every public record required by law to be kept in any court of this state; and, also, the books of the registers, the surveyors, and the entry takers, throughout the state."

"Sec. 5580. A judicial record of a sister state, or of any of the federal courts of the United States, may be proved by a copy thereof, attested by the clerk, under his seal of office, if he have one, together with a certificate of a judge, chief justice, or presiding magistrate, that the attestation is in due form of law."

"Sec. 5583. The acts of the executive of the United States, or of this state, or any other state of the Union, or of a foreign government, are proved by the records of the state department of the respective governments, or by public documents purporting to have been printed by order of the Legislatures of those governments respectively, or by either branch thereof."

"Sec. 5584. The proceedings of the Legislature of this state, or any other state of the Union, or of the United States, or of any foreign government, are proved by the journals of those bodies respectively, or of either branch thereof, either by copies officially certified by the officer having custody of the originals, or by a copy purporting to have been printed by the order of such Legislature, or either branch thereof."

"Sec. 5588. The certificate of the head of any department or bureau of the general government is a sufficient authentication of any paper or document appertaining or belonging to his office."

None of these sections cover the case of a certificate issued by an internal revenue collector. It is perceived that some of the sections quoted refer to the federal courts, the acts of the executive of the United States, and the legislative department of the United States government, and that the last section refers to the certificate of the head of any department or bureau of the general government. None of these sections are broad enough to cover the certificate we have before us in the present case. The only section to which, by any show of reason, the matter could be referred is the last quoted; but the "collector of internal revenue for the district of Tennessee" is not the head of a department of the general government, and the section does not apply.

The sections of the Code contained in the chapter under which the above sections fall fault cannot take any advantage of the ruling of the court in favor of the other"; and in Mobile & B. R. Co. v. Ladd, 92 Ala. 287, 9 South. 169, it is said: "It is never erroneous to receive irrelevant evidence to rebut evidence of a like kind offered by the other party. Perkins v. Hayward, 124 Ind. 449, 24 N. E. 1033, Sherwood v. Titman, 55 Pa. 77, and Fuller v. Vallquette, 70 Vt. 502, 41 Atl. 579, all agree that, if a party opens the door for the admission of incompetent evidence, he is in no plight to complain that his adversary followed through the door thus opened; and this, although no objection was made in the first instance to the admission of such evidence.

We hold, therefore, that the trial judge committed no error in the matter now complained of; and, the verdict of the jury being amply warranted by the weight of the testimony, the judgment of the court below is affirmed.

CARPENTER v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Tennessee. Sept. 17, 1908.)

1. INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 173*)—OFFENSES—APPLICABILITY OF STATUTES.

Though liquor was sold within a town of not more than 2,000*population, to which the four-mile liquor law, prohibiting the sale of liquor within four miles of a school, applied, the seller could nevertheless be convicted under Acts 1899, p. 309, c. 161, prohibiting the sale of liquor without license.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Cent. Dig. § 193; Dec. Dig. § 173.*]

2. INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 111*)—OFFENSES—GENERAL AND SPECIAL LAWS.

Special laws prohibiting the sale of liquor in particular subdivisions of the state do not suspend the operation of general laws requiring a license for their sale.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Dec. Dig. § 111.*]

Error to Circuit Court, Fayette County; S. J. Everett, Judge.

Sam Carpenter was convicted of selling intoxicating liquor without a license, and he brings error. Affirmed.

Chas. N. Stainback, for plaintiff in error.
Chas. T. Cates, Jr., Atty. Gen., for the State.

SHIELDS, J. The plaintiff in error, Sam Carpenter, was indicted, tried, and convicted in the circuit court of Fayette county for selling intoxicating liquors in that county without license required by law, in violation of chapter 161, p. 309, of the Acts of 1899, and has brought the case to this court for review.

The evidence sustains the charge that the plaintiff in error did, within 12 months before the finding of the indictment, without was incorporated under chapter 221, p. 411 of the Acts of 1899, extending the statute commonly known as the "Four-Mile Law" to towns of a population of not more than 2,000, within which class it came, was enacted, and that there was a schoolhouse where a school was kept within four miles of the place where the sale was made.

The contention of the plaintiff in error is that since the four-mile law, prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors within four miles of a schoolhouse where a school is kept, and making such sale a misdemeanor, applied to the town of Somerville, the statutes requiring those dealing in intoxicants to pay a privilege tax, and making the sale without license to exercise such a privilege a misdemeanor, as provided in chapter 161, p. 309, of the Acts of 1899, do not apply to that territory; in other words, that one cannot be required to take out a license to do a thing, or punished for failure to take out such license, when the business proposed to be done is prohibited by law.

This contention cannot be sustained. The business of retailing liquors in any part of the state, whether it be where they can be lawfully sold or where the sale is prohibited by the four-mile law, is made a privilege and taxed, and any one engaged in this business, although in violation of the latter law, is liable for this tax. This was held at the present term of the court in the case of Foster v. Speed, 111 S. W. 925. The statute under which the plaintiff in error was indicted, chapter 161, p. 309, of the Acts of 1899, was enacted as a supplement to that imposing a privilege tax upon the sale of liquors, to aid in its enforcement, and also applies to any part of the state. Further, special laws applicable to particular subdivisions of the state, prohibiting the sale of intoxicants therein, do not suspend general laws requiring license of those dealing in such intoxicants, and punishing them for doing business without such license. Commonwealth v. Barbour, 121 Ky. 689, 89 S. W. 1130, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 620.

There is no error in the judgment of the trial court, and the same is affirmed, with costs.

ROSEN v. LEVY et ux.

(Supreme Court of Tennessee. Sept. 17, 1908.)

1. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES (§ 295*)—EVIDENCE.

Evidence held not to show that a conveyance from husband to wife was fraudulently made with the intent to hinder the collection of a claim against the husband.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fraudulent Conveyances, Dec. Dig. § 295.*]

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes judgment could be collected, and this was made in the absence of Esther Levy.

Complainant, as above stated, examined both of the defendants and read their depositions in his behalf. They testified that the conveyance was made the day it bears date, in compliance with their antenuptial contract, and without any intention to hinder or delay the collection of the claim of the complainant against A. M. Levy for malicious prosecution. The defendants are corroborated by their witness, J. W. Durham, Esq. These three witnesses fully disprove the charges of fraud in fact made in the bill. The charge of fraud in law is also unsupported by the record.

The conveyance, it is true, was voluntary. It recites that it was made in consideration of $1 and love and affection. The proof shows that it was made in pursuance of an antenuptial parol contract, void as to creditors. But voluntary conveyance, free from fraud in fact, is void only where there are existing creditors. Nelson v. Vanden, 99 Tenn. 224, 42 S. W. 5; Vance v. Smith, 2 Heisk. 351; Sanders v. Logue, 88 Tenn. 355, 12 S. W. 722.

Then had the defendant A. M. Levy at that time, July 20, 1905, any creditors? He testifies positively and absolutely that he had none. Complainant's insistence is that he was a creditor, because the warrant, for the unlawful suing out of which he recovered his judgment in an action of malicious prosecution, was issued June 14, 1905, while the conveyance was not made until July 20, 1905. These dates are correct, but the prosecution against complainant did not terminate until August 25, 1905, and his action for damages for malicious prosecution was not brought until some time thereafter; the exact date not appearing in the record.

It is well settled that a right of action for malicious prosecution does not accrue until there has been a final determination, favorable to the defendant therein, of the suit claimed to have been malicious. Morgan v. Duffy, 94 Tenn. 686, 30 S. W. 735; Swepton v. Davis, 109 Tenn. 99, 70 S. W. 65, 59 L. R. A. 501.

Therefore, when the conveyance attacked in this case was executed and delivered, the complainant had no right of action or claim for damages recognized by law against the defendant A. M. Levy. The first step only had been taken in a proceeding which might or might not ultimately ripen into a just claim for damages for malicious prosecution, which if properly asserted, would make the complainant a creditor of the defendant.

There is no doubt but that the plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for a tort committed against him is a creditor of the defendant, for whom the latter must provide before he can make a voluntary convey-in such a case is asserting a specific claim, which can be definitely ascertained and adjudged in the pending action. In the cases of Farnsworth v. Bell, 5 Sneed, 531, and Patrick v. Ford, 5 Sneed, 532, plaintiffs in actions brought to recover damages for torts committed were held to be creditors, and conveyances of property fraudulent in fact, made pending the actions, were held void and set aside. In Vance v. Smith, 2 Heisk. 343, it was held that a plaintiff in an action of tort then pending was an existing creditor within the provisions of a deed in trust made by the defendant to secure "all of his creditors"; and in Sanders v. Logue, 88 Tenn. 399, 12 S. W. 723, it is said that "a voluntary conveyance pending an action of tort, whether actually intended to defeat it or not, would be void if, upon estimating amount of property retained, there was a deficiency to pay the amount claimed." This, however, is perhaps dictum, as the question did not directly arise in the case. But it has never been held by this court, or any other so far as we are informed, that a party who has no complete claim for damages upon which he can maintain suit is an existing creditor against whom a voluntary conveyance is void. The contrary is held in Sanders v. Logue, supra. It is there said:

"In the case we are now considering, whether we treat the complainant as repudiating his contract because he was fraudulently induced to make it, suing for the money as for money had and received to his use, or whether we treat the action as one in damages incurred in consequence of the fraud and deceit practiced against him, measured by the money put to interest, the result is the same. In the first aspect he would have had no action until he disregarded the trade and demanded the money; and in the second his action would have been ex delicto, and not upon a specific; fixed, or asserted liability, within the meaning of the rule stated in respect to voluntary conveyance. Such a claim, it is obvious, might or might not ever be asserted, and it is too uncertain and remote to be taken into consideration in estimating the debts or liabilities of a debtor for which he must provide by the retention of property. This is obvious, and we look at the state of affairs then existing, not as now developed."

In this case, the warrant charging complainant with robbery had been issued, and he had been bound over to answer to the grand jury; but no action had been taken by the party when the conveyance assailed was made. The issue was undetermined. It was possible that complainant, the defendant in said warrant, might be indicted, might be convicted, or that the prosecution might be dismissed by the grand jury ignoring the indictment or by an acquittal on a trial. It good bit." He further said that Coleman told him not to tell the judge how long he had known him. He also told the juror that he had only one friend on the other list, and the Attorney General objected to him; that he then told the witness that he need not tell how long he had known him (plaintiff in error).

These conversations had with the three talesmen were first disclosed by them when they were examined for service on the jury. They were not taken upon the jury, and of course were not members of it when plaintiff in error's case was tried.

Subsequently, when the present proceeding was begun against Coleman, the witnesses were examined and gave testimony in the three cases as above indicated.

Before this testimony was offered, the plaintiff in error filed a sworn answer, or return, to the attachment for contempt, in which, after denying guilt in general terms, he proceeded with the following special denial:

"He denies that he in any way undertook to, or tried in any manner to, influence any one of said persons summoned as jurors from attending said court, or obeying the summons to attend, or that he tried to influence them to attend, or that he in any other way knowingly, intentionally, or willfully interfered with the process or proceedings of the court.

"He denies that he willfully, unlawfully, or corruptly conversed with, or tampered with, said parties, or either of them, as jurors, or said anything to them, or either of them, for the purpose of influencing their verdict, or that of either of them, in the trial of his case, or authorized or procured any one else to do so in his behalf.

"He denies that he discussed the facts or circumstances of his case with either of said jurors, or had another to do it for him, or that he detailed the circumstances which brought about the indictment and prosecution against him. When the fact was casually mentioned that they were jurors, or might be jurors, he expressed himself as being pleased, doing so because they knew him, and he knew them to be fair and just men, and was willing to trust his case in their hands. He was confident of his innocence, and always felt and believed that he would finally be acquitted of the charge against him, and he was acquitted, and neither of the said parties was on the jury trying his case; and to secure his acquittal he never in any wise attempted to influence any prospective jurors by corrupt inducements, or by any other means. He positively denies that he said anything to them, or any one of them, as to the character of the verdict he desired or expected, or that he had any idea that any casual remark made could or would influence the action of any juror, like for them to be on the jury was wrong. It was an unintentional wrong. He did not know or think that it was wrong, and had no thought that it could affect in any wise any verdict that might be obtained in court, and that he did not say it with the intention that it should have that effect.

"He avers that he has the highest respect for this honorable court, and its process and proceedings, and would not intentionally, knowingly, or willfully do anything to interfere therewith."

In the court below, when the above testimony was offered, the plaintiff in error objected to the introduction of evidence on the ground that by the above-mentioned sworn answer he had purged himself of the contempt, if he had been guilty of any, and that witnesses could not be introduced to inquire into the matter. It is now assigned for reversal that the circuit judge committed error in declining to sustain this objection and in subsequently hearing the evidence above set forth.

It is stated in Underwood's Case, 2 Humph. 46, that in a case at common law the defendant will be discharged if by his answer to interrogatories filed he make such a statement as will free him from imputed contempt; but in cases in chancery the truth of defendant's statement in reply to interrogatories filed may be controverted on the other side, and the whole matter be inquired into and ascertained by the court.

The case referred to was in chancery; likewise the case of Rutherford v. Metcalf, 5 Hayw. 58, upon the same subject. However, the rule at common law is correctly stated (and see note to Warner v. Martin, 4 Am. & Eng. Ann. Cas. 183, 184); still in this state the common-law rule has fallen into desuetude, as indicated by two recent cases. Scott & Light v. State, 109 Tenn. 390, 71 S. W. 824; Rickets v. State, 111 Tenn. 380, 77 S. W. 1076; and other Tennessee cases referred to infra. The question was not discussed in any of these cases, but evidence was heard in all of them.

The same question arose recently in the Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of U. S. v. Shipp, 203 U. S. 565, 27 Sup. Ct. 165, 51 L. Ed. 319.

In the case referred to defendant filed a sworn answer denying the contempt, and it was insisted that this was conclusive. Responding to this suggestion the court said:

"On this occasion we shall not go into the history of the notion. It may be that it was an intrusion or perversion of the canon law, and is suggested by propounding of interrogatories, and the very phrase 'purgation by oath' (juramentum purgatorium). If so, it is a fragment of a system of proof which does not prevail, in theory or as a whole; and the reason why it has not disappeared perhaps may be found in the rarity with which connegligent act, the proposition would apply. But in this case it is a question of personal presence and overt acts. If the presence and the acts should be proved, there would be little room for the disavowal of the intent. And when the act alleged consists in taking part in a murder, it cannot be admitted that a general denial and affidavit should dispose of the case. The outward facts are matters known to many, and they will be ascertained by testimony in the usual way. The question was left open in Re Savin, 131 U. S. 267, 9 Sup. Ct. 699, 33 L. Ed. 150, with a visible leaning towards the conclusion to which we have come, and that conclusion has been adopted by state courts in decisions entitled to respect. Huntington v. McMahon, 48 Conn. 174, 200, 201; State v. Matthews, 37 N. H. 450, 455; Bates' Case, 55 N. H. 325, 327; Re Snyder, 103 N. Y. 178, 181, 8 N. E. 479; Crow v. State, 24 Tex. 12, 14; State ex rel. Mason v. Harper's Ferry Bridge Co., 16 W. Va. 864, 873. See Wartman v. Wartman, Taney, 362, 370, Fed. Cas. No. 17,210; Cartwright's Case, 114 Mass. 230; Ellenbecker v. District Court, 134 U. S. 31, 10 Sup. Ct. 424, 33 L. Ed. 801. Whether or not Rev. St. § 725 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 583), applies to this court, it embodies the law, so far as it goes. We see no reason for emasculating the power given by that section, and making it so nearly futile as it would be if it were construed to mean that all contemnners willing to run the slight risk of a conviction for perjury can escape." To same effect, see the following cases: O'Flynn v. State, 89 Miss. 850, 43 South. 82, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1119, 119 Am. St. Rep. 727; Emery v. State (Neb.) 111 N. W. 374, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1124.

Our statute upon the subject of contempts is embodied in section 5918 of Shannon's Code as follows:

"The power of the several courts of this state to issue attachments and inflict punishments for contempts of court shall not be construed to extend to any except the following cases:

"(1) The willful misbehavior of any person in the presence of the court, or so near thereto as to obstruct the administration of justice.

"(2) The willful misbehavior of any of the officers of said courts in their official transactions.

"(3) The willful disobedience, or resistance, of any officer of the said courts, party, juror, witness, or any other person, to any lawful writ, process, order, rule decree, or command of said courts.

"(4) Abuse of, or unlawful interference with, the process or proceedings of the court.

"(5) Willfully conversing with jurors in relation to the merits of the cause in the trial of which they are engaged, or otherwise tampering with them.

"(6) Any other act or omission declared a contempt by law."

tions. Scott v. State, 106 Tenn. 330, 11 S. W. 825.

The statute would be rendered ineffective if one accused of contempt could cut off all inquiry by filing an affidavit denying the contempt charged, or disclaiming any improper purpose.

The case of Brooks v. Fleming was in chancery; but the language of the court upon the subject was not confined to the practice in that court, but was general, as follows: Referring to contempts out of the presence of the court it was said that they can only be brought to the knowledge of the court, and its action invoked, upon the testimony of others. "The charge must be made in such form as to give the party an opportunity to purge himself of the alleged contempt. Ordinarily it must be made upon oath, to which the person accused by it has the right to answer. This answer presents an issue to be inquired into by the court, and to be determined upon its facts. The inquiry is in the nature of a criminal proceeding," etc. 6 Baxt. 331-333.

In Sinnott v. State, 11 Lea, 281, the party proceeded against for contempt was charged with having suggested to the sheriff that he should summon certain persons on the jury. The course of practice pursued in that case is thus stated by the court: "The Attorney General filed specifications in each case. The plaintiff in error moved to quash the specifications filed, which motion was overruled by the court; and, having filed his answer to such specifications, the court proceeded to hear the case, and, having heard the testimony, adjudged the defendant guilty as charged," etc.

In Harwell v. State, 10 Lea, 544, the plaintiff in error was under arrest, charged with interference with the grand jury. In that case the court heard the testimony of witnesses, but refused to hear the plaintiff in error himself testify as a witness, on the following grounds, as stated in the opinion: "In answer to the warrant, and by way of purging himself of contempt, he might have filed his affidavit upon return of the warrant; but, the proceeding being in the nature of a criminal prosecution, the defendant was not competent to testify as a witness in his own behalf, and there was no error in the refusal of the court to allow him to be examined as a witness." This was before our statute was passed which gave the right to defendants in criminal prosecutions to testify in their own behalf.

The second point insisted upon is that the facts proven do not make out a case of contempt, because the parties approached were not members of the jury which tried the plaintiff in error. The argument is that the contempt in respect of tampering with jurors must fall under subsection 5 of the Code section above quoted. This is a mistaken view. The facts show a violation of subsection 4,

LARCENY (§ 66*)—LARCENY IN THE NIGHT-TIME—ATTEMPT TO COMMIT—PROSECUTION—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE

Evidence held to support a conviction of attempted larceny of money in the nighttime.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Larceny, Cent. Dig. § 161; Dec. Dig. § 66.*]

Appeal from St. Louis Circuit Court; Hugo Muench, Judge.

John Hayes was convicted of attempted larceny of money in the nighttime, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Henry M. Walsh, for appellant. Herbert S. Hadley, Atty. Gen., and F. G. Ferris, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

BURGESS, J. On December 2, 1907, the defendant was convicted in the circuit court of the city of St. Louis of the crime of attempted larceny in the nighttime of money from one Solomon Mueller, and his punishment fixed at imprisonment for the term of two years in the penitentiary, under an information, duly filed by the assistant circuit attorney, charging the defendant with said offense. Defendant appeals and assigns error.

The facts are substantially as follows: On the night of October 1, 1907, between 8 and 9 o'clock, Solomon Mueller was standing at the southeast corner of Washington avenue and Broadway, in said city, witnessing the Veiled Prophets' parade. He had on his person, and owned, a gold watch, chain, and charm, and $35 in money—three $10 bills and one $5 bill. He was surrounded by a surging and jostling crowd, and, hearing a policeman warn the people against pickpockets, Mueller put his watch, chain, and charm in his left pants pocket, and his pocketbook, containing his money, in his right hip pocket. Soon thereafter he noticed the defendant, who was pressing hard against him, trying to throw open his coat, as if to get at his watch pocket. The defendant moved around and behind Mueller, and put his hands in the pockets containing said watch and money. James H. Smith, chief of detectives of the city of St. Louis, who was observing the actions of the defendant, reached and took hold of the defendant while his hands were yet in Mueller's pockets, and prevented him from extracting anything therefrom. By reason of the interference of the officer, the defendant failed in his attempt to steal the property of Mueller. In his testimony, Mueller described the money which he had on his person at the time as $35 in greenbacks—three $10 bills and a $5 bill, United States money. Defendant offered no evidence, nor is he represented in this court.

a careful examination of them shows that they are entirely without merit. The evidence establishes defendant's guilt beyond any and all doubt; in fact, it is all one way. He had a fair and impartial trial; and there being no merit in this appeal, the judgment is affirmed. All concur.

STATE v. FOLEY.

(Supreme Court of Missouri, Division No. 2
Nov. 24, 1908.)

CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1094*)—APPEAL—BILL OF EXCEPTIONS—REVIEW.

A conviction, in the absence of a bill of exceptions, will be affirmed on appeal, where the information is sufficient and the arraignment and the trial appear to have been regular.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 3204; Dec. Dig. § 1094.*]

Appeal from St. Louis Circuit Court; Matt G. Reynolds, Judge.

Toney Foley was convicted of felonious assault, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Samuel Kohn, for appellant. Herbert S. Hadley, Atty. Gen., and Frank Blake, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

GANTT, J. From a conviction in the circuit court of the city of St. Louis for a felonious assault upon Edwin McCleintick the defendant appealed to this court.

Motions for new trial and in arrest of judgment were filed in due time and overruled, but no bill of exceptions was filed in the case. The information is sufficient, and the arraignment and the trial appear to have been regular in all respects.

There being no error in the record proper, the judgment must be, and is, affirmed.

FOX, P. J., and BURGESS, J., concur.

STATE v. HAMILTON.

(Supreme Court of Missouri, Division No. 2
Nov. 24, 1908.)

CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1090*)—APPEAL—RESER-VATION OF GROUNDS OF REVIEW—BILL OF EX-CEPTIONS.

In the absence of a bill of exceptions, duly signed and authenticated by the trial judge, the action of the court during the trial is not reviewable, and the case is before the appellate court simply upon the record proper.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2807-2822; Dec. Dig. § 1090.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Pettis County; Louis Hoffman, Judge.

Will Hamilton was convicted of grand larceny, and appeals. Affirmed.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

in his custody, on the 21st day of December, 1906, there was $440, the property of the J. B. Buss Mills. Conrad Hart, aged about 19 years, testified that for 8 or 10 years he had been acquainted with the defendants, who were about his age. He said that in the fall of 1906 he had been out in California with the defendant Gleason, and had talked several times with Gleason on the subject of robbing the Buss Mill, where Gleason told him there was lots of easy money for them to get when they returned to St. Louis. Early in December Hart returned to St. Louis and met the defendants, but nothing further was said about the suggested robbery until the day before the attempt was made, when Gleason asked Hart to go out to the Buss Mill, and said that the money was easy to get. The next morning Gleason met Hart again and arranged for a meeting between Hart, Gleason, and defendant Carroll at a later hour that morning. Pursuant to appointment, Hart met the defendants about 10:30 a. m., each, according to arrangements, having brought with him his overcoat. None of them had any money, and the overcoats were brought for the purpose of pawning them in order to raise money with which to buy revolvers and ammunition and carry out the plan of robbery. They visited several pawnshops and pawned the overcoats of Hart and Carroll, thereby raising $7. Gleason kept his overcoat. With the money thus obtained they visited stores, and Hart and Carroll each bought a cheap revolver and some ammunition. About noon they ate and drank together, and soon afterwards took a car on the way to the mill on North Broadway. Hart said that while on the way they talked over the plan by which the robbery would be effected, Gleason, he said, doing most of the talking. The plan was to approach the mill on foot, Hart and Gleason to enter the office and Carroll to remain outside, to which Carroll agreed, and said that he would be outside while they went in, and if there was any fighting he would come running right over. The plan contemplated was that Gleason and Hart would enter the office, pretending to be employer and employé, and ask the use of the telephone, and, on the pretext of sending Hart for a fixture, they were to ask to have a $2 bill changed, and thereby secure access to the money in the mill safe. About three blocks from the mill they left the car, and took a drink in a saloon, where they were seen by witness Joseph Conway. From the saloon they walked to the mill, Hart and Gleason walking on the east side of Broadway, on which side was the mill, and Carroll, according to plan, following on the west side of that street. Gleason was wearing his overcoat, and had with him for a weapon a billy, which was a short piece of leather with from which to take a blow at Hoxey, and O'Neill were sitting in the office when Hart and Gleason entered. Gleason asked the privilege of using the telephone, which was in the office, and, being permitted to do so, he called up a plumbers' supply company and talked about a fixture, or piece of fitting, for which he was going to send, and, as he hung up the telephone, he turned to Hart and asked whether Hart had money for the car fare. Hart replied that he had not, whereupon Gleason asked Hoxey if he could change a $2 bill. Hoxey, saying that he could do so, stepped to the safe, which was a small safe about three feet high sitting on the floor of the office, opened the safe and took from it the said money, of which he was in charge as manager or agent for said J. B. Buss Mills, and was stepping over, making change with the money on top of the safe, when defendant Gleason struck him on the head with the billy. The blow blinded or stunned Hoxey for a moment, but he instantly turned and grappled with Gleason. Just as he did so, Hart, who, for the moment, had covered O'Neill with his revolver, pointed the revolver at Hoxey and fired a shot which hit Hoxey in the breast and inflicted a wound. Defendant Gleason, becoming released from Hoxey, ran out of the office, leaving his hat there, which had fallen from his head during the struggle. The $2 bill, which Gleason had requested Hoxey to change, also remained in the office. Out upon the street, Hart and Gleason met the defendant Carroll waiting, who, according to Hart, inquired if they got any money. All three ran rapidly away. As they ran, Gleason handed his overcoat marked with his name on the inside pocket to Carroll. Carroll carried the overcoat along with him and placed his revolver in its pocket. After running some distance, an officer came upon them and arrested Hart, but defendants got away. Carroll, in his flight, threw away Gleason's overcoat, which, with Carroll's revolver in the pocket thereof, the officer in pursuit secured. Defendants were successful for a time in making their escape, but about one month later they were apprehended and arrested in New Orleans. The billy and Carroll's revolver were introduced in evidence. The witness, Conrad Hart, at the time of the trial, had already pleaded guilty to a separate information charging him with attempted robbery on account of his participation in this adventure.

Defendants offered no evidence. At the close of the case the court instructed the jury, and the cause was submitted to them. It is not necessary to reproduce the instructions, as counsel for appellants in their brief do not challenge the correctness of them. After due consideration of the cause the jury returned separate verdicts finding the defendants guilty, and assessing their punishment can be no robbery in such circumstances.

Learned counsel for appellant direct our attention to the case of State v. Davis, 138 Mo. 107, 39 S. W. 460; State v. Horned, 178 Mo. 59, 76 S. W. 953; State v. Jones, 168 Mo. 398, 68 S. W. 506; State v. Kelley, 206 Mo. 685, 105 S. W. 606. An examination of those cases will demonstrate that they charged the ownership of the property in some company, either a mercantile company, or a railroad company. It was held that it was essential, if those companies were a partnership, to give the names of the partners, or, if a corporation, to so charge in the information or indictment. It is by no means ruled in those cases, and it is not even suggested, that, if some individual was in possession of the property, the ownership of it could not be laid in such person. T. P. Hoxey was in the lawful possession of this property, and it was charged that he was the owner of such property, and the proof fully sustains the allegations of ownership. There is no pretense that the testimony in this case was insufficient to support the verdicts.

We have given expression to our views upon the only propositions urged by counsel for appellants, which results in the conclusion that the judgment of the trial court should be affirmed, and it is so ordered. All concur.

STATE v. WEBBER.

(Supreme Court of Missouri, Division No. 2.
Nov. 24, 1908.)

1. HAWKERS AND PEDDLERS (§ 3*)—ACTS CONSTITUTING PEDDLING.

That one sold liniment and lemon extract by going from place to place to sell the same, and sold one bottle to one person and two to another shows that he was a peddler within Rev. St. 1899, § 8861 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 4118), defining a peddler to be one who deals in the selling of goods, wares, and merchandise, etc.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Hawkers and Peddlers, Cent. Dig. §§ 3, 6; Dec. Dig. § 3.*

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 6, pp. 5260-5267; vol. 8, p. 7750.]

2. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 208*)—HAWKERS AND PEDDLERS—LICENSES—CLASS LEGISLATION.

The Legislature can designate peddlers as a class who must obtain licenses before following their occupation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. § 667; Dec. Dig. § 208.*]

3. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 48*)—STATUTES—CONSTRUCTION.

A statute must appear to contravene the Constitution beyond reasonable doubt before it will be held unconstitutional.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. § 46; Dec. Dig. § 48.*]

4. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 205*)—SPECIAL PRIVILEGES—LICENSES—"PEDDLER."

Rev. St. 1899, § 8861 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 4118), defining a peddler as one who deals in

Mo. art. 2, § 53, forbidding laws granting special privileges, etc., nor the fourteenth amendment to the federal Constitution; but are valid police regulations.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Dec. Dig. § 205.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Vernon County; B. G. Thurman, Judge.

J. C. Webber was convicted of peddling without a license, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Warner, Dean, McLeod & Timmonds, for appellant. H. S. Hadley, Atty. Gen., and N. T. Gentry, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

GANTT, J. On the 11th day of May, 1907, the prosecuting attorney of Vernon county filed the following information, duly verified, before Henry Dalton, a justice of the peace within and for Center township in said county:

"James N. Coll, prosecuting attorney, within and for the county of Vernon and state of Missouri, on his oath of office and on his best information and belief informs the court that J. C. Webber, on or about the _____ day of May, 1907, at and in the said county of Vernon and state of Missouri, did then and there willfully and unlawfully deal in the selling of goods, wares, and merchandise as a peddler, by going about from place to place with two horses and wagon used by the said J. C. Webber for that purpose, by then and there selling divers goods, to wit, one bottle of liniment, to one Ben Finck, for the sum of one dollar, two bottles of lemon extract to Mrs. _____ Wilkerson, for the sum of fifty cents, and divers other articles to this informant unknown, to divers persons whose names are unknown, without then and there having a peddler's license, or any other legal authority therefor; contrary to the forms of the statutes in such cases made and provided, and against the peace and dignity of the state of Missouri."

A change of venue was granted to Justice Cummings and on September 20, 1907, the defendant was put on his trial on said information and found guilty, and his punishment assessed at $25, and judgment rendered accordingly. On the same day the defendant took his appeal in due form to the circuit court of Vernon county. At the October term, 1907, of the circuit court the defendant demurred to the information on the following grounds:

First. Said information does not constitute facts sufficient to charge this defendant with the violation of any law, or the commission of any crime or offense.

Second. Sections 8861, 8862, and 8863 of the Revised Statutes of Missouri of 1899 (Ann. St. 1906, pp. 4118-4120), under which this prosecution was instituted, are null and state, providing that the General Assembly of this state shall not pass any local or special law granting to any corporation, association, or individual any special or exclusive right, privilege, or immunity.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

This demurrer was overruled, and thereupon afterwards, at the same term, the question coming on for hearing, a jury was waived, and the question was submitted to the court upon the following statement of facts:

"On the ——— day of May, 1907, at Vernon county, Missouri, the defendant did deal in the selling of liniment and lemon extract by going about from place to place to sell the same, and he did then and there sell one bottle of liniment to one Ben Finck, for the sum of one dollar, and two bottles of lemon extract to Mrs. Wilkerson, for the sum of fifty cents, and it is also agreed that the defendant did not have any peddler's license authorizing him so to do."

At the time of submitting the question on the said statement of facts, defendant requested the court to give the following instructions:

"No. 1. The court declares the law to be that, under the information and evidence in this case, the court should find the defendant not guilty.

"No. 2. The court declares that the peddler's statutes, under which this prosecution is being had, are null and void, because in violation of section 53, art. 4, of the Constitution of the state; and the defendant should be found not guilty.

"No. 3. The court declares the peddler's statutes, under which this prosecution is being had, are null and void because in violation of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States; and the defendant should be found not guilty."

Which said instructions the court refused, and the defendant duly saved his exceptions to the action of the court in so ruling. Thereupon the court found the defendant guilty of peddling without a license as charged in the information, and assessed his punishment at a fine of $15, and rendered judgment accordingly. And thereafter, on the same day, the defendant filed his motion for new trial, assigning as error the refusal of the said instructions, prayed by him, by the court. Which said motion for new trial was by the court overruled, and defendant saved his exceptions. Defendant also filed his motion in arrest, assigning as grounds thereof that the information was insufficient to charge him with any crime because the statutes, to wit, sections 8861, 8862, and 8868, Rev. St. 1899 (Ann. St. 1906, pp. 4118-4120), were null and void, because in violation of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States. Which said motion was also overruled, and defendant stayed his exceptions. Thereafter an appeal was granted to this court in due form.

This appeal involves the constitution-

8861 defines a peddler to be "whoever shall deal in the selling of patents, patent rights, patent or other medicine, lightning rods, goods, wares or merchandise except pianos, organs, sewing machines, books, charts, maps and stationery, agricultural and horticultural products including milk, butter, eggs and cheese, by going from place to place to sell the same." It is obvious that, if the statute is constitutional, the defendant was a peddler, and, not having a license, was guilty. The act is assailed on the ground that it is class legislation and in violation of section 53 of article 4 of the Constitution of this state, which forbids special laws granting to any individual special or exclusive rights, privileges, or immunities, and also in violation of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States. It is conceded by the learned counsel for defendant that it is perfectly competent for the Legislature to select peddlers as a class, which shall be required to obtain a license as a prerequisite to following that occupation. No doubt whatever exists on this point. It has been repeatedly so held by the courts of the several states and the federal courts. The regulation of the business of itinerant peddlers is very ancient. Baron Graham in Attorney General v. Tongue, 12 Price, 51, said: "The object of the Legislature in passing the act upon which this information is founded was to protect, on the one hand, fair traders, particularly established shopkeepers, resident permanently in towns and other places, and paying rent and taxes there for local privileges, from the mischiefs of being undersold by itinerant persons, to their injury, and, on the other hand, to guard the public from the impositions practiced by such persons in the course of their dealings, who, having no known residence, carry on a trade by means of vending goods conveyed from place to place by horse or cart." Graffy v. Rushville, 107 Ind. 502, 8 N. E. 609, 57 Am. Rep. 128; City of South Bend v. Martin, 142 Ind. 31, 41 N. E. 315, 29 L. R. A. 581; 21 Amer. & Eng. Ency. Law (2d Ed.) 791.

But it is insisted that section 8861 has arbitrarily divided this natural class, and requires one of such classes to take out a license, and at the same time grants the other the "right, privilege or immunity" to peddle without a license. That is to say, the Legislature cannot exempt those who deal in selling pianos, organs, books, charts, maps, eggs, butter, and cheese from taking out a license, and by the same statute require those who peddle other merchandise, as in this case "extracts and liniments," to obtain a license; that this is class legislation. It is the settled doctrine of this court that before an act of the Legislature will be held unconstitutional it must appear beyond reasonable doubt that it is in contravention of the Constitution. This assault revenue measure, but is a police regulation. It is regulation of persons following a certain character of business, and not a tax upon property. In Seymour v. State, 51 Ala. 52, the peddler's act of that state was resisted on the ground that the exemption of manufacturers and makers to peddle their products was void because an unlawful discrimination between the same general class; but the Supreme Court of that state held that the state had the right to make such exemption without infringing upon the Constitution; that the privileges and immunities were the same; that every peddler who paid any license at all, paid the same. In Hays v. Commonwealth, 107 Ky. 655, 55 S. W. 425, a like contention was made, and it was urged that, because certain articles were allowed to be peddled without a license, the act violated the fourteenth amendment to the federal Constitution, but the Court of Appeals rejected that contention, saying: "It is true certain articles of property are allowed to be sold by itinerant persons without a license, and they can be sold by any and every person, either as an itinerant or otherwise. Therefore there is no discrimination. Moreover, all citizens, if they elect to peddle the prohibited goods, must have a license to do so, otherwise they are subjected to punishment. Hence there is absolutely no discrimination between citizens, each and every one standing on an exact equality under the peddler's law. If the fact that a man may sell stoneware without a license renders the whole peddler's law unconstitutional, it necessarily follows that the statute requiring a license to sell alcoholic liquors is in violation of the same provision of the Constitution, because the citizen may sell various other articles, both liquid and solid, without any license; and the right of both the state and federal government to require license of vendors of alcoholic liquors has always been sustained by the courts of last resort, both federal and state, so far as we are advised." So in People v. De Blaay, 137 Mich. 402, 100 N. W. 598, an act of the Legislature of that state prohibited peddling without a license, but made an exception in favor of wholesale merchants selling by sample and manufacturers, farmers, mechanics, and nurserymen selling their own products; and this exception or exemption was challenged on the ground that it constituted class legislation. But the Supreme Court of that state ruled that this could not be called class legislation in such a sense as to deny any citizen an equal protection of the law. Under this provision all persons in the same class were treated alike under like circumstances and conditions. Similar provisions have been sustained by that court in People v. Sawyer, 106 Mich. 428, 64 N. W. 333. A like ruling was made in People v. Smith, 147 tention, which is that because the ordinance in turn excepts persons selling vegetables, fish, meat, or farm products, and bakers who deliver bread and pastry to customers, from this provision, which is therefore invalid, is ruled against him by People v. Sawyer, 106 Mich. 428, 64 N. W. 333, and People v. Baker, 115 Mich. 199, 73 N. W. 115. In State v. Montgomery, 92 Me. 433, 43 Atl. 16, it was said by the court: "It is contended that the exception which permits one to peddle without a license the products of his own labor or the labor of his family, any patent of his own invention or in which he has become interested by being a member of any firm, or stockholder in any corporation which has purchased the patent, is a discrimination in favor of some against others. We do not think so. If one can peddle freely the products of his own labor, so may all. The products may be unlike, but the freedom to prosecute one's own business and to peddle his own products is free alike to all. So of the other exceptions. While it may happen that various producers may peddle each the product of his own labor without license, but not of the labor of another, still we think this fairly answers the requirements of uniformity. The Legislature is the sole judge of the extent to which the business of peddling should be regulated, and its conclusions are final, so long as the burdens imposed do not bear unevenly upon citizens." In State v. Stevenson, 109 N. C. 730, 14 S. E. 385, 26 Am. St. Rep. 595, a license tax upon merchants was upheld, although it exempted purchasers of farm products from the producer. The court, after observing that the law puts all merchants dealing in farm products purchased of the producer in one class and all other merchants in another class and treats all in each class alike, goes on to say: "There is no discrimination in either class. The power to select particular trades or occupations and subject them to a license tax cannot be denied to the Legislature, nor the power to tax such trades according to different rules, provided the rule in regard to each business is uniform." In Levy v. State, 161 Ind. 251, 68 N. E. 172, the constitutionality of an act of that state prohibiting the transaction of business by any transient merchant without a license was held not to deny the transient merchant the equal protection of the laws in violation of the amendment of the United States Constitution. The Supreme Court of that state in an exhaustive opinion considered all the objections to the constitutionality of the act, and held that it granted no special privilege and immunities, but applied to all transient merchants and was a natural and reasonable classification, and held that the occupation of a transient merchant closely resembles that of hawkers and peddlers, and sustain-as that's concerned, some time during the day. Mr. Robertson: No, they didn't; a mule had to get out of the way of electricity. The Court: Answer the question."

At the bottom of page 47 of the abstract, witness Hurt, in answer to a question about the motorman operating the fender on the car, said: "Yes, there's a fender; he pulls a lever and drops; it's another kind of fender; I don't think they use them, though; they were trying several kinds at the time I quit, and I believe they adopted this one I speak of, the one you run up against the fender; the lower fender or life fender drops on to the rail."

Defendant's counsel objects to the offer of the fender ordinance in evidence, and says: "This ordinance is entitled 'Fenders to be provided, approved of'; the petition charges that we complied with that ordinance, therefore the ordinance is wholly immaterial."

After a very careful consideration of all of this evidence, we are unable to see how it could be inferred therefrom that the car in question was owned or was being operated by the respondent at the time it struck and killed appellants' son. All of that evidence would apply equally as well to the Suburban Railway Company or to any other company operating a street car system in the city of St. Louis. The street car tracks on Broadway and the cars which were being operated thereon at the time of the injury might have belonged to any of the latter companies; at least, there is nothing in the evidence which shows anything to the contrary, except the mere fact that counsel for respondent conducted the trial of the cause. If that fact alone constituted sufficient evidence from which the inference of ownership might be drawn, then in no case where a defendant appears in a cause by counsel could such a failure of proof ever be successfully raised, because the inevitable answer would be, why are you defending the cause if you and your car did not cause the injury? Yet the books are full of cases which hold that "the evidence should support the allegations as to ownership and operation of the train and road at the time of the injury, and should show the defendant, and not another company, to be liable." 17 Ency. of Plead. & Prac., p. 598. "In an action for damages, where it does not appear from the pleadings and evidence that the car by which plaintiff was injured was in use by defendant, and where it is not shown that the car was running on defendant's railway, and where the connection between defendant and those in charge of the car is not shown, plaintiff cannot recover." Edmunds v. Railway, 3 Mo. App. 603. The same rule has been an-

v. Railroad, 104 Mo. App. 588, 78 S. W. 273; Walsh v. Railroad, 102 Mo. 532, 14 S. W. 873, 15 S. W. 757; O'Keefe v. Railroad, 124 Mo. App. 619, 101 S. W. 1144.

It must follow from these observations that the action of the trial court in sustaining the demurrer to appellants' evidence was proper, and that the judgment of the circuit court should be affirmed.

It is so ordered. All concur.

STATE v. SMITH.

(Supreme Court of Missouri, Division No. 2
Nov. 24, 1908.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 814*)—INSTRUCTIONS—ISSUES.

Where accused showed that he killed decedent in defense of his person against decedent's illegal assaults, and the court charged on the law of self-defense and manslaughter in the fourth degree, a charge submitting the issue of the rights of the parties in certain premises when the homicide occurred which was the cause of the difficulty was properly refused.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1979; Dec. Dig. § 814.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1156*)—NEW TRIAL—CONFLICTING EVIDENCE—FINDINGS—REVIEW.

Where, on a motion for a new trial for incompetency of a juror, two witnesses testified that the juror had, prior to his qualification as a juror, expressed the opinion that accused ought to be convicted, and the juror as a witness positively denied the statements, the overruling of the motion will not be disturbed, in the absence of any abuse of discretion.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 3067; Dec. Dig. § 1156.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Shannon County; W. N. Evans, Judge.

J. B. Smith was convicted of murder in the second degree, and he appeals. Affirmed.
See 207 Mo. 24, 105 S. W. 598.

James Orchard, S. A. Cunningham, J. B. Searcy, and L. M. Searcy, for appellant. Herbert S. Hadley, Atty. Gen., and F. G. Ferris, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

GANTT, C. J. This is a prosecution commenced on the 24th day of September, 1905, by the prosecuting attorney of Shannon county, before a justice of the peace, charging the defendant with having feloniously, willfully, deliberately, premeditatedly, and with malice aforethought shot and killed John W. Blackburn at said county on the 24th day of September, 1905. A warrant issued, and the defendant was duly arrested. The preliminary trial was set for October 2, 1905, and on that day the defendant waived examination and was admitted to bail in the sum of $5,000 to appear at the regular March term, 1906, of the circuit court of said county. The case parties to the road were not the issue before the jury, for they shed no light upon the solution of the question as to what actually occurred at the immediate time of the killing." So we say in this case, under the defendant's own evidence, there is no room for the application of the doctrine that he shot and killed the deceased in the defense of his property rights. According to his testimony, he shot and killed the deceased in the exercise of a right of self-defense, the defense of his own person against the illegal assault on the part of the deceased. His testimony tended to prove this defense, and the court gave him a full and ample instruction on the right of self-defense. His evidence tended to show that the deceased without legal provocation had stooped and picked up a rock, and either threw it at him or was in the act of throwing it at him when he shot and killed him. The court, in view of this testimony, not only instructed on the law of self-defense, but instructed for manslaughter in the fourth degree, and an instruction such as requested by the defendant in this case would have been an invitation to the jury to have considered a matter entirely foreign to the real issue before them. Counsel have called our attention, to the cases of State v. Kennade, 121 Mo. 405, 28 S. W. 347, and State v. Polard, 189 Mo. 220, 40 S. W. 949. Those cases announce the familiar doctrine that the owner of a house and in the possession thereof has a right to protect it and himself in it against all unlawful trespassers against him. But those cases have no application to the facts of this case. This record discloses that the circuit court gave the defendant the full benefit of an instruction on the law of self-defense, and in no manner limited his right of self-defense by reason of the fact that the homicide occurred on the premises of the deceased. As was said in State v. Hargraves, 188 Mo., loc. cit. 350, 87 S. W. 495: "It clearly appears from the testimony (of the defendant) that the assault made by the defendant upon the deceased was in repelling or resisting an assault made by the deceased upon him. The facts in this case do not present that character of struggle where the assault is made in protection or defense of his home or premises, nor in an effort to eject a trespasser from the premises of another, in which the party would have the right to use all the necessary force to accomplish his purpose." We think the court correctly refused to give this instruction, especially as it had fully covered all the issues of law arising upon the evidence in the case. And these observations apply with equal force to the second contention of the defendant in his brief, that, in killing Blackburn under the circumstances, he was only guilty of manslaughter in the fourth degree. His own evidence, as well as

State v. Matthews, 138 Mo. 183, 23 S. W. 1085, 71 Am. St. Rep. 594, relied upon by the defendant, was wholly unlike in its facts to the case now under review.

2. It is insisted that the court erred in not granting a new trial for the reason that U. B. Summers had formed and expressed an opinion before he was qualified on the jury. In support of this ground the defendant filed the affidavit of Lucinda Burris to the effect that the juror, Summers, was at her residence on Sunday the 9th of September, 1906, and that as he started off said he was going to help hang Joe Smith. One Honeycutt testified that he had a conversation with Summers and told him the facts of the case as he understood them, and that Summers expressed the opinion that the defendant ought to be convicted. On the other hand, the juror was called as a witness and was examined fully as to both of his alleged statements, and denied positively both of the statements, and the matter was heard by the trial court, and this ground for new trial was overruled. We have often held that, where there is evidence pro and con in a case of this sort, the evidence should be such as to show a clear abuse of discretion on the part of the trial judge in order to warrant this court in interfering and setting aside a verdict. State v. Gordon, 191 Mo. 133, 89 S. W. 1025, 109 Am. St. Rep. 790; State v. Howell, 117 Mo. 342, 23 S. W. 268; State v. Cook, 84 Mo. 40.

Upon a review of the whole record, it appears to us that there was ample evidence to justify the verdict of the jury, and we have been unable to discover any reversible error in the record, and accordingly the judgment is affirmed.

FOX, P. J., and BURGESS, J., concur.

PHILLIPS v. ST. LOUIS UNION TRUST CO. et al.

(Supreme Court of Missouri, Division No. 1. Nov. 25, 1908.)

1. PUBLIC LANDS (§ 61*)—SWAMP LANDS—SALE—EVIDENCE.

A county treasurer's receipt not mentioning swamp land described in a certificate of sale theretofore issued by the register of swamp lands, but, on the contrary, acknowledging the receipt of the price of swamp lands sold by the county to the person to whom such certificate had been issued and two others, is insufficient to warrant a finding that the lands sold by the county to the persons named in the treasurer's receipt were the lands described in the certificate of sale.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Public Lands, Dec. Dig. § 61.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1009*)—REVIEW—FINDINGS OF FACT—EQUITY CASES.

Notwithstanding the Supreme Court has, in an equity case, the right to review and weigh the evidence, the usual practice is to defer large-

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

Appeal from Circuit Court, New Madrid County; H. C. Riley, Judge.

Bill by Amos R. Phillips against the St. Louis Union Trust Company and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

This was a bill in equity, filed in the Circuit Court of New Madrid county by the plaintiff against the defendants, which sought to have the legal title to 280 acres of land located in that county divested from the defendants and invested in the plaintiff. There was a trial had before the court which resulted in a judgment in favor of the defendants. After an unsuccessful motion for a new trial, plaintiff appealed the cause to this court.

The bill was couched in the following language:

"Plaintiff states that codefendant Himmelberger-Harrison Land Company is a corporation organized under the laws of the state of Missouri. That the St. Louis Union Trust Company is a corporation organized under the laws of the state of Missouri. That heretofore, on May —, 1857, at the May term of the ——— court of New Madrid county, Missouri, there was legally sold the land hereinafter set out and described, and that at said sale one Augustus E. Shields purchased the following described swamp lands belonging to the county of New Madrid, Missouri, to wit, 40 acres of land, being the southeast quarter of the southwest quarter in section No. 26; also 160 acres, being the southeast quarter of section No. 26; also 80 acres, being the north half of the northeast quarter of section No. 35—township 23, range 13, being in all 280 acres, for the price and sum of $1,729.20. That said lands being a part of the swamp lands granted to the state of Missouri by the United States by the swamp land act of Congress, approved 28th September, 1850, and that on, to wit, 23d day of May, 1857, after the purchase of said lands by said Shields, and under and by virtue of said purchase and the laws governing such sales, the register of swamp lands within and for said county, by John T. Scott, issued and delivered to said Augustus E. Shields a register certificate of purchase therefor, describing said lands then and reciting the purchase price, sale and name of purchaser, which sale and certificate of purchase was duly recorded in the register's office in the records provided for by law for that purpose, which record was a public record of said county. That after that, to wit, said Augustus E. Shields wit, on the 14th day of August, 1860, Shapley R. Phillips paid to George W. Dawson, the treasurer of New Madrid county, Missouri, for said county, the sum of $2,233.70, being the full amount due for the balance due on the purchase price of the above-described lands and other lands entered by Edward Coleman and Wm. D. Waldrop; and said George W. Dawson as such treasurer on said date executed and delivered to said Shapley R. Phillips his treasurer's receipt therefor, and thereby said Shapley R. Phillips became the equitable owner and had the equitable title to said lands, but the legal title remained in the county, who in equity held the same in trust for the use and benefit of said Phillips. That since said date, August 14, 1860, and till his death, said lands were taxed to Shapley Phillips, and he paid the taxes on same; cut and sold timber from same, and cut and used timber from same; and under his equitable title claimed the ownership thereof, and made such use thereof as it was fit for. That said Phillips died, and the property sued for, with other property, was set off and allotted to plaintiff in a suit in partition in the New Madrid circuit court in the year 1872, and has since then been held by plaintiff and taxed to plaintiff, and plaintiff has paid all taxes on same, and used the same for wood and timber, and for such purposes for which it was fit. And so, he says, he and his grandfather, Shapley R. Phillips, under whom he claims, have held the equitable title claiming the property in this suit since August, 1860, using the same for such purposes for which it was fit, paying taxes on same, and that these rights and claims through all these years have been undisputed and notorious, and was known to Himmelberger & Luce and others, who have since been grantees from the county and under them, and could have been known by ordinary inquiry, investigation, and observation.

"He states that he is informed that the register record of sale of lands and register record of certificate of sale of land were destroyed by fire during the period of the Civil War, between the years 1861 and 1865. He further states that about the first day of December, 1885, the county court of New Madrid county, Missouri, contracted with C. L. Luce (now dead) to dig a certain ditch or drain therein described and to be finished and completed in a limited and stated time in said contract specified, and upon its completion, according to plans and specifications, within the time named, to pay therefor a stipulated sum; but not to be paid in money, but in certain swamp lands

Staples and Frank Mason saw the defendant standing near his house, with a shotgun in his hands, and, fearing trouble, they turned the team aside and went home another way, by passing through a fence dividing the field from Mr. Staples' land. It appears from the evidence that about 45 minutes had elapsed between the time the shots were fired and the time the defendant was first seen by the prosecuting witness and Frank Mason. On their way home, and when about half a mile distant from the defendant's home, the boys looked back and saw a man whom they supposed was the defendant standing near his house. These are all the facts of any consequence discovered by the testimony. According to his own testimony, the only reasons which the prosecuting witness had for thinking that the defendant was the person who shot at him were that the defendant had made threats, and he, the prosecuting witness, did not know anybody else in the country that would want to shoot him.

It may be conceded, as contended for the defendant, that, in order to convict the defendant of the crime charged against him, it devolved upon the state to prove that he was present at the time and place of the shooting; but this, like any other fact in the case, could be shown by facts and circumstances, if sufficient. It is not at all necessary that it be proven by direct and positive testimony. Now, at the outset it appears that there was ill feeling between the family of J. S. Staples, father of Sam Staples, and the defendant, growing out of a lawsuit; that, about two weeks before the shooting, J. S. Staples met the defendant upon the public road and told him that he would send his boys to gather the corn crop in a short time, and that the defendant replied, "I give you warning right now to stay off that place, you and your boys; if you don't, you will take the consequences." This threat made by the defendant, and the fact of the existence of animosity between him and the Staples family, taken in connection with the other facts in evidence, especially the time and place of the shooting, and the presence of the defendant, with a gun in his hand, near the place from which the shots were fired, 45 minutes after the shooting occurred, tend to show, we think, that the defendant is guilty as charged. State v. Morney, 196 Mo. 43, 93 S. W. 1117, cited by the defendant, was not nearly so strong a case for the state as the case in hand. In that case there was no proof of threats or ill will on the part of the defendant toward the owner of the property which was burned, nor proof that he was in the vicinity for many hours before the fire occurred. Our conclusion is that there was ample

The judgment is affirmed. All concur.

STATE v. HODGES.

(Supreme Court of Missouri, Division No. 2
Nov. 24, 1908.)

FISH (§ 9*)—OFFENSES—STATUTORY PROVISIONS—REPEAL.

Rev. St. 1899, §§ 7456, 7464 (Ann. St. 1906, pp. 3598, 3596), forbidding the placing of dynamite or other explosive in waters of the state whereby any fish may be killed, and the killing of fish by such means, are not repealed by the Walmsley game law (Laws 1905, p. 163, § 29 [Ann. St. 1906, § 7500-29]), forbidding the use of dynamite in waters of the state except by special permission of the state game and fish warden, and then only for certain purposes, and making a violation thereof a misdemeanor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fish, Dec. Dig. § 9.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Shannon County; W. N. Evans, Judge.

George G. Hodges was convicted of throwing dynamite in certain waters of the state whereby fish might have been and were killed, in violation of Rev. St. 1899, § 7456 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 3593), and he appeals. Affirmed.

See, also, 207 Mo. 517, 106 S. W. 51.

The defendant in this cause was charged in the circuit court of Shannon county with throwing dynamite in certain waters of this state, whereby the fish in said waters might have been killed, injured, or destroyed, and whereby a large quantity of fish in said waters were killed, caught, and taken from said waters, in violation of section 7456, Rev. St. 1899 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 3593). The defendant was convicted of said offense and fined in the sum of $100, and the cause is pending in this court upon appeal from the judgment rendered in said cause. Learned counsel for appellant make no point as to the sufficiency of the testimony to warrant a conviction, nor do they complain or assign any error respecting the regularity of the proceeding, but concede in their brief that there is but one question presented for determination in this cause, and that is whether section 29 of the act of 1905 (Laws 1905, pp. 163, 164 [Ann. St. 1906, § 7500-29]) abrogated or repealed sections 7456 and 7464, Rev. St. 1899, which latter sections classify the offense as a felony and prescribe the penalty for its commission. The information in this cause, which was duly verified, omitting formal parts, thus charges the offense: "L. B. Shuck, prosecuting attorney within and for the county of Shannon, and state of Missouri, under his oath of office and upon his own knowledge, information and belief informs the court that George G. Hodacter or used in such a manner whereby fish in the waters of this state might be killed or destroyed, or not. In other words, the lawmaking power sought to take away all chances of the destruction of fish by means of explosives by simply saying, "You shall not use them at all except under certain conditions, whether they were calculated to kill fish or not."

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

These two sections are in no way inconsistent, and both of them can be made effective and operative. As was said in the case of State v. Taylor, 186 Mo., loc. cit. 615, 85 S. W. 566: "It is clearly the duty of courts, in construing two sections upon the same subject defining criminal offenses, to so construe them as to bring them in harmony and make them both effective and operative, to the end that a remedy may be afforded for the evil sought to be suppressed." These two sections are easily susceptible of being made harmonious. As they now stand, if the defendant placed in the waters of this state explosives of such a nature and character whereby fish may be destroyed or injured, or used it as a means of killing and taking fish from the waters of this state, he should be proceeded against under the provisions of section 7456 for a felony. If, on the other hand, he should use an explosive not of that character whereby fish might be destroyed, and not as a means for killing and taking fish from the waters of the state, yet fails to comply with the conditions required in obtaining the permission, etc., of the game warden, then he should be proceeded against under the provisions of section 29 for a misdemeanor. In our opinion it is clear that these two sections were intended to cover separate and distinct classes of acts done by persons handling dynamite or explosives.

We have thus given expression to our views upon the only proposition confronting us in the record before us, which results in the conclusion that the judgment of the trial court should be affirmed; and it is so ordered. All concur.

STATE v. GROSSMAN.

(Supreme Court of Missouri, Division No. 2.
Nov. 24, 1908.)

1. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 208*)—"CLASS LEGISLATION"—INTOXICATING LIQUORS—PROHIBITING SALES ON SUNDAY.

Rev. St. 1899, § 3011 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1726), prohibiting any licensed dramshop keeper from keeping open his dramshop, or selling or giving away, or otherwise disposing of intoxicating liquors, on Sunday, applies to all licensed dramshop keepers, and is a general and not unreasonable regulation of the liquor traffic, and hence

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 2, pp. 1217, 1218; vol. 8, p. 7605.]

2. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 46*)—STATUTES—VALIDITY—RIGHT TO RAISE CONSTITUTIONAL QUESTIONS.

One charged with violating Rev. St. 1899, § 3011 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1726), prohibiting licensed dramshop keepers from selling intoxicating liquors on Sunday, cannot raise the question of the constitutionality of section 3013, prohibiting the granting of a dramshop license to one convicted of a violation of the statutes regulating dramshops, the two sections being separate, and section 3013 not being involved in the enforcement of section 3011.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. § 43; Dec. Dig. § 46.*]

3. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION (§ 125*)—STATUTORY OFFENSES—SUFFICIENCY.

Since a statute forbidding several things in the alternative creates but one offense, an information may charge one with the commission of all the acts conjunctively, but an information charging all the acts disjunctively is bad.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indictment and Information, Dec. Dig. § 125.*]

4. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION (§ 125*)—STATUTORY OFFENSES—SUFFICIENCY.

Rev. St. 1899, § 3011 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1726), prohibiting any licensed dramshop keeper from keeping open, or selling or giving away intoxicating liquors, on Sunday, is a regulation of the liquor traffic on Sunday, and the offense denounced may be committed by any of the methods designated by the statute, and an information charging a violation of all the acts denounced by the statute must charge them conjunctively.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indictment and Information, Dec. Dig. § 125.*]

5. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 881*)—TRIAL—VERDICT—SUFFICIENCY.

The verdict must be reasonably definite and certain and responsive to the issues.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2093; Dec. Dig. § 881.*]

6. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 971*)—VERDICT—DEFECT—MOTION IN ARREST OF JUDGMENT.

A defect in a verdict because it is uncertain and is not responsive to the issues may be reached by motion in arrest of judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2463, 2466, 2468; Dec. Dig. § 971.*]

7. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 881*)—VERDICT—SUFFICIENCY.

A verdict finding accused guilty of selling or otherwise disposing of liquor on Sunday, as charged in the information, which alleges that accused, a licensed dramshop keeper, sold, gave away, and disposed of intoxicating liquors on Sunday, is uncertain and is not responsive to the issue, because it leaves to mere conjecture as to which act accused is found guilty of committing.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 881.*]

Appeal from St. Louis Court of Criminal Correction.

Arthur Grossman was convicted of violating the Sunday law, and he appeals. Reversed and remanded.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes disposing of liquor on Sunday, as charged in the information, and assess his punishment at a fine of $75.00. E. F. Jones, Foreman." Section 3011, Rev. St. 1899, upon which the information and the verdict as returned, by the jury is predicated, makes it an offense for any person having a license as a dramshop keeper to sell, give away, or otherwise dispose of, or suffer the same to be done on or about his premises, any intoxicating liquors, in any quantity, on the first day of the week, commonly called Sunday. Under the provisions of this section it is well settled in this state that the pleader may in one count charge all of the facts embraced in that section, providing that he connects them by the conjunctive conjunction "and." It is equally well settled that it is bad pleading to charge all of the acts embraced in the section by the use of the disjunctive conjunction "or." These adjudications are based upon the theory that a statute which forbids several things in the alternative is usually considered as creating but one offense. As is said by Mr. Bishop: "Where, for instance, a statute forbids several things in the alternative, it is usually considered as creating but one offense, and the indictment may charge the defendant with the commission of all the acts, using the conjunction 'and,' where the statute uses the disjunctive 'or,' or, on the other hand, the indictment may contain but one or two of the acts, at the election of the pleader." 1 Bishop's Criminal Prac. § 191.

In Stephens v. Commonwealth, 6 Metc. (Mass.) 241, the court had under consideration a statute which prescribed the punishment of "every person who shall buy, receive or aid in the concealment of any stolen goods, knowing the same to have been stolen." It was held in that case that there was but one offense mentioned by the statute, although that offense might be committed in one of three modes—by buying, receiving, or aiding in the concealment of stolen goods. So it may be said as to section 3011. Its provisions are intended as a regulation of the liquor traffic by prohibiting the pursuit of that traffic on the first day of the week, commonly called Sunday. The offense denounced by that statute may be committed by any of the methods designated in the statute, either by keeping open the dramshop on Sunday, or by selling, giving away, or otherwise disposing of intoxicating liquors, or suffering the same to be done upon or about the premises where the dramshop is located, but the doing of either one of the particular acts would of itself alone make a complete offense. On the other hand, if all of the acts denounced by section 3011 were charged in an information, and in charging the commission of such acts the disjunctive conjunction ant charged with the commission of such acts would be unable to tell as to which one of the acts charged he would be required to meet upon the trial of the cause. It may be said as to verdicts in criminal cases that the law is well settled that they must be reasonably definite and certain and responsive to the issues presented in the cause.

In State v. De Witt, 186 Mo. 61, 84 S. W. 956, the authorities were all carefully reviewed by this court, and the following conclusion was announced, after a full consideration of all the authorities, speaking through Judge Gantt: "Whatever the practice may be in other states, it is the settled law of Missouri that if a verdict, which is a part of the record, is not responsive to the issue, or is so uncertain and indefinite that it will not support the judgment, this defect may be reached by a motion in arrest of judgment"—citing Webber v. State, 10 Mo. 4; Davidson v. Peck, 4 Mo. 438; Griffin v. Samuel, 6 Mo. 50.

The verdict in this cause, measured by the authorities cited in State v. De Witt, supra, is manifestly insufficient to support the judgment. If the jury had found the defendant guilty as charged in the information, or had returned a verdict finding him guilty of the commission of one of the acts charged in the information, it would have been clearly sufficient, but this verdict fails to find definitely or with certainty the defendant guilty of the commission of any acts which would constitute an offense. It finds the defendant guilty of "selling or otherwise disposing of liquor on Sunday." The verdict in that form is not a finding that he sold whisky on Sunday, or that he gave it away or otherwise disposed of it on Sunday; it is simply a verdict which says, "We find the defendant guilty of either selling on Sunday or otherwise disposing of liquor" on that day, and leaves it to a mere conjecture as to which act the defendant is found guilty of committing.

While it is with reluctance that this court feels constrained to disturb the judgment of the trial court by reason of the insufficiency of the verdict returned, yet if juries are required under the law to return their findings in a reasonably definite and certain manner which are responsive to the issues presented, and we are to longer follow the well-settled rules of law applicable to the form of verdicts, then we see no escape from the conclusion that this verdict is indefinite, uncertain, and not responsive to the issues presented, and the motion in arrest of judgment filed by the defendant in the trial court should have been sustained.

Entertaining these views, it results that the judgment of the trial court should be reversed and the cause remanded, and it is so ordered. All concur.

port that in accordance with authority conferred on said committee, it did, on the 6th day of November, 1903, employ Peter T. Barrett as its attorney and counselor at an agreed compensation of $350, and Wm. J. Gavigan as its clerk at an agreed compensation of $200 per month, and on February 15, 1904, employed William F. Ryan as an additional attorney at an agreed compensation of $350 per month, and because of the expenses incurred thereby by your committee, we ask that your honorable house pass the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the committee on the 'Investigation of Taxes' be and is hereby authorized to expend the sum of $3,615 out of the fund municipal assembly, house of delegates, to defray the expenses already incurred by your committee under said resolution."

On April 15th the said committee made its report, and the house of delegates adjourned sine die. On July 15th, at a subsequent session of the house of delegates, the following resolution was introduced:

"Whereas, the special committee of the house of delegates on tax investigation did on the 8th day of April, 1904, report to this honorable house that, in accordance with the authority conferred on said committee, it did, on the 6th day of November, 1903, employ Peter T. Barrett, an attorney, at an agreed compensation of $350 per month and William J. Gavigan, clerk and bookkeeper, at an agreed compensation of $200 per month, and on the 15th day of February, 1904, did employ William F. Ryan, an attorney, at an agreed compensation of $350 per month, and because of the expense thereby incurred by it the said committee requested this honorable house to authorize it to expend the sum of $3,615 to defray the same; and

"Whereas, this House did on said 8th day of April, 1904, authorize the expenditure of $3,615 to defray said expenses; and

"Whereas, the said special committee on tax investigation did on the 15th day of April, 1904, report to this honorable house that immediately upon the organization of said committee, to-wit, November 6, 1903, it employed Peter T. Barrett at an agreed compensation of $350 per month and Wm. J. Gavigan at an agreed compensation of $200 per month, and that on the 15th day of February, 1904, it did employ William F. Ryan at an agreed compensation of $350 per month; therefore be it

"Resolved, That the said Peter T. Barrett be allowed for his services to said committee the sum of $1,855, and that the said William J. Gavigan be allowed for his services to said committee the sum of $1,060, and that the said William F. Ryan be allowed for his services to said committee the sum of $700, to be paid out of the fund heretofore appropriated to pay the expenses of the house of delegates and that the clerk of this house

$1,855, William J. Gavigan for $1,060 and William F. Ryan for $700."

The respondent is the auditor of the city of St. Louis. There was oral evidence introduced which tended to show the services of the relator as clerk of said committee, and that his services were reasonably worth $200 per month. The position of the city auditor is well stated in his return to the alternative writ of mandamus. In this return he says:

"Defendant alleges that on or about the 3d day of October, 1904, the clerk of the house of delegates drew his warrant in favor of relator for the sum of $1,060, and that said warrant was presented to defendant as auditor of the city of St. Louis, and that the defendant on or about the 25th day of October, 1904, declined and refused, and still declines and refuses, to audit and allow the same, and declines and refuses to draw a warrant for the same to pay the same. Defendant states that the house of delegates did not possess the power or the authority under the law to authorize its said committee to make the alleged contract of employment of relator as clerk, and the said alleged contract was and is void under the provisions of section 48 of article 4 of the Constitution of the state of Missouri. This defendant states further that under section 18, art. 16 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 4892), of the charter of the city of St. Louis, no contract for services of any clerk could be entered into at a compensation exceeding the rate of $1,800 per year—that is to say, exceeding $150 per month—and that the alleged employment of the relator as such clerk of the said committee of the said house of delegates was without authority of law. This defendant states further that there is now no appropriation or fund, nor has there been any such appropriation or fund since the 1st of April, 1904, out of which the amount claimed by the relator could be paid, or against which this defendant as auditor of the city of St. Louis could draw or allow a warrant therefor. Defendant states further that the defendant, as auditor of the city of St. Louis, is prohibited by section 11 of article 5 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 4839) of the charter of the city of St. Louis from drawing or allowing a warrant in favor of the relator when there is no fund or appropriation against which such warrant could be drawn or allowed, or out of which it could be paid. Wherefore this defendant prays that the alternative writ be quashed, and the peremptory writ be refused, and that he be dismissed with costs."

John Faudi testified, in effect, as follows: "Am second deputy auditor of the city of St. Louis. Testified that he had with him in court the daily balance book covering all appropriations for the city. The daily balance book is an exact copy of the appropriation bill, from time to time. The different departments draw against it, and deductions house creating the committee and providing for its selection and the selection of a clerk? The position held by relator was not one held by an ordinance duly passed by the legislative branch of the city government and approved by the mayor, but only by the resolution aforesaid. Can one branch of the legislative department by mere resolution create a position and attach thereto a salary to be paid out of the city funds? Or, further, can either branch of the legislative department make a valid contract for services, without the action of the other branch and of the mayor? Or can such contract be valid without being in writing? If not, then is there such implied power in the charter and laws as would authorize the resolution, so far as relator is concerned, and the contract, if such it could be called, as indicated in the resolution? All of these are pertinent questions. Relator contends that there was power in the house of delegates to make the investigation mentioned in the resolution. This we think correct, and, as stated above, such body had the right to designate a committee for that purpose, but could either that body or its committee create a salaried position, or contract for services? To our mind there is no question that a salaried position cannot be created by resolution of one branch of the municipal legislative body. Such a proceeding is entirely out of harmony both with the spirit and letter of our law. Nor do we think it less clear that one branch of the legislative department cannot by resolution make a valid contract. The creation of salaried positions as well as the expenditure of public funds is placed in the hands of the whole legislative department, there being coupled therewith the restraining veto power of the executive department. The resolution, therefore, created no legal position for relator, nor did it constitute a valid and binding contract under which he could act.

2. We think that inasmuch as relator was not a public official, but a private citizen, before there could be a valid and binding contract between him and the city, such contract must be one duly authorized by law and duly entered into in writing by the properly constituted authorities. In other words, the relator being a mere alleged contractor for services with the city, the provisions of section 6759, Rev. St. 1899 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 3327), fully apply, as well as the provision of the city charter above quoted. If the city of St. Louis by proper ordinance had made an appropriation for this specific work, and authorized the appointment of a person to do it, then a different question might arise. Such, however, was not the case, and this matter will not be discussed. No city ordinance appears in the record, except a general appropriation ordinance, which will be discussed in a further paragraph.

for him, specifically, only appears in the resolution. In our judgment, under the statute cited aforesaid, inasmuch as relator was not an officer holding an office created by ordinance, the only legal method for the authorization of his work would have been by ordinance providing for such character of work and providing for the execution of a contract as by the statute and city charter last aforesaid prescribed. The force and effect of this statute and its purposely enacted restricting influence have been fully discussed by the courts, to which discussion we can add nothing. Woolfolk v. Randolph County, 83 Mo. 501; Crutchfield v. Warrensburg, 30 Mo. App. 456; Schell City v. Rumsey Mfg. Co., 39 Mo. App. 264; Taylor v. School District, 60 Mo. App. 372.

3. It is strenuously urged that inasmuch as there is legal authority for the house of delegates to make such investigations, then there is an implied power in that body to employ the necessary means, although it require the expenditure of the public funds of the municipality for that purpose, and although it requires a contract, either express or implied, with some person to do the work. Many cases from other states are cited, and some are forcibly in point, but an examination of those cases fail to show the constitutional and statutory inhibitions on municipal contracts, which we have, and for that reason the cases are not in point either in fact or in law. But grant it that there was an implied power authorizing the house of delegates to make a contract with relator for services to the city, yet such power to contract, whether express or implied, must be exercised in pursuance of the terms of the statute and city charter quoted, and in this case there is no such contract shown.

4. There is yet a further reason fully justifying the conduct of respondent in refusing to audit the claim of relator. For the sake of the argument, grant it to be true that the legislative department could by an appropriation ordinance, prior to or after the work was done, pay relator for his services, yet have we such an ordinance in this case? We think not. The resolution, it is true, makes a specific disposal of a certain fund theretofore appropriated by the appropriation ordinance, but this resolution cannot go beyond the scope of the ordinance. By the charter, art. 5 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 4839), it is provided: "No money shall be paid out of the treasury except on the auditor's warrant, and no warrant shall be issued on any appropriation unless there is an unexpended balance to the credit thereof sufficient to cover such warrant and money in the treasury to pay it." And by section 14 it is provided (Ann. St. 1906, p. 4839): "No money shall be expended, nor shall any improvement be ordered involving the ex-finally settled, will this court take jurisdiction of the case at bar, the appeal having been taken long subsequent to the adjudications herein indicated? In the very recent case of Dickey v. Holmes et al., 208 Mo. 684, 106 S. W. 511, the appeal was granted to this court, and it was sought to have this court retain jurisdiction by reason of a constitutional question being involved. Judge Burgess, in a very exhaustive opinion, reviewed all of the authorities applicable to the proposition now confronting us. The constitutional question raised in that case had, previous to the appeal, been finally adjudicated in numerous other cases, and this court declined to take jurisdiction of the same. It was pointed out in the discussion of the proposition that there were some cases which held that, when a constitutional question has once been decided in a case, it can be raised in a subsequent case, and when so raised in the trial court it is so far in the case as to direct the course of the appeal to the Supreme Court. Judge Burgess, in commenting upon those cases, said that: "This is not an ironclad rule to which there are no exceptions. In the very nature of things, the constitutional question involved must be a live one, not expressly foreclosed by prior decisions of this court, otherwise no such question could ever be settled, no matter how often adjudicated by this court."

In Gabbert v. Railroad, 171 Mo. 84, 70 S. W. 891, it was ruled that the amendment to the Constitution allowing nine jurors to return a verdict was legally adopted and was constitutional, and this court has uniformly since declined and refused to consider cases where the appeal was taken solely on the ground of the alleged unconstitutionality of that amendment, except where the appeal was taken prior to that decision, December 24, 1902.

In Murray v. Railroad, 176 Mo. 183, 75 S. W. 611, this court retained jurisdiction solely upon the ground that the appeal was taken prior to the decision in Gabbert v. Railroad, supra. The same rule was announced by this court in banc in Tandy v. Transit Company, 178 Mo. 240, 77 S. W. 994, and by division 1 of this court in Portwright v. Railroad, 183 Mo. 72, 81 S. W. 1091.

In Lee v. Jones, 181 Mo. 291, 79 S. W. 927, 103 Am. St. Rep. 596, there was a verdict for the plaintiff for $1,500 upon which there was a judgment rendered, and the defendant appealed. Valliant, J., speaking for the court, said: "The appeal was taken to the St. Louis Court of Appeals, but when the attention of that court was called to the fact that only nine of the jurors concurred in the verdict, and that the constitutionality of such a verdict was challenged in the circuit court, the Court of Appeals transferred the cause to this court. At the time the appeal by three-fourths of the jurors in a civil cause in a court of record; therefore there was a constitutional question in the case which gave this court jurisdiction, and the action of the Court of Appeals transferring the cause to this court was right. This court having jurisdiction when the appeal was taken, will retain it. But since then we have decided that under our Constitution three-fourths of the jurors in a civil suit in a court of record may render a valid verdict and therefore that is no longer a constitutional question in this state." The same conclusion was reached in Franklin v. Railroad, 188 Mo. 533, 87 S. W. 930, and in Carpenter v. Hamilton, 185 Mo. 603, 84 S. W. 863.

In Boling v. Railroad, 189 Mo. 219, 88 S. W. 35, Judge Gantt, in speaking for this court, said: "Under the recent decisions of this court in banc and both divisions, had this appeal been taken to or transferred to this court after the decision in Russell v. Croy, 164 Mo. 69, 63 S. W. 849, and Gabbert v. Railroad, 171 Mo. 84, 70 S. W. 891. * * * this appeal should be remanded to the St. Louis Court of Appeals, as the sole ground upon which it is transferred to this court is that the amendment to section 28 of article 2 of the Constitution (Ann. St. 1905, p. 162), permitting nine jurors in a civil case to make a verdict, was never legally adopted, but inasmuch as the appeal, when taken fairly raised the constitutional question whether such amendments had in fact become a part of the Constitution, and was taken prior to the settlement of that question by this court in the cases above cited, we will retain the appeal as properly in this court; otherwise, we would not"—citing Lee v. Jones, 181 Mo. 291, 79 S. W. 927, 103 Am. St. Rep. 596; Carpenter v. Hamilton, 185 Mo. 603, 84 S. W. 863.

In Dickey v. Holmes et al., supra, the constitutional question involved was concerning certain charter provisions of Kansas City, Mo., and, in discussing the question as to whether this court should take jurisdiction it was said: "The case of Barber Asphalt Co. v. Ridge, 169 Mo. 376, 68 S. W. 1043, was decided in division No. 2, June 18, 1902, and Paving Co. v. Munn, 185 Mo. 552, 83 S. W. 1062, on December 24, 1904, while the appeal in the case at bar was granted on the 23d day of January, 1905; so that, before the appeal in this case was taken, division 2 of this court had twice decided the charter provision in question unconstitutional and void, and both divisions a number of times since. In view of these repeated adjudications, can there be any merit in this appeal? If there is, we fail to appreciate it. We therefore decline to take jurisdiction of this case, and order the record and papers transferred to the Kansas City Court of Appeals, to whose jurisdiction it rightfully belongs."

As applicable to the case at bar, it is man-such duties as a good mother (an alma mater in name and fact) would perform for a family of boys. In the school building are eight or nine recitation rooms, a study hall, laboratory, and 15 or 20 rooms devoted to such general purposes as are necessary to the successful conduct of the school. While certain apartments of the building are set apart for the family, yet pupils and teachers have access to them, and these apartments at times are used in connection with the school, e. g., social attractions and giving the boys recreation. One of the defendant's said sons was an officer in the school, and did school work. One of said daughters was the general assistant to her mother in the home department. Another son and daughter were minors, and, when they were not elsewhere at school or in the employ of outside parties in outside pursuits, they were merely members of defendant's family, except that, as said, during vacation all the family performed duties connected with the school in renovating, refurnishing, house cleaning, etc., and, presumably, in correspondence, advertising, etc.

Resting on the foregoing facts, learned counsel insist on one side, and deny on the other, that the locus to the extent of one acre is exempt from taxation under the following constitutional and statutory provisions:

(1) Section 6, art. 10, of the Constitution (Ann. St. 1906, p. 280): " * * * Lots in incorporated cities or towns, or within one mile of the limits of any such city or town, to the extent of one acre, and lots one mile or more distant from such cities or towns, to the extent of five acres, with the buildings thereon, may be exempted from taxation when the same are used exclusively for religious worship, for schools, or for purposes purely charitable * * *."

(2) Section 9119, Rev. St. 1899 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 4199): "The following subjects are exempt from taxation: * * * Sixth, lots in incorporated cities or towns, or within one mile of the limits of any such city or town, to the extent of one acre, and lots one mile or more distant from such cities or towns, to the extent of five acres, with the buildings thereon, when the same are used exclusively for religious worship, for schools or for purposes purely charitable shall be exempted from taxation, for state, county or local purposes."

It is not contended by counsel for the state, as we see it, that the exemption does not cover private schools as distinguished from public schools, nor pay schools as distinguished from free schools, nor boarding schools as distinguished from schools having no home department, nor military schools as distinguished from those having no military features. The contention of the state hinges on the phrase, "used exclusively," found in the tax-exempting clause of the Constitution and statute; and the point for decision is narrowly connected with the question whether a proprietor of a private military boarding school in Missouri reside in the school building with his family, having no avocation but running the school, and in which avocation the family participate, does such residence destroy the exemption? It is our opinion that, viewed from the philosophy of the thing and measured by cardinal standards of legal interpretation, the right answer to that question is, No. This because:

(a) It must be conceded to the state that whether a tax-exempting clause be viewed from the standpoint of the state down to the people or from the standpoint of the people up to the state, there be unbending and inviolate rules which as sure words of the law are always to be reckoned with; and these rules (from the standpoint of the state) are that an abandonment of the sovereign right to exercise the vital power of taxation can never be presumed. The intention to abandon must appear in the most clear and unequivocal terms (Pacific R. Co. v. Cass County et al., 53 Mo., loc. cit. 27); and from the standpoint of the people they are that equality is equity in taxation; that the yoke of taxation—a forced contribution for governmental needs—should rest evenly on the necks of all citizens; that to relieve one but increases the burden of the other; that tax exemptions are in derogation of equal right—are contrary to common right—hence are not to be favored by the courts, but should be construed strictly and confined to the subjects specified, including such as are necessarily within the contemplation of the legislation under review. Kansas City Exposition Driving Park Co. v. Kansas City, 174 Mo. 427, 74 S. W. 979; Fitterer v. Crawford, 157 Mo., loc. cit. 58, 57 S. W. 532, 50 L. R. A. 191 et seq.; City of Kansas v. Kansas City Medical College, 111 Mo., loc. cit. 146, 20 S. W. 35. Says Scott, J., in Wyman v. St. Louis, 17 Mo. 335: "Equality is equity, and when one claims exemption from a burden to which all others are subject, and whose freedom will increase their load, he must clearly show himself in the situation which entitled him to the exemption claimed." And Cooley states the sum of the matter to be (1 Cooley on Taxation [3d Ed.] 357, 358): "It is also a very just rule that, when an exemption is found to exist, it shall not be enlarged by construction. On the contrary, it ought to receive a strict construction; for the reasonable presumption is that the state has granted in express terms all it intended to grant at all, and that, unless the privilege is limited to the very terms of the statute, the favor would be extended beyond what was meant." Nevertheless, conceding to the state the foregoing general propositions, yet strict construction must still be a reasonable construction, the product of right and clear thinking, or else reason is no longer the life of the law; and it has been well said by a scholar and form aforesaid, feloniously, falsely, knowingly, willfully and corruptly committed willful and corrupt perjury, contrary to the form of the statute, and against the peace and dignity of the state.

"Nicholas B. Conrad,

"Prosecuting Attorney.

"A true bill.

"C. H. Williams,

"Foreman of the Grand Jury."

The defendant is not represented in this court by counsel, and we must look to the grounds assigned in the motion to quash as the basis of the judgment of the court in quashing the indictment. From these it appears that it was insisted by the defendant in the circuit court that, assuming the truth of all that was charged against the defendant, the matters sworn to by him before the grand jury were wholly immaterial and collateral to the question or matter under consideration by the grand jury, to wit, the illegal selling of intoxicating liquors, including beer, by Harve Smith and George Brent in said county, and therefore could not form the predicate for a charge of perjury.

It appears from the averments in the indictment that the grand jury had been duly and legally selected, impaneled, and sworn in the circuit court of Henry county at its September term, 1907, and that a certain complaint had been presented to them against Harve Smith and George Brent for illegally selling intoxicating liquors, including beer, in said county of Henry outside of the city of Clinton, and that the defendant, Ackerman, had been duly summoned as a witness before the said grand jury in regard to said complaint and had been sworn by the foreman of the grand jury, and that it was then and there material and important to know whether Ackerman had any knowledge of the transportation and hauling of beer from Clinton to Deepwater, and for whom the hauling was done, and the time and circumstances thereof. The indictment thus names and particularizes the body before whom the alleged perjury was committed, and the investigation of the guilt of persons named therein, and the materiality of the evidence in said investigation by the grand jury, and that the oath was administered to the defendant by the foreman; and the indictment then sets out the evidence which the defendant gave before the grand jury, and then proceeds to assign perjury upon this evidence. In substance it is alleged that the defendant then and there, before the said grand jury, feloniously, falsely, corruptly, knowingly, willfully, and maliciously did swear and testify that he never, at any time, hauled a wagon load of beer to Deepwater, and never unloaded any beer at Harve Smith's barn; that he never hauled did on or about the 17th of June, 1907, a dray load of beer to Deepwater and loaded the same at Harve Smith's barn, and that he did haul beer for George Brent, and frequently made trips to Deepwater at night. It would seem that the contention of the defendant is that, because the indictment did not allege any false evidence on the part of the defendant as to the actual illegal selling of beer or other intoxicating liquors by the said Smith and Brent, therefore the fact of the knowledge of the defendant of the receipt of large quantities of beer by the said Brent and Smith, on the part of the defendant, and of his having hauled the same to Deepwater, the place of sale, in the nighttime, and delivered the same to the said Smith and Brent, was wholly immaterial, and the circuit court took this view of the law, and held that, even if the testimony of the defendant was knowingly false and corrupt, it could not constitute perjury. We think this was a mistaken view of the law. In State v. Faulkner, 175 Mo. 546, 75 S. W. 116, we had occasion to investigate the sufficiency of a charge of perjury committed before a grand jury, and in the course of the opinion in that case we followed with approval the opinion of this court in Ward v. State, 2 Mo. 120, 22 Am. Dec. 449, wherein it is said: "It is a solemn and important duty that every citizen owes to his country to give evidence in courts of justice against offenders against the peace and good order of the community." And in the Faulkner Case we reiterated the ruling made by this court in State v. Terry, 30 Mo. 368, that perjury can be committed before a grand jury in its investigation of crime, and said: "Any knowledge or information possessed by him (the defendant in the case) concerning the existence of such fund and the purposes for which it was to be used" was immaterial to the inquiry the grand jury was then making. It was the natural and ordinary way in which the grand jury would ascertain the material facts upon which to base an indictment or to refuse to find one. It was their sworn duty to obtain the legal evidence to ascertain the witnesses by whom the charge could be substantiated, and to indorse their names on the indictment, not alone for the benefit of the prosecuting attorney, but for the protection of the person charged in the indictment in the preparation of his defense. This inquiry and the defendant's answer, taken in connection with the allegations of the indictment, discloses the materiality of the question and answer to the inquiry then being made." So in this case, in the investigation of the charge that Smith and Brent had been guilty of illegal sales of intoxicating liquors, including beer, that the same had been sold in said county outside of Clinton, the county seat—we that the defendant and Albert Kapp on the 6th of April, 1907, at the city of St. Louis, feloniously committed an assault in and upon one John F. Huppert, and by force and violence to his person did rob, steal, take, and carry away one gold-filled American Waltham watch, one gold-filled watch chain, one Royal Arcanum charm, one pocketknife, one pocketbook and 35 cents in money, all of the value of $50, from the person of the said John F. Huppert, and against his will, with the intent then and there to deprive him of the use thereof and to convert the same to their own use. The defendants were duly arraigned and pleaded not guilty, and on the 27th of May, 1908, were tried before a jury and each was found guilty, and the punishment of each assessed at imprisonment in the penitentiary for 20 years. In due time the defendants filed their motions for new trial, which were overruled, and thereupon the court reduced the punishment of the defendant King to 10 years in the penitentiary and sentenced him accordingly, and from that judgment he appeals to this court.

The testimony introduced by the state tended to show that John F. Huppert was a barber residing at 1423 Blair avenue, and working at 2219 North Broadway, in St. Louis. At about 6 o'clock on the morning of Saturday, April 6, 1907, Huppert left his home for his place of business. He was wearing at the time his gold watch and chain and charm, and carried his pocketknife, finger nail trimmer, pocketbook, and small change. At about 11:45 that night he returned home in a very bad condition; over his right eye was a deep cut as if made by a blunt instrument, his eye was swollen, his face bruised, he was bleeding profusely at the nose and mouth, and his clothes were covered with dust, dirt, and blood, and one of his pockets was torn. He was very weak from loss of blood, and was in a dazed condition, in which he remained for about 12 days, when he died. His watch and chain and the other articles named were gone, and the pocket that was torn was bloody. About 150 or 200 feet from Huppert's residence, on the route of his usual travel to and from his place of work, was an alley opening into Blair avenue. At a point in said alley, at its entrance from Blair avenue, was found, a short time after Huppert's return home that night, a pool of blood, and from this point to his home was a trail of blood. About 10 feet from the pool of blood in the alley was found a piece of his watch chain. It further appeared in evidence that at Fourteenth street and Cass avenue about one block and a half from the said alley at Blair avenue was a warehouse and wagon and coal yard, where, on the night of the said 6th day of April, 1907, a number of boys and young men, among them were night Kapp and the defendant King left their companions at that place and were gone about 20 minutes, returning just before midnight, out of breath, excited and with their clothes mussed up. Upon being asked by Niesen, one of the said party, as to what was the matter, one of them said it was none of their business, and to the same inquiry put by another companion they replied that they had held up a man on Blair avenue and got a watch off of him, and they were going out before they got arrested. Niesen testified, "They came back and said that they had a watch and thirty cents, and they had better pull out before the cops got them," and "then they said they stuck up a fellow at Blair and Cass and got thirty cents and a watch." Niesen testified that it was his impression that it was Kapp who did this talking, and Miller, another of the party, thought that it was the defendant King that did the talking. Harris testified, "I remember Kapp coming in and he said he had held up a fellow on Blair and Cass avenue for a watch." About 12 o'clock, the defendants Kapp and King being in the act of taking their leave of the party, two officers approached, and they all ran. The officers arrested four of the associates of the defendants, and recognized and called to the defendant King as he took his flight. Up to that time, the officers had not heard of the assault upon and the robbery of Huppert. The defendant Kapp on being arrested, a few days later, said that on Saturday night after 9 o'clock, he was too drunk to know where he was or what he was doing. About 5:30 o'clock in the afternoon of Sunday, the next day, William Meyers and Charles Miller met the defendant King on the street, and Meyers asked King who held up Huppert, and he replied that he and Kapp did. The defendant King requested Meyers to meet him at 7:30 o'clock that afternoon when he would give Meyers Huppert's watch, which he then had at his home, to take to Huppert and say nothing. At the appointed hour Meyers met King and received from him Huppert's watch, which he took to Huppert's house and delivered to Huppert the next morning. King also told Meyers and Miller that the hold-up occurred on Blair avenue. Mrs. Huppert, corroborated by her daughter, testified that two men giving their names as Murphy and Miller brought her husband's watch back to him at his home on Monday morning, April 8th, and they also brought $50 to Huppert, and had him sign a little note that he was mistaken in the man Miller, that Miller was not the man who held him up. The watch and chain were introduced in evidence. At the close of the evidence, the defendants moved the court to direct the jury to acquit them, but this motion was overruled, and the defendants offered no evidence.

STATE v. McAFEE.

(Supreme Court of Missouri, Division No. 2.
Nov. 24, 1908.)

HOMICIDE (§ 253*)—MURDER—EVIDENCE.

Evidence held to sustain a finding that the killing was premeditated, and that defendant was therefore guilty of murder.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 523-532; Dec. Dig. § 253.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Wayne County; Joseph J. Williams, Judge.

Charles McAfee was convicted of murder in second degree, and he appeals. Affirmed.

O. L. Munger and W. B. Kennedy, for appellant. Herbert S. Hadley, Atty. Gen., and F. G. Ferris, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

BURGESS, J. On the 25th day of January, 1908, the prosecuting attorney of Wayne county filed an information in the circuit court of said county, charging the defendant with murder in the first degree for the killing of one J. M. Boatwright, with a loaded pistol, at said county, on the 4th day of July, 1907. He was tried upon said charge on the 19th day of February, 1908, and convicted of murder in the second degree, the verdict of the jury fixing his punishment "at ten years in the penitentiary." On the same day the defendant filed motions for a new trial and in arrest of judgment, which were overruled by the court. Thereafter, on the 22d day of February, 1908, the defendant and his counsel being present, the court, in view of the informality in the verdict respecting the punishment, changed its terms so as to read "at imprisonment in the penitentiary for the term of ten years." The court thereupon rendered its judgment and passed sentence upon the defendant, from which judgment the defendant appeals.

The testimony discloses that on July 4, 1907, there was a picnic at Mill Springs, Wayne county, Mo., which was attended by a large crowd of people. Defendant was early in town that morning, and between 9 and 10 o'clock in the forenoon he appeared at a store in Mill Springs and traded his watch for a revolver. The deceased, J. M. Boatwright, was seen on the picnic grounds that forenoon, apparently somewhat under the influence of liquor, and was making inquiries for defendant, whom he said he wanted to whip. Boatwright was a short man, weighing about 165 pounds, and the defendant was about the same weight, but taller. About 1 o'clock in the afternoon, as defendant was leaning against a lemonade stand in the pic-men moved out of the crowd and into the open. There is some divergence in the testimony respecting the words which passed between the two men, and the epithets applied by each to the other, while at the lemonade stand and up to the time the fatal shot was fired. According to witness Elmer E. Boggs, who was within 10 feet of the parties at the time, he saw both come out of the crowd, each man with his hand on the other's shoulder, and heard Boatwright say to defendant that he would "go out of the crowd with him or any other son of a bitch." The defendant said, "Do I understand you to call me a son of a bitch?" Boatwright made no answer, but told defendant to take his hand out of his hip pocket and he would fight him fair. He then proceeded to take off his vest, and while in the act of doing so he was shot by the defendant with a pistol which he drew out of his right hip pocket. After the shot was fired Boatwright fell forward and grabbed at the pistol, and then fell on his back and died. This witness also testified that neither man appeared excited, but cool and self-possessed, and that at the time the fatal shot was fired they were two or three feet apart. Judge Creedy testified that he was within 10 or 15 feet of the men when the trouble commenced. He saw Boatwright motion to defendant, and heard him say: "Come out of the crowd, you damn son of a bitch; I can whip you." Defendant seemed angry, but not excited, and said, "Don't call me that any more." Boatwright then said, "I'll call you anything I want to." The defendant put his hand into his hip pocket, and Boatwright commenced pulling off his vest, saying, "I'll whip you any way, with your hand in there," and applied another ugly epithet to the defendant. Immediately the defendant fired, and Boatwright said, "You have killed me," whereat the defendant said, "If I ain't, G—d d—n you, I can do it." As soon as Boatwright was down, the defendant drew his pistol on him again with both hands, at which time witness Creedy stepped up to the defendant, and said, "Don't shoot him any more. You have already killed him; look at the blood on his shirt." To this defendant replied, "You stand back and keep your hands off of him or I'll put one in you." Several other witnesses for the state testified much to the same effect, the testimony differing somewhat as to the details, all agreeing, however, that Boatwright was in the act of taking off his vest when the defendant shot him. There was no evidence that deceased struck at the defendant or that he had any weapon. Dr. Owens, who was also an eye-witness to the shooting, and whose testimony was like to that of the other witnesses for the state, examined the body of the deceased.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes fied that this wound caused the death of the deceased.

Charles McAfee, the defendant, testifying in his own behalf, said that a week before the said Fourth of July, Sarah Baker told him that Boatwright was going to kill him on sight. He had seen Boatwright twice in the morning, but avoided him, and was told that morning at the picnic, by Sarah Baker, Alice Swann, and George Mann, that Boatwright was hunting for him. He said he was standing at the lemonade stand talking with Mr. Mann, who had just told him that Boatwright was hunting him, when Boatwright approached, grabbed him by the left arm, called him a vile name, and then said: "Come out here; I am going to kill you." To this the defendant replied: "No, sir; I don't think any of the Boatwrights can do that." He testified that Boatwright held to his arm and pulled him out of the crowd, he resisting all the time, and that as Boatwright made a movement with his hand towards the right-hand pocket of his pants he (defendant) shot him. He said that he was not able to meet Boatwright in a physical encounter, and was not his equal in size or strength. He denied that the deceased was taking his vest off when he shot him, or that deceased told him to take his hand out of his pocket, or that he said he would fight him fair. In defendant's behalf, Sarah Baker testified that about a week before said day she heard Boatwright threaten defendant's life, and that about 9 o'clock on the morning of that day Boatwright told her he was hunting defendant and that he was going to kill him, which threats she communicated to defendant that morning. She stated that she witnessed the beginning of the difficulty; that, as she was on one side of the lemonade stand, and the defendant and Boatwright on the other, Boatwright went up to the defendant, grabbed him roughly by the shoulder, addressed him in insulting language, and said that he was going to kill him. Her testimony further disclosed that there was ill feeling between the defendant and Boatwright's half-brother, Ed. Boatwright, resulting from their respective attentions to a Mrs. Swann. Rufus Tindall, in defendant's behalf, testified that in the morning of that day he met Boatwright, who inquired for the defendant, saying that he was going to give him a good whipping; that about 1 o'clock he again met Boatwright, who inquired if he had seen the defendant, and that as he made the inquiry he saw the defendant, and remarked, "What I am going to do to him will be a plenty." Tindall requested him not to get up any trouble, and Boatwright, who had a knife in his hand, whittling, at the time, said, "I just want to get to stick that much of the blade in his defendant, took him by the shoulder, and told him that he was going to give him a whipping; that he pulled the defendant along, the latter resisting, until they emerged from the crowd, when Boatwright stepped in front of defendant, and they both stopped; that defendant drew his pistol, and Boatwright seemed to be grabbing at it. Defendant fired, and Boatwright pitched forward against him. Ben Nation, witness for the defendant, testified that Boatwright took hold of defendant's shoulder, pulled him along, and said that he was going to give him a good whipping; that Boatwright was grabbing at defendant's pistol as the shot was fired, and that Boatwright's vest was on one shoulder only when he fell. Defendant introduced four witnesses who testified that Boatwright's reputation in the community was that of a quarrelsome, turbulent, and dangerous man.

While the defendant is not represented in this court, we have carefully gone through the record, and find it free from substantial error. Under the evidence, the defendant might well have been convicted of murder in the first degree. While he did not seek the quarrel with the deceased, he provided himself with a pistol in anticipation of it, and took advantage thereof to shoot the deceased, who was unarmed, and who at the time the shot was fired was in the act of taking off his vest. The deceased had not struck at the defendant, but was at the time merely preparing for a personal encounter with the defendant, whom he had threatened to whip. It is true, the deceased had applied insulting epithets to the defendant, and threatened to whip him, but there is no evidence tending to prove that the defendant was thereby aroused to a sudden heat of passion; the testimony, on the contrary, being that both men appeared to be cool and self-possessed at the time. Even after the shot was fired, and the deceased had fallen, the defendant was about to shoot again when one of the witnesses present interfered and told him to desist. Indeed, from all the evidence, it is plain that the killing was done with premeditation and deliberation, and the defendant might well count himself fortunate in escaping with so light a sentence.

The judgment is affirmed. All concur.

THOMAS v. SCOTT.

(Supreme Court of Missouri. Nov. 25, 1908.)

1. COURTS (§ 231*)—APPELLATE JURISDICTION —"CASES INVOLVING TITLE TO REAL ESTATE."

A suit to set aside a deed in the chain of title as fraudulent involves title to real estate within Const. art. 6, § 12 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 218), conferring on the Supreme Court juris-

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes.

ne
.
.
.
ic
.
e h i y w a s l

h li o

e ie

N
h lc it w ie

cl
.
d c
.
r
6
e

lr l e
h
|
o
e t h ie
r

h
t v

d ic li
-
a

that if such notice was given and filed by her attorney it was without her knowledge or authority. Again, the language of the notice itself does not declare the title, except inferentially, to be in Dora Vorhauer. This plea of the defendant is not such as should be sustained, and the point is ruled against her. The question might be different, although we do not decide it, had the case been such as called for a lis pendens. In an alienation suit, one purely for damages, there is no place for the filing of a notice of lis pendens, and it would require the express direction of plaintiff to bind her.

2. Going to the merits of the case and eliminating the question of estoppel, was the decree nisi well founded? We think so. A very large portion of plaintiff's case consists of evidence tending to show improper relations between Edward Linck and Dora Vorhauer, which may be a mere circumstance tending to show a fraudulent scheme; but, to say the least, it is of doubtful probative force under the charges in the petition. The alleged fraud perpetrated upon plaintiff, in her language, is thus stated: "I signed this deed of trust. I do not remember seeing any notes at the time. My husband told me he wanted to borrow money on a second deed of trust to pay off the first deed of trust, and borrow the money from some outside party, and that is all the satisfaction he gave me. I relied upon that promise. I don't know whether or not he paid off that building association loan. I signed that deed of trust relying upon the promise he made me." All of this is flatly denied by the husband. On cross-examination she says that there were six or seven attachments against Linck's property for as many different debts, and that she knew these debts were due when she signed the deed of trust. Plaintiff's case is made solely upon this testimony as to the alleged fraudulent representation concerning this deed of trust, the alleged improper relation of Linck and Dora Vorhauer, and testimony showing that, after the personal property was attached and sold, Linck managed the business. On the other hand, it appears that Edward C. Linck sold this second mortgage which had been executed to Frank Linck to his brother Will Linck; that after the goods were attached Will Linck sold the mortgage and notes secured thereby to Archibald McKechnie, who afterwards foreclosed and brought in the property, and several years later in August, 1899, sold to Dora Vorhauer; that, with this money from McKechnie, Will Linck, aided by his brother the property at the attachment sale; that after the sale Will Linck, Frank Linck and McKechnie, who was a friend of Will Linck, but not of Edward Linck, incorporated the Linck Wall Paper Company, and Edward Linck was hired at $9 per week to manage the business in connection with Frank Linck; that thereafter the business was run in that name, the major interest being held by Will Linck, no interest being held by Edward Linck. McKechnie collected the rents on the real property from the Linck Paper Company and other tenants for the three years or more he owned it. After the sale to Dora Vorhauer in 1900, which sale seems to have been brought about by Will Linck, she collected the rents, and was so doing at the time of this suit. Dora Vorhauer was shown to be a woman of some property. Edward C. Linck is not shown to have had any property after the attachment and sale of the stock of merchandise. Dora Linck is not shown in any way to have had any knowledge of the alleged fraudulent statements made by Edward C. Linck to his then wife, Helen Linck. Mrs. Helen Linck waits from 1895 to 1904 to sufficiently discover fraud to bring this action, and was then no doubt chafing under the sting of seeing her former husband marry the woman who had come between them. The personal conduct of Edward C. Linck and Dora Vorhauer, prior to their marriage, is not to be commended, if, indeed, their marriage, in good morals, could be commended. Yet, when all this evidence is reviewed, it strongly tends to show that Edward C. Linck was a practical bankrupt; after his stock of goods was attached, and that the subsequent transactions were legitimate and in good faith. The evidence is at least consistent upon the theory of good faith and honesty. It evidently so strikes the learned chancellor below.

Complaint is urged here that McKechnie was not placed upon the witness stand by defendant. No showing is made as to whether he was dead or alive at the date of trial. We hardly think this authorizes us to reverse this judgment. It devolved upon the plaintiff to first make a case, and, with the evidence of defendants omitted, we have serious question of there being a prima facie case for plaintiff. However, under this record we do not have to say that no case was made by her proof. Further review of the details of the case can serve no good purpose.

Upon the whole, the judgment nisi was correct, and it will be affirmed. All concur.

transportation to the point of destination of shipment and return, is, to the extent of a free return transportation, in violation of a fourteenth amendment of our federal Constitution and therefore void. McCulley v. C. & Q. Ry. (not yet officially reported) 110 W. 711. This motion for rehearing has fact been continued from time to time to wait the decision in that case. That decision will necessitate a reversal of the judgment in this case to the extent of the item of $3.10, but it does not affect the other items in the plaintiff's demand. The litigation commenced in a justice court in two separate suits. In the first suit there was but one count in the complaint filed in the justice's court; in the second there were three counts, one of which was for this item of $3.10 for return transportation. Appeals in both cases were taken to the circuit court, and when here the two suits by agreement were consolidated. There was a verdict for the plaintiff on each of the four counts, in which the damages awarded in each was separately stated, and judgment accordingly, from which the defendant railroad company appealed, the appeal being to this court because it involved the question of the constitutionality of the statute above mentioned. The judgment covering the other counts are not affected by that statute.

2. The point on which appellant chiefly relies in support of its motion for a rehearing is that in the contract under which the defendant undertook to transport the plaintiff's hogs it was expressly stipulated that in case of loss or injury to the stock the plaintiff should give defendant notice thereof in writing, the notice to be served within one day after the delivery of the stock at destination, and a failure to give such notice would bar a recovery of any claim on account of such loss or injury; and that there was no such notice given in this case. The contract which defendant produced in evidence recited that, in consideration of the reduced rate at which the defendant had taken the stock for transportation, certain special terms and conditions were agreed to, among which were that the stock was not bound to be transported or delivered within any particular time; that notice of loss or injury, if any, as above mentioned, was to be given, and failure to give the same was to be a bar to a recovery; that in case of loss the damage should be limited to $10 on a hog, etc. In the brief for appellant on which this cause was first submitted it was contended that this was a valid contract, because it was entered into by the plaintiff in consideration of the reduced rate at which the defendant received his stock for transportation. But when we looked into the contract and could find nothing to justify the assertion that there was a reduced rate, we said that the special stipulations re-original brief, that a railroad company may for a lawful consideration contract with a shipper as claimed in this case. We considered the proposition too plain to require argument or citation of authorities. But now the learned counsel in their brief on this motion say: "We had no intention, though we confess our language might be so construed, to declare it our belief that a special or reduced rate was necessary to the validity of such stipulation. Indeed, such has never been the rule in this state." We understand the proposition of the counsel now to be that no consideration is necessary to support such a contract; in other words, the railroad company may charge the full tariff rate and yet limit its common-law liability in the manner now claimed. If there is a decision in this state going to that extent, the learned counsel have not brought it to our attention.

The railroad company in making this contract did not proceed on the theory that it had the right to charge full tariff rate and at the same time limit its liability, but, on the contrary, the contract read in evidence expressly says that the shipper has agreed to it in consideration of the reduced rate. It seems to have been a printed form and, therefore, presumably the one in common use. If the railroad company had been advised that it could limit its liability in this respect without any concession on its part, it is not likely it would furnish printed forms like this to its station agents. Railroad companies are generally well advised as to their legal rights. There can be no such thing as a contract without a consideration to support it. Our law primer told us that. If, therefore, the railroad company cannot obtain this limitation on its liability, or this particular right which it now pleads in bar of the plaintiff's claim, otherwise than by contract, then it must give something to support the contract. If it is a concession that requires the shipper's consent before it becomes binding on him, then it is not binding, even though he does consent, unless he is paid for it. If, on the other hand, it is a condition that the railroad company may impose without the shipper's consent, then the law of contract has nothing to do with it; the railroad company may simply adopt it as a regulation, and the shipper is bound to accept it. If it is to be classed under the head of a reasonable regulation which the railroad company may impose without the consent of the shipper, then the railroad company may refuse to receive the shipper's live stock for transportation on any other terms, though full tariff rate be tendered. No case has hitherto fallen under our notice in which a railroad company has claimed such a power. The right on which the defendant is here insisting is either a right it has independent of contract, or one it has obtained by con-is of consequence only when there is a consideration to support it.

Now let us look at the cases cited by defendant's learned counsel and see if this court has ever held the contrary. We will find in these cases ample authority for the proposition that it is lawful for a railroad company to limit by contract its liability, or impose by a contract a condition requiring notice as claimed in this case, but we are now going to search for a case that sustains the proposition of the learned counsel that no consideration in the way of reduced rate is necessary to support such a contract.

The contract which defendant produced in evidence in this case recited that the price charged for the transportation was "at the rate of ——— tariff ——— per cwt." A shipping contract in exactly the same words in this respect was construed by this court in Kellerman v. Ry. Co., 136 Mo. 177, 84 S. W. 41, 37 S. W. 828, to mean that the price charged was the full tariff rate. The statute (section 1136, Rev. St. 1899 [Ann. St. 1906, p. 975]) requires the railroad company to print and keep posted in their stations a schedule of freight rates, and it is forbidden to charge shippers more than those rates. The highest rate that this defendant could have charged the plaintiff for that shipment was the tariff rate, and that rate covered all that the carrier could demand for the performance of all its common-law or statute duty in respect of that shipment. Therefore, when the contract shows that that was the rate charged, it was vain to recite therein that it was "less than the rate charged for shipments transported at carrier's risk." The plaintiff is not here contending that the carrier assumed anything more in the way of a risk than that embraced in the duty which the law imposes upon a railroad company in the transportation of live stock carried at the regular tariff rate.

In Kellerman v. Ry. Co., above referred to, the railroad company was seeking to limit the amount of its liability for the loss of the bull which was the subject of the transportation agreement, on the ground that the shipping contract specified that the valuation in case of loss should not exceed $50, exactly like one of the clauses in the contract in the case at bar. In that case, as in this, it was claimed by the railroad company that the stipulation as to value was made in view of the special rate charged, and it was expressed in that contract that if the shipper valued the bull at more than the value stated therein an addition of 25 per cent. would be made to the freight rate for each 100 per cent. or fraction thereof added to the value therein expressed. Yet in spite of those specifications the trial court allowed the plaintiff, over defendant's objection, to introduce evidence showing that the bull was worth $250, and the judgment was for that case discusses the law as to the power of the railroad company to limit its liability by contract, and, reviewing cases bearing on that subject, declares that whilst the company cannot contract to avoid liability for its own negligence, yet it may contract to limit its liability in the particulars in that case mentioned; but the court said: "It will be observed that in all the cases cited upon the question now under consideration there was an express agreement as to the value of the property, or its maximum value fixed at a specified amount in consideration for special or reduced rates, while no reduced or special rates were contracted for in the case at bar, nor was the value of the bull fixed at a specific sum." Then the court, after referring to other cases in this court, concludes: "Under these authorities we must hold that there was no consideration for the maximum value placed on the bull, and the contract in that respect is void." We call notice again to the fact that the recital in the contract in that case as to the freight rate charged is exactly like the recital in the case at bar—that is, "at the rate of ——— tariff ——— per cwt."—and the court said it meant the full tariff rate, and therefore there was no special or reduced rate, and therefore there was no consideration to support the contract.

In Richardson v. R. R., 149 Mo. 311, 50 S. W. 782, the shipping contract contained a stipulation for notice similar to that in the case at bar, and also a clause limiting the value of the animal shipped, and defendant relied on both defenses. The only rate specified in the contract was, as in the case at bar, tariff rate. The court, in answering the contentions of the defendant, considers the cases cited, and concedes that the railroad company may lawfully make a contract, but concludes the subject by saying: "The shipment was charged for at the regular and usual first class tariff rates used by the defendant, and no reduction thereof was made. In all cases where such limited valuations have been held to be binding, such valuations have been fixed in consideration of some special or reduced rate. In this case there has been no such special or reduced rate. This rule has been repeatedly announced in this state. McFadden v. Railroad, 92 Mo. 343, 4 S. W. 639, 1 Am. St. Rep. 721, and cases cited; Kellerman v. Railroad, 136 Mo. 177, 84 S. W. 41, 37 S. W. 828, and cases cited."

In Ward v. Ry. Co., 158 Mo. 226, 58 S. W. 28, the shipping contract contained this clause: "In consideration of the rate of tariff, which is less than the regular rate from Pittsburg, Kansas, to Kansas City, Missouri, being granted and agreed upon to apply to the shipment herein described," etc., a limited valuation of the goods was agreed on. The court, notwithstanding that recital, said:

.

1

him home on the hand car.

Such is the substance of the testimony of this witness on his examination in chief. On cross-examination further light upon the situation is given. The substance of the cross-examination is as follows: That Sissel gave his age at time of employment as 27 years, and was a man of sound health, with good sight and hearing; that when he heard the train whistle he called the attention of the men, including Sissel, to the fact; that they had their hand car off on a private road crossing, which was against the rules of the company; that he thought the whistle was from No. 15, which was a World's Fair special passenger train, as it was about due; that he then said to Brewster and Sissel, "Now I expect that is 15, and the roadmaster might be on, and we had better run our car off the crossing and save giving us a jacking-up"; that they all talked about it being 15; that Brewster and Sissel went to remove the hand car, and he never noticed them any more until the train was getting close to deceased; that both he and Poston called to deceased to "look out," but hardly thought deceased heard them; that before this they all discussed the fact that the train was coming; that it was an upgrade there, and the train was making a loud noise by making a heavy exhaust or puffing, which he heard for half a mile; that the speed of the train was, in his judgment, 30 miles per hour; that he and Poston were working between the rails, and deceased and Brewster on the outside of the rails; that as the train approached he and Poston and Brewster stepped aside, and when they did so was in position to have been seen by the engineer; that the approaching train could be seen for at least a half mile; that the train was approaching from the northeast; that the end of the pilot beam which struck deceased projected at least 12 inches over the outside of the rails; that a man working on the ends of the ties, as was deceased, was within 12 inches of safety at any time; that the sectionmen were in the habit of remaining on the track and at work until the trains were very close to them and step out of the way; that, from the conduct of deceased after his employment, witness did not think he was an experienced railroad man; that in "dressing the track," such work as they were doing that day, two men generally worked together, two in the center of the track, between the rails, and two on the outer edge and outside of the rails; that witness and Poston were working in the center, and deceased and Brewster on the outer edge, one upon each side and about 10 feet apart; that Sissel was facing toward Republic and the approaching engine when he was struck.

Brewster was a witness, and practically corroborated Eagen in all respects. He added, however, that as he and deceased return-that was coming, and that he remarked to deceased, "And she is coming some, too." That they then each returned to their work. To further detail this witness' testimony would be but to restate in substance what was said by Eagen.

Poston was likewise a witness, and his testimony agrees with that of the witness Eagen.

By witnesses Parker and Howard it was shown that they were in a buggy with a team, approaching the railroad at a crossing made by one of the streets of the city; that they observed the train, checked or turned their team to avoid a collision, that they heard no whistle or bell at that time, and that the train was running 33 or 34 miles per hour; that they did not know what might have been done at the whistling post east of Republic.

J. Ed. Ward was another and the last witness for plaintiff. By him it was shown that he was or had been an engineer in the employ of what is now the Frisco Road; that he was discharged in 1894; that in 1895 he worked in the same capacity for the Florence & Cripple Creek Railroad in Colorado, and quit of his own volition; that since then he had not run an engine, but was engaged in the paint and paper business in Republic; that it was customary for engineers to look out for persons and obstructions on the track; that it was customary for engineers to keep "a sharp lookout ahead at all times for sectionmen, bridgemen, and any other obstructions or anything of that kind, and it is the rules that a danger signal should be sounded, the bell rung, or whistle blown"; that it was a common rule to give signals to sectionmen, whether they were in danger or not. The witness does not say such a custom prevailed upon defendant's road at or about the date of accident.

On cross-examination he further said that when the engineer saw the sectionmen dispersing and getting off he would naturally conclude that all of them would do so; that whether the engineer would pay less attention to men outside of the rails would depend upon circumstances; that the fact that the men were facing the approaching engine and began to disperse was one of the circumstances that would govern the engineer in determining that there was no danger; that if a man is facing an engineer the engineer always presumes that he will get off; that witness would not consider such a man in danger—to use his language: "No, I wouldn't consider him in danger if he sees me."

The foregoing is a full synopsis of the testimony, upon which the action of the court nisi is challenged in this court.

1. It is urged that the alleged plea of contributory negligence set out in the answer is but a legal conclusion, and hence this cause is here practically upon the general denial then fail to use all proper means at their command to prevent injuring them, in consequence of which they are injured, or are injured by the willful negligence of those in charge of the train, should the defendant be held liable, and there was nothing of that kind in this case. Our conclusion is that the demurrer to the evidence interposed by defendant should have been sustained."

To the same effect is McGrath v. St. Louis Transit Co., 197 Mo. 97, 94 S. W. 872.

By plaintiff's learned counsel we are cited to Hinzeman v. Ry. Co., 199 Mo. 56, 94 S. W. 973, which case was previously reviewed by this court in 182 Mo. 611, 81 S. W. 1134. The writer has expressed no views upon the facts in the Hinzeman Case, nor is it necessary so to do in this case. The facts of the two cases are widely apart. In this case the personal knowledge of the approaching train was brought home to deceased. Not so in the Hinzeman Case. In this case the evidence conclusively shows that upon the approach of the train the sectionmen began to get off the track, and the engineer had a right to presume that they would all do so, including the deceased, especially where the facts show that he was facing the moving engine.

To our mind the facts of the case at bar not only show conclusively the contributory negligence of deceased, but fail to show negligence upon the part of defendant. This deceased was not on the track, but to the side thereof, and 12 inches from absolute safety. From danger to safety was but the act of a second's time—the taking of a short step. The engineer, if he saw anything, saw these men moving out of the way, and was justified, under these circumstances, in entertaining the presumption that at the proper instant deceased, who was facing the engine, would take the one step.

It is urged that no signals were given at the crossing to the east of the point where these parties were at work. Grant it that no bell was sounded or whistle blown at the crossing. Grant it further that such facts were material at all, which we do not grant, in this kind of a case except for the argument, yet they are unavailing where knowledge of the approaching train was shown. The only purpose of signals is to give warning of the approach of a train, but the failure to give them can work no injury where the party knew the train was fast approaching.

The judgment of the trial court is right, and should be, and is, affirmed. WOODSON, J., concurs in toto. VALLIANT, P. J., and LAMM, J., concur in the result, and in all of the opinion except what is said therein with reference to the Evans and Hinzeman Cases.

Nov. 25, 1908.)

1. EVIDENCE (§ 29*)—JUDICIAL NOTICE—PUBLIC STATUTES.

The Factory Act, Rev. St. 1890, § 6433 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 3217), imposing a liability upon certain employers for injuries to employes through failure to protect the gearing, etc., of machinery, being a public act, the courts will take judicial notice thereof though it is not pleaded.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 36, 37; Dec. Dig. § 29.*]

2. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 121*)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—FAILURE TO PROTECT MACHINERY.

At common law, a master owed no duty to his servants to guard machinery and appliances so as to prevent injury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 229; Dec. Dig. § 121.*]

3. COURTS (§ 37*)—JURISDICTION—TIME OF OBJECTING.

Questions of the jurisdiction of the subject-matter may be raised at any stage of the case, in any court, either by court or counsel.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Courts, Cent. Dig. § 143; Dec. Dig. § 37.*]

4. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 46*)—MANNER OF RAISING QUESTION—OBJECTION—SUFFICIENCY.

In order to raise a constitutional question, the particular provision of the Constitution violated must be pointed out, and a general reference to the Constitution is insufficient; and a mere demurrer to the evidence, or request for a peremptory instruction, would not raise the unconstitutionality of a statute.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. § 44; Dec. Dig. § 46.*]

5. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1068*)—HARMLESS ERROR—PREJUDICIAL EFFECT.

An instruction that nine of twelve jurors could render a verdict, even if erroneous, was harmless where the verdict rendered was unanimous.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 1068.*]

6. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 46*)—DETERMINATION OF QUESTION—NECESSITY.

The constitutionality of a statute authorizing a verdict by nine jurors is not raised, and need not be decided, in a case where the verdict was unanimous.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. § 43; Dec. Dig. § 46.*]

7. COURTS (§ 231*)—MISSOURI SUPREME COURT—CONSTITUTIONAL QUESTIONS—QUESTIONS ALREADY DECIDED.

The constitutionality of the statute authorizing a verdict by nine jurors in civil cases has been settled, and the question cannot be raised to give the Supreme Court jurisdiction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Courts, Cent. Dig. § 658; Dec. Dig. § 231.*]

8. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 43*)—PERSONS WHO MAY RAISE CONSTITUTIONAL QUESTION—WAIVER.

While in some cases a constitutional question might be raised regardless of the pleadings, by a ruling on the admission of evidence, where proper objection was made and exception saved, or even on motion for new trial where appellant had no opportunity to raise the question sooner, such questions should be raised at the earliest possible moment consistent with good pleading.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

fresh hide of a calf from Mrs. Dunn about the time the calf was alleged to have been killed, and it looked as if it had a handful of shot scattered over it. The defendant testified in his own behalf, and denied the killing of the calf. Admitted that he had a conversation with the witness Myers at his home on the farm on the evening on which the calf is alleged to have been killed, and that Myers was at his house late that afternoon. He stated that he had returned to his home from his father's about 4 o'clock in the afternoon, and went down to Turner's store for a little while, and then went over across the creek into the cornfield to get some fodder to feed his horses. He denied making the statement to the witness Myers to the effect that he had been down driving Mrs. Dunn's calves out of his field. He testified further that, if he made the statements attributed to him by Mrs. Dunn and Mr. Fitz, he had no recollection of them. Mrs. Nora Barton, the wife of the defendant, testified that after their arrival at home that afternoon the defendant was not out of her sight during the afternoon, and was not away during the night, and that the defendant did not have his gun out of the house that afternoon; that she went with him to the field, where they got the fodder and fed the team; that they did not take any gun with them, and she neither saw any calves or calf that afternoon, nor heard any shot fired. There was evidence also on the part of the defendant tending to impeach the character of Mrs. Dunn for chastity and veracity, but it would seem that the most of this unfavorable reputation had grown out of a suspicion that she had not been married to Mr. Dunn, but it further appeared that Mr. Turner had written to the recorder in St. Francois county and ascertained that the marriage certificate was duly recorded in said county. Practically all the evidence tended to show that there was no cause whatever to impeach her character after her marriage to Mr. Dunn. On the part of the state an attempt was also made to impeach the character of the defendant, but this resulted merely in showing a bad reputation for quarrelsomeness rather than for truth and veracity.

1. It was for the jury to pass upon the weight of the evidence, and this court will not disturb their finding, unless there is entire failure of proof, or the evidence on the part of the state is of such a flimsy character as to authorize the inference that the finding was the result of passion, prejudice, or mistake. That the calf was killed in the field of the appellant, and was shot with a shotgun, there is practically no dispute. There is not the least evidence tending to show that the owner herself had killed it, or any suggestion that any other person had a motive for killing the calf except the de-that he was at home on his premises that afternoon was established by his own evidence. The witness Myers testified that he heard a shot that afternoon down in the field where the calves were feeding, and soon thereafter he drove up to the defendant's house, and the defendant stated to him that he had just been down in the field driving Mrs. Dunn's calves out. It is true the defendant denies the killing of the calf, and his wife testified that he did not have the gun when he was down in the field that afternoon; but the weight of this evidence on both sides was a matter for the jury, and we think the jury were authorized, if they believe the evidence for the state, to find that the defendant killed the calf.

2. The court in its instructions, among others, gave the following: "You are further instructed that one of the defenses interposed by the defendant is what is known as an alibi, by which is meant a claim on his part that he was at another and different place than that at which the alleged crime was committed, at the time when it was in fact committed. And in that connection, you are instructed that, if you have reasonable doubt of the presence of the defendant at the time and place where said crime was committed, you will acquit him; but you are instructed that a reasonable doubt by you of the defendant having been present at the time and place where said crime was committed, to authorize you to acquit him on the ground of your having such reasonable doubt, should be a substantial doubt by you of the defendant having been present at the time and place where such crime was committed, and not a mere possibility that he may have been at another and different place than that at which said crime was committed, at the time when it was committed." The defendant complains of this instruction that it in effect tells the jury that, unless they have a reasonable doubt of the appellant having been present at the time and place where the calf was killed, they will find him guilty, without requiring them to find that a crime had been committed, or, if committed, that the appellant committed it. We think this is a hypercritical objection. While it is true, it would have been better if the court had modified the instruction with a phrase, "If such offense had been committed by any one." When all the instructions are read together, as they must be, it is plain that the court required the jury to find beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant committed the offense, and it was not an assumption that the defendant did in fact commit the offense, unless the jury could find that he was absent at the time. State v. McGinnis, 158 Mo., loc. cit. 122, 123, 59 S. W. 83; State v. Hale, 156 Mo. 102, 56 S. W. 881. We do not think that the county in which such city is located. They returned a verdict of guilty, and the judge presiding at the trial approved the verdict, hence we are unwilling, there being substantial evidence to support the verdict, to in any way disturb it.

The judgment of the trial court should be affirmed, and it is so ordered. All concur.

STATE v. GEORGE.

(Supreme Court of Missouri, Division No. 2.
Nov. 24, 1908.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1064*)—APPEAL—PRESENTATION AND RESERVATION OF ERROR—MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL.

Instructions to which the attention of the trial court was not directed in the motion for a new trial cannot be reviewed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2683; Dec. Dig. § 1064.*]

2. RAPE (§ 59*)—TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS.

An instruction, on a trial for the rape of a child under 14, that, though defendant had intercourse with prosecuting witness, yet, unless she was at the time under 14, defendant should be acquitted, did not furnish any substantial basis for complaint by defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Rape, Dec. Dig. § 59.*]

3. RAPE (§ 13*)—ELEMENTS—FORCE.

Under Rev. St. 1899, § 1837 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1271), it is not essential to the offense of the rape of a child under 14 that it be committed with force or without consent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Rape, Cent. Dig. § 12; Dec. Dig. § 13.*]

4. WITNESSES (§ 240*)—EXAMINATION—LEADING QUESTIONS—DISCRETION OF COURT.

The allowance of leading questions is largely within the discretion of the trial court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. § 795; Dec. Dig. § 240.*]

5. WITNESSES (§ 306*)—PRIVILEGE OF WITNESS—ANSWER TENDING TO DISGRACE WITNESS.

On a trial for the rape of a child under 14, prosecuting witness was properly permitted to testify, over objection by defendant that it was degrading to her, that she had sexual intercourse with defendant, and the court properly refused to instruct her that she need not testify to anything that would degrade her.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. §§ 1058, 1059; Dec. Dig. § 306.*]

6. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1056*)—APPEAL—PRESENTATION AND RESERVATION OF ERROR—EXCEPTIONS.

A failure to instruct upon all the law of the case will not be considered on appeal, where the trial court's attention was not called to the failure to so instruct at the time.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2668; Dec. Dig. § 1056.*]

7. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1159*)—APPEAL—REVIEW—QUESTIONS OF FACT.

A conviction which there is substantial evidence to support will not be disturbed on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3074-3083; Dec. Dig. § 1159.*]

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Rape, Dec. Dig. § 52.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Camden County; Argus Cox, Judge.

A. W. George was convicted of the rape of a child under 14, and he appeals. Affirmed. See, also, 207 Mo. 16, 105 S. W. 598.

This is an appeal on the part of the defendant from a judgment of the circuit court of Camden county, convicting the defendant of the offense of rape. On the 14th of January, 1905, the prosecuting attorney of Camden county filed an information, duly verified, charging the defendant with rape. The date of the alleged offense was November 16, 1904, and Ida Florence George, a female child under the age of 14 years, is alleged to have been the victim of the defendant's assault and ravishment. At the February term, 1905, the defendant was put upon his trial. The evidence upon the part of the state tended to show that the prosecutrix resided with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Mat George, on their farm some eight miles from Linn Creek, in Camden county. On the day of the commission of the alleged crime the prosecuting witness was about 13 years and 10 months old. On that day the father and mother of prosecutrix went to the town of Linn creek early in the morning, leaving prosecutrix and her younger sister, Pearl, at home. The parents did not return until about sundown. The defendant, who is the uncle of prosecutrix, came to the house and sent Pearl to the spring to get some water. Pearl was a small girl, and was not very bright. During her absence defendant took prosecutrix to the bed and had sexual intercourse with her. This was the second time defendant had sexual intercourse with prosecutrix, but she made no complaint of the former act. On the 28th of January following this last act, the prosecuting witness told her father and mother and older brother, and the defendant was arrested. Before the arrest of the defendant he had conversations with one Robert Jeffries and Arthur Smith in which the defendant clearly indicated that he was having sexual intercourse with one of Mat George's girls. The defendant took the witness stand in his own behalf, and denied ever having sexual intercourse with prosecutrix. He also denied the conversations with state's witnesses Jeffries and Smith. There were other witnesses introduced by the defendant who testified that the father of prosecutrix tried to get the defendant to pay some money to drop the case against him, and also tried to get defendant to leave the farm and leave the father of prosecutrix cultivate the same. Some of these witnesses, however, admitted that they were not on friendly terms with the father of the prosecuting witness. There was other commission of the crime charged, and that her reputation was not good. In rebuttal, the state proved by a lady witness, who was present at the birth of prosecutrix, that the prosecuting witness was born January 25, 1891. The father of prosecutrix testified, and he contradicted the statements made by witness for the defendant that he was trying to get defendant's relatives to pay him to drop the prosecution, and this witness claimed that such relatives sought him and tried to get him to accept money for that purpose.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

This is a sufficient indication of the facts developed upon which this case was submitted to the jury, and to enable us to determine the legal propositions involved in this cause. At the conclusion of the evidence the court instructed the jury, and the cause was submitted to them. The instructions upon which appellant predicates assignments of error will be given attention during the course of the opinion. The jury returned a verdict finding the defendant guilty as charged in the information, and assessed his punishment at imprisonment in the penitentiary for a term of five years. Timely motions for a new trial and in arrest of judgment were filed, and by the court overruled. Judgment and sentence was entered of record in conformity to the verdict returned, and from this judgment the defendant prosecuted this appeal, and the record is now before us for consideration.

N. B. Yandon, Barney Reed, and E. M. Carter, for appellant. Herbert S. Hadley, Atty. Gen., and N. T. Gentry, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

FOX, P. J. (after stating the facts as above). The record before us discloses numerous complaints of error on the part of the trial court which are embraced in the motion for new trial.

1. The complaint of the appellant as to the instructions given to the jury is limited to two, Nos. 3 and 4. Those are the only declarations of law to which the attention of the trial court was directed in the motion for new trial, hence they are the only declarations which are before us for review. Instructions 3 and 4 complained of were as follows: "(3) Although you may believe that the defendant had sexual intercourse with Ida Florence George, yet unless you shall further believe that at the time he did so she was under 14 years of age, the defendant should be acquitted. (4) If you believe that the defendant had sexual intercourse with Ida Florence George at a time when she was under 14 years of age and at any time before the filing of the information in this case, then it is immaterial whether she consented to the act or not, and it is also immaterial as to whether it occurred on the 16th day of November, 1904, or on some other day."

willing to say that they furnish any substantial basis for the complaint of the appellant. Instruction No. 3 was one in favor of the defendant, and specially directed the jury that it was essential, in order to find the defendant guilty, to find that the prosecuting witness at the time of the alleged commission of the offense was under 14 years of age. It certainly will not be seriously contended that this furnishes any substantial ground of complaint which would authorize the reversal of this judgment.

2. Instruction No. 4, upon which the appellant predicates another complaint, simply told the jury that if the defendant had sexual intercourse with the prosecuting witness at a time when she was under 14 years of age, and at any time before the filing of the information in this case, then it was immaterial whether she consented to the act or not; and further told the jury that it was immaterial as to whether it occurred on the 16th day of November, 1904, or some other day. In our opinion this instruction does not constitute any error. Section 1837, Rev. St. 1899 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1271), in treating of the offense with which the defendant is charged, provides: "Every person who shall be convicted of rape, either by carnally and unlawfully knowing any female child under the age of fourteen years, or by forcibly ravishing any woman of the age of fourteen years or upward, shall suffer death, or be punished by imprisonment in the penitentiary not less than five years, in the discretion of the jury." It will be observed that this section clearly points out the distinction between victims of the offense of rape. The first subdivision makes the offense complete by simple carnal and unlawful knowledge of any female child under the age of 14 years. The second subdivision makes it essential, as to any woman of the age of 14 years or upward, that the acts constituting the offense of rape shall be accomplished by force. It is clear that under the first subdivision, where the female is under the age of 14 years, it is not essential, in order to constitute the offense of rape under that subdivision, to show that it was committed with force or without the consent of the female. This court in State v. Wray, 109 Mo. 594, 19 S. W. 86, after quoting section 3480, Rev. St. 1889, which is the same as section 1837 herein quoted, expressly ruled that "carnal knowledge of a female child under fourteen years of age is rape under this statute, whether accomplished with or without force, or with or without the consent of the child." We repeat that instruction No. 4 was in perfect harmony with the provisions of the statute, as well as the rulings of this court in treating of such statute.

3. During the progress of the trial the record discloses numerous objections to the caused said deed to be put of record; that afterwards on the 30th day of November, 1900, plaintiff settled his differences with Sarah Kubey and married her; that afterwards, at divers times (without avail), he requested defendant to return said deed, he not knowing it had been recorded; and that when he found it was recorded he requested her to quitclaim the land back, but she refused to do so.

The answer admitted Rosalie holds title by virtue of the deed, but denies each and every other allegation in the petition. It next goes on to allege that she is the rightful owner of the premises; that she purchased the same for a full and valuable consideration paid by her; that the conveyance was intended to be operative in conveying the legal title. Based on such allegations, she prayed affirmative equitable relief, viz., that the court declare she is in good faith the legal and rightful owner of the premises, discharged of any equity or trust whatsoever, and for all other and proper relief.

On such paper issues the cause was tried, and the chancellor found (1) there was no consideration for the deed, and (2) there was no delivery of the deed. On these findings the decree went as prayed in the bill.

The case on appeal presents three propositions, viz.: First. Was there error, nisi, in finding no consideration for the deed? Second. Did the chancellor err in finding there was no delivery of the deed? Third. On all the facts, will a court of conscience interfere?

1. Of payment. There was testimony by plaintiff that no valid or valuable consideration passed from defendant to him. Creamer testified that way. He introduced witnesses who testified to facts pointing the same way, and strongly corroborative to the effect that in 1890 Rosalie lived in a humble way in the town of Albany, and eked out a scant living for herself and family as a washwoman; that she had no visible signs of ready money, and practically admitted to others she paid nothing. Contra, defendant put in proof on the issue of payment, in substance, that the money was paid shortly after the date of the deed partly out of Rosalie's savings as a washwoman, partly out of her savings in raising and selling chickens, a few pigs, and a cow or so each year, and partly out of money sent and brought to her by Louis, her son, who on coming to man's estate worked in Colorado in restaurants and saloons at $40 per month, and who went to Oklahoma at the opening of the territory for settlement. This money had been kept in a wardrobe in an upper chamber hid in the lining of an old fur muff, which said muff had a somewhat picturesque and variegated career. Not only was it at the start a wedding present, and presently the family mona puppy (not understanding or respecting the purpose of its appearance within his reach and runways, nor its value as a family receptacle for money) appropriated it to his own use, and when through with it, it became straightway a reminiscence, as distinguished from a fact susceptible of tangible evidence by tender in open court.

If the issue of payment or no payment is to be determined by the mere bulk of the testimony and the number of the witnesses pro and con, then defendant had the better of it, for the existence of the muff, its use in secreting treasure, the existence of the hidden treasure itself, and its appropriation in paying for the land are shown by the copious testimony of several members of the Bivert family. As against their positive testimony stands that of plaintiff himself, supported by corroborative proof of the character stated. But the justice of a cause does not alone hang or turn on the count of witnesses on the fingers, or on mere numerical weight. That (by itself) would be a crude rule for establishing a fact. The philosophy of the plan of getting at the fact, in cases of conflict in testimony, has deeper and more sure guides than such easy scheme. Here there was a maze of testimony affecting the credibility of some of the witnesses on both sides; there were currents and cross-currents in it sharply affecting the probability and the improbability of the stories told on the stand. The bulk of the testimony was oral. In such condition of things, while this court has said over and over again that the whole record must come here in equity cases, so that (sitting as the final arbiter in chancery) we may weigh and decide de novo and thus do equity, yet the court is also fond of saying that deference should be given to the trial chancellor. He sees and hears much we cannot see and hear. We well know there are things of pith that cannot be preserved in or shown by the written page of a bill of exceptions. Truth does not always stalk boldly forth naked, but modest withdrawal in a printed abstract in a court of last resort. She oft hides in nooks and crannies visible only to the mind's eye of the judge who tries the case. To him appears the furtive glance, the blush of conscious shame, the hesitation, the sincere or the flippant or sneering tone, the heat, the calmness, the yawn, the sigh, the candor or lack of it, the scant or full realization of the solemnity of an oath, the carriage and mien. The brazen face of the liar, the glibness of the schooled witness in reciting a lesson, or the itching over eagerness of the swift witness, as well as honest face of the truthful one, are alone seen by him. In short, one witness may give testimony that reads in print, here, as if falling from the lips of an angel of light, and yet not a soul who heard it, nisi, be-obscurely in print, and yet there was that about the witness that carried conviction of truth to every soul who heard him testify. Therefore, where an issue in equity rests alone on the credibility of witnesses, the upper court may with entire propriety rest somewhat on the superior advantage of the lower court in determining a fact. Therefore it is our opinion that, if there is nothing in this case but the issue of payment or no payment, we would not disturb the decree.

We are furthermore of the opinion that the issue of payment, whether found for plaintiff or defendant, is not a deciding one, but that the controlling questions are the second and third propositions. This conclusion makes it a useless task to state the evidence at large relating to payment, and brings us at once to the remaining propositions—propositions that depend upon common facts, and hence may be considered together, as they are in the next paragraph.

2. Jackson Creamer's true given name is Jacques, commonly called "Jack" by his plain Missouri neighbors, and dignified as "Jackson" for court purposes. Both parties litigant are of French birth, being born in Lorraine when that was a province of France. Neither of them can readily read or write English; both of them read and write French, we infer. Neither is shown to have any advantage of the other in intelligence. Jacques has served a term in the penitentiary for a felony, Rosalie in jail for a misdemeanor. Nor can we make out from the record that either of them stood in the relation to the other of business manager, adviser, or other fixed and settled general relation of confidence and trust. True, they were brother and sister, but their relations in that regard are not shown to put one in the vantage ground of managing or controlling the business acts and conduct of the other. Nor, under the proof, can it be justly held that her mind held mastery over his. It cannot be said in this case that theirs were "two souls with but a single thought" (or, as put by Bellinghausen in Ingomar, The Barbarian, "Zwei Seelen und ein Gedanke"), and that thought hers.

The case stands clear of any fiduciary relation, and the solicitude and jealousy with which courts of conscience watch and pry into such relation [Stitt v. Stitt, 205 Mo., loc. cit. 166, 103 S. W. 547] cannot be invoked to aid plaintiff. In 1882 or 1883 their mother deeded her home—the land in dispute—to Jacques. Her record title was somewhat cloudy. At the time of the trial Rosalie was 70 years old. He, we gather, was also old. The land was broken and thin, in 1890 worth possibly $2,000 or $2,500 with a clear title. Jacques resided on it in 1890 as a bachelor. Avoiding details, the record discloses that during that year and before he became encupiscence became much "battered in the wars of Venus," to borrow for use the figure of a distinguished judge. As a result, a child was born out of wedlock to them. Thereat he was arrested for violating the statutes denouncing open and notorious sexual immorality. Not only so, but he was sued by the woman for damages for breach of promise to marry. At that time, his sins having found him out, he was in hard lines. The evidence falling from his lips and put in by his witnesses shows beyond cavil or doubt that he feared the result of a civil suit, and, casting about him for a way out, he conceived the plan of circumventing the woman by disposing of his real estate. His first plan was to deed it to one C., who was to borrow $700 on it, turn the money over to him, and then deed the land back subject to the loan when his troubles were over, if ever. This plan miscarried because of irregularities in the title. Thereupon a new scheme was hatched, to wit, that the land should be conveyed to Rosalie, who lived in Albany three or four miles away. The testimony shows that a lawyer was consulted by one or both.

It is alleged in the bill, faintly suggested by plaintiff's proof, and denied by defendant's, that the scheme finally carried out was hers; that she induced Jacques to make the deed. But we do not find it so, nor did the court below find it that way. It was Jacques, not her, who was stung by the nettle of danger. It was his affair, not hers. His eye, not hers, was looking this way and that for the path of safety out of the brambles of trouble. His, not hers, was the first abortive plan, and undoubtedly he it was that fell upon the second plan as a dernier ressort. That she fell in with it does not alter the fact. Adam's old and discredited ruse of shifting the blame on a woman must be strongly supported by the proof to be favored in a court of justice.

While there is a divergence and conflict in the testimony on the payment of the consideration, yet there is none on the fact that the physical custody of the deed signed by Creamer, duly acknowledged and reciting the payment, was handed over to defendant either by Creamer himself, or by the attorney who wrote the deed with Creamer's consent. She retained the custody of it until the 11th day of October, 1890, when it was spread of record.

It is asserted on one side, and denied on the other, that the deed was to be recorded. We deem that issue immaterial; because, if never delivered, it never became operative as a conveyance, and, in that view of the case, its record created a cloud on plaintiff's title removable in equity. If, however, it was in truth and in fact delivered, then the title passed, and its mere record (standing alone) caused plaintiff no injury

The bill contains an allegation that the deed was "executed." Now, to speak of a deed as executed means in law that it was signed, sealed (when that is necessary), acknowledged (when that is necessary), and delivered. In a broad way, then, the bill alleges delivery. But the context is of such sort as to show the pleader did not mean it that way. He states in effect that it was not to be delivered; that plaintiff did not lose dominion over it, but that it was to be handed back to him at his request. There is testimony sustaining that averment. There is very strong testimony the other way. We are constrained to disagree with the learned chancellor in his finding that there was no delivery. We base our conclusion not only on what seems to us the great weight of the credible oral testimony on that point, but on another and controlling fact, viz., that delivery was essential to consummate the admitted fraudulent purposes of plaintiff. He started out to do that very thing, to wit, commit a fraud. What stopped him? Is it supposable in reason that a grantor who starts out to make a deed for the avowed purpose of perpetrating a fraud would (absent twinge of conscience or visible obstacle) halt midway in his career of covin and approach to and yet not do the identical thing he set out to do, to wit, consummate the fraud by passing the title to his grantee by delivering the deed? Was something doing, and yet nothing done? He either delivered that deed or else he perpetrated a fraud within a fraud, i. e., he put himself and the grantee in a fix where, when the worst came to the worst, they both could swear in a court of justice that the deed was delivered. Why should we pick the latter theory in preference to the former, and thus add contemplated perjury to the fraud?

We think it must be held there was a delivery of the deed, and this is so although it may very well be there was an understanding the title should be conveyed back when the clouds rolled by, if ever. But, observe, an agreement to convey the title back assumes the fact that the title had once passed, and that is fatal to plaintiff's theory of no delivery.

Learned counsel for plaintiff rely greatly on Bunn v. Stuart, 183 Mo. 375, 81 S. W. 1091. At first blush that case is favorable to their view. But well looked to, it is not so. We have read the opinion painstakingly. We have examined the pleadings, abstracts, and briefs preserved in the judgment roll of that case. The most to be said is that it has some features in common with the case at bar. But there were other features distinguishing that case from this. In that case an old man had made a will devising certain property, to his daughter. Becoming dis-others executed about the same time to his own children, were in the nature of a testamentary disposition of his real estate. He held all of them for several months. He then married a third wife, and, trouble subsequently arising between them, he made some provision for her, and a divorce suit was pending. The record shows that it stood practically conceded in the proofs that all the deeds in question were handed over to the respective grantees about the time of the divorce suit with the express understanding they were to be kept for the grantor and handed back to him at his request. Some of them were handed back at his request in accordance with the agreement. The grantees in such as were handed back testified to the agreement. The grantees in the deeds placed of record and not handed back did not take the witness stand and deny the agreement. While, as said, the case has some common features to the one at bar, yet the proof is different, and it was held there was no delivery. That case, therefore, does not control this one.

After the record of the deed, plaintiff married the Kuhey woman, who has since died. There is some evidence sustaining the averment in the bill that, not knowing the deed was of record, plaintiff asked to have it returned to him. There is also evidence that after the deed was recorded plaintiff demanded back a quitclaim deed, which was refused, but we deem none of these features decisive.

Finally, plaintiff must be denied relief because of public policy. He does not come into a court of equity with clean hands. He is confronted with the related maxim that where the fault is mutual the law will leave the case as it finds it ("In pari delicto, potior est conditio," etc.). There are exceptions to those maxims, but none of them avail this plaintiff. The maxim that he who comes into equity must come with clean hands is a cardinal one. It touches to the quick the dignity of a court of conscience itself. Hence, its application does not depend upon the averments of the pleadings, or the wish of counsel, but it may be invoked and applied, ex mero motu, by the court. 16 Cyc. 148. The case may well rest on this ground, if no other. Poston v. Balch, 69 Mo. 115; McNear v. Williamson, 166 Mo. 358, 86 S. W. 160; Holliway v. Holliway, 77 Mo. 392; Hobbs v. Boatright, 195 Mo. 693, 93 S. W. 934, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 906, 113 Am. St. Rep. 709. On this ground, too, defendant should be denied affirmative relief on the averments of her answer, even if those averments are sufficient to entitle her to such relief (on which question we do not pass). The parties litigant made their bed—an unclean one—let them lie in it. Equity will not make it over. She is a handmaiden to Justice day of July, 1907, the assistant circuit attorney of the city of St. Louis filed an information, duly verified, in the circuit court of said city, charging the defendant, first, with having served a term in the penitentiary for the offense of rape, and then proceeded to make the charge of taking one Florence Hamann, a female under the age of 18 years, from her father, having charge of her person, for the purpose of concubinage. August 19, 1907, the defendant was duly arraigned upon the information, and entered his plea of not guilty. The cause was then continued to the October term of said court, and on the 9th day of October, 1907, the defendant was put upon his trial. The evidence, upon the part of the state, developed at the trial tended to prove substantially the following state of facts: On the 21st day of May, 1907, Florence Hamann, a girl in short dresses, 15 years of age, was residing at 207 Douchouquette street, in the city of St. Louis, with her father, William Hamann, who had legal charge of her person. On the morning of said day, the girl Florence left her father's home in search of employment. On Chouteau avenue, in said city, while in company with two other girls, casual acquaintances, Lillie Scharfenberg and Finnie Dishbing, she met defendant, a stranger to her and to her companions. Defendant, under pretext that he could secure a position in a telephone office for her, induced Florence to go with him. He took her to a room in the Clover Leaf Hotel in said city. Arriving in the room, Florence screamed, but defendant threatened her, and put a bed against the door. He kept her in the room about two hours, during which time he had sexual intercourse with her. After leaving the Clover Leaf Hotel, defendant kept Florence in his company throughout the day. In the afternoon he secured a room for himself "and wife" at the boarding house of Mrs. Beamer, 715 South Broadway in said city, and he borrowed a bucket from Mrs. Beamer for coffee. Defendant and Florence spent the night together in said room, having sexual intercourse several times during the night. Mrs. Beamer did not know that the girl was with defendant in the room until next day. Defendant, upon his lawful relation to Florence being challenged that day by Mrs. Beamer, first asserted that the girl was his wife, and admitted that he had slept with her the preceding night. Later he admitted that Florence was not his wife, but claimed he had found her on the street, and had given her shelter at Mrs. Beamer's house as a matter of charity. He proposed to give Mrs. Beamer $50 with which to buy clothes for the girl and find her a job. Mrs. Beamer kept the girl overnight. Next afternoon defendant, in company with a young man called took Mrs. Beamer and the girl to the office of Mr. Parker, defendant's lawyer, who represented himself as a doctor. Defendant said he wished to have the girl examined to see that he had done nothing wrong with her. She was closeted there in a private office with the "doctor" for some time, during which time, according to the testimony of the girl, the "doctor" examined her and had intercourse with her. When the "doctor" came out of the private office, he said he would write a receipt for the money for Mrs. Beamer to sign. When the receipt was presented to Mrs. Beamer for her signature, she refused to sign it, for the reason that it appeared to be a written demand for the payment of money to avoid prosecution. Mrs. Beamer then went on home, and never saw Florence again until the day of the trial. Mrs. Beamer notified the police. The day before the date of the crime Mrs. Beamer had bought her said boarding house. Among the boarders whom she received from her predecessor was "Busybody," whom she summarily dismissed the night after the incident at Parker's office. After Mrs. Beamer left the police, defendant told Florence that her father had telephoned he was going to kill her, and he told the boy "Busybody" to take her out of the office. "Busybody" took her to the house of a Mr. Moore, from which place he immediately took her to defendant's stable. Shortly after they arrived at the stable, Baldwin appeared there and took her up into the stable loft, where he kept her about two days. During the two days Baldwin did not stay with her upstairs. He sent food up to her, and threatened her harm if she came downstairs. Saturday, May 24, 1907, one Anderson came to Florence at the stable, told her Baldwin had been arrested, and that she should leave. She had never before met Anderson. He took her to East St. Louis, thence to Chicago, and thence to Grand Haven, Mich., where he married her. After more than a week's absence from St. Louis, Anderson and Florence returned there. Florence admitted that on two occasions before she met defendant she had sexual intercourse in East St. Louis with a boy named Eddy. She said that her husband, Anderson, communicated to her a sexual disease. The testimony of Florence was fully corroborated by the testimony of Lillie Scharfenberg, Amelia Beamer, and her father, in so far as their connection with the facts of the case extended. It was shown by the father that he did not know of or consent to his daughter being with defendant. Court records of the trial court, copy of judgment, with sheriff's return, and certified copy of records of the Missouri penitentiary were introduced in evidence, showing that defendant was convicted of the crime of rape in the prosecuting witness, to the effect that he did not give his consent to his daughter going away with the defendant. It is sufficient to say of this objection that, even conceding that this statement was immaterial, the admission of that testimony does not constitute reversible error, and in our opinion it was not incompetent to permit the father to say that he did not consent to the acts done by the defendant.

3. It is next earnestly urged, by counsel for appellant, that the admission of the records of the St. Louis circuit court and of the warden of the Missouri penitentiary, which showed a conviction, sentence, and discharge of one William Baldwin upon a charge of rape, committed some time prior to the date alleged in the information of the taking away of the prosecuting witness for the purpose of concubinage, without identifying the defendant as being the same William Baldwin, constitutes such error as would authorize the reversal of this judgment. The defendant, while on the witness stand, admitted that he had been convicted of an offense prior to the one charged in the information; and, while it is true that he did not state what the offense was, yet this, with the records as introduced showing that a defendant, William Baldwin, was convicted and sentenced and discharged from the penitentiary for the crime of rape, in the absence of any testimony to the contrary, was sufficient to submit that question to the jury, and authorize them to find such fact against the defendant. At this age of our jurisprudence, in the administration of the laws of the state, we have reached the commendable stage that practical views must be taken in the trial of causes. Upon this trial the records were introduced showing that William Baldwin had been convicted, sentenced to the penitentiary, and discharged therefrom for the commission of the offense of rape. There was no pretense, not even a suggestion or intimation, that the defendant charged in the information now before us was not the same William Baldwin. Hence we are of the opinion that this contention is highly technical, and we are unwilling to disturb this verdict upon that ground.

4. Appellant next insists that the court committed error in giving the second instruction to the jury. This instruction substantially told the jury that, even if they should find that the prosecuting witness, Florence Hamann, was of unchaste character, and had previously had sexual intercourse with the defendant, yet that state of facts did not constitute any defense to this action or prosecution. It is sufficient to say of this instruction that, in cases of this character, it has met the approval of this court. In State v. Adams, 179 Mo. 334, 78 S. W. 588, the trial court gave a similar instruction to the one now under consideration. The jury were told easy virtue, or had previously had sexual intercourse with defendant, or had consented to go away with defendant, or that she consented to have sexual intercourse with defendant, yet none or all of these facts would constitute any defense to this prosecution. In that case all of the instructions were in judgment before this court, and the conclusion reached was that there was no reversible error in the record, and the judgment was affirmed.

Complaint is also made to the third instruction given by the court to the jury. This instruction was as follows: "By the word 'concubinage,' as used in the information and in these instructions, is meant the act or practice of a man cohabiting in sexual intercourse with a woman—a female with whom he is not married. If the jury believe and find from the evidence that the defendant, William Baldwin, did take the prosecuting witness, Florence Hamann, from her father, and that she was at the time a female under the age of 18 years, for the purpose of cohabiting with her in sexual intercourse for any length of time for more than one single act of sexual intercourse, then the defendant is guilty of the crime charged in the information. If you find that the defendant did not so take the said Florence Hamann from her father, or did not take her for the purpose or with the intent to practice sexual intercourse with her, as explained in these instructions, or if you find that said Florence Hamann was at the time 18 years of age, or over, then the defendant is not guilty of the crime charged, and you will so find." It is sufficient to say of this instruction that what was said as to the second instruction is equally applicable to this one. In State v. Adams, supra, an instruction substantially similar to instruction No. 3, given in the case at bar, met the approval of this court. We see no valid legal reason for departing from the conclusion reached in that case.

5. It is earnestly insisted that the court committed error in the giving of instruction No. 4. The complaint of error in that instruction is directed specially to the last paragraph, which is as follows: "It is not necessary that the defendant should have used any physical force in taking the said Florence Hamann away. It is sufficient in law if you find and believe from the evidence that defendant induced or persuaded the witness, Florence Hamann, to go away with him from her father's home for the purpose of having sexual intercourse with him, the defendant, William Baldwin." It is manifest that the court in this last paragraph was simply undertaking to direct the jury in respect to the nature and manner of the taking away of the prosecuting witness from her father; and, in order to fully appreciate that instruction, it must be considered in connection with the first paragraph, defendant guilty; it is not necessary that the jury should find and believe from the evidence that the defendant, William Baldwin, took said Florence Hamann, the prosecuting witness, from the immediate possession, house, or home of her father, William Hamann, but it is a sufficient taking away if the defendant took her, the said Florence Hamann, from the control and possession of her father, and took her out of the neighborhood in which she had lived prior thereto, so that her whereabouts were unknown to her father, the said William Hamann, without his consent." We are of the opinion that, when the first and second paragraphs of this instruction are read in connection with all the other instructions in the case, it does not constitute reversible error. While it may be that it would have been more in harmony with legal principles to have limited the second paragraph to an explanation of the manner of the taking away of the prosecutrix from her father, yet we are unwilling to say that the additional words used in that paragraph constitute such reversible error as would authorize this court to reverse this judgment. In State v. Johnson, supra, the first instruction on the part of the state in that case told the jury that, if the defendant's purpose in taking the prosecuting witness away was to cohabit with her for a single night, then such taking away was for the purpose of concubinage within the meaning of the statute. The court in that case, speaking through Judge Burgess, in treating of this instruction, said substantially that, admitting that the instruction is subject to the objection urged against it, and that the taking away for one act of intercourse or for one night does not come within the meaning of the statute, and does not constitute the offense charged, yet when taken in connection with the other instructions, it could not have misled the jury.

6. It is next contended that the verdict of the jury is so informal as to render it insufficient to support the judgment. We quoted the verdict in the statement of this case; and, while technically it is not in the best form, yet when the jury found the defendant guilty of habitual criminal and taking away a female for the purpose of concubinage, as charged in the information, it cannot be otherwise interpreted than that their reference to habitual criminal meant a finding of a former conviction, as charged in the information. In other words, the jury saw proper to call the charge of a former conviction, sentence, and discharge from the penitentiary "habitual criminal," and they found that he was guilty of habitual criminal and taking away a female, etc., as charged in the information. It was not essential that the jury should make a specific finding of a former conviction. It was only necessary to make such finding as would been formerly convicted, etc., as charged in the information. No one can read this verdict without reaching the conclusion that the jury found the defendant guilty of having been formerly convicted and sentenced to the penitentiary and discharged therefrom. We are unwilling to arrest this judgment, or to in any way interfere with it, on this ground.

7. Appellant insists that the court committed error by its failure to require the jury, in its instructions to them, to find that the defendant was not married to the prosecuting witness. It is true that the instructions are open to this objection. However, in our opinion, it does not constitute reversible error. There was no pretense during the progress of this trial that the defendant and the prosecuting witness were married, and all the facts developed at the trial, beyond any sort of question, show that they were not married. The defendant himself admitted to Mrs. Beamer that the prosecuting witness was not his wife. In addition to this, the defendant's own witness, Anderson, testifies that he was married to the prosecuting witness. In fact there was no issue upon the question of the defendant and the prosecuting witness being married or not married. It was practically conceded by the defendant and his counsel, and there is an entire absence of any testimony to the contrary, that the defendant and the prosecuting witness were not married. Therefore the failure of the court to require the finding of a fact which was practically admitted all through the trial we do not think constitutes such error as would authorize the reversal of this judgment.

8. Finally, it is earnestly contended, by learned counsel for appellant, that the evidence in this cause is insufficient to support the finding of the jury. Upon that question it is sufficient to say that, if the testimony on the part of the state was relied upon by the jury, it furnished ample support for the conclusions they reached. It goes without saying that, if they believed the testimony as introduced by the defendant, he was entitled to an absolute acquittal; but, at last, it is for the jury to settle this conflict. They had the witnesses before them, and a much better opportunity to judge of their credibility and the weight to be attached to their testimony than this court, and the rulings of this court are uniform that, where there is substantial testimony to support the verdict, it will not be disturbed on the ground that the testimony is conflicting. The evidence introduced upon the part of the state, showing the conduct and actions of the defendant with this girl, fully warranted the jury in finding the defendant guilty of the offense charged. Again the nature and character of this offense must not be overlooked. Judge Gantt, in State v. Knott, 207 Mo. 18, of cases, he said: "These cases all hold that the gravamen of this offense is the purpose or intent with which the enticing and abduction are done, and hence the offense, if committed at all, is complete the moment the subject of the crime is removed beyond the power and control of her parents or of others having lawful charge of her, whether any illicit intercourse ever takes place or not. Subsequent acts are only important as affording the most reliable means of forming a correct conclusion with respect to the original purpose and intent of the accused"—citing State v. Bussey, 58 Kan. 679, 50 Pac. 891.

We see no necessity for pursuing this subject further. We have carefully analyzed in detail the disclosures of the record, and have given expression to our views upon the legal propositions involved, which results in the conclusion that the judgment of the trial court in this cause should be affirmed, and it is so ordered. All concur.

THOMPSON v. KEYES-MARSHALL BROS. LIVERY CO.

(Supreme Court of Missouri, Division No. 1. Nov. 25, 1908.)

1. NEGLIGENCE (§ 119*)—PLEADING—CONSTRUCTION—ISSUES.

The rule that, when a general allegation of negligence is followed by an enumeration of specific acts of negligence, plaintiff will be confined to the negligence specifically assigned, is a general rule of construction not limited to pleading.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Negligence, Cent. Dig. §§ 200-216; Dec. Dig. § 119.*]

2. TORTS (§ 26*)—PLEADING—GENERAL AND SPECIFIC ALLEGATIONS.

Generally, a specification of particular misconduct is deemed to explain a preceding general charge of misconduct.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Torts, Dec. Dig. § 26.*]

3. PLEADING (§ 52*)—DECLARATION—SEPARATE CAUSES OF ACTION—SCOPE OF COUNTS.

A petition for negligent personal injury may charge in the same count several acts not inconsistent with each other, any or all of which might have produced the result complained of, without violating the rule prohibiting the stating of more than one cause of action in one count, and the same count may charge common-law and statutory negligence pointing to the same result.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. § 113; Dec. Dig. § 52.*]

4. PLEADING (§ 34*)—CONSTRUCTION IN GENERAL.

In construing a petition for negligent injury to determine whether plaintiff intended to charge one or two acts of negligence, a court must consider not only what the pleader intended, but what defendant had reason to understand was the issue tendered.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 66-75; Dec. Dig. § 34.*]

crow space where people are standing close

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 706.*]

6. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 706*)—DRIVING IN STREET—INJURY TO PEDESTRIAN—PLEADING CONSTRUED.

A petition sufficiently states negligence at common law as well as under an ordinance, where it alleges that plaintiff was standing at a street crossing waiting for a car when defendant's employees voluntarily and negligently ran a team of horses against her, thereby injuring her; that, violating a specified ordinance, they drove faster than a moderate gait, did not slacken the pace in approaching the crosswalk, and drove against plaintiff, in consequence of which violation of the ordinance the team was violently and negligently run against plaintiff, etc.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 706.*]

7. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 705*)—STREETS—RIGHTS OF PEDESTRIAN.

A pedestrian has the right to stand at a street crossing in waiting for a car.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 705.*]

8. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 706*)—DRIVING IN STREET—PEDESTRIAN INJURED—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

Evidence held to show that a pedestrian run over by a team while waiting on a street crossing for a car was not guilty of contributory negligence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 706.*]

9. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 706*)—REGULATION OF PUBLIC PLACES—STREETS—INJURIES—EVIDENCE.

In an action for injury to a pedestrian run over by a team, testimony that the driver did not seem to have good control of the horses was irrelevant, where plaintiff counted on the driver's voluntary fast driving.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 706.*]

10. EVIDENCE (§ 472*)—OPINIONS—MATTERS DIRECTLY IN ISSUE.

In an action for driving a team against one waiting on a street crossing for a car, it was proper to strike out of testimony of another that he saw the team coming very rapidly, and to avoid it jumped on the front end of the car instead of getting on in the usual way, the words "to avoid the team," since they constituted an opinion that the situation was dangerous, which was a question for the court or jury to decide.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 2186-2195; Dec. Dig. § 472.*]

Woodson, J., dissenting in part.

Appeal from St. Louis Circuit Court; Daniel G. Taylor, Judge.

Action by Ada Thompson against the Keyes-Marshall Bros. Livery Company. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

J. F. & R. H. Merryman, for appellant. Seddon & Holland, for respondent.

VALLIANT, P. J. Plaintiff sued for damages for personal injuries sustained by her through, as she alleged, the negligence of de-was used, for and in consideration of the erection of said buildings as aforesaid, to pay to the party of the second part the sum of $781.50." The proof shows that plaintiff paid the contractor $200 when the foundation of the house was completed, and at about the same time executed his note to the builder for the sum of $970, securing the same by deed of trust on the lot of ground upon which the building was in the course of construction, which note and deed of trust the builder immediately sold for cash, which he retained. The proof further shows that the builder, after erecting the walls of the house and partially inclosing it, abandoned his contract and left the state. After the builder abandoned his contract, plaintiff paid the sum of $614.97 in debts incurred by the builder for material used in the construction of the house and for labor done upon it. He also paid $905.15 for the completion of the structure after the contractor abandoned it. By the terms of the contract the builder agreed to complete the house on or before September 10, 1905. It was not completed until June 1, 1906, and it was agreed that the rental value of the house was $25 per month. The defense set up in the answer was that defendant was discharged from his obligation as a surety on the bond, for the reason plaintiff departed from the terms of the contract by making the payment of $200, and indirectly the one of $970, to the contractor before the completion of the building. The court, to whom the issues were submitted, ruled against this defense and found the issues for the plaintiff, assessing his damages at $993.20, and rendering judgment therefor in his favor. As there was no time agreed upon when the contract price should be paid, the builder could not demand payment of any portion of the contract price prior to the completion of the building. Coburn v. City of Hartford, 38 Conn. 290; Shanks v. Griffin, 4 B. Mon. (Ky.) 153; Thompson v. Phelan, 2 N. H. 339. Plaintiff concedes that he was not bound to pay the contract price, or any part thereof, until the building was completed, but contends that, as the contract does not prohibit the payment of the contract price before the completion of the building, he was at liberty to pay as he chose, in advance, as the work progressed, or on the completion of the building, and in these circumstances the payment made before the building was completed was not a departure from the terms of the contract. In support of this contention plaintiff's learned counsel cite the following cases: Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland v. Robertson, 136 Ala. 379, 84 South. 933; Hand Mfg. Co. v. Marks, 36 Or. 523, 52 Pac. 512, 53 Pac. 1072, 59 Pac. 549; De Mattos v. Jordan, 46 Pac. 402, 15 Wash. 378.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

Fidelity & Deposit Co. v. Robertson was a suit on a builder's bond. The contract provided for the architect, and that 10 per cent. should be reserved on all payments until the building was completed. It was held that this provision was solely for the benefit of the owner, and that the answer by his surety, in which a departure from it was pleaded as a defense to the action on the bond, was demurrable. In Hand Mfg. Co. v. Marks it was ruled that a surety on a contractor's bond was not discharged by the owner making a premature payment to the contractor, when the payment did not impair any security reserved under the contract and which would inure to the benefit of the surety. In De Mattos v. Jordan it was held: "Where a building contractor was to be paid monthly, as the work progressed, upon the supervising architect's estimate of the amount of work completed, the fact that the owner accepts an order from the contractor in favor of a materialman and agrees to pay same, on the day the estimate becomes due, paying at the time in cash, however, a small percentage of the claim to accommodate the materialman, does not constitute such a payment in advance as will release the sureties upon the contractor's bond."

27 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, p. 496, states the law to be that: "Where the contract provides, as it usually does, that the owner shall withhold a certain per cent. of the contract price until the contractor has completed the building, the failure to withhold such money will discharge the surety, not only on the ground that it is an alteration of the contract, but that it is a surrender of security agreed to be held for his benefit." In the same paragraph it is noted that in some jurisdictions the surety is not discharged by the failure to retain such reserve percentage.

Evans v. Graden, 125 Mo. 72, 28 S. W. 439, was a suit on a builder's bond. The facts were that Rider & Son entered into a written contract with George S. Park whereby Rider & Son agreed to furnish all the material and erect a building for Park for the use of Park College. Park agreed to pay Rider & Son $5,800; Rider & Son not to draw at any time "over seventy per cent. of the work done." Rider & Son gave bond to secure the performance of the contract with Graden as surety. Rider & Son abandoned the work, so that Park was compelled to complete the building himself. The amount paid Rider & Son and to complete the building exceeded the contract price $1,408. Park died, and the plaintiff, as administrator, brought suit on the bond. One of the defenses set up in the answer was that Park from time to time paid Rider & Son more than 70 per cent. of the value of the work done. In respect to this defense, Black, P. J., writing the opinion of the court, at page 77 of 125 Mo., and page 440 of 28 S. W., said: "The defendant, as a surety, has a right to stand upon the agreement that Park would not pay Rider & in a crossing on plaintiff's farm. The reach of that duty gave plaintiff a statutory right to construct a crossing and to recover from defendant the cost thereof, "together with a reasonable compensation for its time, trouble and labor, * * * together with 10 per cent. interest per annum hereon from the time of the service of process upon such corporation in such suit." Further, the statute provides: "In every such action, if the plaintiff recover judgment, here shall be taxed as costs against the defendant an attorney's fee * * * as may be a reasonable compensation for all legal services rendered for plaintiff in the case." Another remedy the statute gives the farmer whose land adjoins or is crossed by a railroad is the right to recover double damages for domestic animals belonging to him which may be injured by engines or cars operated on the railroad in consequence of the failure of the company to build and maintain legal fences, cattle guards, etc. The statute does not state in express terms that the farm owner may maintain an action for the damages he may sustain on account of any breach of duty imposed on the railroad company, and, if the statute is to be regarded as wholly penal, the proposition is incontrovertible that the remedies it affords, being penalties, are exclusive, and the cause of action here asserted must fail, since it does not fall within the scope of the statute.

In an action against a railroad company for damages to animals resulting from a failure to fence, brought when the statute only authorized the recovery of single damages, the Supreme Court held that the statute should be regarded as a police regulation, and therefore penal. Gorman v. Railroad, 26 Mo. 450, 72 Am. Dec. 220. In Barnett v. Railroad, 68 Mo., loc. cit. 62, 30 Am. Rep. 773, the Supreme Court said: "The statute under consideration is unquestionably a penal statute. It was so regarded by this court in the case of Gorman v. Railroad, 26 Mo. 450, 72 Am. Dec. 220, when single damages only were recoverable under its provisions. In Trice v. H. & St. J. Railroad, 49 Mo. 440, it was said: 'While the protection of adjacent proprietors is an incidental object of the statute, its main and leading one is the protection of the traveling public. To insure such protection railroads are imperatively required to fence their tracks, and the penal liability deemed necessary to enforce this requirement is a matter of legislative discretion.' * * * Being a penal statute, in the absence of any constitutional restriction, the Legislature may lawfully make such disposition of the penalty imposed by it as will, in its discretion, best serve the purpose of the enactment. Instead of giving the whole of the penalty to the state, or the county, or dividing the penal-aggrieved, and the method adopted is doubtless a most efficient one for enforcing the statute." Judge Black voiced the same opinion in Perkins v. Railway, 103 Mo., loc. cit. 57, 15 S. W. 322, 11 L. R. A. 426, saying: "Our statute giving the owner double damages for stock killed, where a railroad is not fenced as required by law, has been upheld in several cases on the ground that the law is a police regulation, and designed not only to protect the owners of the stock, but also the traveling public, and that the Legislature might impose a penalty for a violation of the law and give the penalty to the owner of the stock killed. * * * The statute in question is as much a police regulation as is the double damage section, and the attorney's fee may be lawfully imposed as a penalty for the violation of the law. It is a penalty allowed in all cases of a class, and the objection that the law is special legislation is not well taken."

Afterward the Supreme Court, following the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States in Railroad v. Ellis, 165 U. S. 150, 17 Sup. Ct. 255, 41 L. Ed. 686, held the provision allowing the recovery by the plaintiff of an attorney's fee unconstitutional. Paddock v. Railway, 155 Mo. 524, 56 S. W. 433. But this ruling was placed on the ground that a penalty could not be inflicted on one class of litigants and not others, and is wholly foreign to the question of whether the remedies provided for breaches of the duties imposed by the statute are penal or otherwise. It is one thing to penalize a man for failing to perform a duty imposed on him by law, and quite another thing to punish him for unsuccessfully defending a suit prosecuted against him. The St. Louis Court of Appeals, in Sheridan v. Railway, 56 Mo. App., loc. cit. 71, in a farm crossing case, held that the action is maintainable, saying: "The statute imposed on the defendant this duty, and, if it failed to perform it, the plaintiff had the right under the statute to construct the crossing and sue and recover from the defendant its cost. Section 2611, Rev. St. 1889, now section 1105, Rev. St. 1899 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 945). But this statutory remedy is not exclusive, and it has been so held both by this court and the Supreme Court." The decision of the Supreme Court referred to was Baker v. Railroad, 57 Mo. 285; but in that case the failure to construct the crossing constituted a breach of a contractual obligation of the railroad company to the landowner, and it was held that the owner might have sued for specific performance of the contract, for damages on account of its breach, or might have put in the crossing himself and compelled the defendant to reimburse him—an entirely different question from that decided in the Sheridan Case. Recently, in Mangold v. Railway, 116 Mo. App. 606, 92 S. W. 753, an action for damages resulting from a breach of the duty to fence, that the statute is penal, must be strictly construed, and, as it "states the responsibility of the company, we think it must be limited to the particulars enumerated."

These apparently conflicting decisions may be harmonized only on one theory, viz., that in enacting the statute the Legislature intended there should be a radical difference in nature between the duty to fence and that of constructing farm crossings. The fact that the obligation to fence has for its main object the protection of the traveling public, while that to construct and maintain a farm crossing inures to the sole benefit of the farm owner, would appear to afford a plausible reason for saying that a statutory cause of action arising from a breach of the first of these obligations is penal in character, since it belongs to a person not a member of the class whose protection was the main purpose of the enactment, while a cause predicated on a violation of the obligation to construct a farm crossing belongs to the person for whose benefit the statute was enacted, and is purely compensatory. In this view, the statutory remedies are exclusive in the first-mentioned class of cases, but not in the second, since the breach of the duty imposed either by the common law or by provision of the statute not intended to be penal would support an action for damages, regardless of whether such remedy was expressly mentioned in the statute. In such cases statutory remedies are merely cumulative, and not exclusive. Such, evidently, was the conclusion reached by this court in Quantock v. Railway, 117 Mo. App. 469, 74 S. W. 1034, and by the Supreme Court in the same case, 197 Mo. 93, 94 S. W. 978. In that case, the question we now are called on to decide was not discussed by either court, but its solution was necessary to the decision rendered by both courts; and, as the conclusion reached by them must have agreed with that we have just expressed, we must pronounce it sound, for the reason, if for no other, that it is the last expression of the Supreme Court on this subject. Consequently we hold that plaintiff is entitled to maintain an action for damages resulting from defendant's failure to put in the crossing.

There is nothing in the suggestion that plaintiff necessarily received compensation for the damages he now would recover in the award given him in the condemnation suit, by which defendant acquired a right of way over his land. To the contrary, we must assume that, since the statute required defendant to give plaintiff a crossing, the court, acting in the belief that the duty would be performed, allowed plaintiff com-charged. We have carefully examined the other points presented by defendant for a reversal of the judgment, and find no merit in any of them.

The judgment is affirmed.

BROADDUS, P. J., concurs. ELLISON, J. concurs in the result.

CITY OF MACON ex rel. QUINCY NAT. BANK v. JAEGER.

(Kansas City Court of Appeals. Missouri. Nov. 16, 1908. Rehearing Denied Dec. 7, 1908.)

1. EXCEPTIONS, BILL OF (§ 6*)—REQUISITES.

The matters of exception, which must be stated in a bill of exceptions, are the proceedings at the trial, the result thereof, the action of the court on the motion for new trial, etc.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Exceptions, Bill of, Cent. Dig. § 8; Dec. Dig. § 6.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 281*)—RECORD—QUESTIONS REVIEWABLE.

Without a motion for new trial, only errors appearing on the record proper will be reviewed on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 1650-1661; Dec. Dig. § 281.*]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 502*)—RECORD.

Where the motion for new trial was noted in the bill of exceptions, but the record proper does not show that it was filed, it will not be considered on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 502.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Macon County. Nat. M. Shelton, Judge.

Action by the City of Macon, on the relation of the Quincy National Bank, against Joseph Jaeger. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

R. S. Matthews & Son and R. W. Barrow, for appellant. Guthrie & Franklin, for respondent.

ELLISON, J. This action was brought on a special tax bill issued by a city of the third class for street improvements in such city. The judgment in the trial court sustained the tax bill, and defendant appealed.

Relator asks that the judgment be affirmed on the ground that the record, as preserved in the abstract, does not preserve any error in the trial. An examination of the abstract discloses a record proper in which appears the petition and answer. Then follow matters of exception which must be set forth in a bill of exceptions. These are the proceedings at the trial, the result thereof, the action of the court on the motion for new trial, etc. Here the motion for new trial is noted in the bill of exceptions; but the record proper, as distinguished from the bill of exceptions, does not show that such motion was sense when he was hurt. He had left the car in a leap he considered necessary to escape harm, and broke his leg when he struck the ground. Clearly, too, the injury was sustained while he was getting off the car, or, rather, after he was off. The argument is that, in framing the contract for insurance with those provisos, the parties did not intend to excuse the company from liability for a hurt inflicted in leaving a car to escape violent injury or death, but only to excuse it if the insured was hurt when he was not riding as a passenger and securely in or upon a car. An attempt is made to bring this case within the rule of law which will not permit a plaintiff to be charged with contributory negligence when he hurts himself in an effort to escape sudden peril; but that principle has no application, because contract law must control the decision, not the law of torts. Overbeck v. Ins. Co., 94 Mo. App. 453, 457, 68 S. W. 236; Hull v. Acc. Ass'n, 41 Minn. 231, 42 N. W. 936; Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Snowden, 45 Neb. 249, 63 N. W. 392; Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Randolph, 78 Fed. 754, 24 C. C. A. 305. The inquiry relates to the meaning of the contract as indicated by its language, read in connection with the purpose for which it was written. Respondent was insured as a commercial traveler in the class of selected risks, and no doubt his purpose was to provide for indemnity in case he was injured or killed accidentally in trips over his territory. The policy should be interpreted so as to extend its protection over as wide a field of accidental injury as is consistent with its language, but its natural meaning must not be violated. If the effect of an insurance contract is clear, it must be enforced as written, without adding an increased liability by construction; but as its terms are prescribed by the company, if they are of doubtful meaning, they will be construed most strongly against the company. Schoonmaker v. Hoyt, 148 N. Y. 431, 42 N. E. 1059; Janneck v. Ins. Co., 162 N. Y. 574, 57 N. E. 182; Carr v. Ins. Co., 100 Mo. App. 602, 75 S. W. 180. We think the language of the policy in suit admits of no doubt in respect of the company's duty to pay double indemnity. Respondent was not in or upon the car when hurt, but was getting off—the two contingencies which the contract said should exempt the company from double indemnity. How can it be said it was not the intention to allow single indemnity only, if he was hurt in jumping from a car in a perilous emergency, when no such contingency is mentioned in favor of the insured? The policy does not undertake to state under what circumstances the party must be off the car, or in the act of getting off, to exclude double indemnity. If it enumerated certain circumstances, probably an injury received while off the car, or getting off under other double indemnity would be paid only in case the insured was hurt while riding as a passenger in or upon a car, and single indemnity if he was hurt while off or getting off or on. We can see nothing ambiguous in the language used. The argument is put forward that, if the car was in flames, the insured would have to stay on it and be burnt to death or lose the right to double indemnity if he was in some way hurt in escaping from the conflagration. All insurance risks are taken by companies on the theory that human nature will prompt a man to do all he can in crises to avoid injury, and that the insuring company will get the benefit of this instinct of self-preservation. The sum of the matter in the present case is that appellant was willing to take the chance of double liability from accidents occurring while respondent was on a car; and, if he preferred to take the chance of injury or death in jumping off, he was bound to do so at his own hazard, and not the company's. In other words, the contract is so drawn as to exempt the company from double liability if the insured happens to be off a car, or getting off when hurt, no matter for what reason, and the company is entitled to the benefit of the exemption.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Index.

We have studied all the cases cited for either side, but do not care to review them, and will merely note them for the reader to look into if he wishes. The following involve policies whose terms were almost identical with those of the policy at bar, and in which companies were exonerated from accidents occurring under similar circumstances: Van Bokkelen v. Ins. Co., 84 App. Div. 399, 54 N. Y. Supp. 307; Anable v. Ins. Co., 73 N. J. Law, 320, 63 Atl. 92; Smith v. Ins. Co., 115 Iowa, 217, 88 N. W. 368, 56 L. R. A. 271, 91 Am. St. Rep. 153; Ætna Ins. Co. v. Vandecar, 86 Fed. 282, 80 C. C. A. 48; Miller v. Ins. Co., 39 Minn. 548, 40 N. W. 839; Hull v. Ins. Co., 41 Minn. 231, 42 N. W. 936; Huston v. Ins. Co., 66 Ohio St. 246, 64 N. E. 123; Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Snowden, 45 Neb. 249, 63 N. W. 392; Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Brookover, 71 Ark. 123, 71 S. W. 246. These cases are supposed to favor respondent's position, and perhaps they do in some measure. Northrup's Adm'r v. Ins. Co., 43 N. Y. 516, 3 Am. Rep. 724; Tooley v. Assur. Co., 3 Bliss. 399, Fed. Cas. No. 14,098. The cases of Insurance Company v. Muir, 126 Fed. 926, 61 C. C. A. 456, and Fidelity & Casualty Co. v. Morrison, 129 Ill. App. 360, do not help him. In the Muir case the policy provided for double indemnity if the insured was injured while riding as a passenger "in or on a public conveyance provided by a carrier of passengers and propelled by steam," etc. The insured went on the platform to vomit, and was thrown from it and killed. The court decided the double indemnity clause covered injuries received while the insured was on veyance propelled by steam," etc. Morrison fell from an elevated train in the suburbs of Chicago and was killed. The opinion reasoned on the facts, and concluded they proved that when Morrison fell off, one of his feet was on the step of the car, his other foot had been raised from the station platform, and he was holding by the handrail of the car; hence the court held he was actually on the car as a passenger.

The judgment is reversed and the cause remanded, with directions to the court to set aside the judgment for double indemnity and enter judgment for single. All concur.

THOMPSON et al. v. MISSOURI PAC. RY. CO.

(Kansas City Court of Appeals. Missouri. Nov. 16, 1908. Rehearing Denied Dec. 7, 1908.)

ATTORNEY AND CLIENT (§ 101*)—SCOPE OF EMPLOYMENT.

Plaintiffs, nonresident attorneys, hired a resident firm of lawyers to conduct a suit to judgment for part of plaintiffs' contingent fee. The resident attorneys and the parties to the action made a settlement, agreeing upon a judgment and that defendant should pay the sum to the clerk of court, which it did. Held, that the resident attorneys acted within the scope of their employment in effecting the settlement, and plaintiffs could not subsequently enforce against defendants their lien for the contingent fee.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Attorney and Client, Cent. Dig. § 209; Dec. Dig. § 101.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Buchanan County; C. A. Mosman, Judge.

Action by G. M. Thompson and others against the Missouri Pacific Railway Company. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Martin L. Clardy and Ben J. Woodson, for appellant. J. W. Boyd and Thompson & Thompson, for respondents.

ELLISON, J. The plaintiffs are attorneys at law. They claim a lien on a judgment in favor of their client rendered against the defendant for $2,500. This action was brought to enforce the lien. It was sustained in the trial court, and defendant has brought the case here.

It appears that one Gordon L. Rowe, an unmarried man, was killed in the state of Nebraska through the negligence of the defendant, and that his mother, who was appointed his legal representative, employed the plaintiffs, who resided in this state, to prosecute an action for damages in the courts of Nebraska, agreeing to pay them, as compensation for their services, 40 per cent. of the sum which might be recovered. The laws of to "secure all evidence in the case," and had him agree to pay one-half of all expenses of the suit, and that he should receive therefor 20 per cent. of the amount recovered; that is to say, one-half of what they were to get from Mrs. Rowe. Plaintiffs then also themselves employed Pitzer & Hayward, a firm of attorneys in Nebraska, to assist them in instituting and conducting the suit to final judgment. For the services of this firm plaintiffs were to pay them 12½ per cent. of the amount recovered. Both these contracts were in writing, and it will be seen that plaintiffs contracted away, for assistance, the far greater part of what they were to get for their services. But of this we need not be concerned, nor, in view of the conclusion at which we have arrived, need we take further notice of the plaintiffs' contract with Holmes. When the case was about to come up in the Nebraska court for trial, Mrs. Rowe, the plaintiff in that case, asked these plaintiffs to go there to take part. They could not do so—whether because they felt that Pitzer & Hayward were on the ground and could do all that was necessary need not be inquired. Mrs. Rowe was there. It was there agreed by the attorneys for the defendant railway and Mrs. Rowe and Pitzer & Hayward that judgment should be rendered against the railway for $2,500 and costs, and that defendant should pay the judgment to the clerk of the court, which it did. The costs being $134.25, the total sum paid in satisfaction of the judgment was $2,634.25. The manner in which this was paid out by the clerk is not clear. It seems from Mrs. Rowe's testimony that she only received, as the plaintiff, $1,500, which would be the judgment, less 40 per cent., which was originally agreed upon to be paid to these plaintiffs, and which they afterwards agreed to share up with Holmes and Pitzer & Hayward, as already stated. It is a fair inference from the record that Holmes received what was to be paid to him, and so did Pitzer & Hayward. At least they appear to be satisfied.

But, however unsatisfactory the record may be as to the distribution of the amount of the judgment, it will not affect our conclusions on the case, drawn from undisputed matters, most of them conceded. They are that Pitzer & Hayward were employed by these plaintiffs to represent them in prosecuting the case. The wording of the employment is to "assist" them. But in fact they acted for them and were their agents. As such agents they could bind plaintiffs as to what they did in so far as the scope of their agency would permit. The judgment was agreed upon in a fair and open settlement tion; assigning, also, error in an instruction for plaintiff, which permitted a recovery if the jury believed the speed of the car was higher than was prudent under the circumstances, and believed, further, the excessive speed "contributed to and was the direct cause of the collision." Other complaints are that plaintiff was permitted to prove his leg had been shortened by the fracture, when this fact was not alleged for special damages, and that the court permitted two witnesses who did not qualify as experts to testify regarding the speed of the car. The accident happened near the north end of the Twelfth Street Bridge, a structure 27 feet wide and 1,200 feet long, which rises above and extends over various steam railroad tracks. The transit company operates cars over this bridge on two tracks, of which the west is used by south-bound cars and the east by north-bound. The bridge is built, in the main, of timbers, but with iron trusses. The surface of the bridge is level most of its length, but descends in a gentle slope from a point 250 feet south of its northern terminus to the street. Plaintiff was employed by the Obert Brewing Company as driver of a wagon. About daybreak he drove on the bridge at its southern end, near Gratiot street, and thence followed the east track northward until he was close to the north end, when the car overtook him, struck the rear wheel of the wagon, and knocked him from the wagon seat to the street, where he lay unconscious. The roadbed or driveway of the bridge is about 19 feet 3 inches wide. On either side is a space 2 feet 4 inches wide from the sidewalk to the first rail of the car track; the intermediate space being taken up by the two tracks, each 4 feet 10 inches wide, with a space between them of the same width. A person could hardly drive across the bridge without proceeding on one track or the other, plaintiff said, and he was traveling along the east track, the one on which cars ran northward, the way he was going. By driving on this track he avoided meeting north-bound cars, as he would have done had he used the west track.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

1. Plaintiff swore that when he drove on the bridge at Gratiot street he looked and listened for cars, and neither heard nor saw any, again looked some 200 feet from where the collision occurred, and was listening all the time, but never heard the rumble of a car, or the sound of a warning gong. Some witnesses who were on the car testified they heard no warning given, though one of them swore he stepped to the front door of the car just prior to the collision and saw plaintiff's wagon plainly visible ahead. Witnesses testified the speed of the car at the time of the collision was 30 miles an hour, and that the motorman, besides giving no warning, did not slacken speed after he must have seen a collision was impending. We discern either on the theory of lack of negligence on the part of defendant or concurrence of negligence on the part of plaintiff. The speed at which the car was running was excessive, if some testimony is to be believed, and there was neglect in not warning plaintiff of the car's approach, if other is to be believed. These are the acts of negligence on which a recovery was submitted. According to plaintiff's statements, he used care both in looking and listening, but nevertheless failed to detect the car's approach. His not hearing its rumble is accounted for by the noise of trains and engines switching on the tracks under the bridge, and drowning the sound of the trolley car as it came up behind. It is contended for defendant that plaintiff was in a mood of abstraction when he should have been attentive, as there was noise below which rendered it difficult to hear an approaching trolley car. The testimony of plaintiff shows he was on the watch, had looked twice to the rear for a car, and had listened constantly. He might have heard the bell if it had been rung to warn him, even though he did not hear the rumble of the car, a sound which would be confused more readily with the rumble of trains below than would the clang of the gong. In our opinion these matters were all for the jury on conflicting testimony. The cases of McGaughey v. Transit Co. 179 Mo. 583, 79 S. W. 461, and Theobald v. Transit Co., 191 Mo. 395, 90 S. W. 354, cited for defendant, are not in point. We are familiar with those cases, but do not care to digest their facts in this opinion, and will say simply the plaintiffs were nonsuited for special circumstances which do not appear in the present case.

2. The instruction of which complaint is made on the authority of Hof v. Transit Co. (decided by the Supreme Court, but not yet officially reported) 111 S. W. 1166, falls outside the principle of said decision. The instruction condemned in the Hof Case allowed a verdict for the plaintiff if the defendant's negligence directly "contributed to cause the collision"; whereas the present instruction required the jury to find the negligence of defendant, as specified, not only contributed to the collision, but was the direct cause of it. This instruction, and several given for defendant, told the jury plaintiff could not recover unless they found he was in the exercise of due care at the time of the collision. The thirteenth charge for defendant said, if plaintiff's negligence in any degree directly contributed to cause his injury, he could not recover, and the verdict must be for defendant. A finding for plaintiff was excluded if his own negligence contributed to cause his injury, and he was entitled to recover if defendant's negligence directly contributed to and caused it, though some adventitious fact, not constituting negligence of plaintiff, may have had something to do with the accident.

1. TENANCY IN COMMON (§ 28*)—OUSTING CO-TENANT—ACCOUNTING.

A tenant in common ousting his co-tenants must account to them for their share of the rents and profits, whether the premises are occupied by him or his lessee.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Tenancy in Common, Cent. Dig. §§ 76-88; Dec. Dig. § 28.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 501*)—RECORD—PRESENTATION AND RESERVATION OF GROUNDS OF REVIEW.

The question of propriety in striking out items pleaded as set-off is not reviewable; the bill of exceptions not containing the motion or any exception to the ruling.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 2801; Dec. Dig. § 501.*]

3. TENANCY IN COMMON (§ 30*) — MUTUAL RIGHTS—TAXES.

Taxes paid by a tenant in common may be set off by her, when required to account for rents and profits to co-tenants, though paid after she ousted them and while asserting title adverse to them.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Tenancy in Common, Cent. Dig. § 96; Dec. Dig. § 30.*]

4. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS (§ 51*)—ACTIONS BETWEEN CO-TENANTS—ACCOUNTING.

Where a tenant in common ousts her co-tenants under a claim of superior right, their causes of action for an accounting for rents accrue, and the statute commences to run, as to each installment when it is payable.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, Cent. Dig. §§ 280-284; Dec. Dig. § 51.*]

5. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS (§ 51*)—OUSTER OF CO-TENANTS—CONTRIBUTION FOR TAXES.

The right of a tenant in common to contribution from her co-tenants for taxes paid by her on the common lands, after she ousted them, under a claim of superior title, accrues, and the statute commences to run from the time of each payment; so that she cannot set off those made more than five years before their action against her for an accounting for rents and profits.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, Cent. Dig. §§ 280-284; Dec. Dig. § 51.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Greene County; Jas. T. Neville, Judge.

Suit by Maude L. Starks and others against Lizzie Kirchgraber. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs appeal. Reversed and remanded.

O. T. Hamlin, for appellants. Wright Bros. & Blair, for respondent.

NORTONI, J. This is a suit in equity for an accounting of rents and profits. Plaintiffs, who are tenants in common with the defendant of a certain parcel of land, filed their bill in the circuit court calling upon the defendant to account to them for rents and profits accrued by the act of defendant in renting the common estate to a stranger. Upon a hearing the court found the issues for the defendant, and the plaintiffs appeal. The several plaintiffs and defendant were adjacent to the city of Springfield, Mo. The plaintiffs owned four-sixths of the land and the defendant owned two-sixths thereof. The defendant set up a claim to the entire estate, denied the rights of the plaintiffs as tenants in common with her, and caused them to be forcibly ousted from the common estate on the 1st day of April, 1899. On the same day the defendant rented the premises to a tenant, and installed him in possession. The defendant retained possession of the premises through her tenant for a period of six years and seven months, and until about the 1st day of November, 1905. After having been ousted, plaintiffs instituted a proceeding under the statute against the defendant to quiet title, as a result of which their rights in the premises were reinstated by a decision of the Supreme Court in 1905. See Stark v. Kirchgraber, 186 Mo. 633, 85 S. W. 868, 105 Am. St. Rep. 629. The law with respect to the rights of tenants in common is well settled in this state to the effect that if one tenant in common occupies the whole estate without any claim on the part of the co-tenants to be admitted into possession, and without hindrance to him of such possession, the occupying tenant is not liable to his co-tenants in an action of account. The reasoning of the law in respect of this proposition is stated in the following language by Judge Scott in Ragan v. McCoy, 29 Mo. 356-367: "Each tenant is entitled to the possession, and may enter and enjoy if he will. As each tenant is entitled to his share of every part of the undivided premises, one tenant cannot gain an exclusive right to any part of them. He may enter and enjoy a portion less than his share, yet the other tenants will be entitled to their share of that portion, as each tenant is seised of his portion of every part of the undivided premises; so that, if the law were otherwise, one tenant might refuse to enter, and the other could not enjoy any portion, even one less than his share, without making himself liable to the others for a share of the profits, and that without regard to the fact whether the occupation was beneficial or otherwise to the premises. Of course, if one co-tenant ousts another, he will be liable in an ejectment, or subject himself to the law of forcible entries. But where the land is free to all, and each may enter if he will and enjoy his rights undisturbed, there is no reason in compelling him who does enter to pay rent to him who neglects or obstinately refuses to do so."

However this may be, where one of the tenants in common ousts his co-tenants, as in this case, he may be held to account to them for their proportionate share of the rents and profits of the estate, and in such cases it is immaterial whether the premises were oc-

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

1. LANDLORD AND TENANT (§ 277*)—LEASE—BREACH OF CONDITION—FORFEITURE—MODE.

While the usual mode of enforcing forfeiture of a lease is by re-entry, either by an action of unlawful detainer or ejectment, any act of the lessor, which unequivocally manifests his intention to claim the forfeiture and demand possession, is equivalent to a re-entry.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Cent. Dig. § 1178; Dec. Dig. § 277.*]

2. LANDLORD AND TENANT (§ 103*)—BREACH OF LEASE—FORFEITURE—RE-ENTRY.

A lease required a tenant to reimburse the landlord for increased insurance premiums because of the hazardous nature of the tenant's business, and declared that any violation of its covenants should work a forfeiture if the lessor declared the forfeiture by notice in writing. The lessor, having been compelled to sue for such increased premiums, gave the tenant notice of his election to declare a forfeiture and to surrender the premises. Held, that such notice terminated the lease, and was a complete defense to the lessee's liability for rent after a surrender of the premises.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Cent. Dig. § 341; Dec. Dig. § 103.*]

3. LANDLORD AND TENANT (§ 112*)—FORFEITURE—NOTICE—WAIVER.

A landlord served notice of forfeiture under a lease providing for double rent after such notice. The tenant vacated the premises as soon as he could procure another building. He considered himself liable for double rent after notice, but excused his failure to pay more than regular rent for three months after such notice until an indebtedness he claimed against the lessor was adjusted. Held insufficient to show that both lessor and lessee had elected to waive the declaration of forfeiture and to continue the term.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Cent. Dig. §§ 343-349; Dec. Dig. § 112.*]

Appeal from St. Louis Circuit Court; Daniel D. Fisher, Judge.

Action by Nathaniel Baxter, Jr., against Morris A. Heilmann, Jr. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Vernon W. Knapp and Thomas J. Rowe, for appellant. Edwin Lee and Jos. S. McIntyre, for respondent.

GOODE, J. On July 20, 1902, plaintiff leased to defendant a building at the southwest corner of Lucas avenue and Seventh street, in the city of St. Louis, for a term of five years, to commence on said date, and at a yearly rental of $4,000, payable in monthly installments of $333.33½, in advance, for which defendant executed his 60 promissory notes under date of July 11, 1902, falling due on successive months thereafter. The notes contained this clause: "Subject to and in accordance with the provisions of the lease this day made for the leasehold at the corner of Seventh and Lucas." Defendant took possession of the March 19, 1904, and refused to pay the subsequent rent notes as they matured. The present action is on the note which fell due May 20, 1904, more than two months after defendant had vacated the premises. He contends plaintiff had declared a forfeiture of the lease, and therefore he (defendant) was forced to abandon the premises, and rightly refused to pay rent. One clause of the lease provided that, if the insurance companies carrying policies on the building should charge increased premiums because the character of the business defendant conducted increased the risk of fire, the excess of premiums plaintiff was compelled to pay should be refunded by defendant. Plaintiff demanded reimbursement of increased premiums paid for the two years, from July 20, 1902, to July 20, 1904, and on defendant's refusal to reimburse him, suit was instituted to recover the amount of the excess plaintiff paid in consequence of the increased fire hazard due to defendant's business. These actions resulted in judgments for plaintiff for several hundred dollars, being the amount of premiums paid by him for insurance in excess of what would have been charged had not defendant's business increased the risk of a fire loss on the building. The lease contained a provision that any violation of its covenants or agreements by defendant, or those under him, should work a forfeiture of the lease, if the lessor declared a forfeiture by notice in writing, delivered to the lessee, and that the lessee should pay double rent for every day he occupied the premises after the lease was forfeited. On November 7, 1903, plaintiff notified defendant in writing the lease was forfeited because plaintiff had determined defendant had violated a covenant by refusing to repay plaintiff the excess of premiums paid by the latter for insurance, in consequence of defendant's business. The notice said defendant, by refusing to pay the premiums, had produced and worked a forfeiture of the lease; that the lessor declared the same canceled and forfeited, notified defendant of the termination of his tenancy, and demanded he forthwith vacate the premises and surrender and deliver up the same to plaintiff with all their appurtenances. On receipt of this notice defendant began to arrange for other quarters, and subsequently rented store rooms on Washington avenue. When he was served with notice defendant said he would see his attorney, and, if advised he was bound to vacate, would do so. The evidence in this cause shows defendant conducted a business so hazardous as to increase the rate of insurance. On February 4, 1904, defendant notified plaintiff that pursuant to the prior notice of forfeiture given by plain-

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

(St. Louis Court of Appeals. Missouri. Nov. 5, 1908. Rehearing Denied Dec. 1, 1908.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1022*)—REVIEW—FINDINGS OF REFEREE.

Where a reference and referee are agreed on by the parties to a law action the referee's findings of the facts approved by the trial court are conclusive on appeal, if supported by substantial evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4015; Dec. Dig. § 1022.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 848*)—REVIEW—FINDINGS OF REFEREE.

If a referee has erred in his conclusions of law, the Court of Appeals may set aside the erroneous conclusions, and apply the law as found by it to the facts found by the referee.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 848.*]

3. CONTRACTS (§ 170*)—CONSTRUCTION—CONSTRUCTION GIVEN BY PARTIES.

The rule that a practical construction of a contract by the parties themselves is a proper guide to its meaning applies only where the contract is ambiguous or obscure in its terms, or where there is some uncertainty as to the objects or subject-matter.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. § 753; Dec. Dig. § 170.*]

4. CONTRACTS (§ 194*)—CONSTRUCTION.

A contract provided that, to pay certain debts due to first party as well as for debts due a certain bank for which first party was indorser, second party empowered first party to collect and apply toward payment of the debts due first party and the bank the proceeds of certain timber belonging to second party, also that, after a claim of a mill company against second party had been paid, the proceeds from timber from certain land should be subject to first party's order until the debts mentioned in the contract should be paid. Held, that the proceeds of the timber, after paying the debt to the mill company, was to be applied in payment of the specific debts mentioned and described and then due, and not to debts contracted after the execution of the contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Dec. Dig. § 194.*]

5. ESTOPPEL (§ 55*)—MEANS OF KNOWLEDGE OPEN TO BOTH PARTIES.

Where the means of knowledge are equally open to both parties, silence or some act done does not estop the party doing the act or remaining silent; and hence, where a contract providing for the application of proceeds of lumber belonging to second party to payment of specified debts due first party and a bank after liquidation of defendant's claim was in possession of first party's son who continued the business after his father's death, the fact that defendant's agent told the son that the contract was all right, that he (the agent) would stand to it, and anything the son sold second party was all right, would not estop defendant from denying that the subsequent sales by first party's son were covered by the contract, and to be paid for by the proceeds of the lumber, but it could contend for a true interpretation of the contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Estoppel, Cent. Dig. §§ 138, 139; Dec. Dig. § 55.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Pemiscot County; Henry O. Riley, Judge.

Action by J. W. Bader, administrator, against the Chicago Mill & Lumber Company.

Judgment for plaintiff on the report of a referee, and defendant appeals. Reversed and rendered.

Faris & Oliver, for appellant. C. G. Shepard and S. J. Corbett, for respondent.

BLAND, P. J. The action is bottomed on the following contract: "This agreement made and entered into this thirty-first day of July, 1900, by and between W. H. Huffman of Pemiscot county, in the state of Missouri, party of the first part, and J. W. Thompson of Pemiscot county, Missouri, party of the second part, witnesseth: That the said party of the second part, in consideration of the covenants and agreements herein contained, and in consideration of and in order to pay certain debts due and owing to first party, as well as for debts due Pemiscot County Bank for which said first party is indorser, the second party agrees to and with the said first party, that said first party shall be empowered to collect and shall collect and apply toward the payment of the debts due to the said first party and to Pemiscot County Bank the proceeds of all timber which I have bought from Joe Little, Frank Avis, Scott McDonald, also the timber on forty acres land bought of John Sullivan, near Kinfolks Ridge, and that which is on my land, and all the timber now on the bank of river, all on Island 16 and under contract to Chicago Mill & Lumber Company, and any and all timber which I may come in possession of, excepting a claim of Chicago Mill & Lumber Company of $303, which is to be paid first out of proceeds of said timber; all other proceeds of timber shall be subject to order of said first party until the debts above mentioned are paid. This agreement shall not be revoked or rescinded by either of the parties hereto, until the whole of the said indebtedness owing from the said second party to the first party and Pemiscot County Bank shall have been paid and discharged in full; provided, that the same may be revoked and rescinded if both of said parties hereto agree to revoke and rescind the same. This agreement shall be taken and considered by the Chicago Mill & Lumber Company as an order for the payment of said sum to the said first party. This agreement may be accepted by the said Chicago Mill & Lumber Company by their indorsement, but the same shall be as valid and binding upon the parties hereto as though indorsed by said party above named." The defendant accepted the provisions of the contract, and from time to time paid money to W. H. Huffman in recognition of its acceptance.

The facts and circumstances leading up to and existing at the time the contract was made, succinctly stated, are as follows: The mill company had a contract with Thompson for the delivery of timber on the banks of the contract sued on was entered into. Some of the timber Thompson agreed to deliver was to be cut from his own land, the balance from the lands of the parties named in the contract, which timber the mill company had purchased for Thompson. Huffman was engaged in a general mercantile business at Caruthersville, and Thompson had become indebted to him in the sums named in the contract. After the execution of the contract, Huffman furnished Thompson such supplies on credit as were necessary to enable him to continue the delivery of logs on his contract with defendant. Huffman died January 1, 1901, at which date Thompson owed him the sum of $358.68 for supplies furnished after the execution of the contract. After Huffman's death, his son Carl continued the mercantile business in his father's name, and continued to extend credit to Thompson until the amount, including the notes mentioned in the contract, amounted to $1,811.19, exclusive of credits by payments made by the mill company. The action is to recover this balance. By agreement of parties the cause was referred to B. A. McKay, Esq., as referee. McKay qualified, heard the evidence, and made the following report to the court: "I, the undersigned, duly appointed by the Pemiscot circuit court as referee to hear and try all the issues in said cause, a certified copy of which appointment is hereto annexed, do hereby report my proceedings as such referee: I did on the 16th day of May, 1906, take the oath prescribed by law, which said oath is hereto annexed, and herewith returned. And on the 17th day of May, 1906, said plaintiff appearing by S. J. Corbett and O. G. Shepard, his attorneys, and said defendant appearing by Faris and Oliver, its attorneys, and both parties waiving notice by the referee of the time and place for the hearing of said cause, announced themselves ready for the hearing of said cause, I proceeded to hear the evidence. The evidence offered by both plaintiff and defendant, together with the rulings thereon, will appear by the transcript thereof hereto annexed, which, together with the exhibits offered and referred to in said hearing, and which are attached to the transcript of the evidence, make a part of this report. Upon the evidence thus adduced I find the facts to be as follows: On the 31st day of July, 1900, one J. W. Thompson, who was engaged in placing along the banks of the Mississippi river certain logs for the defendant herein, and being a man of limited means, desired to have plaintiff furnish him with merchandise and extend to him certain other credit; that upon said 31st day of July, 1900, said J. W. Thompson and W. H. Huffman made and entered into a written contract, by which said Thompson agreed to, and by the terms of said contract empowered said W. H. Huffman to collect all moneys due to said J. W. Thompson by defendant herein by said Huffman. By the terms of said contract certain indebtedness was expressed as being the debts due and owing by said Thompson to said Huffman, as well as certain debts due Pemiscot County Bank. I further find that said defendant herein became guarantor for said Thompson under the terms of said contract; that subsequent to the making of said contract said defendant notified said Huffman that it had been informed that Thompson intended giving him, said Huffman, an order for all balance due on all logs; and that as soon as defendant was notified of such fact it would pay no money to any one except Huffman. I further find that on the 1st day of January, 1901, said W. H. Huffman departed this life, and that said J. W. Thompson was at said date then indebted to said W. H. Huffman in a considerable sum; that, subsequent to the death of said W. H. Huffman, Carl Huffman, the son of the deceased, carried on and conducted said mercantile business of the said W. H. Huffman for the benefit of the estate; that said Carl Huffman was uncertain as to his right, after the death of said W. H. Huffman, to further extend credit under the terms of this contract, and, before proceeding further under said contract, he advised with said Thompson and with one D. L. Russell, who was the agent of the defendant, as to the propriety of proceeding further under the terms of said contract; that they all conferring together interpreted said contract to give Carl Huffman the right, representing the estate of W. H. Huffman, to continue furnishing Thompson the same as W. H. Huffman had been doing in his lifetime, and that J. W. Thompson was to receive no money out of said logs until the indebtedness then owing to the estate of W. H. Huffman, as well as all the goods, moneys, and merchandise furnished said J. W. Thompson by Carl Huffman, was paid in full; that thereafter and upon that basis said Carl Huffman continued to furnish said J. W. Thompson with the goods, wares, and merchandise as set out in the itemized statement filed with the petition of plaintiff herein, which fact was fully known to the agent, D. L. Russell, of defendant, Carl Huffman frequently asking said agent, D. L. Russell, when the payment would be made for the goods, wares, and merchandise he was then furnishing said J. W. Thompson. I further find that during the life of said contract that J. W. Thompson delivered to defendant $3,559.69 worth of logs, all of which said amount was paid to said J. W. Thompson or on his drafts and orders except $303, the amount due and owing to defendant from J. W. Thompson at the date of said contract, $763.91, which was paid through W. H. Huffman during his lifetime and Carl Huffman conducting the business of deceased for the benefit of the estate, leaving a balance of $2,492.78, out of which to defendant paid said amount to J. W. Thompson or through his orders. As a conclusion of law from the above facts, I find that defendant, having together with Carl Huffman and J. W. Thompson construed said contract so as to permit said Carl Huffman to continue furnishing said Thompson, and having received the benefits therefrom, that defendant is now estopped to deny the validity of the entire transaction under said contract. I therefore recommend that judgment be rendered in favor of plaintiff in the sum of $599.90, balance due on the store account, and $743.84, balance due on notes, making a total of $1,343.74. And all the said papers, exhibits, evidence, orders, proceedings, and report are herewith returned to court, as witness my hand this, the eighteenth day of July, 1906. B. A. McKay, Referee." Defendant moved to set aside the report, assigning 12 reasons therefor. The court overruled the motion, approved the report, and entered judgment for plaintiff as recommended by the referee.

As stated above, the reference and the referee were agreed on by both parties, and, the action being one at law, the referee's finding of the facts, when approved by the trial judge, are conclusive on an appellate court, if supported by substantial evidence. Young v. Powell, 87 Mo. 128; Vogt v. Butler, 105 Mo. 479, 16 S. W. 512; Howard County v. Baker, 119 Mo. 397, 24 S. W. 200; Bissell v. Warde, 129 Mo. 439, 31 S. W. 928; Roberts v. Hendrickson, 75 Mo. App. 484; Lee v. Dunn, 29 Mo. App. 467. We think there is substantial evidence to support the referee's finding of the facts, and therefore will not disturb the same. But, if the referee erred in his conclusions of law, we may set aside his erroneous conclusions, and apply the law as we find it to the facts found by him. Steffen v. City of St. Louis, 135 Mo. 44, 36 S. W. 81; Lingenfelder v. Wainwright Brewing Co., 106 Mo. 578, 15 S. W. 844; Monteau National Bank v. Miller, 73 Mo. 187; Kennard v. Peck, 19 Mo. App. 342; Goetz v. Piel, 26 Mo. App. 634. The contract between Huffman and Thompson provided "that said first party [Huffman] shall be empowered to collect and shall collect and apply toward the payment of the debts due to the said first party and to Pemiscot County Bank the proceeds of all timber," etc. It also provided, in substance, that after the payment of $303 to the mill company all the other proceeds from the timber (from lands described in the petition) should be subject to Huffman's order until the debts mentioned in the contract should be paid. It is therefore not a matter of doubt as to what the parties meant, namely, that the proceeds of the timber to be delivered to defendant by Thompson, after paying his debt to the company, should be applied to the payment of the specific debts mentioned in the contract. But it is contended by plaintiff that the parties to the contract construed it as a security for supplies to be thereafter furnished Thompson by Huffman, and acted upon this construction. There is some evidence in support of this contention, and the referee found as a fact that the parties so construed the contract and so acted upon it. Adopting this finding as the truth of the situation, the legal question presented for solution is: Shall the court disregard the plain and unambiguous terms of the contract and adopt that construction which the parties put upon it, though that construction operates to read into the contract words not found in it and which cannot be supplied by implication or by any reasonable intendment, or by reason of any doubt as to the meaning of the contract as written? Where the parties themselves have given a contract a practical construction, their construction is a proper guide to its meaning. Patterson v. Camden, 25 Mo. loc. cit. 21; Green v. Higham, 161 Mo. loc. cit. 338, 61 S. W. 798; San Jacinto Oil Co. v. Ft. Worth Light & Power Co., 41 Tex. Civ. App. 293, 98 S. W. 173. This wise and practical rule for the interpretation of contracts applies only where the contract is ambiguous, vague, or obscure in its terms, or where there is some uncertainty as to the objects or subject-matter intended to be embraced in or excluded from its operation. It cannot be invoked when there is no doubt as to the meaning of the contract—where there is no room for interpretation. It is only in doubtful cases that the action of the parties has any influence in the interpretation of the contract. Drug Co. v. Saunders, 70 Mo. App. loc. cit. 227, and cases cited therein. To give the contract the interpretation the referee found the parties acted upon would, in effect, permit a party to a plain, unambiguous contract to vary its terms by parol proof that he and the other party did not act upon the contract as written, but upon an interpretation of it clearly unwarranted by the contract as agreed upon and reduced to writing. We think, therefore, that the referee and the learned circuit judge were in error in holding that the contract embraced the debts of Thompson to Huffman contracted after the date of the execution of the contract.

Though the referee did not so find, plaintiff contends that defendant should be held liable under the doctrine of equitable estoppel. The evidence relied on as estopping defendant from denying liability is this: That Carl Huffman testified that after his father's death he "went to see Mr. Russell [defendant's agent] about the contract and talked with him in regard to it, and he [Russell] said the contract was all right and he would stand to it." That anything witness sold Thompson was all right, and thereafter witness sold Thompson the supplies between January and June, 1901, itemised in the ac-circumstances shown are such as to satisfy the court of the truth of plaintiff's evidence, and he makes out a clear case by his evidence entitling him to a divorce, and shows a good character and that he was not himself an offender, then he should not be denied a decree on the sole ground that he is not corroborated as a witness to the acts argued in the petition. From the evidence the record and the memorandum of the ordered trial judge we think plaintiff is entitled to a new trial.

Therefore we reverse the judgment and award the cause. All concur.

PULITZER PUB. CO. v. ALLEN.

Louis Court of Appeals. Missouri. Nov. 17, 1906. Rehearing Denied Dec. 1, 1906.)

JUDGMENT (§ 815*)—AMENDMENT—NUNC PRO TUNC.

An amendment of a judgment nunc pro tunc must be based on matter of record, and not on extraneous evidence.

d. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Dig. § 618; Dec. Dig. § 815.*]

JUDGMENT (§ 823*)—AMENDMENT—NOTICE OF APPLICATION.

Notice must be given to the adverse party on application to amend a judgment nunc pro tunc, unless it is obvious that he cannot be aggrieved by the proposed amendment.

l. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Dig. § 622; Dec. Dig. § 823.*]

JUDGMENT (§ 831*)—AMENDMENT—OPERATION AND EFFECT.

On collateral attack, an order amending a judgment nunc pro tunc must be sustained, unless it is apparent that the court was without authority to make the amendment, but on a collateral attack the sufficiency of the evidence admitted to show that the original entry was erroneous may be inquired into.

Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Dig. § 831.*]

JUDGMENT (§ 824*)—AMENDMENT—NUNC PRO TUNC.

Here the circuit court, on dismissing an appeal from a justice of the peace, wrote on the docket, "Dis. by deft. App'l," the entry being insufficient to make it appear of record that the former order of dismissal was incorrect. It was error to amend the entry, nunc pro tunc, without notice to the adverse party, so as to make it appear that the appeal, and the cause, was dismissed.

Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Dig. § 624; Dec. Dig. § 824.*]

Appeal from St. Louis Circuit Court; affirmed. Reynolds, Judge.

The cause commenced before a justice of the peace, by the Pulitzer Publishing Company against S. B. Allen, and appealed by defendant to the circuit court. From an order of the circuit court affirming a judgment of the justice of the peace, the cause, T. O. Wengler, surety on appeal bond, appeals. Reversed and remanded.

GOODEN, J. Respondent brought suit on an account for $282.40 against appellant Allen before a justice of the peace. Allen filed a counterclaim for $312.80. The justice rendered judgment in favor of respondent against Allen in the sum of $282.40, and found the issues for respondent on the counterclaim. Allen took an appeal from the justice's court to the circuit court, and executed an appeal bond, signed by appellant as surety. The appeal was perfected, and the cause continued, from time to time, until the February term, 1906. A judgment entry appears of record in the circuit court under date of March 12, 1906, at the February term, as follows: "Upon motion of defendant (appellant) by attorney, it is ordered by the court that this cause be, and the same is hereby, dismissed at the cost of defendant and T. O. Wengler, as surety on the appeal bond herein, and that execution issue." At a subsequent term, and on May 15, 1907, respondent filed a motion in the circuit court to have the aforesaid entry corrected by an order nunc pro tunc, so as to show the appeal was dismissed instead of the cause. Allen's attorney Haas and the surety Wengler, who is appellant here, were notified of the application for a nunc pro tunc order. Mr. Haas, on whom, as attorney for Allen, notice of the application for an order nunc pro tunc to correct the judgment entry had been served, testified he represented Allen in the suit, but that his relation terminated with the original entry, and he had not since seen Allen or been employed by him. Thereupon respondent's motion for an entry pro tunc was overruled, but a motion for rehearing was granted, it seems; for on June 28th, and during the term at which the motion had been overruled, the court entered an order correcting said original entry to read as follows: "On motion of the defendant (appellant) by attorney, it is ordered that this appeal be, and the same is hereby, dismissed at the cost of the defendant and T. O. Wengler, surety on the appeal bond herein, and that execution issue." Wengler excepted to this action of the court, and brought the cause here by appeal.

The only evidence on which the court relied in making the nunc pro tunc order was an entry on the judge's docket by the judge who sat when the order of dismissal was given. The form in which the minute appears on the docket is important and will be shown:

Pulitzer Publishing Co. }	37623, Appeal J. C.
S. B. Allen. }
O. C. Phillips, H. Haas. Dis. by deft, App'l.

It is conceded no notice was given to defendant, Allen, since the notice to the lawyer who had been his attorney in the cause was road, 71 N. Y. 183, 27 Am. Rep. 28, it is held: "Where by a contract of shipment of animals the carrier in consideration of a reduced rate was released from liability 'from whatsoever cause arising,' held this did not include a loss arising from the carrier's own negligence." The reasoning of the court was that the defendant as a common carrier was absolutely liable for the safe carriage and delivery of property entrusted to its care, except for loss or injury occasioned by the acts of God or public enemies; that the obligation was imposed by law, and not by contract. Here liability is not denied, but the extent of such liability is in issue. We cannot see that the case has any application. In Schutte v. Weir, 111 N. Y. Supp. 240, the contract of shipment was as follows: "In consideration of the rate charged for carrying said property, which is regulated by the value thereof and is based upon a valuation of not exceeding fifty dollars, unless greater value is disclosed, the shipper agrees that the value of said property is not more than fifty dollars unless a greater value is stated herein, and that the company shall not be liable in any event for more than the value stated nor for more than fifty dollars if no value is stated herein." It was held that the shipper could recover the full value of the goods shipped; that the stipulation that the carrier should not be liable for more than $50 was invalid under the provisions of the amendment to the interstate commerce act of June 29, 1906 (34 Stat. 595, c. 3591, § 7 [U. S. Comp. St. Supp. 1907, p. 909]). And it is further said that the carrier received the goods for transportation without any representation of the shipper as to value and issued its receipt limiting its liability to $50. The case is somewhat different from the one at bar, as the receipt in question does fix the value of the goods at $50, and the evidence showed that a higher rate obtained where the goods were of greater value. Bates v. Weir, supra, Magnin v. Densmore, supra, and Zimmer v. Railroad, supra, are not in conflict with Schutte v. Weir, supra, the contracts being different and the distinction being clear. We believe it is entirely competent for a carrier to limit the amount of its liability for negligence where the shipper fixes a valuation upon the goods shipped, and agrees that the carrier's liability shall not be in excess of such value, when it is shown that on goods of greater value a higher rate is exacted. In such cases it is not a question of reduced rate, but a classification of rates according to value. In such cases "a carrier may make reasonable regulations, graduating its compensation, and providing that, in case of failure of the shipper to declare the val-§ 1510.

Further referring to the testimony, it appears that Johnson, Cowdin & Co., who shipped the goods as agent for plaintiff, were familiar with the defendant's rule for classification of rates according to value, and, with such knowledge, fixed the valuation on the goods shipped to plaintiff. It is common knowledge that shippers by express as a rule fix the value of their goods. Suppose a man has shipped very valuable goods, but in order to get a lower rate greatly undervalues it, and the goods are lost, ought his claim for the actual value of the goods be allowed? In the first place, his representation of value was a fraud upon the carrier and made for the purpose of obtaining a lower rate of carriage; and so it is in every case where the real value of the goods is not given, but one of less value is represented in order to obtain the lesser charge for carriage. In such cases the law is, or should be, that the shipper be held to abide by his contract. In cases where no value is given the carrier assumes the risk, and is liable for the actual value of the goods lost by his negligence. On the other hand, the shipper who undervalues his goods for the purpose of availing himself of a lower rate assumes the risk in case of loss of the difference between their assumed and their real value. Such, we conclude, to be the law of the State of New York lex loci contractus, and the law in every other jurisdiction.

For the reasons given, the cause is affirmed. All concur.

SCHAUB v. KANSAS CITY SOUTHERN RY. CO.

(Kansas City Court of Appeals. Missouri. Oct. 5, 1908. Rehearing Denied Nov. 16, 1908.)

1. TRIAL (§ 139*)—QUESTION FOR JURY—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

Where testimony is clearly incompatible with the physical facts, it is not sufficient to raise a question of fact, but will be disregarded.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 332-338; Dec. Dig. § 139.*]

2. RAILROADS (§ 348*)—CROSSING ACCIDENTS—ACTIONS—EVIDENCE—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

In an action against a railroad for injuries sustained at a crossing, evidence held to show that plaintiff either did not look for the approaching train, or, if he saw it, did not take proper precaution, so that his negligence barred a recovery.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Cent. Dig. §§ 1144-1149; Dec. Dig. § 348.*]

3. RAILROADS (§ 330*)—CROSSING ACCIDENTS—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—RELIANCE ON PRECAUTIONS OF RAILROAD COMPANY.

One approaching a public crossing on a street must look and listen, when he is in a position of safety, to discover approaching trains, and the fact that the crossing watchman was not at the crossing did not entitle plaintiff of any probative value the statement of plaintiff and his companion that they looked to the west as soon as they came from behind the building and saw no train. If they looked, they must have seen the train, since, as we have said, it could not have been more than 200 feet away, and there was no obstruction to their line of vision. It has been decided again and again by the courts of last resort in this state that, when the testimony of witnesses is clearly incompatible with the indisputable physical facts and laws of the situation, courts will not hold such testimony sufficient to raise an issue of fact, but will disregard it as a thing palpably false. Plaintiff either did not look in the direction of the advancing train, or, looking, did not give heed to what he saw. In either case, he was guilty of negligence which will preclude him from a recovery in this action.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

But it is argued that he was justified in presuming, from the absence of the watchman, that the way was clear, and, further, was justified in presuming that a train would not be run at a higher rate of speed than six miles per hour. The absence of the watchman, though it may have indicated to plaintiff that he was in his "dog house," and that the crossing was clear, gave plaintiff no right to shut his eyes and rely implicitly on the presumption that the watchman was at his post and was doing his duty. A railroad crossing is a place of danger, is in itself a warning signal, and in approaching it a traveler on a public street must always make reasonable use of his senses to protect himself. When from a position of safety he may see and hear, he must look and listen, since this is what an ordinarily prudent person would do in his place. Edwards v. Railway, 94 Mo. App. 36, 67 S. W. 950; McNamara v. Railway, 126 Mo. App. 152, 103 S. W. 1093. Plaintiff had no right to rely on the conclusion he might have drawn from the absence from view of the watchman, and his own statement of what he did shows that he did not act on it. He says he did look, and no train was in sight, and he is bound by this admission that he did not permit himself to be lulled into a false sense of security by the was entitled to indulge in any presumption at all from what he saw at the crossing is the following extract from the opinion of the Supreme Court in Mockowik v. Railroad, 196 Mo. 550, 94 S. W. 256: "'Presumptions,' as happily stated by a scholarly counselor, are tenus, in another case, 'may be looked on as the bats of the law, flitting in the twilight but disappearing in the sunshine of actual facts.' That presumptions have no place in the presence of the actual facts disclosed to the jury, or where plaintiff should have known the facts had he exercised ordinary care, is held in many cases, of which samples are: Reno v. Railroad, 180 Mo., loc. cit. 483, 79 S. W. 464; Nixon v. Railroad, 141 Mo., loc. cit. 439, 42 S. W. 942; Bragg v. Railroad, 192 Mo. 331, 91 S. W. 527. To give place to presumptions, on the facts of this case, is but to play with shadows and reject substance."

On the subject of whether plaintiff was entitled to assume that the train would not be run at an excessive rate of speed, we repeat what we said recently in Grout v. Railway, 125 Mo. App., loc. cit. 559, 102 S. W. 1028: "He was justified in indulging in this presumption; but, as we have recently declared in a number of cases, this did not absolve him from the performance of the duty of attending to his own safety. He had no right to rely solely on a presumption, but should have used his senses to acquaint himself with the actual circumstances open to his observation, and, had he done this, it is very clear he would not have entered into danger. Had he looked at the car with any degree of attentiveness, he could have seen that it was coming at a high rate of speed, and, had he looked again before entering the sphere of danger, he would have known that it was highly dangerous for him to attempt to cross. The thing that brands his conduct as censurable in law is the fact that with the car in striking distance, and with every opportunity to protect himself, he blindly risked his life and limb on a mere presumption that others would be more careful than he."

The judgment is reversed. All concur.

Flint & Co. and David R. Godwin. From the judgment, Flint & Co. appeal. Affirmed. Kleberg, Davidson & Neethe, for appellants. W. F. Kelly, for appellee.

FISHER, C. J. We find no error in the record, and the judgment is affirmed.

SNEED et al. v. SAN ANTONIO & A. P. RY. CO. et al. (Court of Civil Appeals of Tex-tween J. T. Sneed and others and the San Antonio & Aransas Pass Railway Company and others. From a judgment for the San Antonio & Aransas Pass Railway Company and others, J. T. Sneed and others appeal. Affirmed. Thos. V. Adams and Freeman & Morrison, for appellants. Henderson & Lockett, for appellees.

FISHER, C. J. We find no error in the record, and the judgment is affirmed.

END OF CASES IN VOL. 113.

see Criminal Law, § 406; Evidence, §§ 220-258.
Operation and effect of admissions as ground of estoppel, see Estoppel, §§ 65-95.

I. NATURE AND NECESSITY.

§ 5. Act April 23, 1907 (Laws 1907, p. 308, c. 165), amending Rev. St. 1895, art. 2312, held not to validate a deed of married women void from its inception because not executed or acknowledged as required by Act April 30, 1846 (Laws 1846, p. 156).—Klump v. Stanley (Tex. Civ. App.) 602.

§ 6. A deed of a man and wife defectively acknowledged held good as between the parties, and with the grantee's possession was notice to the world of his ownership.—Burton-Whayne Co. v. Farmers' & Drovers' Bank (Ky.) 445; Id., 114 S. W. 238.

II. TAKING AND CERTIFICATE.

§ 36. The omission from a certificate of acknowledgment to a deed of a recital that it was executed for the purposes and consideration therein expressed is not a fatal defect.—Ariola v. Newman (Tex. Civ. App.) 157.

§ 41. Where a married woman's signature to a deed was not essential to a conveyance of the land, an objection to the certificate of her acknowledgment held immaterial.—Ariola v. Newman (Tex. Civ. App.) 157.

§ 47. Defects in acknowledgment of certain deeds of record for more than 10 years held cured by Rev. St. 1895, art. 2312, as amended by Acts 1907, p. 308, c. 165.—Ariola v. Newman (Tex. Civ. App.) 157.

§ 47. A deed, defectively acknowledged, held properly received in evidence, under Rev. St. 1895, art. 2312, as amended by Gen. Laws 1907, p. 308, c. 165.—Haney v. Gartin (Tex. Civ. App.) 166.

§ 47. Rev. St. 1895, art. 2312, as amended by Gen. Laws 1907, p. 308, c. 165, held to include conveyances of land, and to embrace a deed defectively acknowledged, where such deed had been actually recorded for 10 years.—Haney v. Gartin (Tex. Civ. App.) 166.

ACTION.

Abatement, see Abatement and Revival.
Accrual, see Limitation of Actions, §§ 49, 51.
Bar by former adjudication, see Judgment, §§ 570, 632.

Election of remedy, see Election of Remedies.
Jurisdiction of courts, see Courts.
Limitation by statute, see Limitation of Actions.

Pendency of action, see Abatement and Revival, § 13; Lis Pendens.
Restraining action at law, see Injunction, §§ 25, 33.

Actions between parties in particular relations.
See Landlord and Tenant, § 318; Master and Servant, §§ 285-295.

Co-tenants, see Partition, §§ 46-75.
Joint debtors, see Contribution.

Actions by or against particular classes of persons.

See Clerks of Courts, § 75; Corporations, § 503; Guardian and Ward, § 133; Insane Persons, §§ 94, 100; Master and Servant, §§ 330, 332; Railroads, § 350; States, § 201; Street Railroads, § 114.

Foreign corporation, see Corporations, § 605.
Foreign receivers, see Receivers, § 210.
Insurance companies, see Insurance, §§ 145, 579.
Stockholders, see Corporations, §§ 249, 269.

See Bills and Notes, §§ 443-538; Conspiracy, §§ 20, 21; Contribution; Insurance, §§ 640-675, 812-825; Judgment, § 906; Libel and Slander, §§ 74-124; Negligence, § 119; Nuisance, § 50; Torts; Trespass; Trover and Conversion, § 39; Work and Labor.

Breach of contract, see Contracts, §§ 346-353; Sales, § 407.

Breach of contract by insurance company to renew policy, see Insurance, § 145.

Breach of warranty, see Sales, §§ 427-442.

Civil damages for sale of liquors, see Intoxicating Liquors, §§ 283-317.

Contract for construction of bridge, see Bridges, § 20.

Conversion of mortgaged chattels, see Chattel Mortgages, §§ 176, 225.

Death of servant, see Master and Servant, § 265, 276.

Failure of railroad to construct farm crossing, see Railroads, § 102.

Injuries from fire caused by operation of railroad, see Railroads, §§ 478, 480, 482.

Injuries from obstructions of navigable waters, see Navigable Waters, § 26.

Injuries to animals caused by operation of railroad, see Railroads, §§ 446, 447.

Injuries to passenger, see Carriers, §§ 314-321.

Injuries to persons on or near railroad tracks, see Railroads, §§ 394, 398, 400, 401.

Injuries to property caused by defective railroad crossings, see Railroads, § 350.

Injuries to servant, see Master and Servant, §§ 265-295.

Injuries to trespasser on railroad, see Railroads, § 282.

Insurance assessments, see Insurance, § 197.

Negligence of telegraph company, see Telegraphs and Telephones, §§ 50-68.

Pollution of streams, see Waters and Water Courses, § 76.

Price of goods, see Sales, §§ 347-363.

Recovery of land sold by vendor, see Vendor and Purchaser, §§ 253-285.

Recovery of payment, see Payment, § 82.

Recovery of price paid for land, see Vendor and Purchaser, §§ 337-341.

Recovery of tax paid, see Taxation, § 538.

Services, see Work and Labor.

Wrongful dispossession of tenant, see Landlord and Tenant, § 318.

Wrongful execution, see Execution, §§ 455-472.

Wrongful garnishment, see Garnishment, § 251.

Particular forms of action.

See Ejectment; Replevin; Trespass, §§ 25-68; Trespass to Try Title; Trover and Conversion.

Particular forms of special relief.

See Creditors' Suit; Divorce; Injunction; Interpleader; Marshaling Assets and Securities; Partition, §§ 46-75; Quietening Title; Specific Performance.

Abatement of nuisance, see Nuisance, §§ 18-34.

Alimony, see Divorce, §§ 231-276.

Cancellation of written instrument, see Cancellation of Instruments.

Compelling foreclosure of mortgage, see Mortgages, § 418.

Determination of adverse claims to real property, see Quietening Title.

Establishment of boundaries, see Boundaries, §§ 33-46.

Foreclosure of mortgage, see Chattel Mortgages, § 269; Mortgages, §§ 398-548.

Removal of cloud on title, see Quietening Title.

Setting aside fraudulent conveyance, see Fraudulent Conveyances, §§ 208-300.

Trial of tax title, see Taxation, § 809.

Particular proceedings in actions.

See Appearance; Continuance; Costs; Damages; Dismissal and Nonsuit; Evidence; Execution; Judgment; Judicial Sales; Jury.

Removal of Causes; Suppletions; Trial; Verne.

Default, see Judgment, §§ 101-153.

Revival of judgment, see Judgment, § 866.

Verdict, see Trial, §§ 331-345.

Particular remedies in or incident to actions.

See Attachment; Injunction; Receivers; Sequestration.

Notice of pendency of action, see Lis Pendens.

Proceedings in exercise of special or limited jurisdictions.

Courts of limited jurisdiction in general, see Courts, § 169.

Criminal prosecutions, see Criminal Law.

Suits in equity, see Equity.

Suits in justices' courts, see Justices of the Peace, §§ 80-128.

Review of proceedings.

See Appeal and Error; Certiorari; Exceptions, Bill of; Justices of the Peace, § 174; New Trial.

I. GROUNDS AND CONDITIONS PRECEDENT.

Restraining prosecution of vexatious suits, see Injunction, § 33.

II. NATURE AND FORM.

§ 28. One voluntarily waiving the tort, and suing on the implied promise to pay for wrongfully cutting and removing timber on his land, makes the action one of assumpsit.—Asher v. Cornett (Ky.) 131.

III. JOINDER, SPLITTING, CONSOLIDATION, AND SEVERANCE.

Affirmance of consolidated actions on appeal because of insufficient presentation of case, see Appeal and Error, § 1133.

§ 57. The refusal to consolidate an action for possession of a cow with another action between plaintiff and one claiming no interest in the property held proper.—Hight v. Oates (Ark.) 40.

ACTION ON THE CASE.

See Trespass, §§ 25-68.

ADEQUATE REMEDY AT LAW.

Necessity of negating adequacy of legal remedy in order to obtain equitable relief, see Pleading, § 49.

ADJOINING LANDOWNERS.

See Boundaries; Fences.

ADJUDICATION.

Operation and effect of former adjudication, see Judgment, §§ 570, 632, 654, 682.

ADJUSTMENT.

Of loss within insurance policy, see Insurance, § 579.

ADMINISTRATION.

Of estate of decedent, see Executors and Administrators.

Of trust property, see Trusts, §§ 189-235.

ADMISSIONS.

As evidence in civil actions, see Evidence, §§ 220-258.

As evidence in criminal prosecutions, see Criminal Law, § 406.

See Bigamy.

ADVANCEMENTS.

See Descent and Distribution, §§ 96, 98.

ADVERSE CLAIM.

To real property, see Quieting Title.

ADVERSE POSSESSION.

See Limitation of Actions.

Between co-tenants, see Tenancy in Common, § 15.

Grant of land held adversely as champertous, see Champerty and Maintenance, § 7.

I. NATURE AND REQUISITES.

(A) ACQUISITION OF RIGHTS BY PRESCRIPTION IN GENERAL.

§ 8. Since the enactment of Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 3351, in 1887, no title by adverse possession can be acquired against any counties or municipality to any public road or street.—Perry v. Ball (Tex. Civ. App.) 588.

§ 13. To acquire title by adverse possession, there must be open, notorious, peaceable, continuous, and adverse possession of the land for more than seven years.—Jeffery v. Jeffery (Ark.) 27.

§ 13. One taking possession of real estate under a verbal gift held to acquire title by adverse possession.—Robinson v. Huffman (Ky.) 458.

§ 13. Adverse possession under color of title to a well-defined boundary for 50 years held to confer an absolute title.—Conley v. Breathitt Coal, Iron & Lumber Co. (Ky.) 504.

§ 13. Evidence held to show defendant to be entitled to land by adverse possession.—Smith v. Simpson Bank (Tex. Civ. App.) 568.

§ 13. Elements of adverse possession stated.—Hess v. Webb (Tex. Civ. App.) 618.

(B) ACTUAL POSSESSION.

§ 19. Under the statute, the fact that land was inclosed held not sufficient use of the land to constitute adverse possession.—Dunn v. Taylor (Tex.) 265.

§ 19. Land held sufficiently inclosed to sustain the defense of limitation, subject to Rev. St. art. 3346.—Dunn v. Taylor (Tex.) 265.

§ 19. The mere fact that a river, used as a barrier on one side of land, fenced on the other sides, was not a perfect barrier against stock, was not conclusive against the claim of possession of the land.—Dunn v. Taylor (Tex.) 265.

§ 19. Rev. St. 1895, art. 3346, relating to adverse possession, construed in connection with Rev. St. 1895, arts. 3340, 3342-3345, 3348, 3349, and held to apply only to cases where 10 years' limitation is claimed.—Dunn v. Taylor (Tex.) 265.

§ 25. Statement of interest acquired by adverse possession where one takes possession for himself and another without understanding with the other.—Frey v. Myers (Tex. Civ. App.) 592.

(C) DURATION AND CONTINUITY OF POSSESSION.

§ 42. Where there is an absolute verbal gift of real estate and nothing further is contemplated, the holding of the premises by the donee is adverse from the beginning.—Robinson v. Huffman (Ky.) 458.

land in streets until the streets were laid off or dedicated to public use.—Perry v. Ball (Tex. Civ. App.) 588.

§ 43. Possession under a recorded deed held not to be connected with prior possessions, so as to create title under the five-year statute of limitation.—Dunn v. Taylor (Tex.) 265.

§ 43. A tenant, having acquired title from his landlord, held entitled to assert the rights of possession acquired by the landlord.—Harris v. Iglehart (Tex. Civ. App.) 170.

§ 43. Defendant held to have acquired title to the land in controversy under the five-year statute of limitations.—Wm. D. Cleveland & Sons v. Smith (Tex. Civ. App.) 547.

§ 46. Breaks in the occupancy of tenants of defendant, relying on adverse possession, held to break the continuity of the possession.—Dunn v. Taylor (Tex.) 265.

§ 46. The necessity of the continuous use of land to create title by adverse possession held not affected by the difficulty of procuring tenants.—Dunn v. Taylor (Tex.) 265.

§ 46. The uses to which land was put may be considered, in determining whether the intervals between the occupancy of different tenants was only such as might be considered as reasonably required for a change of tenants.—Dunn v. Taylor (Tex.) 265.

(F) HOSTILE CHARACTER OF POSSESSION.

§ 60. Where one enters into possession with the consent of the owner under the expectation that a conveyance will be made, the holding is not adverse without notice to the owner.—Robinson v. Huffman (Ky.) 458.

§ 62. The adverse possession of devisees of community property as against the widow of testator held not to be destroyed by their acceptance of a deed from her.—Frey v. Myers (Tex. Civ. App.) 592.

§ 62. A certain matter held not inconsistent with possession being adverse.—Frey v. Myers (Tex. Civ. App.) 592.

§ 66. Possession held adverse so as to ripen into title after the requisite period.—Wells v. Bentley (Ark.) 639.

§ 71. That a deed under which defendants claimed title was fatally defective did not prevent the vendee from claiming the whole land into the possession of which he entered adversely against his grantors.—Hatfield v. Hatfield (Ky.) 59.

§ 71. One in actual possession under a void grant describing the land may hold and prescribe under the 10-year statute to the extent of the boundaries of the grant.—Harris v. Iglehart (Tex. Civ. App.) 170.

II. OPERATION AND EFFECT.

(A) EXTENT OF POSSESSION.

§ 100. Where a landlord claimed under a grant, the tenant's possession of a part of the land extended the landlord's claim of adverse possession to the boundaries of the grant.—Harris v. Iglehart (Tex. Civ. App.) 170.

§ 100. Rights of one in adverse possession of a tract, the particular boundaries of which have not been defined by occupancy or claim for the statutory period, stated.—Smith v. Simpson Bank (Tex. Civ. App.) 568.

(B) TITLE OR RIGHT ACQUIRED.

§ 106. Possession of land by a party after suspension of limitations by the Civil War held immaterial, where he had held for a sufficient 170.

III. PLEADING, EVIDENCE, TRIAL, AND REVIEW.

Conclusiveness of allegations on party pleading, see Pleading, § 36.

Hearsay evidence, see Evidence, § 317.

§ 110. Allegations by an abutter held to be insufficiently show title to land inclosed by her and claimed by the city as parts of streets.—Perry v. Ball (Tex. Civ. App.) 588.

§ 112. Presumption held to be that title under deeds from husbands and wives void as to the wives, under 1 Stanton's Rev. St. c. 24, §§ 15, 23, but made 50 years before, is good by adverse possession for 30 years.—Burton-Whayne Co. v. Farmers' & Drovers' Bank (Ky.) 445; Id., 114 S. W. 288.

§ 112. A defendant, in trespass to try title, held required to show that the occupancy of successive possessors of the premises was continuous.—Dunn v. Taylor (Tex.) 265.

§ 112. One relying on title by adverse possession held required to show facts from which the conclusion of continuity of the possession of successive possessors might be deduced.—Dunn v. Taylor (Tex.) 265.

§ 113. In ejectment, where plaintiffs claimed under adverse possession, evidence that plaintiffs' father had told them that the land belonged to their mother was admissible only to show the extent of his possession.—Jeffery v. Jeffery (Ark.) 27.

§ 113. Where one claimed land by adverse possession, and showed that the land was inclosed, certain evidence held admissible to indicate to the owner that the land was appropriated and used by others.—Dunn v. Taylor (Tex.) 265.

§ 114. Admissions of defendant, holding the paper title to land, held not sufficient to establish title by adverse possession in others.—Jeffery v. Jeffery (Ark.) 27.

§ 114. Evidence held to warrant a finding that defendants had been in possession of the land in controversy for a sufficient period to give them title by adverse possession.—Hatfield v. Hatfield (Ky.) 59.

§ 114. Evidence held not to show title by adverse possession, under the 10-year statute of limitation.—Dunn v. Taylor (Tex.) 265.

§ 114. The fact of possession of real estate relied on to establish title by adverse possession, held sufficiently shown by certain testimony.—Dunn v. Taylor (Tex.) 265.

§ 114. Certain evidence held not to establish adverse possession as against the heirs of the deceased ancestor.—Hess v. Webb (Tex. Civ. App.) 618.

§ 116. In trespass to try title, the defense being fraud and the statute of limitations as instruction authorizing recovery by defendant under his adverse possession held sufficient, though not defining peaceable and adverse possession separately, and in the language of the statute.—Stoker v. Fugitt (Tex. Civ. App.) 311.

§ 116. A charge defining the right of defendant in partition to recover on his plea of limitation held erroneous.—Hess v. Webb (Tex. Civ. App.) 618.

AFFIDAVITS.

In attachment, see Attachment, §§ 91-122.
In extradition proceedings, see Extradition, § 32.

V. PRESENTATION AND RESERVATION IN LOWER COURT OF GROUNDS OF REVIEW.

(A) ISSUES AND QUESTIONS IN LOWER COURT.

§ 171. Whether a materialman had a remedy for materials furnished under Gen. St. 1888, c. 70, art. 1, § 4, permitting him to remove materials furnished a lessee from the premises if the lease thereafter fail and the lessor refuses to pay for them, will not be decided on appeal where he based his claim on other grounds below.—Luigart v. Lexington Turf Club (Ky.) 814.

§ 171. One will not be permitted, after unsuccessfully trying a case on one theory, to change front in the appellate court.—Farmers' & Merchants' Bank of Springfield v. Zook (Mo. App.) 678.

§ 171. Where a party tries a case on the theory that a certain issue is a question for the jury, the verdict is conclusive on appeal.—Grimes v. Cole (Mo. App.) 685.

§ 171. A party is bound by the theory adopted on the trial in the lower court.—Grimes v. Cole (Mo. App.) 685.

§ 174. The objection that relators, in a mandamus proceeding for the public, did not proceed in the name of the commonwealth cannot be raised for the first time on appeal.—Louisville Home Telephone Co. v. City of Louisville (Ky.) 855.

§ 176. In a passenger's action for loss of baggage, where the complaint alleged that the articles listed in a bill of particulars attached were baggage, and the answer did not deny that any article was baggage, defendant cannot first object on appeal that an article was not baggage.—Kansas City S. Ry. Co. v. Skinner (Ark.) 1019.

(B) OBJECTIONS AND MOTIONS, AND RULINGS THEREON.

§ 185. An objection to the jurisdiction of the court is available on appeal, though not raised below.—McDaniel v. Staples (Tex. Civ. App.) 596.

§ 190. The court will not reverse a case because the attachment therein was not authorized, there having been no motion to discharge the same.—Ballou v. Skidmore (Ky.) 441.

§ 193. It need not be determined on appeal whether statements of the cause of action should be stated in different counts where the objection is not raised in the court below.—Alten v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co. (Mo. App.) 691.

§ 199. Where an equity suit remained on the equity docket and was so tried after it was turned into a common-law action, it is too late on appeal to allege error in not transferring the case or to complain that defendants did not move for a new trial.—Pennebaker Bros. v. Bell City Mfg. Co. (Ky.) 829.

§ 209. An objection not made to the verdict in the lower court will be deemed to have been waived on appeal.—Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. House (Tex. Civ. App.) 154.

§ 216. Where an instruction stated the correct rule of law when fairly construed, if the other party believed it conveyed a different meaning, he should have asked the court to correct it, and, not having done so, cannot com-omissions upon which defendant should have requested instructions, had he desired them, and to present no available error.—Steger & Sons Piano Mfg. Co. v. MacMaster (Tex. Civ. App.) 337.

§ 216. An instruction which is defective because omitting an important modification will not be considered on appeal, where no instructions supplying the omission were requested.—Orange Lumber Co. v. Thompson (Tex. Civ. App.) 563.

§ 230. Where the objection that the petition joined in one count a common-law cause of action for negligence, and an action for violation of a city ordinance was made for the first time on the introduction of evidence, the defect would not be considered on appeal.—Wills v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co. (Mo. App.) 713.

§ 232. An objection to "the reading from the first paragraph of the answer" and the statement of the proposed proof on that point is too general to justify review, where the paragraph, though stricken out before trial, contained some matter which could properly be proved.—Kansas City Southern Ry. Co. v. Anderson (Ark.) 1030.

§ 238. The record proper cannot be reviewed, where no motion in arrest of judgment was filed.—Baird v. Baird (Mo. App.) 216.

(C) EXCEPTIONS.

§ 271. The denial of a motion to amend a notice of appeal from a justice's court and the granting of a motion to dismiss the appeal cannot be reviewed, where no exceptions were saved.—Tower Grove Planing Mill Co. v. Hornberg (Mo. App.) 222.

§ 273. Where a general exception is taken to the refusal of several instructions and one of the instructions is bad, the exception does not preserve the other instruction for review.—St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Hambricht (Ark.) 803.

(D) MOTIONS FOR NEW TRIAL.

§ 281. Without a motion for new trial, only errors appearing on the record proper will be reviewed.—City of Macon v. Jaeger (Mo. App.) 1138.

§ 292. A motion for new trial is not required to render available error in instructions.—Farenthold v. Tell (Tex. Civ. App.) 635.

§ 302. A motion for a new trial held sufficiently specific to embrace as a ground the court's ruling excluding parts of a deposition.—Mullins v. Columbia County Bank (Ark.) 296.

§ 302. Errors in the rejection of evidence and in the instructions, not called to the attention of the court in the motion for new trial, cannot be considered on appeal.—Almond v. Modern Woodmen of America (Mo. App.) 695.

VI. PARTIES.

In election contest cases, see Election, § 305.

VII. REQUISITES AND PROCEEDINGS FOR TRANSFER OF CAUSE.

(C) PAYMENT OF FEES OR COSTS, AND BONDS OR OTHER SECURITIES.

§ 387. Under Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 1387, and Acts 1907, p. 198, c. 100, where a bond was not filed within 20 days after notice of appeal, held, that the appeal must be dismissed.—Hillman v. Galligher (Tex. Civ. App.) 321.

§ 501. Ruling on motion to strike items of set-off held not reviewable; the bill of exceptions not containing the motion or exception to the ruling.—Starks v. Kirchgraber (Mo. App.) 1149.

§ 502. Where the motion for new trial was noted in the bill of exceptions, but the record proper did not show that it was filed, it would not be considered on appeal.—City of Macon v. Jaeger (Mo. App.) 1138.

§ 508. The record held not to show the appeal bond was filed in time to give the appellate court jurisdiction.—Sloan v. McMillin (Tex. Civ. App.) 587.

(B) SCOPE AND CONTENTS OF RECORD.

§ 518. Petitions, the filing of which were disallowed in the chancery court, may be sufficiently embodied in a decree to be presented to the Supreme Court, but the decree must fully recite the nature of the petitions with their material averments, together with the relief sought and the action of the chancellor thereon.—United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Rainey (Tenn.) 397.

§ 518. Petitions filed in a creditors' suit after final decree and at a subsequent term, without an order of the chancellor, did not thereby become part of the record, especially where the chancellor had declined permission to file them.—United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Rainey (Tenn.) 397.

§ 537. A bill of exceptions, filed out of time, cannot be considered on appeal.—Baird v. Baird (Mo. App.) 216.

(C) NECESSITY OF BILL OF EXCEPTIONS, CASE, OR STATEMENT OF FACTS.

§ 545. To make a petition, the filing of which was disallowed in the lower court, a part of the record on appeal, it must be embodied in the transcript by a sufficient bill of exceptions.—United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Rainey (Tenn.) 397.

§ 547. Refusal to transfer a cause to equity held not reviewable, in the absence of a bill of exceptions.—Ayer & Lord Tie Co. v. Greer (Ark.) 209.

§ 547. In the absence of a bill of exceptions, held, it could not be said defendant was prejudiced by a refusal to transfer the cause to equity.—Ayer & Lord Tie Co. v. Greer (Ark.) 209.

§ 548. A stipulation that statutes and decisions might be submitted to show the laws of other states, and that copies thereof might be incorporated in the record for use in any court, held not to warrant the court on appeal in looking to statutes and decisions cited in argument, in the absence of bill of exceptions showing what statutes and decisions were submitted below.—Union Cent. Life Ins. Co. of Cincinnati v. Dukes (Ky.) 454.

§ 548. Questions arising upon the evidence cannot be reviewed on appeal, in the absence of a statement of facts.—Applebaum v. Bass (Tex. Civ. App.) 173.

§ 548. In the absence of a statement showing that the evidence authorized the giving of an instruction, the error complaining of the refusal to give the instruction cannot be considered.—Hess v. Webb (Tex. Civ. App.) 618.

(D) CONTENTS, MAKING, AND SETTLEMENT OF CASE OR STATEMENT OF FACTS.

§ 564. As a matter of law, a trial judge does not fail to perform his duty to file a not that purpose, and the jury continues until performed, notwithstanding lapse of that period.—Applebaum v. Bass (Tex. Civ. App.) 173.

§ 571. Mandamus held to lie in specified cases, including a case where a trial judge refused to make and file a statement of facts.—Applebaum v. Bass (Tex. Civ. App.) 173.

(F) MAKING, FORM, AND REQUISITES OF TRANSCRIPT OR RETURN.

§ 601. Under Laws 1907, p. 512, c. 24, § 15, the original statement of facts must be sent up with the record in all appeals from the district court.—Redland Fruit Co. v. Sargent (Tex. Civ. App.) 330.

(I) DEFECTS, OBJECTIONS, AMENDMENT, AND CORRECTION.

§ 634. Where the bill of exceptions and appellant's abstract are conflicting, the appeal will be dismissed.—Dawson v. Ash Grove White Lime Ass'n (Mo. App.) 718.

§ 644. While under Acts 30th Leg. c. 24 (Gen. Laws 1907, p. 509), approved May 25, 1907, and Acts 30th Leg. c. 7 (Gen. Laws 1907, p. 446), approved May 14, 1907, the original statement of facts, and not a copy thereof, should accompany the record on appeal, it does not necessarily follow that the appellate court may not consider the copy.—Texas & P. Ry. Co. v. Stoker (Tex.) 3.

(J) CONCLUSIVENESS AND EFFECT, IMPEACHING AND CONTRADICTING.

§ 664. Where the bill of exceptions and statement of facts were contradictory as to the admission or refusal of evidence, held, that an assignment of error to the exclusion of the evidence would not be considered.—Helsley v. Moss (Tex. Civ. App.) 599.

(K) QUESTIONS PRESENTED FOR REVIEW.

§ 672. "Error apparent upon the face of the record," as used in Rev. St. 1895, art. 1014, defined.—Applebaum v. Bass (Tex. Civ. App.) 173.

§ 688. Remarks of counsel in the jury's presence cannot be complained of on appeal, where they are not part of the bill of exceptions, appearing only by appellant's counsel's affidavit.—Kentucky Wagon Mfg. Co. v. Duganics (Ky.) 128.

§ 688. The opening statement of counsel for a party, not preserved in the bill of exceptions, cannot be considered on appeal for any purpose.—Frisby v. St. Louis Transit Co. (Mo.) 1059.

§ 690. Where the court struck from the record the part of it which purported to contain the instructions, errors in the instructions could not be considered.—Latham v. Lindsay (Ky.) 878.

§ 690. Instructions of the lower court cannot be reviewed where not made part of the record by a bill of exceptions.—Gambrell v. Gambrell (Ky.) 885.

§ 701. In the absence of a statement of facts, the appellate court will not review the sufficiency and correctness of the charge.—Green v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 15.

XI. ASSIGNMENT OF ERRORS.

§ 719. It would be the duty of the Court of Civil Appeals to determine the sufficiency of the petition as against a general demurrer, even though there were no assignments of error as to its sufficiency.—Steger & Sons Piano Mfg. Co. v. MacMaster (Tex. Civ. App.) 337.

Irrigation Co. v. Sanders (Tex. Civ. App.) 558.

§ 742. Appellants are confined to the objections raised by their propositions.—Ariola v. Newman (Tex. Civ. App.) 157.

§ 742. An assignment of error, which presents several distinct propositions of law, and which cannot be considered in itself as a proposition, cannot be considered.—Hess v. Webb (Tex. Civ. App.) 618.

§ 742. A proposition held not germane to the assignment of error, and cannot be considered on appeal.—Hildebrandt v. Hoffman (Tex. Civ. App.) 785.

§ 747. Whether a petition states a cause of action may be questioned on plaintiff's appeal, though cross-assignments to the overruling of a demurrer may not have been filed as required by rule 101, for district and county courts.—Far-enthold v. Tell (Tex. Civ. App.) 635.

§ 750. An assignment of error complaining of the refusal of the court to give a charge held not to raise the question of the error of the court in failing to give a correct charge, on its attention being called to a point by the requested charge which was erroneous.—Hess v. Webb (Tex. Civ. App.) 618.

XIII. DISMISSAL, WITHDRAWAL, OR ABANDONMENT.

§ 776. A party may end litigation in the Supreme Court by agreeing in open court to suffer judgment to be pronounced against him for his opponent's claim with interest and costs, and he need not pay the money into court.—United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Rainey (Tenn.) 397.

§ 780. Under Civ. Code Prac. § 757, held, that where, pending appeal in a suit to enjoin the fiscal court from appropriating county funds for certain purposes, the taxpayer prosecuting the same became a nonresident of the county, the appeal must be dismissed.—Harney v. Fayette County Fiscal Court (Ky.) 108.

§ 780. That an appeal in a creditor's suit may not be dismissed because the defendants of record are being sued as the representatives of a class of creditors, the bill must show that they were made defendants as representatives of a class.—United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Rainey (Tenn.) 397.

§ 781. A review being rendered unnecessary by the payment of the judgment appealed from, the appeal will be dismissed.—Myher v. Myher (Mo. App.) 689.

XV. HEARING AND REHEARING.

§ 818. The Supreme Court will not continue a hearing to enable appellant to cure a defect in the record where it appears that no error occurred below.—Ward v. McPherson (Ark.) 42.

XVI. REVIEW.

(A) SCOPE AND EXTENT IN GENERAL.

§ 837. Certain assignments of error held to be in the nature of demurrers to the petition, so that the proper practice would have been to first demur to the petition and assign an adverse ruling thereon as error, and hence called for review only far enough to determine whether the petition was good on general demurrer.—Steger & Sons Piano Mfg. Co. v. MacMaster (Tex. Civ. App.) 337.

§ 842. Where there is any evidence tending to prove a fact essential to a recovery, the issue is for the jury; but whether there is such evidence in the record is a question of law for the Supreme Court.—International & G. N. R. v. Vallejo (Tex.) 4.

porated employers liable for injuries to employees by the negligence of other servants, defendant being a corporation, the validity of the statute only as to corporations need be determined on appeal.—Ozan Lumber Co. v. Biddle (Ark.) 796.

§ 843. Certain questions raised by assignments of error held purely academic.—Beaumont Rice Mills v. Campbell (Tex. Civ. App.) 971.

§ 848. If a referee has erred in his conclusions of law, the Court of Appeals may set aside the erroneous conclusions, and apply the law as found by it to the facts found by the referee.—Bader v. Chicago Mill & Lumber Co. (Mo. App.) 1154.

§ 861. Where a case is certified by a Court of Civil Appeals to the Supreme Court, the latter court will not decide questions not presented by the certificate.—Snyder v. Baird Independent School Dist. (Tex.) 521.

(B) INTERLOCUTORY, COLLATERAL, AND SUPPLEMENTARY PROCEEDINGS AND QUESTIONS.

§ 873. Where there was no appeal from a judgment allowing an attorney's fee as part of plaintiff's costs in an action of interpleader, the allowance cannot be reviewed.—Grooms v. Mullett (Mo. App.) 683.

(C) PARTIES ENTITLED TO ALLEGE ERROR.

§ 877. A party cannot predicate error on exceptions to the refusal of instructions requested by the adverse party.—Dawson v. Ash Grove White Lime Ass'n (Mo. App.) 718.

§ 877. Plaintiff in partition held not entitled to complain on appeal of the denial of his motion to strike out the answer filed by a next friend of one of the defendants.—Lindly v. Lindly (Tex.) 750.

§ 877. In an action against initial and connecting carriers, the direction of a verdict for one of the carriers held not prejudicial.—Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Cunningham (Tex. Civ. App.) 767.

§ 878. Appellee's failure to prosecute a cross-appeal is a waiver of rulings against him.—Feland v. Berry (Ky.) 425.

§ 882. Error in an instruction is waived by the prejudiced party requesting instructions containing the same error.—Little Rock & M. Ry. Co. v. Russell (Ark.) 1021.

§ 882. Appellant held not entitled to object to an instruction as assuming certain facts to constitute negligence, when it requested an instruction containing the same assumption.—St. Louis & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Vaughan (Ark.) 1037.

§ 882. A party cannot complain of an instruction assuming a fact where a similar instruction was given at his own request.—Peters v. Gille (Mo. App.) 706.

§ 882. Appellant cannot complain of an instruction conforming to her position on the trial.—Oexner v. Loehr (Mo. App.) 727.

§ 882. A party who erroneously put in evidence a judgment may not complain of the trial court's refusal to instruct that such judgment should have no influence upon the issues.—San Antonio Light Pub. Co. v. Lewy (Tex. Civ. App.) 574.

§ 882. Where a party has procured the giving of a special charge, it cannot complain of the court's refusal to give others on the same subject in conflict therewith.—Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Jackson (Tex. Civ. App.) 628.

§ 883. The parties may consent that the court shall consider foreign statutes and deci-§ 1004. Where a verdict appears to be the result of the jury's honest judgment, and not of passion or prejudice, it will not be disturbed on appeal as allowing an excessive recovery.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Pedigo (Ky.) 116.

§ 1008. A finding of the court is binding on the court on appeal.—Poteet v. Daniel (Mo. App.) 1139.

§ 1009. The Supreme Court will not reverse a chancery decree, unless the finding is against the preponderance of the evidence.—Blackburn v. Cherry (Ark.) 25.

§ 1009. Where the evidence is conflicting, the testimony accredited by the chancellor will be accepted on appeal; nothing else appearing to determine the preponderance.—Souter v. Witt (Ark.) 800.

§ 1009. In an action for the price of lumber, a finding on conflicting matter by the chancellor that there was not such a substantial departure from the contract as to warrant the inference of fraud will not be reviewed on appeal.—Wiburg & Hannah Co. v. U. P. Walling & Co. (Ky.) 832.

§ 1009. On appeal in equity, the Court of Appeals will determine whether the facts authorized the judgment.—Howell v. Union Grocery Co. (Ky.) 912.

§ 1009. Notwithstanding the Supreme Court has, in an equity case, the right to review the evidence, the usual practice held to be to defer largely to the trial court's findings.—Phillips v. St. Louis Union Trust Co. (Mo.) 1065.

§ 1009. Notwithstanding the Supreme Court, in an equity case, may weigh the evidence, deference should be given to the findings of the trial chancellor.—Creamer v. Bivert (Mo.) 1118.

§ 1009. Where an issue in equity rests alone on the credibility of witnesses, the Supreme Court may rest on the trial court's superior advantage in determining a fact.—Creamer v. Bivert (Mo.) 1118.

§ 1010. A finding of the lower court, supported by ample evidence, is conclusive on appeal.—Grooms v. Mullett (Mo. App.) 653.

§ 1012. Where evidence was such that the trial court was not bound to give it credence, its finding of fact thereon held conclusive on appeal.—Autry v. Reasor (Tex.) 743.

§ 1022. Where a reference and referee are agreed on by the parties to a law action, the referee's findings of the facts, approved by the trial court, are conclusive on appeal, if supported by substantial evidence.—Bader v. Chicago Mill & Lumber Co. (Mo. App.) 1154.

(H) HARMLESS ERROR.

§ 1026. To be reversible, error must be prejudicial.—Farmers' & Merchants' Bank of Springfield v. Zook (Mo. App.) 678.

§ 1028. The trial of an action by a street railroad passenger for injuries in a collision with a railroad train at a crossing, on the erroneous theory that a certain statute regulated defendant's duties, held not prejudicial.—Wills v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co. (Mo. App.) 713.

§ 1029. Where the evidence was not conflicting and a peremptory instruction for plaintiff would have been proper, errors in instructions were immaterial on defendant's appeal.—Kansas City S. Ry. Co. v. Skinner (Ark.) 1019.

§ 1029. Where, under any view of the facts, plaintiff was not entitled to recover, the refusal to allow a trial amendment of his pleading was not prejudicial.—Goodney v. International & G. N. R. Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 171.

does not affect defendant's rights found not to have acquired title by adverse possession.—Hess v. Webb (Tex. Civ. App.) 618.

§ 1031. Where the instructions taken as a whole present a false and highly prejudicial doctrine, it will be presumed on appeal that the jury was misled thereby.—Hovey v. Aaron (Mo. App.) 718.

§ 1033. A party cannot complain of instructions which are too favorable to him.—Hamiter v. Brown (Ark.) 1014.

§ 1033. Error in instructions placing too great a burden of proof on plaintiff is not available to defendants.—Bell v. Old (Ark.) 1023.

§ 1033. Appellant cannot complain that the trial court granted him relief for which he did not ask.—Wiburg & Hannah Co. v. U. P. Walling & Co. (Ky.) 832.

§ 1033. A party held not prejudiced by an instruction where one more unfavorable to it should have been given.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Schroader (Ky.) 874.

§ 1033. The defendant in an action of claim and delivery cannot complain that the jury failed to award certain of the articles claimed, where it does not appear that they were taken out of his custody by the writ.—Gambrell v. Gambrell (Ky.) 885.

§ 1039. Judgment in an action in which two causes of action were improperly joined will not be reversed under Kirby's Dig. § 6148, where separate actions might have been consolidated, under Act May 11, 1905 (Act 1905, p. 789), and the verdict on one cause of action is for $1 only.—Ashford v. Richardson (Ark.) 808.

§ 1040. Error in failing to resort to the proper practice to eliminate a cross-petition held not material, where the right conclusion was reached.—Mattingly v. Eversole (Ky.) 447.

§ 1040. Where the court overruled exceptions to an issue presented by the petition, its subsequent refusal to submit the issue cured any error in its previous ruling.—Texas & G. Ry. Co. v. Pate (Tex. Civ. App.) 994.

§ 1042. The dismissal of a counterclaim in an action to quiet title held not prejudicial.—Cawood v. Howard (Ky.) 109.

§ 1042. In an action for partition, the ruling of the court, on plaintiff's motion to strike out an answer filed by a next friend on behalf of one of the defendants, held not prejudicial error.—Lindly v. Lindly (Tex.) 750.

§ 1042. In an action on a contract for the construction of a county bridge, the striking of allegations in the answer held harmless, in view of the issues and the findings of the court.—Webb County v. Hasie (Tex. Civ. App.) 188.

§ 1046. One sued on a note, who answered under oath, denying generally, and alleging that she was an indorser and not a maker, was not prejudiced by any error in denying her the right to open and close.—Oexner v. Loehr (Mo. App.) 727.

§ 1050. In a suit to restrain a railroad company from obstructing a farm crossing, the error in admitting certain testimony held not prejudicial to the company.—Forsythe v. Southern Ry. in Kentucky (Ky.) 85.

§ 1050. The erroneous admission in evidence of an incomplete ordinance, not necessary to plaintiff's case, and which in no way strengthened his position, held harmless.—Wills v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co. (Mo. App.) 713.

§ 1051. Admission of deposition in evidence held harmless, in view of subsequent steps.—Cress v. Belknap Hardware & Mfg. Co. (Ky.) 93.

the judgment non curabitur by remittitur.—St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. of Texas v. Long (Tex. Civ. App.) 316.

§ 1140. Where a judgment appealed from was erroneous only in so far as it contained an allowance for doctors' bills and medicines and plaintiff agreed that such amounts should be deducted, judgment should be reformed and affirmed.—Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Cheatham (Tex. Civ. App.) 777.

(C) MODIFICATION.

§ 1154. Where a judgment for the recovery of land fails to describe the land, but may be corrected by the record, the court on appeal will affirm it with directions to the trial court to properly describe the land in the judgment.—Latham v. Lindsay (Ky.) 878.

(D) REVERSAL.

§ 1156. The Court of Civil Appeals held to have no power, on motion to reverse for absence of a statement of facts, to consider accompanying affidavits. Rev. St. 1895, art. 998.—Rush v. J. E. Thompson & Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 546.

§ 1165. Under Rev. St. 1895, arts. 998, 1014, 1015, 1382, a failure of judge to make up and file a statement of facts within the time prescribed by law held not assignable as error in the Court of Civil Appeals on ex parte affidavit.—Applebaum v. Bass (Tex. Civ. App.) 173.

§ 1170. In a personal injury action, the admission of testimony of plaintiff that he worried because of his belief that he would not be able to work again, if error, held so insignificant as not to be ground for reversal.—Funk v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co. (Mo. App.) 694.

§ 1171. Where a verdict is for $300. instead of $299, the error of $1 is too small to authorize reversal.—Gambrell v. Gambrell (Ky.) 885.

§ 1172. Where plaintiff recovered a verdict on each of four counts, awarding damages separately on each count, that the damages in one count were based on an unconstitutional statute, so that judgment thereon was erroneous, did not require a reversal as to the other counts.—George v. Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co. (Mo.) 1009.

§ 1176. Error in directing a verdict for defendants, after a proper verdict for plaintiff, does not require a new trial, and judgment may be ordered on the first verdict.—Bell v. Old (Ark.) 1023.

§ 1177. Where the record indicates that additional evidence may be obtained, the Supreme Court will remand the cause for another trial.—Dunn v. Taylor (Tex.) 265.

§ 1177. Where, in an action by a mortgagee of mules for their conversion by a purchaser from the mortgagor, a judgment for defendant was reversed on appeal, but the findings of the trial court did not show the value of the mules, the appellate court, on reversing the judgment, cannot render judgment for plaintiff, but will remand the cause.—Adams-Burke-Simmons Co. v. Johnson (Tex. Civ. App.) 176.

§ 1178. Under Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 1027, held, that on reversal of a judgment for defendants for improvements, the only matter in doubt being how much they were entitled to, the cause would be remanded.—Fain v. Nelms (Tex. Civ. App.) 1002.

(F) MANDATE AND PROCEEDINGS IN LOWER COURT.

§ 1194. A decision on former appeal that certain evidence was rendered admissible by defendant's cross-examination held not res judicated.—Ables v. Ackley (Mo. App.) 698.

APPEARANCE.

Authority of partner after dissolution of firm to enter appearance for copartner, see Partnership, § 296.

§ 8. A defendant who prosecutes an appeal from the judgment refusing to set aside a default judgment enters his appearance, and, on reversal and the return of the case, he will be before the circuit court.—Asher v. Cornett (Ky.) 131.

APPLIANCES.

Liability of employer for defects, see Master and Servant, §§ 101, 107, 121, 221.

APPLICATION.

For jury trial, see Jury, § 25.

Of assets in general, see Marshaling Assets and Securities.

Of payment, see Payment, § 41.

APPOINTMENT.

Of executor or administrator, see Executors and Administrators, § 29.

Of sheriff or constable, see Sheriffs and Constables, § 18.

APPROPRIATION.

For payment of municipal debts, see Municipal Corporations, § 890.

ARBITRATION AND AWARD.

III. AWARD.

Departure in pleading, see Pleading, § 180.

§ 74. Both parties to an award of arbitrators may repudiate it and litigate the controversy on the basis of the contract claimed by them.—Spiess' Adm'x v. Bartley (Ky.) 127.

§ 81. Upon the submission of the contract, rights of the parties to arbitrators and a valid award being by them, the controversy was merged in the award.—Spiess' Adm'x v. Bartley (Ky.) 127.

ARGUMENT OF COUNSEL

In civil actions, see Trial, §§ 109-133.

In criminal prosecutions, see Criminal Law, §§ 706-730.

ARREST.

See Bail.

Illegal arrest, see False Imprisonment.

I. IN CIVIL ACTIONS.

On civil warrant issued by justice court, see Justices of the Peace, § 85.

II. ON CRIMINAL CHARGES.

Reward for arrest, see Reward, § 4.

§ 65. Under Cr. Code Prac. §§ 37, 38, relating to arrest by private persons, a posse selected by a special bailiff appointed by a justice of the peace to execute a warrant for a homicide not committed in the justice's presence held not authorized to make the arrest.—Commonwealth v. West (Ky.) 76.

§ 68. One making an arrest on a criminal charge should inform the person arrested, if there was reasonable opportunity to do so, of his intention to make the arrest, and of the

ASSAULT AND BATTERY.

II. CRIMINAL RESPONSIBILITY.

Assault with intent to kill, see Homicide, §§ 84, 96, 257, 310.

(B) PROSECUTION AND PUNISHMENT.

Res gestæ, see Criminal Law, § 364.

§ 83. Evidence on prosecution for assault held irrelevant.—Vanhooser v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 285.

§ 88. Evidence involving prior threats held admissible on a prosecution for assault.—Vanhooser v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 285.

§ 91. Evidence held sufficient to support a conviction of simple assault.—Malone v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 530.

§ 96. Certain matters held not to constitute assault.—Vanhooser v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 285.

ASSESSMENT.

Of compensation for property taken for public use, see Eminent Domain, § 262.

Of damages, see Damages, §§ 206-216.

Of expenses of public improvements, see Municipal Corporations, §§ 429-487, 567.

Of loss on insured, see Insurance, §§ 197, 198, 368, 765.

Of tax, see Taxation, §§ 317-482.

ASSETS.

Marshaling, see Marshaling Assets and Securities.

ASSIGNMENT OF ERRORS.

See Appeal and Error, §§ 664, 719-750, 837, 843, 1165.

ASSIGNMENTS.

Fraud as to creditors, see Fraudulent Conveyances.

Transfer of cause of action ground for abatement, see Abatement and Revival, § 45.

Transfers of particular species of property, rights, or instruments.

See Bills and Notes, §§ 315, 508; Insurance, §§ 209-222, 347; Mortgages, §§ 275, 282.

Corporate shares, see Corporations, § 123.

Leases, see Landlord and Tenant, §§ 76, 111.

I. REQUISITES AND VALIDITY.

(B) MODE AND SUFFICIENCY OF ASSIGNMENT.

§ 31. An assignment of a chose in action to secure a debt, whether written or by parol, must in fact set apart the chose in action to the payment of a specified liability.—Little v. Berry (Ky.) 902.

§ 48. Statements made by the maker of a note in order to secure the signature of a surety thereon held not to constitute an equitable assignment of certain insurance.—Little v. Berry (Ky.) 902.

§ 55. Plaintiff held to have proved a sufficient interest in an assigned claim to entitle him to recover thereon.—Doty v. Moore (Tex. Civ. App.) 955.

ASSOCIATIONS.

See Beneficial Associations.

Mutual benefit insurance associations, see Insurance, § 687.

See Work and Labor.

Residence of defendant as affecting privilege as to venue, see Venue, § 21.

Transitory character of action in general, see Venue, § 4.

Waiver of tort to sue in assumpsit, see Action, § 28.

ASSUMPTION.

Of risk by employé, see Master and Servant, §§ 213-225.

ATTACHMENT.

See Execution; Garnishment; Sequestration. Exemptions, see Exemptions; Homestead.

III. PROCEEDINGS TO PROCURE

(B) AFFIDAVITS.

§ 91. Under Rev. St. 1895, arts. 6, 186, held that an affidavit for attachment must be signed by affiant.—Davis v. Sherrill (Tex. Civ. App.) 556.

§ 117. An affidavit under Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 187, alleging that the attachment was not sued out to injure or harass the defendants, held not defective.—Doty v. Moore (Tex. Civ. App.) 955.

§ 122. Where a purported affidavit for attachment is not signed by the affiant, it is not an affidavit, and cannot be amended.—Davis v. Sherrill (Tex. Civ. App.) 556.

V. LEVY, LIEN, AND CUSTODY AND DISPOSITION OF PROPERTY.

As affected by notice of lis pendens, see Lis Pendens, § 16.

VII. QUASHING, VACATING, DISSOLUTION, OR ABANDONMENT.

Motion to discharge as prerequisite to review on appeal, see Appeal and Error, § 190.

ATTENDANCE.

Of juror, see Jury, § 70.

ATTORNEY AND CLIENT.

Argument and conduct of counsel at trial in civil actions, see Trial, §§ 109-133.

Arguments and conduct of counsel at trial in criminal prosecutions, see Criminal Law, §§ 706-730.

Attorneys as public officers, see District and Prosecuting Attorneys.

Attorneys in fact, see Principal and Agent.

Harmless error in argument and conduct of counsel, see Appeal and Error, § 1060.

Review of discretionary rulings as to argument and conduct of counsel, see Appeal and Error, § 972.

Review of remarks and conduct of counsel as dependent on record on appeal or writ of error, see Appeal and Error, § 688.

II. RETAINER AND AUTHORITY.

Specific performance of contract to employ counsel, see Specific Performance, § 93.

§ 71. The authority of an attorney to bring a suit which he brings can be attacked by defendant only in the manner prescribed by Rev. St. 1895, arts. 272, 273.—Hess v. Webb (Tex. Civ. App.) 618.

§ 71. A defendant in partition, relying on title by adverse possession, cannot defeat a re-not such a suit as contemplates a lis pendens, and it would require the express direction of plaintiff to her attorney to bind her by representation as to the title to the land described.—Linck v. Linck (Mo.) 1096.

§ 88. An attorney's neglect is in law the client's.—Parker v. Britton (Mo. App.) 239.

§ 101. An attorney, employed to sue on and collect a claim, held not entitled to compromise the same for less than the full amount.—D. C. Heath & Co. v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 69.

§ 101. Attorneys hired by nonresident lawyers held to have acted within the scope of their authority in settling the suit and providing that the defendant should pay the judgment to the clerk of court.—Thompson v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co. (Mo. App.) 1142.

IV. COMPENSATION AND LIEN OF ATTORNEY.

(A) FEES AND OTHER REMUNERATION. Attorneys' fees in action on insurance policy, see Insurance, § 675. Attorneys' fees in interpleader, see Interpleader, § 35.

ATTRACTIVE NUISANCES.

Railroad turntables, see Negligence, § 23.

AUTHORITY.

Of attorney, see Attorney and Client, §§ 71-101. Of bank cashier, see Banks and Banking, § 105. Of justice of the peace, see Justices of the Peace, § 44.

AWARD.

See Arbitration and Award, §§ 74, 81.

BAGGAGE.

Of passenger, see Carriers, §§ 391, 414. Review in action for loss of as dependent on presentation in lower court of grounds of review, see Appeal and Error, § 176.

BAIL

Time for recovery of fees by justice of the peace for taking bail bond, see Justices of the Peace, § 18.

II. IN CRIMINAL PROSECUTIONS.

§ 62. A recognizance held to bind accused to answer a second information subsequently filed for the same offense which was in fact but an amended information, notwithstanding Rev. St. 1890, § 2522 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1303).—State v. Fillingham (Mo.) 1057.

§ 70. The taking of a bail bond by a justice of the peace, acting both as judge and clerk of his own court, is a clerical act.—State v. Cooper (Tenn.) 1048.

BAILMENT.

See Carriers, §§ 46-187; Pledges. Embezzlement or larceny by bailee, see Embezzlement.

RUPTURE OF ESTATE.

(F) CLAIMS AGAINST AND DISTRIBUTION OF ESTATE.

Compelling creditor of bankrupt to exhaust his remedies against bankrupt's estate before proceeding against third person, see Marshaling Assets and Securities, §§ 1, 8.

BANKS AND BANKING.

II. BANKING CORPORATIONS AND ASSOCIATIONS.

(D) OFFICERS AND AGENTS.

What constitutes embezzlement within meaning of indemnity bond against dishonesty or fraud of officer, see Insurance, § 430.

III. FUNCTIONS AND DEALINGS.

(B) REPRESENTATION OF BANK BY OFFICERS AND AGENTS.

§ 105. Under Rev. St. 1895, art. 661, and a bank's charter and by-laws the bank held not bound by its cashier's agreement that a lessee might use leased premises for a purpose prohibited by the lease.—Dycus v. Traders' Bank & Trust Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 829.

(C) DEPOSITS.

Deposit in bank as payment of judgment, see Judgment, § 874.

(E) LOANS AND DISCOUNTS.

Criminal liability for obtaining loan from bank by false pretenses, see False Pretenses, § 23. Estoppel against bank to show nature of indorsement of note, see Bills and Notes, § 242.

BAR.

Of action by former adjudication, see Judgment, §§ 570, 632. Of action by limitation, see Limitation of Actions, § 165.

BASTARDS.

II. CUSTODY, SUPPORT, AND PROTECTION.

§ 16. A father's obligation to support illegitimate daughters is greater than any obligation to his collateral kin.—Best v. House (Ky.) 849.

BATTERY.

See Assault and Battery.

BELIEF.

As to truth of facts as justification of libel or slander, see Libel and Slander, § 56.

BENEFICIAL ASSOCIATIONS.

Conspiracy to procure expulsion from, see Conspiracy, §§ 20, 21. Mutual benefit insurance associations, see Insurance, § 687. Questions of law or fact in general in action for wrongful expulsion, see Trial, § 136.

§ 10. A finding of the members of a beneficial association acting fairly and in good faith that a letter written by a member was a violation of the constitution and laws of the order is conclusive on the court on the question.—St.

§ 242. The presumption that one who indorsed a note did so as a maker and not as an indorser, he being neither payee nor indorsee, continues until overthrown by clear proof.—International Bank v. Enderle (Mo. App.) 262.

§ 242. Facts held not to estop a bank to show that a note did not become an obligation in its hands until after its date, and that defendant signed as a maker and not as an indorser.—International Bank v. Enderle (Mo. App.) 262.

§ 242. That a note, though dated January 25th, was not discounted until February 1st, and after defendant signed his name thereon, is evidence that it was not accepted by the payee until February 1st.—International Bank v. Enderle (Mo. App.) 262.

(C) ASSIGNMENT OR SALE.

§ 315. In an action on acceptances, plaintiff not being the beneficial owner, the maker could assert all defenses that were admissible against the maker, and could plead and prove part payment under Rev. St. 1895, art. 750.—Haggard v. Bothwell (Tex. Civ. App.) 965.

(D) BONA FIDE PURCHASERS.

Right of bona fide purchaser to cancel note, see Cancellation of Instruments, § 31.

§ 359. One taking a note in payment of an antecedent debt held to be a holder for value.—Hamiter v. Brown (Ark.) 1014.

§ 371. That a holder for value knew when he received notes that one of the makers was an accommodation surety did not affect his right to recover.—Hamiter v. Brown (Ark.) 1014.

VI. PRESENTMENT, DEMAND, NOTICE, AND PROTEST.

§ 394. Under Negotiable Instruments Act § 115 (Laws 1899, p. 159, c. 94), a stockholder who indorsed a note before delivery given to raise money for the corporation, for the benefit of himself and the other indorsers, held not entitled to notice of dishonor.—Mercantile Bank of Memphis v. Busby (Tenn.) 390.

§ 394. A stockholder who with other stockholders indorsed a note before delivery given to raise money for the corporation and for their own benefit held to be a joint maker, and not entitled to notice of dishonor.—Mercantile Bank of Memphis v. Busby (Tenn.) 390.

VII. PAYMENT AND DISCHARGE.

§ 440. A joint maker of mortgage notes, which had been paid by his co-maker, held able to reissue them before maturity, by assuming their payment by covenant in a deed as part consideration for his co-maker's interest in the equity of redemption in the mortgaged land.—Curry v. La Fon (Mo. App.) 246.

VIII. ACTIONS.

Equitable defenses against assignee, see ante, § 315.

Construction of charge as a whole, see Trial, § 296.

Instructions commenting on weight and sufficiency of evidence, see Trial, § 235.

Jurisdiction of justice's court in action on note, see Justices of the Peace, § 44.

Restraining action on note till plaintiff has exhausted his remedies against bankrupt estate of third person, see Marshaling Assets and Securities, § 8.

Right to open and close, see Trial, § 25.

§ 440. The indorsement of acceptances by plaintiff put the legal title thereto in him so as to sustain an action thereon against the maker, though plaintiff was not the equitable owner of the acceptances.—Haggard v. Bothwell (Tex. Civ. App.) 965.

§ 443. The indorsement of the legal title only to acceptances was equivalent to an assignment of all the legal and equitable interest of the beneficial owner so far as the maker was concerned.—Haggard v. Bothwell (Tex. Civ. App.) 965.

§ 484. In an action on acceptances by one holding only the legal title, defendant not having pleaded a part payment, plaintiff was entitled to recover the amount due thereon under the pleading and evidence.—Haggard v. Bothwell (Tex. Civ. App.) 965.

§ 496. Burden of proof in an action to recover notes and mortgages assigned by decedent to her son and by him to plaintiff, defended upon the ground of the son's fraud, etc., stated.—McKay v. Peterson (Tex. Civ. App.) 981.

§ 508. On an issue as to whether a set exercised undue influence over his mother to procure an assignment of notes and mortgages, testimony held improperly received.—McKay v. Peterson (Tex. Civ. App.) 981.

§ 519. Evidence held to show that one was a surety on a note.—Morehead v. Citizens' Deposit Bank (Ky.) 501.

§ 538. Instructions, in a suit on a note defended on the ground defendant was merely an indorser, held proper.—Oexner v. Loehr (Mo. App.) 727.

BONA FIDE PURCHASERS.

Of bill of exchange or promissory note, see Bills and Notes, §§ 359, 371.

Of land, see Vendor and Purchaser, §§ 230-242. Right to cancel note, see Cancellation of Instruments, § 31.

BONDS.

Filing of appeal bond as matter to be shown by record on appeal or writ of error, see Appeal and Error, § 508.

Of sellers of text-books, see Schools and School Districts, § 81.

Sureties on bonds, see Principal and Surety.

Bonds for performance of duties of trust or office.

See Officers, § 37.

Bonds in judicial proceedings.

See Appeal and Error, § 387; Bail; Garnishment, § 244.

Traverse bond in forcible detainer proceedings, see Landlord and Tenant, § 291.

I. REQUISITES AND VALIDITY.

Conditions in official bonds, see Officers, § 37. Validity of school district bonds, see Schools and School Districts, § 97.

§ 35. A bond of a public officer not in conformity with the statute held enforceable as a common-law bond.—United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Rainey (Tenn.) 397.

IV. PERFORMANCE OR BREACH OF CONDITION.

Enforcement of contribution, see Contribution, § 9.

BOUNDARIES.

See Fences.

I. DESCRIPTION.

§ 10. A conveyance of a township "according to plats of the surveys" does not include ands which do not appear on the plat of the surveys.—Little v. Williams (Ark.) 840.

§ 10. Description of land according to terminology employed in the system of government surveys and plats is necessarily a reference to the plats of those surveys.—Little v. Williams (Ark.) 340.

§ 12. The title of owners of lands adjoining a nonnavigable lake extends to the center of the lake.—Little v. Williams (Ark.) 840.

§ 12. The effect of patents of fractional sections surrounding the meandered lines of a lake according to the official plats of the public survey held to vest in the owners prima facie title to the bed of the lake between the meandered shore lines and the center.—Little v. Williams (Ark.) 840.

I. EVIDENCE, ASCERTAINMENT, AND ESTABLISHMENT.

§ 33. In a suit by an abutter against a city involving boundaries of streets, the burden was on her to show that her boundaries did not conflict with the streets.—Perry v. Ball (Tex. Civ. App.) 588.

§ 33. In an action to try title to property lying between a boundary fixed by former owners by agreement and the original line, where defendant claims that plaintiffs were estopped to dispute the location of the line as fixed by agreement, burden is on defendant to show knowledge of such agreement.—Louisiana & T. Lumber Co. v. Dupuy (Tex. Civ. App.) 973.

§ 41. In a suit to try title, instructions held not misleading.—Louisiana & T. Lumber Co. v. Dupuy (Tex. Civ. App.) 973.

§ 41. Instructions in an action to try title of a strip of land lying between a boundary line as fixed by agreement and the original boundary line held properly refused.—Louisiana & T. Lumber Co. v. Dupuy (Tex. Civ. App.) 973.

§ 46. Evidence held to show such a dispute over boundary line between adjoining proprietors as to authorize establishment by parol agreement.—Wells v. Bentley (Ark.) 639.

§ 46. Knowledge of one purchasing property that one of its boundaries fixed by agreement of former owners is not the true line will not affect his right to hold to the agreed line.—Louisiana & T. Lumber Co. v. Dupuy (Tex. Civ. App.) 973.

§ 46. Where the boundary line is fixed by agreement, one of the owners is estopped to deny that the line so fixed is the proper line after purchase of the interest of the other owners on the faith that the line was properly located.—Louisiana & T. Lumber Co. v. Dupuy (Tex. Civ. App.) 973.

§ 46. An instruction in an action to try title as to the effect of fixing the location of a certain boundary line by former owners held properly refused.—Louisiana & T. Lumber Co. v. Dupuy (Tex. Civ. App.) 973.

BREACH.

If condition, see Insurance, §§ 256, 283, 328-368.

If contract, see Contracts, §§ 303, 305.

Of warranty, see Sales, §§ 286, 288, 427-442.

BRIDGES.

I. ESTABLISHMENT, CONSTRUCTION, AND MAINTENANCE.

§ 20. Under Rev. St. 1895, art. 4792, a county held authorized to contract for the construction of a bridge according to plans different from those originally adopted.—Webb County v. Hasie (Tex. Civ. App.) 188.

§ 20. A contract for the construction of a county bridge held to refer to the plans for the bridge on file at the time of the execution of the contract.—Webb County v. Hasie (Tex. Civ. App.) 188.

§ 20. In an action on a contract for the construction of a county bridge, the court held not to have erred in admitting in evidence the tracing of a plan for the bridge in view of the allegations of the petition.—Webb County v. Hasie (Tex. Civ. App.) 188.

BROKERS.

See Principal and Agent.

Insurance brokers, see Insurance, § 98.

II. EMPLOYMENT AND AUTHORITY.

Consideration of contract with, in general, see Contracts, § 65.

IV. COMPENSATION AND LIEN.

§ 40. A broker cannot recover for services rendered voluntarily, and without authority or promise from the owner of real property concerning the sale thereof.—Fordtran v. Stowers (Tex. Civ. App.) 631.

§ 40. A broker has authority to act for his principal only by appointment, though no particular form is necessary for such appointment, and ordinarily all that is necessary is that the broker acted with the consent of his principal, whether by a written instrument, orally or by implication.—Fordtran v. Stowers (Tex. Civ. App.) 631.

§ 48. A real estate broker, to entitle him to his commission, need not disclose the identity of a purchaser prior to the time of closing the sale.—Hovey v. Aaron (Mo. App.) 718.

§ 48. A real estate broker to be entitled to commissions for selling land must have been employed by the owner to obtain a purchaser, and must have procured a purchaser ready, able, and willing to purchase on the terms at which the broker was authorized to sell.—Hovey v. Aaron (Mo. App.) 718.

§ 52. A broker held not required to see that the purchase price was paid by the purchaser before the broker was entitled to commissions.—Pinkerton v. Hudson (Ark.) 35.

§ 54. A broker, employed to procure a purchaser of real estate, held entitled to his commissions.—Moss & Raley v. Wren (Tex.) 739.

§ 55. Where a broker has procured a purchaser for land, and while his agency is unrevoked and he is still negotiating with the purchaser at the owner's stipulated price the owner sells to the same purchaser at a lower price through another broker, the original broker held entitled to his commission.—Hovey v. Aaron (Mo. App.) 718.

§ 63. A broker, having produced a purchaser with whom defendant made a valid contract, held entitled to commissions.—Pinkerton v. Hudson (Ark.) 35.

For cases in Dec. Dig. & Amer. Digs. 1907 to date & Indexes see same topic & section (§) NUMBER § 63. A broker, employed to sell land for one-half cash and balance on credit, held not entitled to recover a commission on the owner refusing to consummate a sale for all cash.—Taylor v. Read (Tex. Civ. App.) 191.

V. ACTIONS FOR COMPENSATION.

Admissions as evidence, see Evidence, § 220.
Assumptions of facts in instructions, see Trial, § 191.

Weight and sufficiency of testimony of plaintiff, see Evidence, § 589.

§ 80. A broker's refusal to comply with a promise to pay half of the costs of the seller's suit to compel performance of the sale contract held no defense to the seller's right to commissions.—Pinkerton v. Hudson (Ark.) 35.

§ 80. Claim for commissions for selling land held not defeated by the fact that the tract contained a greater number of acres than that specified in the contract authorizing the sale.—Howell v. Denton (Tex. Civ. App.) 314.

§ 82. In a broker's action for commissions under an express contract fixing the compensation plaintiff was to receive, evidence of the value of his services was inadmissible.—Fordtran v. Stowers (Tex. Civ. App.) 631.

§ 83. In an action for a broker's commission, certain evidence held not admissible to corroborate defendant's testimony.—Hansen v. Williams (Tex. Civ. App.) 312.

§ 85. In an action by a broker for commissions in selling defendant's land, evidence of a conversation between plaintiff and the prospective purchaser regarding the sale, defendant not being present, held admissible only to show what efforts, if any, plaintiff made to sell the land.—Fordtran v. Stowers (Tex. Civ. App.) 631.

§ 86. Evidence in an action to recover a commission for the sale of defendant's real estate held to support a finding for defendant.—McLaughlin v. Hardin (Mo. App.) 681.

§ 88. Instruction, in an action for a broker's commission, held improperly refused.—Taylor v. Read (Tex. Civ. App.) 191.

§ 88. In an action for a broker's commission on the sale of real estate, an instruction held not misleading for omission to refer to a condition alleged to have been imposed on the sale, in view of another instruction on that subject.—Hansen v. Williams (Tex. Civ. App.) 312.

§ 88. Findings in an action for commissions for the sale of land held not to limit the amount of land sold to 320 acres so as to defeat the action; the authority being to sell 327 acres.—Howell v. Denton (Tex. Civ. App.) 314.

§ 88. In an action by a broker for commissions for the sale of land, an instruction held proper.—Fordtran v. Stowers (Tex. Civ. App.) 631.

BUILDING CONTRACTS.

Answer setting up counterclaim in action on, see Pleading, § 146.

Discharge of surety, see Principal and Surety, § 100.

Liability of surety, see Principal and Surety, § 82.

BURGLARY.

II. PROSECUTION AND PUNISHMENT.

Adjournment pending trial, see Criminal Law, § 649.

BY-LAWS.

Of bank, see Banks and Banking, § 105.

CALENDARS.

Computation of time, see Time.

CANCELLATION OF INSTRUMENTS.

See Quieting Title.

Setting aside fraudulent conveyances, see Fraudulent Conveyances, §§ 208-300.

Grounds for cancellation or rescission of particular instruments.

Antenuptial contract, see Husband and Wife, § 34.

Contracts for sale of goods, see Sales, § 119.

Contracts for sale of realty, see Vendor and Purchaser, § 95.

Lease of school lands, see Public Lands, § 173.

Mutual benefit insurance contract, see Insurance, § 730.

I. RIGHT OF ACTION AND DEFENSES.

§ 1. Equity has power to vacate a fraudulent deed as a cloud upon the title of the owner of land independent of statute.—Cawood v. Howard (Ky.) 109.

§ 27. An action to vacate a fraudulent deed as a cloud upon plaintiff's title held not an action under Ky. St. 1903, § 11, authorizing an owner in possession of land to bring an equitable action to quiet his title, though the object is the same.—Cawood v. Howard (Ky.) 109.

§ 31. A buyer having executed notes for the price which were transferred to a bona fide purchaser could not have the notes canceled on rescinding the sale.—Pennebaker Bros. v. Bell City Mfg. Co. (Ky.) 829.

II. PROCEEDINGS AND RELIEF.

Incompetency of grantor to testify to transactions between himself and grantee deceased, see Witnesses, § 144.

§ 47. In a suit to cancel a deed to a railroad right of way, evidence held not to show fraudulent misrepresentations of defendant's agent as to the location of the right of way.—Woods v. Pine Mountain R. Co. (Ky.) 94.

CARBON COPIES.

Of letters, necessity for accounting for non-production of original before admission of copies in evidence, see Evidence, § 181.

CARNAL KNOWLEDGE.

See Rape.

CARRIERS.

Franchise tax on corporation engaged in freight carrying merely incidental to its main business, see Taxation, § 117.

I. CONTROL AND REGULATION OF COMMON CARRIERS.

(A) IN GENERAL.

Denying equal protection of the law, see Constitutional Law, § 242.

Deprivation of property without due process of law, see Constitutional Law, § 298.

the stock, the shipper, who had undertaken to procure feed and water for the stock, was not required to procure feed and water elsewhere.—Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Cunningham (Tex. Civ. App.) 767.

§ 213. A carrier is required at its peril to inform the shipper of necessary delay.—St. Louis & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Vaughan (Ark.) 1035.

§ 213. A carrier held liable for injuries to cattle caused by their being kept in the cars for eight or nine hours on the carrier's agent's assurance to the shipper that they could be moved at once.—St. Louis & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Vaughan (Ark.) 1035.

§ 215. In an action for delay in the transportation of cattle, a claim that misrepresentations by defendant's agent was not the proximate cause of the damage held unsustainable.—St. Louis & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Vaughan (Ark.) 1035.

§ 218. Where plaintiff's cattle were injured by being kept in the cars for 12 hours, because of defendant's agent's misstatement as to when they could be forwarded, a contract waiver of delay held irrelevant to defendant's liability.—St. Louis & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Vaughan (Ark.) 1035.

§ 218. A railroad company, may for a lawful consideration, contract with the shipper that it shall not be liable for delay in shipments or for loss or injury to stock, unless notice thereof is given within a certain time.—George v. Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co. (Mo.) 1099.

§ 218. A contract for the shipment of live stock, which releases the carrier from liability for delay in transportation and for injuries unless notice thereof was given within a certain time, held not binding when not supported by a consideration.—George v. Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co. (Mo.) 1099.

§ 219. In an interstate shipment of horses under a contract limiting the liability of each carrier to injuries occurring on its own line, a connecting carrier held not responsible for injuries resulting to the horses before they were received by it.—Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Cunningham (Tex. Civ. App.) 767.

§ 227. In an action against a carrier for injury to a shipment of horses, evidence of the contract made with the carrier's station agents and of the ratification thereof by a superior officer of the carrier, held admissible.—Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Cunningham (Tex. Civ. App.) 767.

§ 228. Evidence held to show that horses were injured during transportation by the carrier's negligent handling of the car in its switching yard.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Pedigo (Ky.) 116.

§ 228. A carrier is not liable for the death of stock several days after its arrival, where it does not appear whether disease was contracted before or after carriage or from injury in transit.—McDowell v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (Ky.) 519.

§ 228. Evidence that other similar agreements of a traveling freight agent to furnish cars at points on other lines for through shipments to points on his line were acted upon by the carrier held to tend to show that the making of such agreements was within the agent's actual authority.—St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Boshear (Tex.) 6.

§ 228. Facts held to justify an inference that a carrier furnished cars on another line upon an agreement by its agent.—St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Boshear (Tex.) 6.

the court reduced to $600, held not excessive.—St. Louis & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Vaughan (Ark.) 1035.

§ 229. Certain facts held to show that the measure of a shipper's recovery against a connecting carrier would be presumed to be controlled by the market at the point of destination beyond its line.—Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Cunningham (Tex. Civ. App.) 767.

§ 230. Whether a carrier's traveling freight agent had authority to contract to furnish cars to plaintiff to transport his cattle held, under the evidence, for the jury.—St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Boshear (Tex.) 6.

§ 230. Whether a carrier ratified the contract of its traveling freight agent to furnish cars for a through transportation over a connecting line, if he acted without authority, held, under the evidence, to be for the jury.—St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Boshear (Tex.) 6.

§ 230. A requested charge to find for defendant carrier if it could not have run its train containing plaintiff's cattle from where they were received to their destination in 28 hours held properly refused, where defendant's line did not extend to the destination.—Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. House (Tex. Civ. App.) 154.

§ 230. A charge in an action against a carrier for delay in transporting cattle and for unloading and holding them in a muddy pen held properly refused, as ignoring the latter issue.—Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. House (Tex. Civ. App.) 154.

IV. CARRIAGE OF PASSENGERS.

(B) FARES, TICKETS, AND SPECIAL CONTRACTS.

Act requiring carrier to furnish free return transportation to shippers of stock as denial of equal protection of the law, see Constitutional Law, § 242.

Act requiring carrier to furnish free return transportation to shippers of stock as depriving of property without due process of law, see Constitutional Law, § 298.

(C) PERFORMANCE OF CONTRACT OF TRANSPORTATION.

§ 271. A pullman car conductor in failing to transfer a passenger to her proper car at a junction held the agent of the railroad over whose line she was transported, so that it alone was liable for the damages sustained.—Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. Ry. Co. v. Raine (Ky.) 495.

§ 271. Where a carrier's servants know that a passenger is in the wrong car, they may tell him what to do, and leave him to follow such directions.—Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. Ry. Co. v. Raine (Ky.) 495.

§ 277. Physical injury to a female passenger held not the proximate result of the carrier's default in failing to see that she got into the right sleeper, and that the measure of her damages was expense incurred and the value of the time lost by the resulting delay.—Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. Ry. Co. v. Raine (Ky.) 495.

(D) PERSONAL INJURIES.

Argument and conduct of counsel, see Trial, §§ 114, 120.

Consistency in pleading, see Pleading, § 21.

Reception of rebuttal evidence, see Trial, § 62.

Res gestæ, see Evidence, § 123.

Right to open and close argument to jury, see Trial, § 25.

Williamson v. St. Louis & M. R. R. Co. (Mo. App.) 713.

§ 280. The failure of a railroad company to exercise reasonable care to avoid a collision with a street car at a crossing held not to excuse the street railway company's failure to exercise the highest degree of care to protect its passengers.—Wills v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co. (Mo. App.) 713.

§ 282. A carrier is not liable for the death of one who falls from a moving train after accompanying a passenger into the car, where its servants had no notice that deceased intended to leave the train.—Cole's Adm'r v. Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co. (Ky.) 822.

§ 286. Carrier held required to provide lights at stations.—St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Briggs (Ark.) 644.

§ 295. Carrier held required to stop its trains at platforms.—St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Briggs (Ark.) 644.

§ 297. A carrier's servants are charged with knowledge of the condition of the carrier's railroad track.—Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Cheatham (Tex. Civ. App.) 777.

§ 298. Trainmen, operating a freight train carrying passengers, must, after the caboose has been drawn up to a station to receive passengers, anticipate the presence of passengers in the caboose and exercise care not to injure them.—St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Gilbreath (Ark.) 200.

§ 300. Where a passenger on a street car was injured in a collision between the car and a city hose wagon, the railway company was responsible for the negligence of the conductor in failing to discover and avert the danger, as well as for the negligence of the motorman.—Williamson v. St. Louis & M. R. R. Co. (Mo. App.) 239.

§ 303. Statement of duty of carrier, when starting up a street car, to look for passengers alighting.—Central Kentucky Traction Co. v. Chapman (Ky.) 438.

§ 308. It is the duty of the conductor of a car to know whether a passenger is alighting from the car before starting it while the car is stopping at a regular stopping place.—Alten v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co. (Mo. App.) 691.

§ 303. A passenger, riding on a freight train by contract with the brakeman in violation of the company's rules, held precluded from recovering for injuries sustained in alighting while the train was in motion.—Goodney v. International & G. N. R. Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 171.

§ 305. In an action by a street railway passenger for injuries in a collision with a railroad train, negligence of the railroad company held not to absolve the street railway company from liability, unless such negligence was the sole cause of the collision.—Wills v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co. (Mo. App.) 713.

§ 314. Complaint for injury to street railway passenger held not confined to one ground of negligence.—Paducah Traction Co. v. Baker (Ky.) 449.

§ 316. Where the cause of injury is not within the reasonable knowledge of plaintiff, held that he may go to the jury, in an action against a carrier, upon evidence of negligence and injury.—Paducah Traction Co. v. Baker (Ky.) 449.

§ 316. The sudden starting of a street car with a jerk sufficient to throw to the ground a passenger held to justify an inference of negligence.—Paducah Traction Co. v. Baker (Ky.) 449.

res ipsa loquitur.—Williamson v. St. Louis & M. R. R. Co. (Mo. App.) 239.

§ 316. Where injury to a passenger results from derailment, the carrier's negligence is presumed.—Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Cheatham (Tex. Civ. App.) 777.

§ 317. In an action for injuries sustained by a passenger in attempting to alight, defendant held properly not permitted to ask certain question.—St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Briggs (Ark.) 644.

§ 317. In an action by a street railway passenger for injuries in a collision between defendant's street car and a railroad train, an ordinance requiring watchmen to be kept at all railroad crossings to perform such duties as might be prescribed by ordinance held inadmissible, in the absence of ordinances prescribing such duties.—Wills v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co. (Mo. App.) 713.

§ 318. Where a train is started while a passenger is alighting, and he is injured, a prima facie case of negligence held made out against the company, within Kirby's Dict. 6773.—St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Briggs (Ark.) 644.

§ 318. In an action by a passenger, the evidence held to warrant a finding that the company was negligent in failing to maintain its track free from low places and defects.—St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Richardson (Ark.) 794.

§ 318. In an action for the death of plaintiff's intestate, killed while alighting from a moving train after entering a car with a passenger, evidence held insufficient to show that defendant's servants had notice that the deceased intended to get off the train.—Cole's Adm'r v. Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co. (Ky.) 822.

§ 320. In an action for injuries to a street car passenger in a collision between the car and a city hose cart, evidence held to require submission of the railway company's negligence to the jury.—Williamson v. St. Louis & M. R. R. Co. (Mo. App.) 239.

§ 320. In an action by a street car passenger against the street railway company and a railroad company for injuries in a collision at a crossing, the questions whether the railroad company exceeded the speed prescribed by ordinance, or failed to give the necessary warning of its approach, held for the jury under the evidence.—Wills v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co. (Mo. App.) 713.

§ 320. In an action for injuries to a passenger, evidence held to justify submission to the jury of defendant's negligence in permitting the track to become defective and in the operation of the train at a high rate of speed over the track at the time of the accident.—Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Cheatham (Tex. Civ. App.) 777.

§ 321. Instruction held not susceptible of the construction that it required defendant carrier to stop its train until the passengers had alighted.—St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Briggs (Ark.) 644.

§ 321. Instruction in action for injuries sustained by a passenger when alighting improper.—St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Briggs (Ark.) 644.

§ 321. In an injury action by a passenger an instruction, though not as explicit as it may be, held, when fairly interpreted, to conform to the law, and to be proper.—St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Richardson (Ark.) 794.

§ 321. In an action by a passenger for injuries from falling because of the sudden jerkwrongful execution against mortgaged chattels, see Execution, §§ 461, 462, 469, 472.

III. CONSTRUCTION AND OPERATION.

(D) LIEN AND PRIORITY.

Waiver of lien by seller of goods consenting to mortgage by the buyer, see Sales, § 313.

IV. RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES OF PARTIES.

§ 176. Instruction, in an action for conversion, held to properly present the issue of defendant's liability.—Crouch Hardware Co. v. Walker (Tex. Civ. App.) 163.

VII. REMOVAL OR TRANSFER OF PROPERTY BY MORTGAGOR.

(A) RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES OF PARTIES.

§ 217. The mere change in the locality or possession of a mortgaged chattel would not affect the mortgage.—McDaniel v. Staples (Tex. Civ. App.) 596.

§ 228. In an action for the conversion of mortgaged cotton, defendant was properly allowed his rent and the expenses incident to gathering and preparing the cotton for the market.—McDaniel v. Staples (Tex. Civ. App.) 596.

VIII. PAYMENT OR PERFORMANCE OF CONDITION, RELEASE, AND SATISFACTION.

Discharge of mortgage by change in locality of possession of property, see ante, § 217.

§ 241. The taking of a second mortgage to secure the same debt secured by a first mortgage on the same property does not operate as a satisfaction and release in law of the first mortgage.—Adams-Burks-Simmons Co. v. Johnson (Tex. Civ. App.) 176.

§ 248. The statutory entry of satisfaction of a chattel mortgage held but prima facie evidence of payment which may be overcome by parol.—Brown v. Koffler (Mo. App.) 711.

IX. FORECLOSURE.

Jurisdiction dependent on amount or value in controversy, see Courts, § 122.

Jurisdiction dependent on location of property, see Courts, § 19.

Right of mortgagee to writ of sequestration on default in suit to foreclose, see Sequestration, § 21.

§ 269. An action held one at law to foreclose a chattel mortgage.—Brown v. Koffler (Mo. App.) 711.

§ 272. As between mortgagor and mortgagee, a direct proceeding to impeach a statutory entry of satisfaction of the mortgage is not required.—Brown v. Koffler (Mo. App.) 711.

§ 272. In an action on a note and to foreclose a chattel mortgage securing it, plaintiff could show that the release of the mortgage was entered by a third person without authority, and that payment had not been made.—Brown v. Koffler (Mo. App.) 711.

§ 278. In an action to foreclose a chattel mortgage, allegations that plaintiff and defendant resided in P. county, where the suit was filed, and that the mortgaged property was of the value of $345, were sufficient to show proper venue and subject-matter in amount.—McDaniel v. Staples (Tex. Civ. App.) 596.

§ 283. In foreclosure of a chattel mortgage, where it is impossible to reach the property to closure.—McDaniel v. Staples (Tex. Civ. App.) 596.

CHEAT.

See False Pretenses.

CHECKS.

See Bills and Notes.

CHILDREN.

See Bastards; Guardian and Ward; Parent and Child.

Care required of railroads, see Railroads, § 373.

CHOSE IN ACTION.

Assignment, see Assignments.

CITIES.

See Municipal Corporations.

CITIZENS.

Equal protection of laws, see Constitutional Law, § 242.

Privileges and immunities, see Constitutional Law, §§ 205, 208.

CIVIL DAMAGE LAWS.

See Intoxicating Liquors, §§ 283-317.

CIVIL RIGHTS.

See Constitutional Law, §§ 205, 208, 242.

CLAIM AND DELIVERY.

See Replevin.

CLAIMS.

Against county, see Counties, § 207.

Against estate of decedent, see Executors and Administrators, § 221.

Against state, see States, § 181.

CLASS LEGISLATION.

See Constitutional Law, § 208.

CLERICAL ERRORS.

In judgment in ejectment, see Ejectment, § 114.

CLERKS OF COURTS.

§ 32. A clerk of court has no right to collect his fees from a litigant before termination of the case in which the services are rendered.—State v. Cooper (Tenn.) 1048.

§ 61. The question of the liability of the clerk of the criminal court of a county for fines, costs, and fees collected and paid to the county trustee held properly embraced in a petition filed in the criminal court for the retaxation of the costs involved therein.—State v. Richards (Tenn.) 370.

§ 75. Acts 1903, p. 705, c. 258, § 80, held not to confer jurisdiction on the chancery court in a suit to recover costs illegally collected.—State v. Richards (Tenn.) 370.

§ 75. The chancery court will not assume jurisdiction of a suit for costs illegally collected by the clerk of a criminal court on the ground of mistake or fraud.—State v. Richards (Tenn.) 370.

§ 75. The remedy for the recovery of costs illegally collected by the clerk of the criminal mony.—Western Union Tel. Co. v. Blain (Tex. Civ. App.) 164.

§ 26. The denial of a continuance held within the discretion of the court.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Pedigo (Ky.) 116.

CONTRACTS.

Alteration, see Alteration of Instruments.
Assignment, see Assignments.
Cancellation, see Cancellation of Instruments.
Damages for breach, see Damages, § 124.
Liquidated damages or penalties, see Damages, § 79.
Operation and effect of champerty, see Champerty and Maintenance.
Operation and effect of customs or usages, see Customs and Usages.
Operation and effect of usury laws, see Usury, §§ 18, 49.
Parol or extrinsic evidence, see Evidence, §§ 397-434.
Specific performance, see Specific Performance.

Contracts of particular classes of persons.

See Carriers, §§ 46-63; Counties, § 130½; Husband and Wife, § 48; Master and Servant; Municipal Corporations, §§ 223-255½; Schools and School Districts, § 81; States, § 110.
Married women, see Husband and Wife, §§ 85, 86.

Contracts relating to particular subjects.

See Boundaries, § 46; Interest; Mines and Minerals, § 70.
Construction of bridge, see Bridges, § 20.
Ground for mechanics' liens, see Mechanics' Liens, §§ 58, 63.
Making bequest or devise, see Wills, §§ 58, 68.
Transportation of goods, see Carriers, §§ 46-63.
Transportation of live stock, see Carriers, § 211.
Water supply, see Waters and Water Courses, § 261.

Particular classes of express contracts.

See Bonds; Covenants; Indemnity; Insurance; Joint Ventures; Mortgages; Partnership; Rewards; Sales.
Agency, see Principal and Agent.
Bills of lading, see Carriers, §§ 46-63.
Employment, see Master and Servant.
Leases, see Landlord and Tenant.
Marriage settlements, see Husband and Wife, §§ 29, 34.
Mutual benefit insurance, see Insurance, §§ 720-730.
Sales of realty, see Vendor and Purchaser.
Stipulations in actions, see Stipulations.
Suretyship, see Principal and Surety.

Particular classes of implied contracts.
See Contribution; Work and Labor.

Particular modes of discharging contracts.
See Compromise and Settlement; Payment; Release.

1. REQUISITES AND VALIDITY.

(A) NATURE AND ESSENTIALS IN GENERAL.

§ 3. The terms "express contract" and "contract implied in fact" do not indicate a distinction in the principles of contract, but a difference in the character of the evidence by which it is proved.—Fordtran v. Stowers (Tex. Civ. App.) 631.

(B) PARTIES, PROPOSALS, AND ACCEPTANCE.

§ 15. To constitute a binding contract, there must be a meeting of the minds of the parties.

ment or meeting of the minds of the parties by an offer on the one hand, and an acceptance on the other.—Fordtran v. Stowers (Tex. Civ. App.) 631.

(D) CONSIDERATION.

Settlement of claim of title as consideration for deed of smaller tract, see Deeds, § 17.

§ 47. A valid contract must be supported by a consideration.—George v. Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co. (Mo.) 1099.

§ 65. A broker's contract to pay half the costs of a suit by the seller to enforce the contract of sale held without consideration.—Pinkerton v. Hudson (Ark.) 35.

§ 68. Compromise of a servant's claim for personal injuries held a sufficient consideration for the master's agreement to furnish subsequent employment to the servant.—Kelly v. Peter & Burghard Stone Co. (Ky.) 486.

(E) VALIDITY OF ASSENT.

Fraud of agent, see Principal and Agent, § 158.

§ 94. A promise to perform some act in the future when made with intent to disregard the promise is actual fraud, and affords ground for rescission of a contract.—Mutual Reserve Life Ins. Co. v. Seidel (Tex. Civ. App.) 945.

(F) LEGALITY OF OBJECT AND OF CONSIDERATION.

§ 103. All contracts which provide for doing a thing which is contrary to law, morality, and public policy are void.—Heart v. East Tennessee Brewing Co. (Tenn.) 364.

§ 140. Where the original consideration for notes was legal, held that a subsequent contract based on the consideration could be enforced, though the notes might be void, as against the policy of the law, because of a connivance between the vendor of land which was the consideration and one of the joint purchasers and makers of the notes, whereby the one purchaser received a profit unknown to the other.—Curry v. La Fon (Mo. App.) 246.

II. CONSTRUCTION AND OPERATION.

(A) GENERAL RULES OF CONSTRUCTION.

§ 147. The old rule that a patent ambiguity in a clause of a contract might render the stipulation void is no longer strictly observed, and whether an ambiguity be patent or latent a court will endeavor to glean the parties' intentions from the whole instrument and the incidents attendant on its execution.—Conservative Realty Co. v. St. Louis Brewing Ass'n (Mo. App.) 229.

§ 170. Application stated of the rule that where parties to a contract have themselves given the contract a practical construction, it is a proper guide to its meaning.—Bader v. Chicago Mill & Lumber Co. (Mo. App.) 1154.

(C) SUBJECT-MATTER.

§ 194. A contract for the application of proceeds of timber to payment of debts held to contemplate only debts owing when the contract was executed.—Bader v. Chicago Mill & Lumber Co. (Mo. App.) 1154.

(D) PLACE AND TIME.

§ 214. A builder held not entitled to any portion of the contract price prior to the com-

(B) SUBSCRIPTION TO STOCK.

§ 84. A subscriber to corporate stock held released from liability by the dissolution and reorganization of the corporation.—Owensboro Seating & Cabinet Co. v. Miller (Ky.) 423.

§ 84. The effect of a material alteration on a contract of subscription for corporate stock stated.—Owensboro Seating & Cabinet Co. v. Miller (Ky.) 423.

(D) TRANSFER OF SHARES.

§ 123. The answer held to charge not that plaintiff, to whom defendant pledged stock which W. pledged to defendant, surrendered it to W., but that plaintiff neglected to record the transfer by W., whereby W. was able to dispose of the stock.—Loeb v. German Nat. Bank (Ark.) 1017.

§ 123. Kirby's Dig. § 849, as to recording transfers of stock, held not to apply to a transfer as collateral.—Loeb v. German Nat. Bank (Ark.) 1017.

§ 123. Kirby's Dig. § 853, as to transfer of stock on books of corporation, held not to apply as between the parties to a transfer as collateral.—Loeb v. German Nat. Bank (Ark.) 1017.

§ 123. Statement of duty as between pledgees to record in case of successive transfers of stock as security.—Loeb v. German Nat. Bank (Ark.) 1017.

V. MEMBERS AND STOCKHOLDERS.

Right of stockholder to notice of dishonor of note indorsed for accommodation of corporation, see Bills and Notes, § 394.

(A) RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES AS TO CORPORATION.

Jurisdiction of Supreme Court of application for supersedeas in proceedings for inspection of corporate books, see Courts, § 240.

(B) MEETINGS.

§ 197. A mere subscriber for corporate stock, before its issue or payment therefor, has no right to vote, and can not participate in the corporate management.—Owensboro Seating & Cabinet Co. v. Miller (Ky.) 423.

(C) SUING OR DEFENDING ON BEHALF OF CORPORATION.

Embezzlement of corporate funds, see Embezzlement, §§ 28, 33, 44.
Limitation of, prosecution for embezzlement, see Criminal Law, § 147.

(D) LIABILITY FOR CORPORATE DEBTS AND ACTS.

§ 249. The holder of unpaid stock in a corporation against whom a judgment creditor of the corporation proceeds by motion for execution under the statute may set off against his debt a prior debt of the corporation to him.—Stinebaker v. National Restaurant Co. (Mo. App.) 237.

§ 269. Evidence held to sustain a finding that cash furnished to a corporation by the holder of partly unpaid stock, above what was credited on his stock, was advanced with the consent of the managing officers, and was treated as a debt of the corporation to the stockholder.—Stinebaker v. National Restaurant Co. (Mo. App.) 237.

§ 312. A policy insuring against loss or damage by fire, not covering a loss caused by lightning which did not burn the building, payment of the policy for such loss would have been a misapplication of the corporation's money by its officers.—Sleet v. Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co. of Boone County (Ky.) 515.

VII. CORPORATE POWERS AND LIABILITIES.

(A) EXTENT AND EXERCISE OF POWERS IN GENERAL.

§ 371. Corporations have only those powers conferred upon them by charter, either expressly or as incidental to their existence.—Ozan Lumber Co. v. Biddie (Ark.) 790.

(B) REPRESENTATION OF CORPORATION BY OFFICERS AND AGENTS.

Admissions by agent, see Evidence, § 244.

§ 423. While a contract with a corporation may be rescinded for false representations by the corporate officers or agents, though the corporation had no knowledge of and did not consent to such representations, the corporation is not liable in damages as for deceit, unless it authorized the making of the representations.—Mutual Reserve Life Ins. Co. v. Seidel (Tex. Civ. App.) 945.

(F) CIVIL ACTIONS.

§ 503. Under Rev. St. 1895, art. 1194, and the circumstances, a plea of privilege by a company sued for tort committed in another county held properly sustained.—Boehrens v. Brice (Tex. Civ. App.) 782.

(G) CRIMES AND CRIMINAL PROSECUTIONS.

Evidence of other offenses in prosecution of corporate officer for embezzlement, see Criminal Law, § 371.
Penalties for failure to pay discharged employees, see Master and Servant, § 83.

VIII. INSOLVENCY AND RECEIVERS

Abatement of action on discharge of receivership, see Abatement and Revival, § 45.

§ 542. A lease of an insolvent corporation's quarry to its president and general manager, whose relatives were the principal stockholders, was fraudulent as to the corporation's creditors.—Ward v. McPherson (Ark.) 42.

§ 542. In suits to replevin stone levied upon under executions against an insolvent corporation, which leased the quarry to plaintiff, its president and general manager, the burden was on him to show the fairness of the lease.—Ward v. McPherson (Ark.) 42.

§ 547. Creditors held entitled to relief in a law action against a corporation on the ground of fraud.—Ward v. McPherson (Ark.) 42.

XII. FOREIGN CORPORATIONS.

§ 634. Rev. St. 1895, art. 745, held to merely place a foreign corporation holding a permit to do business in the state on the same footing as domestic corporations in the transaction of its business.—Coca Cola Co. v. Allison (Tex. Civ. App.) 308.

§ 636. It is not within the judicial province of the courts of a state to supervise and direct the internal affairs and management of a foreign come provided for that year.—Lawrence County v. Lawrence Fiscal Court (Ky.) 824.

§ 160. Const. § 180, requiring every resolution levying a county tax to specify the purpose of the levy, and prohibiting its appropriation to any other purpose, does not limit the revenues of a year to the payment of the liabilities incurred during that year, but only that revenues levied for a particular purpose, as for road purposes, be used for that purpose.—Lawrence County v. Lawrence Fiscal Court (Ky.) 824.

§ 192. A county has no authority to levy a special tax to pay expenses of the circuit court.—Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Hamilton County (Tenn.) 361.

V. CLAIMS AGAINST COUNTY.

§ 207. The fact that a county lost the money collected for paying its indebtedness for a certain year before paying the debts would not affect its liability for such debts, but it would remain bound until they were discharged.—Lawrence County v. Lawrence Fiscal Court (Ky.) 824.

VI. ACTIONS.

Parties entitled to appeal, see Appeal and Error, § 151.

COURTS.

Authority of county to levy special tax for expenses of circuit court, see Counties, § 192. Clerks, see Clerks of Courts.

Contempt of court, see Contempt.

Judges, see Judges.

Jurisdiction of action on bond of clerk of court, see Clerks of Court, § 75.

Jurisdiction of criminal prosecution, see Criminal Law, § 97.

Justices' courts, see Justices of the Peace.

Province of court and jury, see Trial, §§ 190-194.

Removal of action from state court to United States court, see Removal of Causes.

Review of decisions, see Appeal and Error.

Trial by court without jury, see Trial, § 386.

I. NATURE, EXTENT, AND EXERCISE OF JURISDICTION IN GENERAL.

§ 12. A Texas court of equity cannot render a decree restraining nonresident officers of a foreign insurance company from canceling the certificate of a resident of Texas.—Royal Fraternal Union v. Lundy (Tex. Civ. App.) 185.

§ 19. The failure of the petition, in proceedings to foreclose a chattel mortgage, to allege with certainty the present locality of the property, or that it was in the county, held not to prevent the jurisdiction of the court from attaching, in view of Rev. St. 1895, art. 1340.—McDaniel v. Staples (Tex. Civ. App.) 596.

§ 19. In foreclosure of a chattel mortgage, the existence of the lien, the value of the property, and the amount of the original debt, are the essentials to give the court jurisdiction, and not the present locality of the mortgaged property.—McDaniel v. Staples (Tex. Civ. App.) 596.

§ 24. Consent held not to give a court jurisdiction, where it has no jurisdiction of the subject-matter. Frank v. Frank (Ark.) 640.

§ 27. The circuit court of a particular county, having jurisdiction to enforce an equitable lien for unpaid purchase money, could determine all other matters incidental to it. Norton Iron Works v. Moreland (Ky.) 481.

the cause.—McDaniel v. Staples (Tex. Civ. App.) 596.

§ 37. Questions of the jurisdiction of the subject-matter may be raised at any stage of the case, in any court, either by court or counsel.—Lohmeyer v. St. Louis Cordage Co. (Mo.) 1108.

(A) CREATION AND CONSTITUTION, AND COURT OFFICERS.

Subject and title of statute relating to court stenographers, see Statutes, § 124.

III. COURTS OF GENERAL ORIGINAL JURISDICTION.

(A) GROUNDS OF JURISDICTION IN GENERAL.

§ 121. An action on an accident policy for $500 and attorney's fees and 12 per cent. damages held within the jurisdiction of the district court.—Lane v. General Accident Ins. Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 324.

§ 122. That the proof showed that the value of the mortgaged chattels was less than $500 would not deprive the county court of jurisdiction to foreclose a mortgage, where defendant did not allege and prove that the allegations of value were fraudulent and for the purpose of giving jurisdiction.—McDaniel v. Staples (Tex. Civ. App.) 596.

§ 122. In an action to foreclose a chattel mortgage, allegations that the property was secreted, or removed from the county, or sold, would not justify the court in assuming that the property had been entirely destroyed, so as to deprive it of jurisdiction.—McDaniel v. Staples (Tex. Civ. App.) 596.

IV. COURTS OF LIMITED OR INFERIOR JURISDICTION.

§ 169. In an action to recover specific personality alleged to be worth $1,000, the county court, having required its delivery to plaintiff, could subsequently give judgment against plaintiff for the value of the property on determining that such value exceeded its jurisdiction.—Texas Land & Irrigation Co. v. Sanders (Tex. Civ. App.) 558.

VI. COURTS OF APPELLATE JURISDICTION.

(B) COURTS OF PARTICULAR STATES.

§ 231. In action for share of cost of division fence built in 1907, Ky. St. 1903, § 1784, imposing a personal liability, applies, and not Act March 20, 1908, and a lien on real estate is not involved, and the Court of Appeals has no jurisdiction where judgment is for $40.50.—Jackson v. Holbrook (Ky.) 415.

§ 231. The constitutionality of a statute having been finally adjudicated prior to the appeal, held, the Supreme Court will not take jurisdiction of the appeal because attacking the statute as unconstitutional.—State v. Campbell (Mo.) 1081.

§ 231. A suit to set aside a deed in the chain of title as fraudulent involves title to real estate within Const. art. 6, § 12 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 218).—Thomas v. Scott (Mo.) 1093.

§ 231. A proceeding to establish a lost deed under Rev. St. 1899, § 4565 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 2480), held to involve title to real estate within Const. art. 6, § 12 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 218).—Thomas v. Scott (Mo.) 1093.

§ 231. The constitutionality of the statute authorizing a verdict by nine jurors in cases having been settled, the question cannot amining trial, as basis of prosecution for perjury, see Perjury, § 6.

IX. ARRAIGNMENT AND PLEAS, AND NOLLE PROSEQUI OR DISCONTINUANCE.

Dismissal as to one of parties jointly indicted as affecting competency as witness in prosecution of another, see Witnesses, § 114.

X. EVIDENCE.

In particular criminal prosecutions.

See Abduction, § 12; Assault and Battery, § 91; Bigamy, § 11; Homicide, § 178; Perjury, § 31; Rape, §§ 51-53; Robbery, § 24. For injuring or killing animals, see Animals, § 45.

For obstruction of highway, see Highways, § 104.

For wrongful removal or destruction of fence, see Fences, § 28.

(A) JUDICIAL NOTICE, PRESUMPTIONS, AND BURDEN OF PROOF.

§ 306. One inference or presumption cannot be based upon another.—State v. Jacobs (Mo. App.) 244.

(B) FACTS IN ISSUE AND RELEVANT TO ISSUES, AND RES GESTÆ.

§ 364. Rule respecting admissibility of res gestæ declarations by accused persons stated.—State v. Jacobs (Mo. App.) 244.

§ 364. Statements by accused on being arrested for theft held admissible as part of the res gestæ.—State v. Jacobs (Mo. App.) 244.

§ 364. In a prosecution for homicide, the defense being self-defense, testimony that decedent said, the day after the difficulty, that he struck at accused with a knife, but did not know whether he cut him, constituted no part of the res gestæ, and was inadmissible.—Thomas v. State (Tenn.) 1041.

§ 364. Statement of what was and what was not admissible as part of the res gestæ on a prosecution for assault, where the state claimed conspiracy between defendant and his son.—Vanhooser v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 285.

§ 364. Where the breaking up of a dance caused the difficulty leading to an assault by defendant, evidence that he broke up the dance was admissible as part of the res gestæ.—Thompson v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 536.

§ 364. Statements made by accused on reaching jail, about 30 minutes after the homicide, held inadmissible as res gestæ.—Pryse v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 938.

§ 365. The state could show that, after shooting decedent, accused shot his wife, with whom accused claims decedent was criminally intimate, as part of the res gestæ.—Young v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 276.

(C) OTHER OFFENSES, AND CHARACTER OF ACCUSED.

Testimony taken before examining magistrate on a charge of a different offense, see post, § 545.

§ 371. In a prosecution of a corporate officer for embezzlement, his letters admitting other offenses with reference to the corporation's affairs held irrelevant.—Bailey v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 140.

(D) BEST AND SECONDARY AND DEMONSTRATIVE EVIDENCE.

§ 400. Parol evidence of a former conviction, in a prosecution for maintaining a public nuisance, held inadmissible.—Miller v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 518.

ment made by accused had been lost and diligent search made therefor, testimony as to its contents was proper.—Pierce v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 148.

§ 404. Exhibition of decedent's shirt to the jury held not error.—Dobbs v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 923.

(F) ADMISSIONS, DECLARATIONS, AND HEARSAY.

§ 406. A written statement to a justice of the peace, signed by accused after being warned, was admissible against him, under Acts 30th Leg. (Laws 1907) p. 219, c. 118.—Pierce v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 148.

§ 406. A voluntary statement before the grand jury, reduced to writing and signed by accused, was admissible against him.—Pierce v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 148.

§ 419. In a rape prosecution, testimony held inadmissible as hearsay.—Holloway v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 928.

(G) ACTS AND DECLARATIONS OF CONSPIRATORS AND CODEFENDANTS.

§ 423. In a prosecution of one of several conspirators for murder, which was the object of the conspiracy, held competent to show every circumstance that tended to throw light upon their acts in furtherance of the common design.—Gambrell v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 476.

§ 423. In a homicide case, the state held entitled to show a purchase of ammunition by accused's father.—Dobbs v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 921.

§ 424. In a homicide case, the state could show that after his arrest shotgun shells were found in accused's son's pocket, where the evidence tended to show a conspiracy between them.—Dobbs v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 923.

(H) DOCUMENTARY EVIDENCE AND EXCLUSION OF PAROL EVIDENCE THEREBY.

§ 429. Under Shannon's Code, §§ 5573, 5576, 5580, 5583, 5588, a certificate issued by an internal revenue collector that a special tax stamp was issued to defendant held inadmissible in evidence, under Acts 1903, p. 1079, c. 355, § 1, in a prosecution for selling intoxicating liquor within four miles of a schoolhouse.—Bayless v. State (Tenn.) 1039.

(I) OPINION EVIDENCE.

§ 448. In a rape prosecution, where the evidence showed that accused wore a white hat at the time, testimony that witness remarked, when accused came to the preliminary examination, that prosecutrix would surely identify him, because he then wore the same white hat, was inadmissible.—Holloway v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 928.

(K) CONFESSIONS.

§ 519. A confession made under duress held not entitled to consideration.—Sowers v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 148.

§ 530. Under Code Cr. Proc. 1895, art. 790, as amended by Acts 30th Leg. p. 219, c. 113, § 1, a written confession must show on its face that accused was warned by the person to whom the same was made that it might be used against him, etc.—Young v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 276.

§ 534. Under Cr. Code Prac. § 240, requiring the confession of an accused to be corroborated, one accused under Ky. St. 1903, § 1162a, of stealing chickens from an outbuilding cannot be convicted on his bare confession, where there is no corroborating evidence that there were chickens in the building.—Moseby v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 850.

jointly indicted for a severance had been granted, and he was placed on trial first, and a motion to quash as against the other accused had been overruled, the district attorney could dismiss the case as against such other accused after the jury had been impaneled to try the first.—Harville v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 283.

§ 753. Where the evidence in a prosecution of a corporate officer for embezzlement was insufficient to justify a conviction, the court erred in refusing a peremptory instruction to find accused not guilty.—Bailey v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 140.

§§ 763, 764. An instruction requesting the jury to find whether defendant confessed, and whether the crime was committed, held not objectionable as on the weight of the evidence.—Skaggs v. State (Ark.) 346.

§§ 763, 764. An instruction in a murder trial held not erroneous, as on the weight of the evidence.—Young v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 276.

§§ 763, 764. On a trial for homicide, an instruction held erroneous as on the weight of the evidence.—Pannell v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 536.

§§ 763, 764. An instruction held not objectionable as being upon the weight of the evidence.—Dobbs v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 921.

§§ 763, 764. An instruction held not erroneous, as being on the weight of the evidence.—Dobbs v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 923.

(G) NECESSITY, REQUISITES, AND SUFFICIENCY OF INSTRUCTIONS.

In particular criminal prosecutions.

See Abduction, § 16; Burglary, § 46.
For carrying weapon, see Weapons, § 17.

§ 775. An instruction on alibi in prosecution for maliciously killing calf, held not objectionable.—State v. Barton (Mo.) 1111.

§ 778. An instruction in a prosecution for carrying weapon which places the burden on accused to prove beyond a reasonable doubt his defense is erroneous.—Steel v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 15.

§ 778. Where the state introduced accused's statements as to the manner of the killing, there being no other evidence thereof, the court should instruct that the state must disprove accused's statements to obtain a conviction.—Casey v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 534.

§ 782. A charge that, if the jury acquit defendant "altogether," they should find him not guilty, is not objectionable.—Pryse v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 938.

§ 783. Where the jury could have considered testimony only for impeachment, the failure to so limit the testimony by charge held not error.—Thompson v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 536.

§ 783. The court properly limited consideration of impeaching evidence to the credibility of the attacked witness.—Dobbs v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 921.

§ 789. It was error to omit to direct an acquittal if the jury had reasonable doubt as to the existence of facts essential to manslaughter.—Fuller v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 540.

§ 809. An instruction held not erroneous, as being confusing and misleading.—Dobbs v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 923.

§ 811. An instruction on a trial for homicide held erroneous as eliminating the right of self-defense.—Pannell v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 536.

aiding and abetting others in committing the crime.—Commonwealth v. West (Ky.) 76.

§ 814. Where accused showed that he killed decedent in self-defense, a charge submitting the issue of the rights of the parties in the premises held properly refused.—State v. Smith (Mo.) 1062.

§ 822. Instruction on trial for assault with intent to murder held not subject to the criticism, in view of another instruction, that it charged that the knife used was, as a matter of law, a deadly weapon.—Prescott v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 530.

§ 822. Charge on a trial for assault with intent to murder held not, in view of other instructions, to place on defendant the burden to show the facts which would reduce the assault to an aggravated assault.—Prescott v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 530.

§ 822. In a prosecution for theft, an instruction as to reasonable doubt held to sufficiently apply to the identical issue in connection with which it was given.—Harroldson v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 544.

§ 822. An instruction, when considered with other instructions, held not erroneous, as shifting the burden of proof and as infringing the doctrine of reasonable doubt.—Dobbs v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 923.

(H) REQUESTS FOR INSTRUCTIONS.

§ 829. That the substance of a requested instruction was covered by instructions given held enough.—Grisson v. State (Ark.) 1011.

§ 829. Requested charges covered by general charge held properly refused.—Prescott v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 530.

§ 829. In a rape prosecution, a requested charge as to the effect of a mere request for sexual intercourse, without the use of force, held covered by the charge given.—Holloway v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 928.

§ 834. A request to charge on circumstantial evidence in prosecution for malicious killing of calf, though not properly worded, held sufficient to entitle accused to a correct instruction on such subject.—State v. Barton (Mo.) 1111.

(K) VERDICT.

On prosecution of habitual criminals, see post, § 1204.

§ 881. The verdict in a criminal case must be reasonably definite and certain and responsive to the issues.—State v. Grossman (Mo.) 1074.

§ 881. A verdict on a trial for violating Rev. St. 1899, § 3011 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1726), prohibiting liquor traffic on Sunday, held uncertain and not responsive to the issue.—State v. Grossman (Mo.) 1074.

§ 889. Under Code Cr. Proc. 1895, arts. 753, 754, relating to the correction of informal verdicts, where the jury found one guilty of murder in the first degree, but did not assess a legal punishment, the court properly instructed them to reconsider the verdict.—Jones v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 761.

XIII. MOTIONS FOR NEW TRIAL AND IN ARREST.

Rulings on motion for new trial as subject of review, see post, § 1134.

§ 940. In a prosecution for homicide, newly discovered evidence of uncommunicated threats.

improper question.—Askew v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 287.

§ 1119. Complaint as to a statement by the attorney for the commonwealth, in arguing a case which is not shown by the bill of exceptions, will not be considered on appeal.—Miller v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 518.

(F) DISMISSAL, HEARING, AND RE-HEARING.

§ 1131. An appeal from a conviction will be dismissed, where there was no sentence.—Robinson v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 763.

(G) REVIEW.

§ 1134. In a bigamy prosecution, where accused's marriage was proved by other competent evidence, it was unnecessary to determine on appeal whether his wife's testimony was competent for that purpose.—Le Grand v. State (Ark.) 1028.

§ 1134. Under Cr. Code Prac. § 281, the Court of Appeals has no power to review the denial of a motion for a new trial in a criminal case.—Jenkins v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 846.

§ 1137. Where accused introduced incompetent statements of deceased that he attempted to cut accused, he may not object on appeal that equally incompetent testimony was admitted in rebuttal thereof.—Thomas v. State (Tenn.) 1041.

§ 1144. A conviction on a substituted indictment will be reversed, where the record fails to show that the substitution was by permission of the court.—Brooks v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 920.

§ 1149. Exercise of discretion by a trial judge, on an application for a bill of particulars in a criminal case, is reviewable, and subject to correction, if abused.—Bailey v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 140.

§ 1156. The overruling of a motion for a new trial on the ground of the incompetency of a juror held not an abuse of the trial court's discretion.—State v. Smith (Mo.) 1062.

§ 1158. Under Code Cr. Proc. art. 819, denial of motion for new trial, made five days after trial and sentence, will not be reviewed.—Young v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 16.

§ 1159. A conviction will not be reversed as contrary to the weight of the evidence, when there is any evidence to show accused's guilt.—Jenkins v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 846.

§ 1159. The jury may rely on the testimony of a witness, and the court on appeal cannot disturb the verdict on the ground that the witness was unworthy of belief because of the impeaching testimony.—Etly v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 896.

§ 1159. An appellate court will not set aside a conviction unless there is no substantial evidence of defendant's guilt.—State v. Scott (Mo.) 1069.

§ 1159. A conviction will not be set aside as against the evidence unless there is an entire failure of proof or the finding is the result of prejudice or mistake.—State v. Barton (Mo.) 1111.

§ 1159. A verdict on conflicting evidence will not be disturbed on appeal where there is substantial evidence to support it.—State v. McDowell (Mo.) 1113.

§ 1159. A conviction which there is substantial evidence to support will not be disturbed on appeal.—State v. George (Mo.) 1116.

§ 1159. On a criminal trial, where there is substantial testimony to support a verdict, it § 1165. Submitting to the jury, the question of the materiality of alleged perjured testimony held harmless.—Grissom v. State (Ark.) 1011.

§ 1169. In a bigamy prosecution, where accused's previous marriage was proved by competent evidence, the admission of incompetent evidence to prove the same fact was not prejudicial.—Le Grand v. State (Ark.) 1028.

§ 1169. In an abduction prosecution, the admission of court and penitentiary records showing that one of the same name as accused had been convicted of rape and had served sentence, without first identifying accused as the same person, held not reversible error.—State v. Baldwin (Mo.) 1123.

§ 1169. In an abduction prosecution, the admission of testimony by the girl's father that he did not consent to her going away with accused, even if error as being immaterial, was not reversible.—State v. Baldwin (Mo.) 1123.

§ 1169. Questions asked by the state of accused's mother as to her testimony in a former trial held not ground for reversal, where not answered, and accused thereafter introduced such testimony.—Dobbs v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 921.

§ 1169. In a rape prosecution, prosecutrix's answer to a question held not reversible error.—Holloway v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 928.

§ 1169. To prove defendant's failure to testify on his preliminary trial is reversible error, if proper exception is taken.—Pryse v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 938.

§ 1170½. The admission of evidence to impeach a witness, though too remote, held not reversible error, where the witness' testimony was immaterial.—Lard v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 762.

§ 1171. A confession of error by the Attorney General, on account of remarks of the prosecuting attorney, held unsustainable, where defendant's judicial confession justified a conviction of a graver offense than that of which he was found guilty.—Skaggs v. State (Ark.) 344.

§ 1171. Argument of the district attorney held reversible error.—Askew v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 287.

§ 1172. Accused having testified fully as to the manner of the killing, so that the state's case did not rest entirely on statements of accused as to killing, the court's omission to charge that the state must disprove accused's statements to secure a conviction, if error, was not reversible.—Casey v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 534.

§ 1172. As a general rule, whatever errors there are in the charge are eliminated by reason of the acquittal of the offense to which the charge pertains.—Pannell v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 536.

§ 1172. As a general rule all errors in the charge pertaining to the offense of which accused is convicted are eliminated where the minimum punishment is assessed and where the facts conclusively show guilt of such offense.—Pannell v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 536.

§ 1172. An error in the charge pertaining to the offense of which accused is convicted held reversible.—Pannell v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 536.

§ 1175. In a prosecution for taking a female away from her father for purposes of concubinage, error in not requiring a finding that accused was not married to the girl was not reversible, where accused practically admitted that they were not married, and no issue was raised as to their marriage.—State v. Baldwin (Mo.) 1123.

i luted by oil flowing into it from a tank could recover for the pollution up to the time she could have cleaned it.—Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. Ry. Co. v. Gillispie (Ky.) 89.

(C) INTEREST, COSTS, AND EXPENSES OF LITIGATION.

In action for wrongfully suing out writ of garnishment, see Garnishment, § 251.

IV. LIQUIDATED DAMAGES AND PENALTIES.

§ 79. Provision in a contract of sale of standing trees for payment of $1 per tree for scattering trees left standing at expiration of contract held enforceable as one for liquidated damages.—Blackwood v. Liebke (Ark.) 210.

V. EXEMPLARY DAMAGES.

For particular injuries.

See Conspiracy, § 20; Libel and Slander, § 120.

§ 91. The case of injury from driving into a telephone pole in the side of a road held not one for punitive damages.—Bevis v. Vanceburg Telephone Co. (Ky.) 811.

VI. MEASURE OF DAMAGES.

For particular injuries.

Eviction of tenant renting on shares, see Landlord and Tenant, § 331.

For delay in delivering telegram, see Telegraphs and Telephones, §§ 67, 68.

Wrongful dispossession of tenant, see Landlord and Tenant, § 318.

Wrongful execution, see Execution, § 472.

Wrongful expulsion from membership in beneficial association, see Beneficial Associations, § 10.

(A) INJURIES TO THE PERSON.

§ 95. Grounds of compensation to an injured employé stated.—Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. Ry. Co. v. Fortner (Ky.) 847.

§ 101. Under Rev. St. 1899, § 4335 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 2378), a married woman suing for personal injuries cannot recover for hospital fees and medicines, where it does not appear how she became liable for them.—Engelman v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co. (Mo. App.) 700.

(B) INJURIES TO PROPERTY.

Obstruction of surface water, see Waters and Water Courses, § 125.

§ 109. It is only when injury to real property is permanent that the damages therefor are measured by the depreciation in the market value of the property.—Heilbron v. St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. of Texas (Tex. Civ. App.) 979.

(C) BREACH OF CONTRACT.

§ 124. Where plaintiff was delayed in setting piling by defendant's delay in furnishing the piles and was prevented from setting them on another portion, he was entitled to recover for lost profits as to the latter and for lost time and expense as to the former.—Williams, Kohler & Barrier v. Yates (Ky.) 503.

VII. INADEQUATE AND EXCESSIVE DAMAGES.

§ 131. A verdict of $2,500 in a personal injury action against a telephone company held not excessive.—Heiberger v. Missouri & Kansas Telephone Co. (Mo. App.) 730.

§ 132. A recovery of $4,500 for an injury to the forefinger of the left hand resulting in its permanent stiffening held excessive.—Georgetown Water, Gas, Electric & Power Co. v. Forwood (Ky.) 112.

§ 132. A verdict of $12,000 for injury to a brakeman held not excessive.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Schroeder (Ky.) 874.

VIII. PLEADING, EVIDENCE, AND ASSESSMENT.

(A) PLEADING.

Conclusions in pleading, see Pleading, § 8.
Trial amendment, see Pleading, § 245.

§ 142. Damages sustained by the shortening of plaintiff's leg as the result of a fracture caused by defendant's alleged negligence, held special, and necessary to be pleaded.—Fleddermann v. St. Louis Transit Co. (Mo. App.) 1143.

§ 142. An allegation of plaintiff's injury held sufficient to entitle plaintiff to recover special damages for the shortening of plaintiff's leg due to a fracture of the hip.—Fleddermann v. St. Louis Transit Co. (Mo. App.) 1143.

§ 143. Allegation of petition as to loss of time held to be at least ambiguous, and so not to be considered as asserting a claim to special damages.—Central Kentucky Traction Co. v. Chapman (Ky.) 438.

§ 159. Loss of time from personal injury held a special damage, which must be pleaded.—Central Kentucky Traction Co. v. Chapman (Ky.) 438.

§ 159. Though permanent impairment of earning capacity from personal injury is an element of general damages, held it ought to be pleaded.—Central Kentucky Traction Co. v. Chapman (Ky.) 438.

§ 159. Plaintiff held entitled to recover for loss of earnings after his employment in which he was engaged when injured was terminated up to the time of the trial under an averment that he had or would lose them.—Smith v. St. Louis Transit Co. (Mo. App.) 216.

§ 159. Loss of earnings are special damages which must be specially pleaded and proved, in order to be recoverable in an action for personal injuries.—Cole v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co. (Mo. App.) 684.

§ 159. An item of special damages not pleaded in a suit against a carrier for loss of freight held not recoverable.—Pacific Express Co. v. Jones (Tex. Civ. App.) 952.

§ 162. In an action for personal injuries, a recovery for loss of time held proper under the pleadings and evidence.—Cole v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co. (Mo. App.) 684.

(C) PROCEEDINGS FOR ASSESSMENT.

§ 206. It was not error to refuse to require one suing for personal injury to undergo examination by defendant's physicians.—Taylor v. White (Tex. Civ. App.) 554.

§ 208. Evidence held to justify submission of the issue of loss of earnings resulting from plaintiff's injury to the jury.—Smith v. St. Louis Transit Co. (Mo. App.) 216.

§ 208. Evidence held to justify a submission of the issue of the permanency of plaintiff's injury to the jury.—Williamson v. St. Louis & M. R. R. Co. (Mo. App.) 239.

§ 215. Evidence of gross neglect in backing a train onto a brakeman held to present a question of punitive damages for the jury.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Schroeder (Ky.) 874.

Attempting to influence persons summoned on jury as contempt of court, see Contempt, § 14.

EMINENT DOMAIN.

Public improvements by municipalities, see Municipal Corporations, §§ 269-567.

I. NATURE, EXTENT, AND DELEGATION OF POWER.

§ 10. The right to condemn property for a public use can be conferred on a private corporation, but if the condemnation is not for a public use, the right cannot be conferred either upon a private or public corporation.—Alfred Phosphate Co. v. Duck River Phosphate Co. (Tenn.) 410.

§ 13. Const. art. 1, § 21, prohibiting the taking of property for public use without just compensation, inhibits the taking of property for private use, and requires that it be taken for the use of the public, whose rights must be secured by law and not merely be dependent on the consent of the owner, and it is not sufficient that the exercise of the right will be for the general benefit or advantage of the public.—Alfred Phosphate Co. v. Duck River Phosphate Co. (Tenn.) 410.

§ 13. The condemnation of a right of way of a private railroad by a phosphate mining and manufacturing corporation, organized under Acts 1875, p. 247, c. 142, § 11 (Shannon's Code, § 2333), authorizing such corporations to condemn land, held not for a public use, so that the statute authorizing such condemnation was invalid.—Alfred Phosphate Co. v. Duck River Phosphate Co. (Tenn.) 410.

§ 58. The right of way only of an existing private railroad cannot be condemned without condemning the entire road.—Alfred Phosphate Co. v. Duck River Phosphate Co. (Tenn.) 410.

II. COMPENSATION.

(A) NECESSITY AND SUFFICIENCY IN GENERAL.

§ 69. Private property cannot be taken or damaged for public use without compensation.—Heilbron v. St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. of Texas (Tex. Civ. App.) 610, 979.

§ 70. The purpose of the constitutional provision prohibiting the damaging or destroying of private property for a public use without compensation was to place public, or quasi public, corporations upon the same basis with private persons as to liability for such injuries.—Heilbron v. St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. of Texas (Tex. Civ. App.) 610, 979.

(B) TAKING OR INJURING PROPERTY AS GROUND FOR COMPENSATION.

§ 85. If a road located on a railroad's right of way was not a public highway, the railroad could destroy it for its own purposes, if it did so in a lawful manner, without being liable to adjacent owners.—Heilbron v. St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. of Texas (Tex. Civ. App.) 610, 979.

§ 87. In proceedings to condemn land, damages to personal property or the expense of moving it are not proper elements of damage.—Kansas City Southern Ry. Co. v. Anderson (Ark.) 1030.

§ 90. Owner of property adjacent to a railroad cut held not entitled to recover compensation for depreciation in value of his property

§ 90. To constitute a damaging of private property within the constitutional provision prohibiting the damaging of private property for public use without compensation, there must be an interference with its free use and enjoyment, resulting in some physical inconvenience, discomfort, or detriment.—Heilbron v. St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. of Texas (Tex. Civ. App.) 610, 979.

§ 90. The rule that private property cannot be taken or damaged for public use without compensation has been extended to give the owner of land adjacent to a railroad damages incident to the proximity of the railroad to his premises, though they are not actually invaded.—Heilbron v. St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. of Texas (Tex. Civ. App.) 610, 979.

§ 90. A property owner is not bound to keep his premises attractive, or to refrain from making them unattractive or offensive to the aesthetic sense of his neighbors, so long as his use thereof does not interfere with their use of their own property.—Heilbron v. St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. of Texas (Tex. Civ. App.) 610, 979.

§ 90. Where damage to real property is permanent, so that the depreciation in its market value constitutes the measure of damages, recovery may be had for prospective as well as present injuries.—Heilbron v. St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. of Texas (Tex. Civ. App.) 979.

§ 90. Where injuries to a public highway were not permanent, but were capable of being remedied by the wrongdoer or others interested in the highway, abutting owners could not recover for prospective injuries to the property, based upon the depreciation in its market value.—Heilbron v. St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. of Texas (Tex. Civ. App.) 979.

§ 119. A street railway spur track held not to entitle an abutter to recover for injury resulting from its proper construction.—Donner v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co. (Mo. App.) 669.

(C) MEASURE AND AMOUNT.

§ 133. A statement that, if the improvements on certain lots sought to be condemned were fixtures, they must also be condemned, held proper.—Kansas City Southern Ry. Co. v. Anderson (Ark.) 1030.

III. PROCEEDINGS TO TAKE PROPERTY AND ASSESS COMPENSATION.

§ 262. An instruction based on uncontradicted evidence in a condemnation proceeding authorizing an allowance for land, buildings, and machinery held not prejudicial to plaintiff.—Kansas City Southern Ry. Co. v. Anderson (Ark.) 1030.

§ 262. In a condemnation proceeding, a statement that it required effort and negotiation to sell real estate at its market value held without prejudice.—Kansas City Southern Ry. Co. v. Anderson (Ark.) 1030.

EMPIRICISM.

See Physicians and Surgeons, § 2

EMPLOYÉS.

See Master and Servant.

ENCROACHMENT.

On highways, see Highways, §§ 155, 164.

acquire an adverse title to that which the ancestor conveyed.—Wm. D. Cleveland & Sons v. Smith (Tex. Civ. App.) 547.

III. EQUITABLE ESTOPPEL.

Of particular classes of persons or persons in particular relations.

Assignee of mortgage, see Mortgages, § 275.

To assert or deny particular facts, rights, claims, or liabilities.

Against bank to show nature of indorsement of note, see Bills and Notes, § 242.

Against buyer to sue for breach of contract of sale, see Sales, § 407.

Against surety, see Principal and Surety, § 129.

Liability of foreign corporation on note, see Corporations, § 659.

Liability on corporate stock subscriptions, see Corporations, § 84.

Liability on insurance policy, see Insurance, § 559.

Membership in mutual benefit insurance association, see Insurance, § 724.

Right to avoid or forfeit insurance policy, see Insurance, §§ 378-392.

(A) NATURE AND ESSENTIALS IN GENERAL.

§ 55. Conduct of a party's agent held not to estop it from contending for a true interpretation of a contract.—Bader v. Chicago Mill & Lumber Co. (Mo. App.) 1154.

(B) GROUNDS OF ESTOPPEL.

§ 65. The court held entitled to invoke a certain equitable maxim ex mero motu.—Creamer v. Bivert (Mo.) 1118.

§ 92. Where a lienor under a trust deed took credit for a part of the proceeds of the trustee's sale, he was estopped from denying the validity of the trust deed and the regularity of the foreclosure.—Grooms v. Mullett (Mo. App.) 683.

§ 93. Parties held not estopped by silence to complain that a dam was an unlawful obstruction of a stream.—Ireland v. Bowman & Cockrell (Ky.) 56.

§ 95. Defendant held not estopped to claim under an assignment of certain life insurance as against a co-surety on a note.—Little v. Berry (Ky.) 902.

(C) PERSONS AFFECTED.

Membership in mutual benefit insurance association, see Insurance, § 724.

(E) PLEADING, EVIDENCE, TRIAL, AND REVIEW.

In action on insurance policy, see Insurance, § 640.

EVIDENCE.

See Witnesses.

Applicability of instructions to evidence, see Trial, §§ 251-253.

Questions of fact for jury, see Trial, §§ 136-143.

Reception at trial, see Criminal Law, §§ 662-687; Trial, §§ 33-105.

Vested rights in rules of, see Constitutional Law, § 109.

As to particular facts or issues.

See Adverse Possession, §§ 13, 112, 113; Boundaries, §§ 33-46; Death, § 4; Deeds, §§ 193-211; Fraudulent Conveyances, §§ 295, 300; Release, § 57.

Character of indorsement of note, see Bills and Notes, § 242.

negligent use of street, see Municipal Corporations, § 706.

Defense of statute of limitations, see Limitation of Actions, § 196.

Existence of agency, see Principal and Agent, § 22.

Forgery of deed, see Deeds, § 193.

Gift, see Gifts, § 49.

Mental anguish from delay in delivery of telegram, see Telegraphs and Telephones, § 66.

Mental capacity of grantor of deed, see Deeds, § 211.

Motive in homicide, see Homicide, § 166.

Negligence in use of street or highway, see Municipal Corporations, § 706.

Payment of chattel mortgage, see Chattel Mortgages, § 246.

Property conveyed, see Deeds, § 118.

Proximate cause of injury to person on or near street car tracks, see Street Railroads, § 114.

Rate of speed of street car, see Street Railroads, § 114.

Relation of landlord and tenant, see Landlord and Tenant, § 18.

Threats, see Homicide, §§ 167, 190.

Undue influence in procuring execution of deed, see Deeds, § 196.

Undue influence in procuring execution of will, see Wills, §§ 163, 164, 165, 166.

Waiver of vendor's lien, see Vendor and Purchaser, § 281.

In actions by or against particular classes of persons.

See Carriers, § 228; Corporations, § 269; Landlord and Tenant, § 318; Street Railroads, § 114.

Joint debtors, see Contribution, § 9.

In particular civil actions or proceedings.

See Cancellation of Instruments, § 47; Divorce, §§ 127, 130; Libel and Slander, §§ 103, 106; Negligence, §§ 121-135; Partition, § 63; Trespass to Try Title, §§ 33-41; Trover and Conversion, § 39.

By tenant against landlord for injuries from defects in premises, see Landlord and Tenant, § 169.

For breach of contract, see Contracts, § 349.

For breach of contract to devise or bequeath, see Wills, § 68.

For compensation of broker, see Brokers, §§ 85, 86.

For contribution, see Contribution, § 9.

For death of passenger, see Carriers, § 318.

For delay in delivery of telegram, see Telegraphs and Telephones, § 66.

For delay in transportation of shipment, see Carriers, § 104.

For fraud in procuring compromise of claim under life insurance policy, see Insurance, § 579.

For injuries caused by operation of railroad, see Railroads, § 347.

For injuries caused by operation of street railroad, see Street Railroads, § 114.

For injuries from obstruction of navigable stream, see Navigable Waters, § 26.

For injuries to live stock in transportation, see Carriers, § 228.

For injuries to passenger, see Carriers, § 317.

For injuries to trespasser by servant, see Master and Servant, § 330.

For price of goods sold, see Sales, § 358.

For wrongful dispossession of tenant, see Landlord and Tenant, § 318.

For wrongful expulsion from beneficial association, see Beneficial Associations, § 20.

On insurance contract, see Insurance, § 819.

On insurance policy, see Insurance, § 646.

On liquor dealers' bond, see Intoxicating Liquors, § 309.

To abate nuisance, see Nuisance, § 33.

duction of the original.—McDonald v. Hanks (Tex. Civ. App.) 604.

§ 186. Where two copies of a letter are made at the same time, and one is sent and the other retained, the one sent becomes the original and the other the copy.—McDonald v. Hanks (Tex. Civ. App.) 604.

§ 187. The sufficiency of the proof offered as a predicate for the admission of an alleged lost deed is within the judicial discretion of the trial court under all the circumstances of the particular case.—McDonald v. Hanks (Tex. Civ. App.) 604.

VII. ADMISSIONS.

As evidence of adverse possession, see Adverse Possession, § 114.

(A) NATURE, FORM, AND INCIDENTS IN GENERAL.

§ 220. Statements made in the presence of a party, without contradiction by him, held not to be construed as an admission by him of a fact referred to.—Hansen v. Williams (Tex. Civ. App.) 312.

(B) BY PARTIES OR OTHERS INTERESTED IN EVENT.

§ 226. In an action to set aside a will for undue influence, evidence of declarations by one legatee, since deceased, is not admissible to affect the interest of the other legatees, where no collusion is shown to have existed.—Helsley v. Moss (Tex. Civ. App.) 599.

(D) BY AGENTS OR OTHER REPRESENTATIVES.

§ 241. Statements of the agent, made at the time of the transaction, or as soon thereafter as to come within the rule of the res gestæ, are admissible.—Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Cunningham (Tex. Civ. App.) 767.

§ 244. Declarations of an employé of a railroad company, made in the performance of his duties, held binding on the company.—Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Cunningham (Tex. Civ. App.) 767.

(E) PROOF AND EFFECT.

§ 258. Where there is evidence from which the jury may find agency, the declarations of the agent, made during the agency, in regard to the transaction connected therewith, are admissible.—Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Cunningham (Tex. Civ. App.) 767.

§ 258. A principal held not entitled to complain of admission in evidence of declarations of the agent made during the agency in regard to the transaction connected therewith.—Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Cunningham (Tex. Civ. App.) 767.

VIII. DECLARATIONS.

(A) NATURE, FORM, AND INCIDENTS IN GENERAL.

§ 271. In a suit to recover loans claimed to have been made by decedent, testimony held inadmissible as self-serving declarations.—Jackson Baptist Church v. Combs' Ex'r (Ky.) 119.

IX. HEARSAY.

§ 317. Certain evidence in action for divorce held competent only for the purpose of contradicting a witness.—Coles v. Coles (Ky.) 417.

§ 317. Actual possession by a tenant to establish adverse possession cannot be shown by the declaration of the tenant acknowledging the tenancy.—Dunn v. Taylor (Tex.) 265.

ment as to what one of defendant's agents said to decedent on employing him held properly excluded.—Boehrens v. Brice (Tex. Civ. App.) 72.

§ 318. In libel for charging plaintiff with smuggling, the report of the government officer who investigated the case was inadmissible as evidence of the facts stated therein, being hearsay.—San Antonio Light Pub. Co. v. Lewy (Tex. Civ. App.) 574.

X. DOCUMENTARY EVIDENCE.

Admission of defectively acknowledged instrument, see Acknowledgment, § 47.

Reception of at trial, see Trial, § 51.

(C) PRIVATE WRITINGS AND PUBLICATIONS.

§ 354. Certain entries in a pocket memorandum book held not admissible as entries in a book of accounts.—Little v. Berry (Ky.) 90.

§ 355. Certificates of sale by commission merchants, attached to a deposition, held admissible, though not verified as correct, in view of other evidence as to the facts stated.—Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. v. Hopkins (Tex. Civ. App.) 306.

§ 364. In an action for death, mortality table showing decedent's life expectancy at the time he died, held admissible.—Huber v. Texas & P. Ry. Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 984.

(D) PRODUCTION, AUTHENTICATION AND EFFECT.

§ 366. A commissioner's deed bearing an indorsement of the court's approval held admissible without a copy of the order of approval.—Conley v. Breathitt Coal, Iron & Lumber Co. (Ky.) 504.

§ 372. Recitals of a deed 26 years old were admissible, along with other circumstances, to establish defendants' chain of title.—McMahon v. McDonald (Tex. Civ. App.) 322.

§ 372. Execution of a power of attorney under which a deed more than 30 years old had been executed held to be presumed without proof.—McDonald v. Hanks (Tex. Civ. App.) 604.

§ 372. A county clerk's certificate of the record of a deed in question held admissible to show the prior existence and record of the deed.—McDonald v. Hanks (Tex. Civ. App.) 604.

§ 372. Rule stated as to admission of ancient instruments in evidence without proof of execution.—Morgan v. Tutt (Tex. Civ. App.) 958.

§ 372. A bond for title with a transfer indorsed thereon held not admissible in evidence as an ancient instrument.—Morgan v. Tutt (Tex. Civ. App.) 958.

§ 372. One offering in evidence an ancient instrument without proof of execution has the burden of explaining any suspicious change in the instrument.—Morgan v. Tutt (Tex. Civ. App.) 958.

§ 378. On an issue as to the execution and delivery of an alleged lost deed, letters showing plaintiff's endeavor to discover the deed held admissible without proof of the signatures of the writers.—McDonald v. Hanks (Tex. Civ. App.) 604.

XI. PAROL OR EXTRINSIC EVIDENCE AFFECTING WRITINGS.

(A) CONTRADICTING, VARYING, OR ADDING TO TERMS OF WRITTEN INSTRUMENT.

§ 397. If an element of a transaction is mentioned or covered by a writing, it is admissible.

debts where the pleadings alleged that the debts were greater than the value of the estate, though there was no reference or report as to the necessity of sale.—Union Trust & Savings Co. v. Marshall's Adm'rs (Ky.) 73.

§ 349. The record in proceedings by an executor to sell the estate, not affirmatively showing that infant defendants were not summoned and did not appear, it will be presumed, on collateral proceedings, they were properly before the court.—Dennis v. Alves (Ky.) 483.

§ 349. Where all the persons interested in an estate were made parties, the court had jurisdiction, so that a judgment in proceedings by an executor to sell the estate for payment of debts was not void, even though erroneous.—Dennis v. Alves (Ky.) 483.

§ 356. In a suit by administrators for settlement, which was consolidated with a creditors' suit to have certain alleged preferences declared an assignment for the benefit of creditors, certain lienholders being made parties, a sale of the land could be made, under Civ. Code Prac. § 692, relating to actions to enforce liens, though such lienholders had not filed their answers and set up their liens.—Union Trust & Savings Co. v. Marshall's Adm'rs (Ky.) 73.

§ 356. In a suit by administrators to sell land to pay debts, consolidated with a creditors' suit to have preferential mortgages declared an assignment for the benefit of creditors, the land held properly sold before determining the rights of creditors and lienholders.—Union Trust & Savings Co. v. Marshall's Adm'rs (Ky.) 73.

EXEMPLARY DAMAGES.

See Damages, § 91.

EXEMPTIONS.

See Homestead.

From inheritance tax, see Taxation, § 873.

From taxation in general, see Taxation, § 242.

Implied repeal of statute, see Statutes, § 159.

Restraining prosecution of action in foreign jurisdiction brought by creditor for purpose of evading exemption laws, see Injunction, § 33.

I. NATURE AND EXTENT.

(D) LIABILITIES ENFORCEABLE AGAINST EXEMPT PROPERTY.

§ 76. The hardships imposed by Rev. St. 1899, § 4327a, enacted in 1903 (Laws 1903, p. 240 [Ann. St. 1906, p. 2376]), upon one remarrying after a divorce and award of alimony is requiring him to support two families, held immaterial on a judicial construction of the section.—Anderson v. Norvell-Shapleigh Hardware Co. (Mo. App.) 733.

§ 76. Rev. St. 1899, § 4327a, enacted in 1903 (Laws 1903, p. 240 [Ann. St. 1906, p. 2376]), held to take away the exemption right granted by section 3162 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1797) as against an execution for alimony.—Anderson v. Norvell-Shapleigh Hardware Co. (Mo. App.) 733.

EXHIBITS.

Annexed to pleading, see Pleading, § 311.

EXPERT TESTIMONY.

In civil actions, see Evidence, §§ 471-543.

In criminal prosecutions, see Criminal Law, § 448.

EXPLOSIVES.

Criminal responsibility for placing dynamite or other explosives in waters of state for purpose of killing fish, see Fish, § 9.

original negligent act and the subsequent injury, so as to relieve defendant from liability.—Pittsburg Reduction Co. v. Horton (Ark.) 647

EXPRESS CONTRACTS.

See Contracts, § 3.

EXPULSION.

Of member of beneficial association, see Beneficial Associations, §§ 10, 12, 20.

EXTORTION.

§ 4. Extortion defined.—State v. Cooper (Tenn.) 1048.

§ 4. For a justice of the peace to demand and receive fees prior to the time they are due constitutes extortion, under Shannon's Code §§ 6352, 6353, 6714.—State v. Cooper (Tenn.) 1048.

§ 4. For a justice of the peace to demand and receive fees before they are due constitutes extortion at common law.—State v. Cooper (Tenn.) 1048.

EXTRADITION.

Release of accused on habeas corpus, see Habeas Corpus, § 30.

II. INTERSTATE.

§ 24. Where a demand for extradition is accompanied by appropriate proceedings, the executive of the state on which the demand is made has no discretion to refuse it.—Ex parte Coleman (Tex. Cr. App.) 17.

§ 30. Petitioner held a fugitive from justice, where he removed from Alabama, where the offense was committed, though he remained there a considerable time, to the knowledge of the authorities, and then removed to Georgia, and then to Texas.—Ex parte Coleman (Tex. Cr. App.) 17.

§ 32. Where extradition proceedings were based on a sufficient affidavit, a defective indictment, furnished by the authorities of the demanding state to the sheriff having accused in custody pending habeas corpus proceedings, held immaterial.—Ex parte Coleman (Tex. Cr. App.) 17.

§ 32. An indictment for homicide, which was sufficient under the laws of the demanding state, though it did not allege the time or venue of the offense, held not objectionable on that ground in the extradition proceedings.—Ex parte Coleman (Tex. Cr. App.) 17.

§ 36. A recital in a Governor's warrant that an alleged fugitive from justice was charged by indictment, instead of by affidavit, as shown by the extradition papers, held an immaterial clerical error.—Ex parte Coleman (Tex. Cr. App.) 17.

FACTORS.

See Brokers; Principal and Agent.

FALSE IMPRISONMENT.

I. CIVIL LIABILITY.

(A) ACTS CONSTITUTING FALSE IMPRISONMENT AND LIABILITY THEREFOR.

§ 15. A railway company held not liable for the arrest of plaintiffs, who, on insisting on being entitled to pass through a station gate.

Charge of them.—Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co. v. Nelson (Ark.) 44; Same v. Buchanan, Id.

FALSE PRETENSES.

§ 23. Defendant and B. held both guilty of swindling as principals.—Medders v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 270.

§ 36. In a prosecution for swindling, the indictment held sufficient.—Medders v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 270.

§ 38. In a prosecution for obtaining money from a bank by false pretenses, it was not material that the money was placed to the credit of accused's companion and by them checked out, instead of being originally paid to them.—Medders v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 270.

FALSE SWEARING.

See Perjury.

FAST DRIVING.

On streets, liability for injuries, see Municipal Corporations, § 706.

FEDERAL COURTS.

See Courts, § 273.

FEES.

Extortion, see Extortion.

Of particular classes of officers or other persons. See Clerks of Courts, § 32.

County attorney, see District and Prosecuting Attorneys, § 5.

FEE SIMPLE ESTATE.

Creation by deed, see Deeds, § 124.

FELLOW SERVANTS.

See Master and Servant, §§ 160-201.

FENCES.

Appellate jurisdiction of court of appeals, in action to compel contribution to cost of division fence, see Courts, § 231.

§ 28. Allegation of ownership in a prosecution for breaking and injuring a fence held sufficient, in view of Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 2227, and Code Cr. Proc. 1895, art. 445.—Pate v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 757.

§ 28. Evidence in a prosecution for breaking and injuring a fence held to show lack of consent of the owners.—Pate v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 757.

FIDUCIARY RELATIONS.

Affecting validity of deed, see Deeds, § 72.

FILING.

Bill of exceptions, see Exceptions, Bill of, §§ 36-54.

Criminal information or complaint, see Indictment and Information, § 45.

Indictment or presentment, see Indictment and Information, § 14.

Statement of case or facts for purpose of review, see Appeal and Error, § 564.

FINAL JUDGMENT.

Appealability, see Appeal and Error, § 71.

Review on appeal or writ of error, see Appeal and Error.

FIRES.

Caused by operation of railroad, see Railroads, §§ 457-482.

FISH.

§ 9. Rev. St. 1899, §§ 7456, 7464 (Ann. St. 1906, pp. 3593, 3595), prohibiting the placing of dynamite in waters of the state whereby fish may be killed, and the killing or taking of fish by such means, held not repealed by the Walmsley Game Law, Laws 1905, p. 163, § 29 (Ann. St. 1906, § 7500-29).—State v. Hodges (Mo.) 1072.

FIXTURES.

§ 7. Buildings and machinery erected on land and used for planing mill held fixtures.—Kansas City Southern Ry. Co. v. Anderson (Ark.) 1030.

FLAGMEN.

Rules of railroad companies for protection of employes, see Master and Servant, § 145.

FORCIBLE DEFILEMENT.

See Rape.

FORCIBLE ENTRY AND DETAINER.

Computation of time for filing traverse, see Time, § 10.

FORECLOSURE.

Of mortgage, see Chattel Mortgages, §§ 269-283; Mortgages, §§ 376, 398-548.

FOREIGN CORPORATIONS.

See Corporations, §§ 634-668.

FOREIGN RECEIVERSHIP.

See Receivers, § 210.

FOREIGN WILLS.

Probate or record, see Wills, § 245.

FORFEITURES.

For nonpayment of purchase price of land, see Vendor and Purchaser, §§ 78, 95.

Of bond of seller of text-books, see Schools and School Districts, § 81.

Of homestead, see Homestead, § 168.

Of insurance, see Insurance, §§ 328-368.

Of lease, see Landlord and Tenant, §§ 111, 112.

FORGERY.

Rights of private parties as affected by forgery of deed, see Deeds, § 188.

FORMER ADJUDICATION.

See Judgment, §§ 570, 632, 654, 682.

FORMS OF ACTION.

See Action, § 131; Ejectment; Replevin; Trespass, §§ 25-68; Trover and Conversion.

FORNICATION.

See Incest.

For cases in Dec. Dig. & Amer. Digs. 1907 to date & Indexes see same topic & section (§) NUMBER ious, § 208.

To operate telephone, see Telegraphs and Telephones, § 7.

§ 1. A telephone franchise granted by a city is in the nature of a contract for the performance of a public service.—Louisville Home Telephone Co. v. City of Louisville (Ky.) 855.

FRAUD.

See False Pretenses; Fraudulent Conveyances. Invalidating written instrument as evidence, see Evidence, § 434.

By particular classes of persons, or persons in particular relations.

Corporate officers or agents, see Corporations, § 423.

Insurance agents, see Insurance, § 93.

Insurance companies, see Insurance, § 579.

In particular classes of conveyances, contracts, transactions, or proceedings.

See Deeds, § 70; Insurance, §§ 256, 283; Sales, § 38.

Compromise of claim under life insurance policy, see Insurance, § 579.

Contracts in general, see Contracts, § 94.

Particular remedies.

See Equity, § 13.

In sale of land, see Vendor and Purchaser, § 33.

FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES.

By mortgagor of chattels, see Chattel Mortgages, §§ 217, 228.

Transfers by insolvent corporation, see Corporations, § 542.

I. TRANSFERS AND TRANSACTIONS INVALID.

(D) INDEBTEDNESS, INSOLVENCY, AND INTENT OF GRANTOR.

§ 66. A person held not to have been a creditor of a grantor, as having a cause of action against him for malicious prosecution when he conveyed property to his wife.—Rosen v. Levy (Tenn.) 1042.

II. RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES OF PARTIES AND PURCHASERS.

(A) ORIGINAL PARTIES.

§ 174. A grantor who conveyed to defeat collection of a judgment held not entitled to relief against the conveyance in equity.—Creamer v. Bivert (Mo.) 1118.

§ 174. The grantee of premises conveyed to defeat the collection of a judgment will be denied affirmative relief in a suit by grantor to set aside the deed.—Creamer v. Bivert (Mo.) 1118.

III. REMEDIES OF CREDITORS AND PURCHASERS.

(A) PERSONS ENTITLED TO ASSERT INVALIDITY.

§ 208. A voluntary conveyance, free from fraud in fact, is void only as to existing creditors of the grantor.—Rosen v. Levy (Tenn.) 1042.

(C) RIGHT OF ACTION TO SET ASIDE TRANSFER, AND DEFENSES.

§ 241. Under Ky. St. 1903, § 1907a, held, that a judgment creditor, without obtaining a return of nulla bona, may bring suit to set aside a fraudulent conveyance.—Cress v. Belknap Hardware & Mfg. Co. (Ky.) 93.

of a claim against the husband.—Rosen v. Levy (Tenn.) 1042.

§ 300. Evidence held to support a finding that a deed by a father to his son to land theretofore conveyed by the father to another was fraudulent, and without real consideration.—Cawood v. Howard (Ky.) 109.

§ 300. In a suit to subject property standing in the name of another to a judgment against H., evidence held insufficient to show that any part of the price of the property had been paid by H.—Howell v. Union Grocery Co. (Ky.) 912.

FREIGHT.

Franchise tax on corporation engaged in freight carrying, see Taxation, § 117.

GARNISHMENT.

See Attachment; Execution.

V. LIEN OF GARNISHMENT AND LIABILITY OF GARNISHEE.

§ 105. A garnishment of property merely substituted plaintiff pro tanto to the rights of defendant in the property.—Moore & Bridgeman v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 947.

§ 111. A garnishee, after service upon him holds property of the defendant in his possession as a receiver or officer of the court, and cannot thereafter sell it or change its form so as to place an additional burden upon it, though authorized to do so by defendant.—Moore & Bridgeman v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 947.

§ 113. Where a garnishee was under contract with defendant to prepare rice for market and dispose of it, the garnishment of the rice did not suspend the garnishee's obligations under the contract, but it could proceed to perform the contract.—Moore & Bridgeman v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 947.

X. LIABILITIES ON BONDS OR UNDERTAKINGS.

§ 244. The surety on a garnishment bond is liable for the actual damages proximately resulting from the wrongful suing out of the writ.—Moore & Bridgeman v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 947.

§ 244. A surety on a garnishment bond held not liable for the depreciation in value of the property because of the garnishee's failure to prepare it for market and dispose of it under his contract with defendant, believing he could not do so after the garnishment.—Moore & Bridgeman v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 947.

XI. WRONGFUL GARNISHMENT.

§ 251. "Where, by the wrongful suing out of a writ of garnishment, money of defendant is wrongfully detained in the possession of the garnishee, defendant may recover from plaintiff as actual damages 6 per cent. interest on the money during the period it is unlawfully held by such garnishment proceedings."—Moore & Bridgeman v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 947.

GIFTS.

To wife, see Husband and Wife, § 116.

Transfer taxes, see Taxation, §§ 856-873.

§ 7. The use by the public, without objection, of an uninclosed portion of a railway's right of way in a manner that did not interfere with its use by the railroad did not make the way so used a public highway by prescription.—Heilbron v. St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. of Texas (Tex. Civ. App.) 610, 979.

(D) TITLE TO FEE AND RIGHTS OF ABUTTING OWNERS.

Compensation of abutting owners under law of eminent domain, see Eminent Domain, § 90.

§ 85. The only rights which abutting owners have in the public highway, for the deprivation of which they would have a cause of action, would be the right to use it for ingress and egress to and from their property.—Heilbron v. St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. of Texas (Tex. Civ. App.) 979.

§ 87. An abutting owner may recover for damages special to him, resulting from an obstruction in, or injury to, a public highway.—Heilbron v. St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. of Texas (Tex. Civ. App.) 610, 979.

§ 87. If a railroad company, by excavating on its right of way near a public highway, rendered the highway unsafe for travel by excavating too close to it, abutting property owners could compel the company to restore the highway to a safe condition.—Heilbron v. St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. of Texas (Tex. Civ. App.) 979.

V. REGULATION AND USE FOR TRAVEL.

(A) OBSTRUCTIONS AND ENCROACHMENTS.

§ 155. A private person cannot maintain an action for damages for the obstruction or destruction of a public highway, unless he has sustained some special injury different in kind and degree from that resulting to the public.—Heilbron v. St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. of Texas (Tex. Civ. App.) 979.

§ 164. Evidence held insufficient to support a conviction of willfully obstructing a public road.—Farrier v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 763.

HOMESTEAD.

See Exemptions.

Election between homestead and dower, see Dower, § 59.

I. NATURE, ACQUISITION, AND EXTENT.

(D) PROPERTY CONSTITUTING HOMESTEAD.

§ 60. Under Const. art. 16, § 51, held that, to constitute rural land a homestead, it must be used for some one purpose of a home.—Autry v. Reasor (Tex.) 748.

§ 80. Owner of homestead may sell the same and reinvest the proceeds in another homestead, which will be exempt to the same extent as would the homestead sold.—Baker v. Kash (Ky.) 820.

§ 80. A debtor cannot sell his homestead, retain or reinvest the money, and after several years buy other land and assert a homestead as against debts created before the later purchase.—Baker v. Kash (Ky.) 820.

(E) LIABILITIES ENFORCEABLE AGAINST HOMESTEAD.

§ 103. A judgment lien does not attach to the homestead of a judgment debtor.—Savage v. Cowan (Tex. Civ. App.) 319.

OR HEIRS.
§ 142. Where a widow elects to take dower, and it is of greater value than $1,000, she must make provision for the infants; but, if her dower is worth less than $1,000, the infant is given a homestead of $1,000, which must include the dower assigned to the widow, after which the remainder of the property is to be apportioned among the children, including the infants.—Phillips v. Williams (Ky.) 908; Williams v. Phillips, Id.

§ 142. The widow's election to take dower or to abandon the homestead cannot defeat the infant's homestead right in the property.—Phillips v. Williams (Ky.) 908; Williams v. Phillips, Id.

§ 145. Where a widow elects to take homestead in the lands of her deceased husband, she abandons the same by an attempted sale thereof.—Phillips v. Williams (Ky.) 908; Williams v. Phillips, Id.

IV. ABANDONMENT, WAIVER, OR FORFEITURE.

Conveyance by widow as abandonment of rights, see ante, § 145.

§ 168. The renting of a portion of a rural homestead deprives the rented part of its homestead character.—Autry v. Reasor (Tex.) 748.

HOMICIDE

Arrest of accused, see Arrest, § 65.

I. THE HOMICIDE.

§ 5. One cannot be convicted of a homicide unless his act caused decedent's death.—Noble v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 281.

III. MANSLAUGHTER.

§ 39. A killing under the circumstances stated held to constitute manslaughter.—Casey v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 534.

§ 39. Facts assumed held to constitute manslaughter.—Winn v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 918.

§ 39. To reduce a homicide to manslaughter the statute requires the existence of passion engendered by provocation at the time of the difficulty, and not the result of a former provocation.—Franks v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 941.

§ 40. One relying upon defendant's insulting conduct must show that the killing happened immediately upon the giving of the insults, or as soon as accused met decedent after being informed of his conduct.—Holcomb v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 754.

§ 47. Facts stated held to show no higher offense than manslaughter.—Young v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 276.

§ 49. One accused of homicide could rely upon decedent's insults to accused's wife, communicated to accused just before the homicide, to show that the killing was only manslaughter.—Holcomb v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 754.

§ 49. Manslaughter defined.—Holcomb v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 754.

IV. ASSAULT WITH INTENT TO KILL.

Prejudicial error in instruction, see post, § 338.

§ 84. An assault accompanied with the specific intent to kill is an assault with intent to murder, if malice is present.—Olds v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 272.

§ 95. One assaulting prosecutrix held guilty of aggravated assault, though the weapon used was a deadly weapon and the assault was made other charge given.—Franks v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 941.

§ 291. On a trial for homicide, the court held required, under the evidence, to charge the substance of Pen. Code 1895, arts. 651, 652, defining homicide, followed by a charge as to the effect of the death of decedent, caused by negligence or improper medical treatment.—Noble v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 281.

§ 295. An instruction that, in determining whether there was adequate cause, the jury could look to all provocations, was not erroneous for failing to enumerate the antecedent provocations.—Young v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 276.

§ 295. An instruction on manslaughter failing to define adequate cause in the language of Pen. Code 1895, art. 702, held erroneous.—Lee v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 301.

§ 295. It was improper to submit an issue as to provocation given one accused of murder by one other than decedent, where there was no proof thereof.—Fuller v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 540.

§ 295. Instruction as to evidence of insults to defendant's wife held erroneous.—Holcomb v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 754.

§ 295. An instruction on manslaughter held not erroneous, as limiting the jury, in determining provocation or adequate cause, to occurrences at and immediately before the difficulty.—Dobbs v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 923.

§ 295. In a murder case, a charge on manslaughter held as favorable as accused was entitled to under the facts.—Franks v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 941.

§ 300. Charge, on a trial for assault with intent to murder, on the issue of provoking the difficulty held not limited, in its application of the law of self-defense, to an actual attack on defendant.—Prescott v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 530.

§ 300. Charge on trial for assault with intent to murder held not subject to the objection that it limited the right of self-defense to an actual attack by prosecuting witness upon defendant.—Prescott v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 530.

§ 300. Instruction, on a trial for assault with intent to murder, on the issue of provoking the difficulty held not to shift the burden of proof to defendant.—Prescott v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 530.

§ 300. Where the evidence showed that deceased made an actual attack on accused with threats to kill, a charge on self-defense based on the theory of an actual attack, etc., was proper.—Casey v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 534.

§ 300. An instruction on a trial for homicide as to threats on the question of self-defense held erroneous.—Pannell v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 536.

§ 300. In a trial for homicide committed while decedent was ejecting, accused from decedent's home, held improper to fail to submit the law applicable if the ejection was unwarranted.—Holcomb v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 754.

§ 300. Evidence in a homicide case held not to warrant incorporation in the charge of the substance of Pen. Code 1895, art. 713, relating to threats.—Dobbs v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 923.

§ 300. Where accused and his son were charged as principals, the son having done the shooting, an instruction on self-defense held not erroneous, as infringing the doctrine of apparent danger and as omitting to direct the jury to —Franks v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 941.

§ 309. Where the evidence tended to show that the killing was in self-defense, an instruction authorizing a conviction for manslaughter was improper.—Casey v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 534.

§ 309. Where the evidence showed that accused killed deceased because of a threatened attack which placed him in no real danger, a charge on manslaughter based on the theory of a real attack was error.—Casey v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 534.

§ 309. It is not permissible for the court to authorize a conviction for manslaughter on facts justifying the killing.—Pannell v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 536.

§ 309. On a trial for homicide, instructions on manslaughter and self-defense held erroneous as bringing about a conviction of manslaughter on facts authorizing an acquittal.—Pannell v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 536.

§ 310. An instruction, on a trial for assault with intent to murder, held not prejudicial to accused.—Olds v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 272.

§ 310. On a trial for assault with intent to murder, a charge held properly refused because not presenting the issue of aggravated assault.—Olds v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 272.

X. APPEAL AND ERROR.

§ 338. Under the evidence, on a trial for assault with intent to murder, held that defendant could not complain of an instruction that the knife was, as a matter of law, a deadly weapon.—Prescott v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 530.

§ 340. Where the jury in convicting of manslaughter assessed the lowest punishment, all errors in the charge were eliminated, unless the charge on manslaughter induced the jury not to acquit on the ground of self-defense.—Pannell v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 536.

§ 340. A conviction of manslaughter will not be reversed for error in charging on homicide in the first and second degree.—Pryse v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 988.

HOSPITALS.

Liability of railroad for injuries to servant treated in hospital, see Master and Servant, § 300.

HOUSEBREAKING.

See Burglary.

HUSBAND AND WIFE.

See Bigamy; Divorce; Dower; Marriage.

Adverse possession under deed from husband and wife and void as to wife, see Adverse Possession, § 112.

Competency as witnesses, see Witnesses, § 52. Conclusiveness of probate of will of wife, see Wills, § 428.

Rights of survivor, see Executors and Administrators, §§ 175-182; Homestead, §§ 142-145.

I. MUTUAL RIGHTS, DUTIES, AND LIABILITIES.

Invalidity of deed as to wife by failure to file for record within statutory period, see Deeds, § 88.

§ 10. Marriage at common law constituted an absolute gift to the husband of the wife's personal property.—Williford v. Phelan (Tenn.) 365.

accused of homicide, see Homicide, § 186.

IDENTITY.

Recitals in deeds as to identity of parties, see Deeds, § 207.

ILLEGITIMATE CHILDREN.

See Bastards.

IMPEACHMENT.

Of record, see Appeal and Error, § 664.
Of witness, see Witnesses, §§ 329-414.

IMPLIED CONTRACTS.

See Contribution; Work and Labor.

IMPRISONMENT.

See Arrest; Bail; False Imprisonment.
Habeas corpus, see Habeas Corpus.

IMPROVEMENTS.

Allowance or recovery of compensation, see Trespass to Try Title, §§ 56, 59.
Liens, see Mechanics' Liens.
Public improvements, see Municipal Corporations, §§ 269-567.

§ 4. Defendant in trespass to try title held a purchaser in good faith, as regards the right to allowance for improvements.—Fain v. Nelms (Tex. Civ. App.) 1002.

§ 4. A receipt given a purchaser of land held a sufficient writing to warrant him in believing he had secured the land bargained for as regards the right to allowance for improvements.—Fain v. Nelms (Tex. Civ. App.) 1002.

§ 4. One making improvements on adjoining land under mistake of a surveyor held entitled to allowance for improvements.—Fain v. Nelms (Tex. Civ. App.) 1002.

§ 4. To entitle one to allowance for improvements, held, he must show how much the value of the land is enhanced thereby.—Fain v. Nelms (Tex. Civ. App.) 1002.

INADVERTENCE.

Ground for new trial, see New Trial, § 91.

INCEST.

Competency of wife as witness, against husband, see Witnesses, § 54.

§ 14. A statement, by a witness in a prosecution for incest with accused's wife's daughter by a former husband, that he understood the former husband was dead, held inadmissible.—Harville v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 283.

INCOMPETENT PERSONS.

See Insane Persons.

INCORPORATION.

See Corporations.

INDEBTEDNESS.

Of fraudulent grantor, see Fraudulent Conveyances, § 66.

INDEMNITY.

See Principal and Surety.

one to furnish a tobacco ball as agreed in tenant's contract, while not binding against the landlord, was admissible, in an action by the tenant against the landlord, to show the former's damages.—Feland v. Berry (Ky.) 423.

INDEMNITY INSURANCE.

See Insurance, § 430.

INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION.

Defects in, as ground for release of accused on habeas corpus, see Habeas Corpus, § 34.
Sufficiency of, to support extradition proceedings, see Extradition, § 32.

For particular offenses.

See Abduction, § 5; Embezzlement, 23; False Pretenses, §§ 36-38; Nuisance, § 91; Perjury, § 29; Robbery, § 18.

Against liquor laws, see Intoxicating Liquors, § 213.

II. FINDING AND FILING OF INDICTMENT OR PRESENTMENT.

§ 14. Record entries of an order permitting substitution of a lost indictment may be amended nunc pro tunc, even at a subsequent term.—Brooks v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 920.

IV. FILING AND FORMAL REQUISITES OF INFORMATION OR COMPLAINT.

Sufficiency of recognizance, taken pursuant to a defective information, to require accused to appear and answer a new information, see Bail, § 62.

§ 45. The filing of a new affidavit, after the granting of a new trial after conviction, constitutes a new case.—Martin v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 274.

V. REQUISITES AND SUFFICIENCY OF ACCUSATION.

Sufficiency of indictment for abduction, see Abduction, § 5.

§ 63. Indictment for maintaining a public nuisance must be supported by allegations of fact showing how the offense was committed.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 517.

§ 119. If an indictment pleads sufficient facts to constitute a complete offense, other charges, not sufficiently pleaded to stand alone, may be disregarded as surplusage.—Bailey v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 140.

§ 120. Under Cr. Code Prac. § 124, an allegation in an indictment for embezzlement as to the effects and property of a corporation alleged to have been embezzled, not specifically described, should be treated as surplusage.—Bailey v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 140.

§ 121. Where an indictment for embezzlement did not specify the particular transaction that would be relied on, accused's remedy was by application for a bill of particulars.—Bailey v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 140.

§ 121. The commonwealth in a criminal case, when required to furnish a bill of particulars, need not state the circumstances with absolute precision, nor specify exact dates, but should not file a bill of particulars so loose as to constitute a dragnet.—Bailey v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 140.

§ 121. Whether a bill of particulars will be ordered in a criminal case rests in the sound judicial discretion of the trial judge.—Bailey v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 140.

§ 47.
On appeal or writ of error, see Appeal and Error, §§ 1127-1194.
To foreclose chattel mortgages, see Chattel Mortgages, § 283.

In criminal prosecutions.

See Criminal Law, § 979.

Review.

See Appeal and Error.

Review on certiorari, see Certiorari, § 16.

I. NATURE AND ESSENTIALS IN GENERAL.

Insufficiency of pleadings as ground for objection to confirmation of judicial sale, see Judicial Sales, § 31.

Judgment of justice of the peace, see Justices of the Peace, § 122.

§ 17. That, in an action by the prosecuting attorney against a town and an individual to compel the removal of an obstruction in a street, the town was not legally served with process, and judgment was erroneously entered against it, held not to require the disturbing of the judgment against the individual.—State v. Franklin (Mo. App.) 652.

§ 17. No personal judgment can be rendered against a nonresident defendant, served without the state, upon his failure to appear and answer, unless he owns property within the state.—Boehrens v. Brice (Tex. Civ. App.) 782.

IV. BY DEFAULT.

Authority of guardian to let judgment go by default, see Guardian and Ward, § 133.

(A) REQUISITES AND VALIDITY.

§ 101. A cause of action set up for the first time in the reply, which was a departure from that alleged in the petition, cannot sustain a default judgment thereon.—Spiess' Adm'r v. Bartley (Ky.) 127.

(B) OPENING OR SETTING ASIDE DEFAULT.

§ 143. The trial court held to have acted within its discretion in setting aside a default judgment.—Knupp v. Miller (Mo. App.) 725.

§ 143. Facts held not to show that a party against whom a default judgment was entered was misled as the result of accident or mistake.—Kansas City Life Ins. Co. v. Warbington (Tex. Civ. App.) 988.

§ 153. During the term at which a default judgment is rendered the court may for good cause shown, or, on its own motion for cause, set aside the judgment and grant defendant a reasonable time to plead.—Knupp v. Miller (Mo. App.) 725.

VI. ON TRIAL OF ISSUES.

Necessity for motion in arrest for purpose of review, see Appeal and Error, § 238.

(A) RENDITION, FORM, AND REQUISITES IN GENERAL.

§ 199. Under Civ. Code Prac. § 386, the court held required to give judgment for insurer in an action to set aside a compromise of a life insurance claim on the ground of the fraud of insurer, notwithstanding a verdict for plaintiff.—Western & Southern Life Ins. Co. v. Quinn (Ky.) 456.

§ 226. The judgment in actions involving real estate should so describe the land, that it may be identified by the parties or the officer

(C) CONFORMITY TO PROCESS, PLEADINGS, PROOFS, AND VERDICT OR FINDINGS.

In action of trespass to try title, see Trespass to Try Title, § 47.

§ 251. Judgment cannot be entered on an issue not made by the pleadings.—Ireland v. Bowman & Cockrell (Ky.) 56.

§ 252. In trespass to try title to land, upon judgment for defendant, plaintiff held not entitled to complain that the boundaries of a part of the land not claimed by defendant were not adjudicated; he not having asked that relief in his pleadings.—De Roach v. Clardy (Tex. Civ. App.) 22.

VIII. AMENDMENT, CORRECTION, AND REVIEW IN SAME COURT.

§ 303. A judgment in an action for the recovery of real estate held properly amended, so as to contain a description of the land in controversy.—Latham v. Lindsay (Ky.) 878.

§ 315. An amendment of a judgment nunc pro tunc must be based on matter of record.—Pulitzer Pub. Co. v. Allen (Mo. App.) 1159.

§ 323. Notice must be given to the adverse party of an application to amend a judgment nunc pro tunc, unless he cannot be aggrieved by the amendment.—Pulitzer Pub. Co. v. Allen (Mo. App.) 1159.

§ 324. The expression "Dis. by deft. App'l" entered by the circuit court on its docket on dismissing a case appealed from a justice, was insufficient to support a subsequent amendment without notice, to show that the appeal, and not the cause, was dismissed.—Pulitzer Pub. Co. v. Allen (Mo. App.) 1159.

§ 331. On collateral attack, an order amending a judgment nunc pro tunc must be sustained unless the court was without power to make it, but on a direct attack the sufficiency of the evidence to show error may be inquired into.—Pulitzer Pub. Co. v. Allen (Mo. App.) 1159.

IX. OPENING OR VACATING.

Grounds for opening default judgment, see ante, § 143.

X. EQUITABLE RELIEF.

(A) NATURE OF REMEDY AND GROUNDS.

§ 407. The remedy for the error in computing interest accrued on a demand or otherwise, so that the judgment is rendered for an excessive sum, is by appeal or certiorari, and not by injunction.—Kansas City Life Ins. Co. v. Warbington (Tex. Civ. App.) 988.

§ 407. As against a merely erroneous judgment, relief by injunction cannot be had where remedy by appeal or certiorari is available.—Kansas City Life Ins. Co. v. Warbington (Tex. Civ. App.) 988.

XI. COLLATERAL ATTACK.

On order amending judgment nunc pro tunc, see ante, § 331.

On order or decree for sale of decedent's property, see Executors and Administrators, § 343.

(C) PROCEEDINGS.

§ 519. In an action on a judgment a defense that the party against whom the judgment was rendered was not before the court is a direct attack on the record.—Ballou v. Skidmore (Ky.) 441.

§ 134. A lessor held entitled to restrain use of the premises for a moving picture show or any other unauthorized purpose.—Dycus v. Traders' Bank & Trust Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 329.

(D) REPAIRS, INSURANCE, AND IMPROVEMENTS.

Liability of landlord to tenant as affected by recovery of judgment against tenant by sublessee for injuries resulting from breach of covenant by landlord for improvement of premises, see Indemnity, § 14.

(E) INJURIES FROM DANGEROUS OR DEFECTIVE CONDITION.

§ 162. A landlord retaining control of a building not leased held bound to use reasonable diligence to keep such part in safe condition for the tenant.—Marcheck v. Klute (Mo. App.) 654.

§ 162. A landlord owes no greater duty to the tenant's children to keep premises in reasonably safe condition than to the tenant himself.—Marcheck v. Klute (Mo. App.) 654.

§ 164. A landlord held to have retained control over the unoccupied part of a stable loft in which leased rooms were located, so that he was bound to keep that part used as a passageway by the tenants in reasonably safe condition.—Marcheck v. Klute (Mo. App.) 654.

§ 164. A chute in the unoccupied part of a stable loft held not so near the passageway to rooms leased to plaintiff as to render the passageway dangerous, so as to make the landlord liable for injuries by falling through the chute.—Marcheck v. Klute (Mo. App.) 654.

§ 164. An action for personal injuries resulting from a breach of the landlord's covenant to repair is allowed when the injury was contemplated by the parties on executing the covenant, or when the landlord omitted to perform his agreement after he knew that its performance was essential to the safety of the tenant and his family.—Marcheck v. Klute (Mo. App.) 654.

§ 164. The rule that a landlord's covenant to repair will not support an action for personal injuries for his failure to repair is applicable only by analogy to a landlord's agreement to guard the entrance of a chute in the unoccupied part of a stable loft in which the leased rooms were situated, as the stipulation was not to repair the leased premises or an appurtenance thereto.—Marcheck v. Klute (Mo. App.) 654.

§ 164. Where a landlord agreed to properly guard the entrance to a hay chute in the unoccupied part of a stable loft when he rented plaintiff rooms therein in order to protect the tenant's children, a child of the tenant could recover for injuries resulting from the landlord's failure to make such repairs; the rule that a landlord's covenant to repair will not support an action for personal injuries for failure to repair having no application.—Marcheck v. Klute (Mo. App.) 654.

§ 164. As a general rule, a lessor's covenant to repair will not support an action for personal injuries resulting from his failure to repair; such injuries being deemed too remote to have been contemplated by the parties.—Marcheck v. Klute (Mo. App.) 654.

§ 165. A landlord held not liable for injuries to his tenant's children by falling through a chute in the unoccupied part of the loft in which the leased rooms were situated; the child having a mere license to play in that part of the loft.—Marcheck v. Klute (Mo. App.) 654.

§ 169. In an action by a tenant for the death of his child by falling through a chute in the plaintiff.—Marcheck v. Klute (Mo. App.) 654.

§ 169. In order to entitle a tenant to recover for injuries received because of the landlord's breach of his agreement to protect a dangerous place near the leased premises, he should allege such promise and the landlord's breach in his petition.—Marcheck v. Klute (Mo. App.) 654.

(F) EVICTION.

Tenant renting on shares, see post, § 331.

VIII. RENT AND ADVANCES.

(A) RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES.

Apportionment of rents between creditors on foreclosure of mortgage, see Mortgages, § 548. Consideration of note for rent, see Bills and Notes, § 92.

(B) ACTIONS.

Amendment of pleading, see Pleading, § 248.

IX. RE-ENTRY AND RECOVERY OF POSSESSION BY LANDLORD.

§ 277. Any acts of the lessor, unequivocally manifesting his intention to claim a forfeiture for breach of condition and to demand possession, will be equivalent to a re-entry.—Baxter v. Heimann (Mo. App.) 1152.

§ 291. Under Civ. Code Prac. § 464, prescribing the measure of recovery on a traverse bond in forcible detainer under section 463, a recovery of rents on a traverse bond filed by a tenant held confined to the time that the traversee is kept out of possession.—Columbia Trust Co. v. Reccius (Ky.) 895.

§ 291. Damages recoverable under Civ. Code Prac. § 464, prescribing the measure of recovery on a traverse bond filed in forcible detainer under section 463, held determined.—Columbia Trust Co. v. Reccius (Ky.) 895.

§ 318. One who wrongfully procures a warrant of restitution to issue, and has a constable execute the writ, is responsible to the person injured for the damages sustained thereby.—Roettger v. Riefkin (Ky.) 88.

§ 318. In an action by tenants against two lessors for damages resulting from wrongful execution of a writ of possession, evidence held sufficient to go to the jury as to both of defendants.—Roettger v. Riefkin (Ky.) 88.

§ 318. In an action by tenants for wrongful dispossession under forcible entry proceedings, evidence as to plaintiffs having been theretofore evicted by other landlords from rented premises held incompetent.—Roettger v. Riefkin (Ky.) 88.

§ 318. Where defendant landlord wrongfully procured a warrant of restitution to be executed, the measure of recovery was the damage to plaintiff's property by reason of the acts complained of.—Roettger v. Reifkin (Ky.) 902.

X. RENTING ON SHARES.

§ 322. A landlord's cropping contract held to require her to furnish materials for a tobacco barn on the ground, so that her failure to do so in time rendered her liable for a loss sustained thereby to the tenant's share of the tobacco crop.—Feland v. Berry (Ky.) 425.

§ 331. Where a cropping contract provided for a division of the expense of maintaining the families of both parties, plaintiff was entitled to recover compensation for increased expenses, caused by defendant's son thereafter becoming § 54. The truth of the defamatory matter is a complete defense in libel.—San Antonio Light Pub. Co. v. Lewy (Tex. Civ. App.) 574.

§ 56. Though the existence of probable cause for believing matters contained in a libelous article to be true may mitigate the damage, it will not justify the publication.—San Antonio Light Pub. Co. v. Lewy (Tex. Civ. App.) 574.

IV. ACTIONS.

(A) RIGHT OF ACTION AND DEFENSES.

§ 74. In libel, where a requested notice signed by defendant was not published, but in its place was published another defamatory notice signed by defendant's name, but which he did not cause to be published, he was not liable for the publication of the second notice, and an instruction to the effect that he ratified it by failing to retract it held properly refused.—Horton v. Jackson (Ark.) 45.

(B) PARTIES, PRELIMINARY PROCEEDINGS, AND PLEADING.

Pleading conclusions of law, see Pleading, § 8.

§ 83. Though malice may be inferred from other matters pleaded, the rules of good pleading require a special allegation of malice in actions of libel.—San Antonio Light Pub. Co. v. Lewy (Tex. Civ. App.) 574.

§ 86. The propriety and functions of an innuendo in libel stated.—San Antonio Light Pub. Co. v. Lewy (Tex. Civ. App.) 574.

§ 89. If a publication in a newspaper tends to injure plaintiff's reputation and expose her to public hatred, contempt, or ridicule, or impeach her honesty, it is unnecessary to allege in the petition financial injury therefrom.—San Antonio Light Pub. Co. v. Lewy (Tex. Civ. App.) 574.

§ 89. In libel for charging plaintiff with smuggling, held unnecessary to allege that the publication tended to expose her to disgrace, etc., or to cause the belief that she was guilty of smuggling.—San Antonio Light Pub. Co. v. Lewy (Tex. Civ. App.) 574.

§ 89. In libel for charging plaintiff with smuggling, it was unnecessary to aver the character or extent of the mental suffering caused by the publication, or even the suffering therefrom; it being sufficient to aver the damage sustained thereby.—San Antonio Light Pub. Co. v. Lewy (Tex. Civ. App.) 574.

§ 100. The truth of the publication in libel must be pleaded by defendant to be available (Acts 1901, p. 30, c. 26), making the truth of the statement a defense to libel, not having affected the rule requiring such defense to be specially pleaded.—San Antonio Light Pub. Co. v. Lewy (Tex. Civ. App.) 574.

(C) EVIDENCE.

Hearsay evidence, see Evidence, § 318.

§ 103. In libel for charging plaintiff with smuggling, testimony as to the authority of custom officers in searching and seizing goods held irrelevant.—San Antonio Light Pub. Co. v. Lewy (Tex. Civ. App.) 574.

§ 103. In libel for charging that plaintiff imported goods without paying the custom duties thereon, the report of the government officers who investigated the case, not being commented on in the alleged libelous article, was irrelevant and inadmissible.—San Antonio Light Pub. Co. v. Lewy (Tex. Civ. App.) 574.

San Antonio Light Pub. Co. v. Lewy (Tex. Civ. App.) 574.

(D) DAMAGES.

§ 119. In libel for charging plaintiff with smuggling, the measure of damages stated.—San Antonio Light Pub. Co. v. Lewy (Tex. Civ. App.) 574.

§ 120. In libel for charging plaintiff with smuggling, exemplary damages held not recoverable.—San Antonio Light Pub. Co. v. Lewy (Tex. Civ. App.) 574.

(E) TRIAL, JUDGMENT, AND REVIEW.

Applicability of instructions to case, see Trial, §§ 251, 252.

Assumptions by judge as to facts in instructions, see Trial, § 192.

Refusal of erroneous request for instructions, see Trial, § 261.

Refusal of requests for instructions already substantially given, see Trial, § 260.

§ 124. A charge in libel that if the article published was calculated to impeach plaintiff's good name, etc., used the words "good name" as equivalent to reputation, in which sense the words have always been used.—San Antonio Light Pub. Co. v. Lewy (Tex. Civ. App.) 574.

§ 124. In libel an instruction held not to authorize recovery for financial loss.—San Antonio Light Pub. Co. v. Lewy (Tex. Civ. App.) 574.

§ 124. In libel for charging plaintiff with smuggling, an instruction requiring a finding for defendant if the statements complained of were made upon probable cause held properly refused.—San Antonio Light Pub. Co. v. Lewy (Tex. Civ. App.) 574.

§ 124. In libel, where the trial court did not submit an instruction as to the effect of probable cause for the publication of the libelous article, an instruction as to what could be considered in determining the existence of probable cause held properly refused, there being nothing to which it could apply.—San Antonio Light Pub. Co. v. Lewy (Tex. Civ. App.) 574.

V. SLANDER OF PROPERTY OR TITLE.

Error in instructions cured by giving other instructions, see Trial, § 296.

LICENSES.

For mining, see Mines and Minerals, § 70.

For sale of intoxicating liquors, see Intoxicating Liquors, §§ 58-74.

Injuries to licensees, see Railroads, § 358.

I. FOR OCCUPATIONS AND PRIVILEGES.

Class legislation, see Constitutional Law, § 208.

Grant of special privileges, see Constitutional Law, § 205.

Ordinances regulating liquor traffic, see Intoxicating Liquors, § 15.

§ 6. An ordinance licensing hackmen, and regulating the use of streets, held a reasonable exercise of the power conferred by the charter of the city.—Kissinger v. Hay (Tex. Civ. App.) 1005.

§ 7. An ordinance held not void on the ground that it gives municipal authorities discretionary power.—Kissinger v. Hay (Tex. Civ. App.) 1005.

LOANS.

By insurance companies, see Insurance, § 179½.

LOCAL ACTIONS.

See Venue, § 4.

LOCAL LAWS.

See Statutes, §§ 71-93.

LOCAL OPTION.

Traffic in intoxicating liquors, see Intoxicating Liquors, §§ 32-34.

LOGS AND LOGGING.

Liability of lumber company for obstructing navigable waters by booms, see Navigable Waters, § 21.

Liquidated damages for breach of logging contract, see Damages, § 79.

Navigability of stream for floating timber, see Navigable Waters, § 1.

Transitory character of action of assumpsit for cutting and removing timber, see Venue, § 4.

§ 3. Evidence held to show that a contract for the sale of standing timber was executed by the owner.—McCoy v. Fraley (Ky.) 444.

§ 3. A sale of standing timber, fixing no time for the removal thereof, passes an equitable interest in the real estate.—McCoy v. Fraley (Ky.) 444.

§ 3. Where the vendor of standing timber died before the trees were measured, counted, and marked, the chancellor properly directed his commissioner to go on the land, and ascertain the number of trees which passed to the purchaser under the contract.—McCoy v. Fraley (Ky.) 444.

§ 3. A purchaser of standing timber who has left the tops and debris so as to damage the land held liable to the owner.—Bates v. Burt & Brabb Lumber Co. (Ky.) 820.

LOOKOUT.

From trains, duties of railroad in respect to employes, see Master and Servant, § 137.

LOST INSTRUMENTS.

Appellate jurisdiction in action on as dependent on whether title to real estate is involved, see Courts, § 231.

§ 23. In trespass to try title, evidence held to sustain a finding of the execution and delivery of a lost deed under which defendants claimed title.—McDonald v. Hanks (Tex. Civ. App.) 604.

LUMBER.

See Logs and Logging.

LUNATICS.

See Insane Persons.

MACHINERY.

Dangerous machinery, see Negligence, § 23.

Liability of employer for defects, see Master and Servant, §§ 95, 121, 286, 295.

Topics, divisions, & section (§) NUMBERS in this Index, & Dec. & Amer. Digs. & Reporter Indexes agree

See Libel and Slander, §§ 48-56.

MALICIOUS PROSECUTION.

See False Imprisonment.

IV. TERMINATION OF PROSECUTION.

Right of action to set aside conveyance by defendant pending termination of prosecution of plaintiff, see Fraudulent Conveyances, § 66.

MANDAMUS.

To compel filing statement of facts for purpose of review, see Appeal and Error, § 571.

I. NATURE AND GROUNDS IN GENERAL.

§ 1. Mandamus under Civ. Code Prac. § 477, defined.—Louisville Home Telephone Co. v. City of Louisville (Ky.) 855.

§ 10. Mandamus cannot be maintained, unless there is a legal right in the applicant, and the corresponding duty imposed on the respondent.—Louisville Home Telephone Co. v. City of Louisville (Ky.) 855.

§ 23. A private person, who shows a direct and special interest in himself, may apply for mandamus to enforce a public duty.—Louisville Home Telephone Co. v. City of Louisville (Ky.) 855.

§ 23. "Direct and special interest" entitling a private individual to mandamus defined.—Louisville Home Telephone Co. v. City of Louisville (Ky.) 855.

§ 23. An application by private individuals held insufficient to show in them such private right as entitled them to mandamus to compel the sale of a telephone franchise.—Louisville Home Telephone Co. v. City of Louisville (Ky.) 855.

II. SUBJECTS AND PURPOSES OF RELIEF.

(B) ACTS AND PROCEEDINGS OF PUBLIC OFFICERS AND BOARDS AND MUNICIPALITIES.

Mandamus to state auditor, see States, § 201.

§ 112. Where a city contracts a debt, when its indebtedness already exceeds the limit fixed by Const. § 158, held, that it cannot be required to levy a tax to pay it.—City of Bardwell v. Southern Engine & Boiler Works (Ky.) 97.

III. JURISDICTION, PROCEEDINGS, AND RELIEF.

Objections first raised on appeal, see Appeal and Error, § 174.

§ 148. Private individuals held to be proper relators, in behalf of the public, to apply for a writ of mandamus to compel the sale of a telephone franchise as directed by ordinance.—Louisville Home Telephone Co. v. City of Louisville (Ky.) 855.

§ 154. An objection that relators, in a mandamus proceeding for the public did not proceed in the name of the commonwealth may be waived by amendment.—Louisville Home Telephone Co. v. City of Louisville (Ky.) 855.

§ 164. A plea, in mandamus to compel the Auditor of state to issue a warrant to pay a the rear, the fact that one of the engines of the leading train was leaky held not the proximate cause of the injury.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Keiffer (Ky.) 433.

(C) METHODS OF WORK, RULES, AND ORDERS.

Question of law or fact, see post, § 285.

Title of act forbidding railroad to run trains outside of yard limits with less than specified number of men, see Statutes, § 110½.

§ 130. That a business might have been carried on in a less dangerous manner is immaterial, where the servant has been sufficiently instructed.—Mitchell v. Comanche Cotton Oil Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 158.

§ 137. In an action for injuries to a railway employe, the breaking of a knuckle on a double-header train held not actionable simply because the train was run as a double-header.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Keiffer (Ky.) 433.

§ 137. To make a railroad company liable for injury to a brakeman from movement of a train, held, the movement must be shown to have been with unnecessary force and not of a usual character.—Matthew's Adm'r v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (Ky.) 459.

§ 137. Statement of duty of railroad as to lookout on train backed in a town by a place where another train was taking water.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Schroader (Ky.) 874.

§ 145. Rule of a railroad as to lookout on a train "pushed" by an engine held to apply, the engine being behind the cars, whether it is going backward or forward.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Schroader (Ky.) 874.

§ 149. The fact that a foreman of railroad section hands ordered one of them to break a bolt holding a rail, which was part of their regular work, held not to render the master liable for an injury to another section hand from the breaking.—St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Jamison (Ark.) 41.

§ 149. Railroad section hands whose principal duty was to remove old rails, often necessitating the breaking of the bolts joining them, held presumed to know how to do the breaking and that it was not the foreman's duty in ordering a bolt broken to direct the method of doing it.—St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Jamison (Ark.) 41.

§ 149. An employe injured while attempting to carry a machine pursuant to the order of the foreman held entitled to recover for the injury sustained.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Mahan (Ky.) 886.

(D) WARNING AND INSTRUCTING SERVANT.

§ 153. A master need not warn a servant, though an infant, of ordinary risks and dangers which are known to the servant.—Mitchell v. Comanche Cotton Oil Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 158.

§ 156. A master may assume that a servant understands risks incident to his employment, but must warn him concerning those not incident to his employment.—Brandon v. Texarkana & Ft. Smith Ry. Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 968.

§ 157. Where the master warned and instructed a servant when he was first employed, he need not repeat the warning.—Mitchell v. Comanche Cotton Oil Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 158.

(E) FELLOW SERVANTS.

Questions for jury, see post, § 287.

Review of question of validity of fellow servant law as dependent on necessity of determination, see Appeal and Error, § 843.

§ 160. The common-law rule exempting a master from liability for injuries to his servant by a fellow servant's negligence, prevailing at the place where the injury occurred and the cause of actions arose, governs, though the rule has been changed by statute at the forum.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Keiffer (Ky.) 433.

§ 177. Evidence held not to show negligence of an engineer in obeying a signal of one brakeman, while another was giving a contrary signal.—Matthew's Adm'r v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (Ky.) 459.

§ 177. A master is not liable for injuries to a servant caused by the negligence of a fellow servant.—Faulkner v. Texas & N. O. Ry. Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 765.

§ 198. Railroad section hands engaged in removing an old track are fellow servants, and the master is not liable for an injury to one of them if caused by the negligence of another.—St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Jamison (Ark.) 41.

§ 198. Negligence of a brakeman injuring another brakeman held that of a fellow servant.—Matthew's Adm'r v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (Ky.) 459.

§ 201. A master is liable for an injury to a servant caused by the concurrent negligence of a vice principal and a fellow servant.—Marcum v. Three States Lumber Co. (Ark.) 357.

(F) RISKS ASSUMED BY SERVANT.

§ 213. A section hand held to have assumed the risk of injury from the breaking of bolts in removing old rails.—St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Jamison (Ark.) 41.

§ 217. A railroad employe assumes such risks as are ordinarily incident to the service he engages to perform, and such others, including negligence of the company's servants chargeable to it, as he knows of or must necessarily have known of in the ordinary discharge of his duties.—Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Jackson (Tex. Civ. App.) 628.

§ 217. In an injury action by a servant against the master, where it was not shown that the servant knew or should have known that the appliance which caused the injury was defective, there was no evidence to sustain the defense of assumed risk.—Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Jackson (Tex. Civ. App.) 628.

§ 218. Where an infant servant has been properly instructed and warned, his minority usually ceases to be a factor of the master's liability.—Mitchell v. Comanche Cotton Oil Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 158.

§ 221. A servant working with a defective appliance after the master's promise to repair can recover for an injury sustained therefrom within a reasonable time after the promise.—Marcum v. Three States Lumber Co. (Ark.) 357.

§ 225. A servant assumes risks incident to the service he contracts to perform, but not those of a service not embraced within the scope of his contract.—Brandon v. Texarkana & Ft. Smith Ry. Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 968.

(G) CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE OF SERVANT.

§ 227. The rule that the reciprocal rights and duties of the parties are governed by the law of the place where the tort occurred held applicable to the relation of master and servant.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Keiffer (Ky.) 433.

§ 227. Employe held not entitled to recover for negligence, if also guilty of negligence, without which the accident would not have occurred.—Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. Ry. Co. v. Fortner (Ky.) 847.

§ 229. An employe held bound to exercise ordinary care for his own protection.—Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. Ry. Co. v. Fortner (Ky.) 847.

§ 301. A railroad company operating over leased tracks held not liable for the failure of a crossing watchman, in the sole control of the lessor road, to shut down gates or give necessary warning of danger.—Wills v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co. (Mo. App.) 713.

§ 301. That one was a deputy sheriff does not show that his act in injuring a trespasser was official.—Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Parsons (Tex.) 914.

§ 301. That one was a railway watchman does not show that his act in injuring a trespasser was that of a servant.—Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Parsons (Tex.) 914.

§ 301. In an action against a railway company for injury to a trespasser inflicted by a deputy sheriff and watchman, whether the latter's acts were official or those of a servant must be determined by all the circumstances and evidence.—Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Parsons (Tex.) 914.

§ 301. That in shooting at one who approached him a railway watchman believed him to be a companion of trespassers the watchman was conducting off the premises does not alter his relation to the company as affecting its liability to one of the trespassers who was struck by the bullet.—Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Parsons (Tex.) 914.

§ 302. A master is liable for the acts of his servant only when the servant acts within the scope of his authority.—Robards v. P. Bannon Sewer Pipe Co. (Ky.) 429.

§ 302. The mere employment of a watchman to guard property did not authorize him to shoot a trespasser who was running away from the premises.—Robards v. P. Bannon Sewer Pipe Co. (Ky.) 429.

§ 302. A master held liable for an unjustifiable injury to a third person by his servant acting in the general scope of his employment, though he disregarded the master's private instructions.—Robards v. P. Bannon Sewer Pipe Co. (Ky.) 429.

§ 302. Where it is doubtful whether a servant injuring a third person was acting within the general scope of his authority, the doubt will be resolved against the master because he set the servant in motion.—Robards v. P. Bannon Sewer Pipe Co. (Ky.) 429.

§ 302. The terms "course of employment" and "scope of authority" held not susceptible of accurate definition.—Robards v. P. Bannon Sewer Pipe Co. (Ky.) 429.

§ 304. A railway watchman who was conducting trespassers out of railway yards owed them the duty to not injure them through negligent or reckless use of his revolver.—Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Parsons (Tex.) 914.

(C) ACTIONS.

§ 330. Evidence, in an action against a railway company for injury to a trespasser, held to show that the person who inflicted it was employed by the company as a watchman, and was acting in that capacity when he shot plaintiff.—Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Parsons (Tex.) 914.

§ 330. Evidence held to sustain a judgment against a railway company for injury to a trespasser shot by a watchman employed by the company.—Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Parsons (Tex.) 914.

§ 332. If the master employs a watchman and authorizes him to use firearms in his discretion, and he shoots a third person near the premises, he is not as a matter of law acting without the scope of his employment.—Robards v. P. Bannon Sewer Pipe Co. (Ky.) 429.

MATERIALITY.

Of alteration of written instrument, see Alteration of Instruments.

MAXIMS.

Of equity, see Equity, § 65.

MEASURE OF DAMAGES.

See Damages, §§ 95-124.

MECHANICS' LIENS.

II. RIGHT TO LIEN.

(C) AGREEMENT OR CONSENT OF OWNER.

§ 58. Under Gen. St. 1888, c. 70, art. 1, § 1, relating to mechanics' liens on property held under an executory contract of sale, lessee held not to own a lot under an executory contract, so that a lien for materials furnished would not follow the lot on the termination of the lease.—Luigart v. Lexington Turf Club (Ky.) 814.

§ 63. Under Local & Private Laws 1871, § 4, c. 1073, applicable to Fayette county and relating to mechanics' liens upon land owned by a married woman, one furnishing materials under a contract with the lessee of a married woman held not entitled to a lien upon the leased land.—Luigart v. Lexington Turf Club (Ky.) 814.

§ 63. A materialman was not entitled to a lien under Gen. St. 1888, c. 70, art. 1, § 1, relating a lien to materialmen upon real property if the material was furnished by contract without or consent in writing of, the owner, where the work was done under a contract with a lessee with the owner's knowledge, and verbal consent.—Luigart v. Lexington Turf Club (Ky.) 814.

VII. ENFORCEMENT.

Review as dependent on theory of case below, see Appeal and Error, § 171.

MEETINGS.

Of stockholders, see Corporations, § 197.

MENTAL CAPACITY.

Affecting validity of deed, see Deeds, §§ 18, 27. Presumptions as to continuance of sanity, see Evidence, § 67.

MENTAL SUFFERING.

As element of damages for failure to deliver telegram, see Telegraphs and Telephones, § 10.

MERGER.

Of cause of action in judgment, see Judgments, §§ 570, 632.

Of contract, see Contracts, § 245.

Of controversy in award, see Arbitration and Award, § 81.

Of estates, see Estates, § 10.

MINES AND MINERALS.

II. TITLE, CONVEYANCES, AND CONTRACTS.

(C) LEASES, LICENSES, AND CONTRACTS

Release of claim to royalties, instruction, see Release, § 33.

§ 764. A municipality must keep cross-walks, where they pass over gutters, in reasonably safe condition in the light of the plan adopted.—Gallagher v. City of Tipton (Mo. App.) 674.

§ 767. Municipalities can maintain their streets with the center elevated and gutters or drains on the sides to carry away surface water.—Gallagher v. City of Tipton (Mo. App.) 674.

§ 768. While a city is not liable for injury resulting from a danger inherent in the plan adopted respecting its streets and cross-walks, it is liable for negligent construction or maintenance under the plan.—Gallagher v. City of Tipton (Mo. App.) 674.

§ 783. That a trench in a city street which had been filled by the city was filled the same as all such holes in streets were filled would not relieve the city from liability for an injury occasioned thereby.—Heberling v. City of Warrensburg (Mo. App.) 673.

§ 821. Whether a city was negligent respecting a cross-walk over a gutter held, under the evidence, a jury question in an action for injury to a pedestrian who stepped from it at night.—Gallagher v. City of Tipton (Mo. App.) 674.

§ 821. Whether a pedestrian, who was injured by stepping off a cross-walk into a gutter at night, was guilty of contributory negligence, held under the evidence a jury question.—Gallagher v. City of Tipton (Mo. App.) 674.

§ 822. In the circumstances, held improper to authorize recovery by one suing a city for injury caused by stepping off a cross-walk into the gutter at night, if a guard on the walk was necessary.—Gallagher v. City of Tipton (Mo. App.) 674.

(D) DEFECTS OR OBSTRUCTIONS IN SEWERS, DRAINS, AND WATER COURSES.

§ 845. A petition in an action against a city for flooding plaintiff's property held to state no cause of action.—Harney v. City of Lexington (Ky.) 115.

XIII. FISCAL MANAGEMENT, PUBLIC DEBT, SECURITIES, AND TAXATION.

(A) POWER TO INCUR INDEBTEDNESS AND EXPENDITURES.

§ 871. An ordinance modifying the terms of an existing telephone franchise held not invalid as a release of an indebtedness or liability to the city, in violation of Const. § 52.—Louisville Home Telephone Co. v. City of Louisville (Ky.) 855.

(B) ADMINISTRATION IN GENERAL, APPROPRIATIONS, WARRANTS, AND PAYMENT.

§ 890. An ordinance appropriating money, held, under St. Louis City Charter, art. 5, § 14 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 4839), not to include expenses of a special committee appointed by a resolution of the house of delegates.—State ex rel. Gavigan v. Dierkes (Mo.) 1077.

(D) TAXES AND OTHER REVENUE, AND APPLICATION THEREOF.

Appropriation for expenses incurred by committee appointed to investigate tax returns, see Municipal Corporations, § 890. Mandamus to compel levy, see Mandamus, § 112.

§ 974. The house of delegates of the city of St. Louis, one of the two houses composing its Dierkes (Mo.) 1077.

§ 988. Under St. 1903, § 2069, a city of the first class, which recovered judgment against a water company for school taxes previously assessed in consideration of its free supplying water, held not liable on judgment, where the court allowed it the value of the water service, which more than extinguished the judgment.—Louisville School Board v. City of Louisville (Ky.) 883.

(E) RIGHTS AND REMEDIES OF TAXPAYERS.

Mandamus to compel advertisement and sale of telephone franchise as directed by ordinance, see Mandamus, §§ 23, 148.

MURDER.

See Homicide.

MUTUAL AID SOCIETIES.

See Beneficial Associations.

MUTUAL BENEFIT INSURANCE

See Insurance, §§ 687-825.

NAMES.

Recitals in deeds as to identity of parties, see Deeds, § 207.

NAVIGABLE WATERS.

See Waters and Water Courses.

River as part of enclosure of land held adversely, see Adverse Possession, § 19.

I. RIGHTS OF PUBLIC.

Judicial notice of navigability, see Evidence, § 10.

§ 1. A stream may be navigable for the purpose of floating timber, though not navigable for boats.—Ireland v. Bowman & Cockrell (Ky.) 56.

§ 19. One who is rightfully using navigable waters is not liable for damages resulting from necessary obstructions in such use.—Orange Lumber Co. v. Thompson (Tex. Civ. App.) 55.

§ 21. A lumber company has no right to obstruct navigable waters by booms across them.—Orange Lumber Co. v. Thompson (Tex. Civ. App.) 503.

§ 22. No right to maintain a dam which materially interferes with the floating of timber can be acquired by the maintenance of a dam which is not such an interference.—Ireland v. Bowman & Cockrell (Ky.) 56.

§ 22. Right to maintain a dam by prescription held to extend only to the height at which maintained for the prescriptive period.—Ireland v. Bowman & Cockrell (Ky.) 56.

§ 22. Degree of care required of telephone company maintaining a line over a navigable river declared.—Heiberger v. Missouri & Kansas Telephone Co. (Mo. App.) 730.

§ 26. In an action against a telephone company for injuries sustained by the boat which plaintiff was riding running against submerged telephone wire, whether the telephone company was negligent held for the jury.—Heiberger v. Missouri & Kansas Telephone Co. (Mo. App.) 730.

circumstances from which it may be inferred.—St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Gilbreath (Ark.) 200.

(C) TRIAL, JUDGMENT, AND REVIEW.

Giving undue prominence to particular issue, see Trial, § 244.

§ 136. The question of negligence vel non is primarily a question of fact, and becomes one of law only when the facts are undisputed and only one conclusion can be drawn therefrom.—San Antonio Traction Co. v. Levyson (Tex. Civ. App.) 569.

§ 136. Rule respecting submission of issues of negligence cases stated.—Boehrens v. Brice (Tex. Civ. App.) 782.

§ 140. Where there is room for a difference of opinion between reasonable men as to what is the proximate cause of an injury, the question is for the jury, but otherwise it is for the court.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Keiffer (Ky.) 433.

§ 141. An instruction on negligence, preventing recovery if plaintiff was not in the exercise of ordinary care for her safety, held erroneous.—Bevis v. Vanceburg Telephone Co. (Ky.) 811.

NEWLY DISCOVERED EVIDENCE.

Ground for new trial in civil actions, see New Trial, §§ 103, 108, 151.

Ground for new trial in criminal prosecution, see Criminal Law, §§ 940-942.

NEWSPAPERS.

Designation of newspaper in which to publish notice of order for local option election, see Intoxicating Liquors, § 33.

NEW TRIAL

In criminal prosecutions, see Criminal Law, §§ 940-971.

Necessity of motion for purpose of review, see Appeal and Error, §§ 281-302.

Review of discretionary rulings on motion for, see Appeal and Error, § 977.

Review of rulings on motion for as dependent on record on appeal or writ of error, see Appeal and Error, § 502.

II. GROUNDS.

(G) SURPRISE, ACCIDENT, INADVERTENCE, OR MISTAKE.

§ 90. Defendants held not surprised by plaintiff's testimony that he had sustained "flatfoot" as the result of the injury.—Lorts & Frey Planing Mill Co. v. Weil (Ky.) 474.

§ 91. In the circumstances, held an abuse of discretion to allow plaintiffs a new trial to offer evidence omitted through mistake or oversight of counsel.—Parker v. Britton (Mo. App.) 259.

§ 91. Rule respecting granting motions for new trial stated.—Parker v. Britton (Mo. App.) 259.

(H) NEWLY DISCOVERED EVIDENCE.

§ 103. Plaintiff held not entitled to a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence.—Savage v. Cowan (Tex. Civ. App.) 319.

§ 108. A motion for a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence held properly denied.—Paducah Ice Co. v. H. E. Hall & Co. (Ky.) 104.

§ 108. To entitle a party to a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence, the evidence must be of a permanent and unerring character so as to preponderate greatly.—Paducah Ice Co. v. H. E. Hall & Co. (Ky.) 104.

III. PROCEEDINGS TO PROCURE NEW TRIAL.

§ 110. A new trial may be allowed on a ground not assigned therefor.—Parker v. Britton (Mo. App.) 259.

§ 151. Newly discovered evidence held insufficient to justify a new trial.—Lorts & Frey Planing Mill Co. v. Weil (Ky.) 474.

NEXT FRIEND.

Of insane person, see Insane Persons, § 94.

NEXT OF KIN.

See Descent and Distribution.

NONSUIT.

Before trial, see Dismissal and Nonsuit.

NOTICE

Review of ruling on motion to amend notice of appeal from justice court as dependent on presentation in lower court of grounds of review, see Appeal and Error, § 271.

As affecting particular classes of persons.

See Carriers, §§ 47, 104, 105, 135, 218; Principal and Agent, § 177.

Purchasers of land, see Vendor and Purchaser, § 231.

As affecting particular rights, duties, and liabilities.

Liability of carrier for delay in transporting freight as dependent on notice of special damages, see Carriers, §§ 104, 105.

Liability of carrier for loss of or injury to livestock as affected by notice of loss, see Carriers, § 218.

Liability of carrier for special damages for loss of freight because of failure to notify owner of loss, see Carriers, § 135.

Of particular facts, acts, or proceedings not judicial.

Delay in transportation or delivery of live stock, see Carriers, § 218.

Forfeiture of lease, see Landlord and Tenant, § 112.

Increase in tax assessment, see Taxation, § 482.

Loss insured against, see Insurance, § 559.

Loss of freight, liability of carrier for special damages because of failure to notify owner of loss, see Carriers, § 135.

Loss of or injury to live stock, see Carriers, § 218.

Nonpayment or protest of bill or note, see Bills and Notes, § 394.

Special damages for delay in transporting freight, see Carriers, §§ 104, 105.

Termination of lease, see Landlord and Tenant, § 103.

Unrecorded mortgage, see Mortgages, § 176.

Of particular judicial proceedings.

See Lis Pendens.

Amendment of judgment, see Judgment, § 323.

§ 1. The fact that a person could learn of a thing is not equivalent to knowledge, especially where the facts alleged do not show that there was anything to put him upon notice.—McFarland's Adm'r v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (Ky.) 82.

NUISANCE.

Liability of trustee for maintenance of, see Trusts, § 235.

Municipal ordinances, see Licenses, § 7; Municipal Corporations, §§ 121, 592-626, 680, 871, 890.

PARENT AND CHILD.

See Bastards; Guardian and Ward.

Care required of railroads as to children, see Railroads, § 378.

Fraudulent conveyances between, see Fraudulent Conveyances, § 300.

Insurable interest in lives of each other, see Insurance, § 116.

Right of child to recover against estate of parent for services rendered, see Executors and Administrators, § 221.

§ 3. A parent must support a helpless adult child, if able to do so.—Crain v. Mallone (Ky.) 67.

§ 3. If a parent is poor, and the estate of his infant children more able to justly bear the expense, held, that the parent may recover therefrom for their support.—Funk's Guardian v. Funk (Ky.) 419.

§ 15. Rights and duties of one standing in loco parentis are the same as those of the parent.—Saunders v. Alvido & Laserre (Tex. Civ. App.) 992.

PAROL EVIDENCE.

In civil actions, see Evidence, §§ 397-434.

In criminal prosecutions, see Criminal Law, § 429.

PARTIES.

Admissions as evidence, see Evidence, § 226.

Character ground of jurisdiction, see Appeal and Error, § 38.

Competency as witnesses, see Witnesses, § 114.

Domicile or residence as affecting venue, see Venue, §§ 21, 26.

Interpleading, see Interpleader.

Persons entitled to cancel deed, see Cancellation of Instruments, § 27.

Persons entitled to raise constitutional questions, see Constitutional Law, § 43.

Weight of testimony of party, see Evidence, § 595.

In actions by or against particular classes of persons.

See Municipal Corporations, § 697.

In particular actions or proceedings.

See Creditors' Suit, § 28; Partition, § 46; Replevin, § 22.

Foreclosure, see Mortgages, § 439.

For obstruction of highway, see Highways, § 155.

For removal of obstruction in street, see Municipal Corporations, § 697.

For wrongful execution, see Execution, § 469.

To enforce railroad liens, see Railroads, § 186.

To set aside satisfaction of judgment on bond of seller of text-books, see Schools and School Districts, § 81.

Judgment and relief as to parties, and parties affected by judgments or proceedings thereon.

Collateral attack on judgment, see Judgment, § 519.

Persons concluded by judgment, see Judgment, § 682.

Review as to parties, and parties to proceedings in appellate courts.

Parties on appeal or writ of error, see Appeal and Error, §§ 136-151.

Persons entitled to allege error, see Appeal and Error, § 377.

§ 172. Sales, § 11.

Joint interest, see Joint Adventures.

II. DEFENDANTS.

(A) PERSONS WHO MAY OR MUST BE SUED.

Parties in suit to enforce railroad lien, see Railroads, § 186.

III. NEW PARTIES AND CHANGE OF PARTIES.

New parties in partition, see Partition, § 46.

V. DEFECTS, OBJECTIONS, AND AMENDMENT.

§ 75. In a suit by administrators for settlement of an estate, a party objecting on the ground of defect of parties should state the name of the missing defendant.—Union Trust & Savings Co. v. Marshall's Adm'rs (Ky.) 73.

PARTITION.

Authority of attorney, see Attorney and Client, § 71.

II. ACTIONS FOR PARTITION.

(B) PROCEEDINGS AND RELIEF.

Instructions assuming existence of facts, see Trial, § 191.

§ 46. Where in partition it becomes apparent that there are part owners of the property sought to be partitioned, who are not parties to the suit, the trial must be suspended until they are brought before the court.—Hess v. Webb (Tex. Civ. App.) 618.

§ 51. Where in partition the names and residences of all the heirs of the deceased ancestor cannot be given, resort may be had to the statute authorizing service by publication on unknown heirs.—Hess v. Webb (Tex. Civ. App.) 618.

§ 63. Plaintiffs suing in partition for the entire interests as heirs of the deceased ancestor held required to show that they are the only heirs of the ancestor.—Hess v. Webb (Tex. Civ. App.) 618.

§ 70. Whether the persons named in petition for partition as the only heirs of the deceased ancestor were the only heirs held for the jury.—Hess v. Webb (Tex. Civ. App.) 618.

§ 75. A judgment in partition should award the shares of certain of the heirs as shown by the evidence, and the judgment against defendant relying solely on limitations should stand though the court erred in proceeding to do so a partition without having all of the parties in interest before it.—Hess v. Webb (Tex. Civ. App.) 618.

§ 75. Where in partition it did not appear that plaintiffs were the only heirs of the deceased ancestor, it was error to permit them to recover any more than their respective interests in the premises.—Hess v. Webb (Tex. Civ. App.) 618.

PARTNERSHIP.

See Joint Adventures.

Instructions on weight of evidence in action for contribution, see Trial, § 194.

Liability as partners, of stockholders of foreign corporations failing to comply with conditions relative to doing business in state, see Corporations, § 653.

I. THE RELATION.

(A) CREATION AND REQUISITES.

Pleading existence as a conclusion, see Pleading, § 8.

Applicability of instructions to evidence, see Trial, § 252.
Assessment of damages, see Damages, §§ 206-216.
Competency of juror, see Jury, § 97.
Damage, general or special, see Damages, § 5.
Excessive damages, see Damages, § 132.
Harmless error in argument and conduct of counsel, see Appeal and Error, § 1060.
Inconsistent statements by witness, see Witnesses, § 383.
Measure of damages, see Damages, §§ 95, 101.
Pleading damages, see Damages, §§ 142-162.

PERSONAL PROPERTY.

Of married woman, see Husband and Wife, § 10.

PETITION.

For local option election, see Intoxicating Liquors, § 32.
In pleading, see Pleading, §§ 49-67.
In proceedings to restrain enforcement of justice's judgment, see Justices of the Peace, § 128.

PHOSPHATE COMPANIES.

Condemnation of property by, see Eminent Domain, § 13.

PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS.

Mandamus to compel issuance of certificate, see Mandamus, § 168.

§ 2. Acts 1904, p. 100, c. 34, regulating the practice of medicine, held to require an applicant for examination for certificate to practice to show a diploma from a medical college, or that he was engaged in the practice of medicine continuously from February 24, 1884, until his application.—Webster v. State Board of Health of Kentucky (Ky.) 415.

§ 2. Acts 1904, p. 100, c. 34, regulating the practice of medicine, held a valid exercise of the police power of the state.—Webster v. State Board of Health of Kentucky (Ky.) 415.

§ 2. The act of 1893 (Laws 1891-92-93, p. 748, c. 179), relative to empiricism, which forms a part of Ky. St. 1903, c. 85, entitled "Medicine and Surgery," is repealed by Acts 1904, p. 100, c. 34.—Webster v. State Board of Health of Kentucky (Ky.) 415.

PLATS.

Description of boundaries, see Boundaries, § 10.
Of government survey of public lands, see Public Lands, § 25.

PLEA.

In civil actions, see Pleading, §§ 139-149.

PLEADING.

Applicability of instructions to pleadings, see Trial, §§ 251-253.
Conformity of judgment to pleadings, see Judgment, §§ 251, 252.
To sustain default judgment, see Judgment, § 101.

Allegations as to particular facts, acts, or transactions.

See Adverse Possession, § 110; Damages, §§ 142-162; Judgment, § 949.

Estoppel of insured to claim under life policy, see Insurance, § 640.

Negligence in use of street or highway, see Municipal Corporations, § 706.

mise, see Insurance, § 579.

In actions by or against particular classes of persons.

See Carriers, § 314.

In particular actions or proceedings.

See Contempt, § 58; Ejectment, § 64; Libel and Slander, §§ 83-100; Negligence, § 119; Replevin, § 58; Torts, § 26; Trespass, § 40; Trespass to Try Title, §§ 33, 35.

For breach of contract, see Contracts, § 346.

For failure to deliver shipment, see Carriers, § 103.

For flooding caused by insufficient drain in city, see Municipal Corporations, § 845.

For injuries from fire caused by operation of railroad, see Railroads, § 478.

For injuries from obstruction of navigable waters, see Navigable Waters, § 26.

For injuries to passengers, see Carriers, § 314.

For injuries to tenant from defects in leased premises, see Landlord and Tenant, § 169.

For loss of or injuries to shipment of live stock, see Carriers, § 227.

For obstruction of surface water, see Waters and Water Courses, § 126.

Indictment or criminal information or complaint, see Indictment and Information.

On insurance policy, see Insurance, § 640.

On liquor dealers' bond, see Intoxicating Liquors, § 306.

To compel foreclosure of mortgage, see Mortgages, § 418.

To enforce insurance assessment, see Insurance, § 197.

To foreclose special tax bill, see Municipal Corporations, § 567.

To restrain enforcement of justice's judgment, see Justices of the Peace, § 128.

To restrain forfeiture of lease, see Landlord and Tenant, § 111.

To set aside compromise of claim under insurance policy, see Insurance, § 579.

To test reasonableness of rates, see Carriers, § 18.

To try tax title, see Taxation, § 809.

Review of decisions and pleading in appellate courts.

Amendment on appeal from justice's court, see Justices of the Peace, § 174.

Harmless error in rulings on, see Appeal and Error, §§ 1039-1042.

Review of discretionary rulings, see Appeal and Error, § 959.

Review of rulings on as dependent on cross assignment of errors, see Appeal and Error, §§ 719, 747.

Review of rulings on as dependent on presentation in lower court of grounds of review, see Appeal and Error, § 193.

Review of rulings on as dependent on record on appeal or writ of error, see Appeal and Error, § 518.

I. FORM AND ALLEGATIONS IN GENERAL.

§ 8. An allegation in a counterclaim that defendant was damaged in a stated sum held a mere conclusion.—Connor v. National Roofing & Supply Co. (Ky.) 122.

§ 8. Allegations in action by a co-operative insurance association to recover a delinquent assessment and enforce its lien held insufficient to state a cause of action.—Farmers' Home Ins. Co. v. Carey (Ky.) 841.

§ 8. An answer held to sufficiently plead contributory negligence.—Sissel v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. (Mo.) 1104.

§ 237. Under Civ. Code Prac. § 134, the allowance of an amendment to the petition to make it conform to the proof held proper.—Paducah Ice Co. v. H. E. Hall & Co. (Ky.) 104.

§ 243. A trial amendment of a petition in a personal injury case held within the discretion of the court.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Brown (Ky.) 465.

§ 246. It is error to refuse to allow an amended petition containing matter germane to the cause of action set out in the original petition, offered before the filing of the answer.—Alexander v. Gardner (Ky.) 906.

§ 248. Complainants, having sued to cancel certain notes given for the price of a machine, held entitled to file an amended petition, claiming damages for breach of warranty, without additional process.—Pennebaker Bros. v. Bell City Mfg. Co. (Ky.) 829.

§ 248. An amended petition in an action for rent under a written lease held not the statement of a new cause of action.—Clarkson v. Lee (Mo. App.) 724.

§ 248. A trial amendment, which in effect only alleged a new reason or ground why plaintiff's right to recover first alleged in his original petition should prevail, was not a new cause of action.—Adams-Burke-Simmons Co. v. Johnson (Tex. Civ. App.) 176.

§ 252. Where, though evidence might have been admissible under the original petition, that petition having been abandoned by amendment, and the evidence being irrelevant under the amended petition, it was properly excluded.—Symmes v. Rose (Ky.) 97.

§ 252. By amending his petition, plaintiff held to have abandoned the ground of his suit asserted in the original petition.—Symmes v. Rose (Ky.) 97.

§ 252. An allegation in an amended complaint not objected to as pleading a new cause of action held not a waiver of a claim for loss of earnings prior to the date it was filed.—Smith v. St. Louis Transit Co. (Mo. App.) 216.

§ 254. Where an amended and substituted petition is filed in lieu of the original petition and its amendment, held, that a purpose is indicated to rely upon the amended and substituted petition as alone stating the cause of action, and whether it is demurrable depends upon its allegations alone.—Robards v. P. Bannon Sewer Pipe Co. (Ky.) 429.

VIII. PROPERT, OYER, AND EXHIBITS.

§ 311. An exhibit referred to therein will not aid a defective pleading.—Sumner v. Griffin (Ky.) 422.

IX. MOTIONS.

§ 360. If two inconsistent causes of action were asserted in the same petition, or one of them was asserted by amendment, the trial court should require plaintiff to elect on which he would stand.—Symmes v. Rose (Ky.) 97.

XII. ISSUES, PROOF, AND VARIANCE.

In particular actions or proceedings.

See Trespass to Try Title, § 35.
For compensation of brokers, see Brokers, § 82.
For injuries from obstruction of navigable waters, see Navigable Waters, § 26.

XIII. DEFECTS AND OBJECTIONS, WAIVER, AND AIDER BY VERDICT OR JUDGMENT.

§ 406. A cross-petition, setting up an independent cause of action against persons not parties to the original suit, is not a misjoinder of actions, objection to which would be waived by filing an answer.—Mattingly v. Evered (Ky.) 447.

§ 406. In an action against a life insurance company to recover the amount of a premium note delivered to defendant's agent, general allegations of fraud in the complaint were sufficient, in the absence of a special exception.—Mutual Reserve Life Ins. Co. v. Seidel (Tex. Civ. App.) 945.

§ 408. An objection that the petition in an action for breach of contract shows on its face that the contract is illegal goes to the substance of the petition, and may be made at any stage of the proceedings.—Redland Fruit Co. v. Sargent (Tex. Civ. App.) 330.

§ 417. Where, upon a demurrer to the petition being sustained, plaintiff amended, and went to trial on his amended petition, he cannot complain, on appeal, of error in sustaining the demurrer, or assert that the original petition was his real cause of action.—Symmes v. Rose (Ky.) 97.

§ 433. A petition not objected to before trial held sufficient to sustain a judgment for damages for injuries to a minor servant required to operate a machine contrary to the statute.—Peters v. Gille (Mo. App.) 706.

PLEDGES.

Of corporate stock, see Corporations, § 123.
Priorities of widow's right to yearly allowance over lien of pledge, see Executors and Administrators, § 182.

§ 11. A mere promise by a debtor that he will hold certain property exclusively liable for a particular debt without delivery of it of any kind held not to constitute a pledge of such property.—Little v. Berry (Ky.) 102.

§ 25. The general doctrine is that the removal of a note secured by collateral security does not release the collateral.—Morehead v. Citizens' Deposit Bank (Ky.) 501.

§ 30. Mere delay of plaintiff in enforcing collateral securities given it by defendant held not to relieve defendant of liability.—Loeb v. German Nat. Bank (Ark.) 1017.

POLICE POWER.

Of municipality, see Municipal Corporations, § 592-626.

Regulating practice of medicine, see Physicians and Surgeons, § 2.

POLICY.

Of insurance, see Insurance.

POLITICAL RIGHTS.

Suffrage, see Elections.

POLLUTION.

Of water course, see Waters and Water Courses, § 76.

POOL.

Criminal prosecution for selling pooled goods without the pool agent's consent, jurisdiction dependent on locality of offense, see Criminal Law, § 97.

POPULATION.

Judicial notice, see Evidence, § 12.

POSSESSION.

See Adverse Possession.

In suit to quiet title, see Quieting Title, § 12.
Of demised premises, see Landlord and Tenant, §§ 134, 277-318.

PRINCIPAL AND SURETY.

See Bonds; Indemnity.

Maker of accommodation note as surety, see Bills and Notes, § 122.

Sureties on bonds in judicial proceedings.

See Bail; Garnishment, § 244.

Traverse bonds in forcible detainer proceedings, see Landlord and Tenant, § 291.

(A) BETWEEN INDIVIDUALS.

Parol evidence of relation, see Evidence, § 423.

II. NATURE AND EXTENT OF LIABILITY OF SURETY.

Computation of interest as against surety, see Interest, § 39.

§ 82. Where a bond securing a building contract is executed subsequent thereto, held that a stipulation in the bond modifies a stipulation in the contract so far as inconsistent, and the bond controls so far as the surety is concerned.—Hax-Smith Furniture Co. v. Toll (Mo. App.) 650.

III. DISCHARGE OF SURETY.

§ 100. Building specifications and bond considered, and changes, made by the owner and contractor voluntarily, held not to discharge the surety on the bond.—Hax-Smith Furniture Co. v. Toll (Mo. App.) 650.

§ 103. A surety of a note held released from liability on the payee accepting from the maker a renewal note in consideration of the payment of interest in advance.—Morehead v. Citizens' Deposit Bank (Ky.) 501.

§ 117. A contractor's surety held not discharged because the owner made payments to the contractor before the building was completed and the contractor abandoned his contract.—Litchi v. Gottlieb (Mo. App.) 1134.

§ 129. The fact that an attorney of a surety on a note offered to pay the note under the mistaken belief that the surety was liable, when, as a matter of fact, he had been released, did not estop the surety from defending on the ground that he had been released.—Morehead v. Citizens' Deposit Bank (Ky.) 501.

§ 129. Evidence held not to estop the surety on a note from relying on his release from liability because of the payee accepting from the maker a renewal note in consideration of the payment of interest in advance.—Morehead v. Citizens' Deposit Bank (Ky.) 501.

IV. REMEDIES OF CREDITORS.

Revival of judgment against surety, see Judgment, § 866.

PRIORITIES.

Of counties over other creditors, see Counties, § 130½.

Of lien for insurance assessment, see Insurance, § 197.

Of mortgages, see Mortgages, §§ 151-186.

Of municipality as against other creditors, see Municipal Corporations, § 253½.

PRIVATE NUISANCE.

See Nuisance, §§ 4-50.

PRIVATE ROADS.

Rights of way, see Easements.

PRIVILEGE.

Of married women, see Husband and Wife, §§ 85, 86.

Of witness as to testimony, see Witnesses, § 306.

PRIVILEGED COMMUNICATIONS.

Defamatory communications, see Libel and Slander, §§ 48-56.

PROBATE.

Of will, see Wills, §§ 229-434.

PROCEDURE.

See cross-references under Practice.

PROCESS.

Effect of appearance, see Appearance.

In actions against particular classes of persons.

Foreign corporations, see Corporations, § 668.

In particular actions or proceedings.

See Divorce, § 79.

Particular forms of writs or other process.

See Arrest; Execution; Garnishment; Injunction; Mandamus; Replevin; Sequestration.

I. NATURE, ISSUANCE, REQUISITES, AND VALIDITY.

Form of process in justice court, see Justices of the Peace, § 80.

II. SERVICE.

(A) PERSONAL SERVICE IN GENERAL.

Service of process on nonresident as insufficient to sustain judgment, see Judgment, § 17.

(C) PUBLICATION OR OTHER NOTICE.

To unknown heirs in partition, see Partition, § 51.

IV. ABUSE OF PROCESS.

Remedy at law for malicious abuse of process as affecting right to injunction, see Injunction, § 33.

PROHIBITION.

Of traffic in intoxicating liquors, see Intoxicating Liquors.

PROOF.

Of death, see Death, § 4.

Of loss insured against, see Insurance, § 539.

Taking additional proofs on appeal, see Appeal and Error, § 891.

PROPERTY.

Commission of homicide in defense of property, see Homicide, § 124.

Constitutional guaranties of rights of property, see Constitutional Law, §§ 92, 109, 298.

Covered by insurance policy, see Insurance, § 163.

Estates, see Estates.

Of particular classes of persons.

See Corporations, § 312.

Married women, see Husband and Wife, § 10.

Particular species of property.

See Animals; Fixtures; Franchises; Improvements; Mines and Minerals.

Standing timber, see Logs and Logging.

Transfers and other matters affecting title.

See Adverse Possession.

Dedication to public use, see Dedication.

Insurance of intoxicating liquors as property, see Insurance, § 126.

Taking for public use, see Eminent Domain.

Distinguished from action to restrain trespass, see Trespass, § 40.
Taking additional proofs on appeal, see Appeal and Error, § 891.

I. RIGHT OF ACTION AND DEFENSES.

§ 7. Where a deed is delivered, its mere record alone held to give no cause of action to quiet title.—Creamer v. Bivert (Mo.) 1118.

§ 10. In a suit to quiet title, plaintiff must succeed, if at all, on the strength of her own title.—Little v. Williams (Ark.) 340.

§ 12. That plaintiff is not in possession of the land does not prevent him from suing to have a deed adjudged to be a mortgage, to cancel a deed by the grantee to a third party, and to quiet plaintiff's title.—Tucker v. Witherbee (Ky.) 123.

§ 12. Under St. 1903, § 11, plaintiff in an action to quiet title held required to prove actual possession when he sued.—Dupoyster v. Dunn (Ky.) 880.

§ 14. Kirby's Dig. §§ 661-675, authorizing confirmation of tax titles, provided two years taxes shall have been paid, held not to apply to adversary suits to litigate conflicting titles and quiet the superior one, so as to require an allegation of plaintiff's payment of such taxes.—Knauff v. National Cooperage & Woodenware Co. (Ark.) 28.

II. PROCEEDINGS AND RELIEF.

Construction of stipulations, see Stipulations, § 14.

Harmless error, see Appeal and Error, § 1042.

RAILROADS.

See Street Railroads.

As employers, see Master and Servant.

Authority of sheriff to appoint or detail deputies to act as watchmen over railroad property, see Sheriffs and Constables, § 18.

Carriage of goods and passengers, see Carriers.
Franchise tax on corporation owning tank cars transported by railroad on a mileage basis, see Taxation, § 117.

Liability of railroad company for act of watchman in shooting at alleged trespasser, see Master and Servant, § 301.

Liability of railroad company for false imprisonment by policemen employed at station, see False Imprisonment, § 15.

I. CONTROL AND REGULATION IN GENERAL.

Failure to keep in repair a bridge over its track, sufficiency of indictment, see Nuisance, § 91.

§ 4. A railroad is a public highway, conducted and operated for the public's benefit.—Heilbron v. St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. of Texas (Tex. Civ. App.) 610, 979.

V. RIGHT OF WAY AND OTHER INTERESTS IN LAND.

Cancellation of deed to railroad right of way, see Cancellation of Instruments, § 47.

Railroad as tenant in common, see Tenancy in Common, §§ 3, 40.

§ 67. A deed conveying a railroad right of way held supported by a sufficient consideration.—Forsythe v. Southern Ry. in Kentucky (Ky.) 85.

§ 72. A railway right of way deed held to require the company to maintain its bridges and culverts so that the natural flow of water is not obstructed.—St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Hardie (Ark.) 31.

VI. CONSTRUCTION, MAINTENANCE, AND EQUIPMENT.

Decision that party is entitled to a farm crossing as law of the case on subsequent appeal, see Appeal and Error, § 1097.

Exercise of power of eminent domain, see Eminent Domain.

Harmless error in action to restrain obstruction of farm crossing, see Appeal and Error, § 1050.

Obstruction of surface waters by culvert, see Waters and Water Courses, § 118.

Remedies of abutting owners for obstruction of highway, see Highways, § 87.

Rights of purchaser of land as affected by injuries from railroad embankment existing at time of purchase, see Vendor and Purchaser, § 218.

§ 102. Under Rev. St. 1899, § 1105 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 945), a landowner held entitled to sue for damages from a railroad's failure to construct a farm crossing as required by the statute.—Price v. St. Louis, K. C. & C. R. Co. (Mo. App.) 1136.

§ 104. Evidence held not to show the existence of a roadway under a trestle in a railroad roadbed at the time a railroad company purchased the property.—Forsythe v. Southern Ry. in Kentucky (Ky.) 85.

§ 113. A railroad company obstructing a farm crossing held liable for any injury to the owner of the farm in consequence thereof.—Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Wilson (Ky.) 903.

§ 114. In an action against a railroad for damage to adjacent property, caused by excavating in a road which the company claimed was a part of its right of way, evidence held to show that the property had been actually damaged by the excavation.—Heilbron v. St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. of Texas (Tex. Civ. App.) 610, 979.

VII. SALES, LEASES, TRAFFIC CONTRACTS, AND CONSOLIDATION.

§ 129. A railroad company purchasing the property of a railroad company held not bound to maintain farm crossings.—Forsythe v. Southern Ry. in Kentucky (Ky.) 85.

§ 129. A railroad company purchasing the property of a railroad company held not entitled to deprive the owner of the land of the use of a farm crossing in existence at the time of the purchase.—Forsythe v. Southern Ry. in Kentucky (Ky.) 85.

VIII. INDEBTEDNESS, SECURITIES, LIENS, AND MORTGAGES.

(B) FORECLOSURE OF LIENS AND MORTGAGES.

§ 186. In an action against a railroad company to enforce a lien for defendant's subcontractors, the latter held not necessary parties.—Robinson v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. (Ark.) 1008.

X. OPERATION.

Expert testimony as to operation of, see Evidence, § 539½.

(B) STATUTORY, MUNICIPAL, AND OFFICIAL REGULATIONS.

Title of act forbidding railroad to run trains outside of yard limits with less than a specified number of men, see Statutes, § 110½.

(D) INJURIES TO LICENSEES OR TRAVELERS IN GENERAL.

§ 276. Railroad company held bound to exercise ordinary care not to injure a child.

Co. (Ky.) 442.

§ 359. One walking along a path in a railway yard, not a public highway, is a trespasser.—St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Lavendusky (Ark.) 204.

§ 359. Rule respecting a railroad company's liability for injury to trespassers, stated.—Little Rock & M. Ry. Co. v. Russell (Ark.) 1021.

§ 359. A railroad company does not owe a trespasser any duty of lookout or warning.—Burton's Adm'r v. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. Ry. Co. (Ky.) 442.

§ 359. A railroad company owes to a trespasser only the duty to use ordinary care after discovering him in peril.—Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. Ry. Co. v. Earls' Adm'r (Ky.) 854.

§ 359. Where, in an action against a railroad company for injuries to a child run over by its cars, the facts disclosed created no duty on the part of the company to the child, there could be no negligence.—International & G. N. R. Co. v. Vallejo (Tex.) 4.

§ 378. Trainmen held, as a matter of law, to owe no duty to a child injured by being run over by cars.—International & G. N. R. Co. v. Vallejo (Tex.) 4.

§ 378. To impose on the crew of a train the duty to watch all children about railroad yards and tracks during the operation of the train is beyond the proper limitation of all correct principles of law.—International & G. N. R. Co. v. Vallejo (Tex.) 4.

§ 387. Where a railroad company failed in the performance of its duties in operating its trains, and thereby struck a licensee on the track, it was liable, unless the licensee was guilty of contributory negligence.—Burton's Adm'r v. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. Ry. Co. (Ky.) 442.

§ 389. A railroad engineer's failure to use all means to prevent injury, after discovering the peril, is not actionable, unless the use of such means would reasonably have prevented the accident.—Parham v. Ft. Worth & D. C. Ry. Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 154.

§ 392. Rule respecting railway company's liability for injuries to trespassers held inapplicable, where the servant's acts causing the injury are beyond his authority.—St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Lavendusky (Ark.) 204.

§ 392. A railroad company held not liable for injury to a pedestrian walking through its yards.—St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Lavendusky (Ark.) 204.

§ 394. In an action against a railroad company for injuries to a person on the track, a general allegation of negligence in the petition held sufficient.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Dalton (Ky.) 842.

§ 394. A railroad company held liable if those in charge of a train negligently injured a trespasser, and if he was injured where no lookout was required, and they did not discover him in time to save him from injury, that fact would be matter of defense.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Dalton (Ky.) 842.

§ 398. Evidence held to sustain a verdict that defendant railroad company was not negligent, proximately resulting in the death of plaintiff's decedents, who were trespassing on the track when killed.—Parham v. Ft. Worth & D. C. Ry. Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 154.

§ 400. Whether the engineer of a train which struck a trespasser asleep beside the track, was negligent in not sounding the whis-—Burton's Adm'r v. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. Ry. Co. (Ky.) 442.

§ 400. In an action for death, evidence held to justify submission to the jury only of the questions whether the accident occurred at a pike crossing, and, if so, whether defendant's servants exercised ordinary care, whether it occurred on the track at a point other than a crossing, and whether decedent was negligent.—Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. Ry. Co. v. Earls' Adm'r (Ky.) 854.

§ 400. In an action for injuries through being struck by a car in front of which plaintiff was attempting to cross the track, plaintiff held not guilty of contributory negligence.—St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. of Texas v. Clark (Tex. Civ. App.) 169.

§ 401. A clause, in an instruction in an action for death of plaintiff's decedent by being struck by defendant's train which was a mere definition of what the court meant by "peril" held not objectionable.—Parham v. Ft. Worth & D. C. Ry. Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 154.

§ 401. An instruction held not defective as excusing defendant railway company from employing all means at hand to avoid injuring persons discovered in peril on the track.—Parham v. Ft. Worth & D. C. Ry. Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 154.

(H) INJURIES TO ANIMALS ON OR NEAR TRACKS.

§ 415. A finding of negligence in the killing of mules by a locomotive held warranted.—Texas Cent. R. Co. v. Estes (Tex. Civ. App.) 547.

§ 446. In an action against a railroad company for killing an animal, evidence held sufficient to go to the jury, though wholly circumstantial.—Texas & G. Ry. Co. v. Pate (Tex. Civ. App.) 994.

§ 447. A charge in an action against a railroad for killing an animal held not objectionable as authorizing recovery, whether the animal was struck by the locomotive or not.—Texas & G. Ry. Co. v. Pate (Tex. Civ. App.) 994.

(I) FIRES.

§ 457. Employees of a railroad company need not assist in arresting a fire on land adjacent to the railroad right of way, unless the company had set the fire.—Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Meentzen Bros. (Tex. Civ. App.) 1000.

§ 465. Defendant's negligence in permitting fire to escape from its locomotive held the proximate cause of the burning of plaintiff's buildings.—St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. of Texas v. Wilbanks (Tex. Civ. App.) 318.

§ 478. A petition for the destruction of plaintiff's property by fire set by a locomotive was not required to specify the immediate cause of the fire's escape.—St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. of Texas v. Wilbanks (Tex. Civ. App.) 318.

§ 480. To raise a presumption of negligence of a railroad company causing the destruction of property by fire set by its engine, there must be affirmative proof that the fire was caused by sparks from the engine.—Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Meentzen Bros. (Tex. Civ. App.) 1000.

§ 482. Proof that sparks from an engine ignited property along a railroad track held to establish a prima facie case of negligence.—Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Meentzen Bros. (Tex. Civ. App.) 1000.

REDEMPTION.

From mortgage, see Mortgages, § 608½.

REFERENCE.

See Arbitration and Award.

Review of referee's findings, see Appeal and Error, §§ 848, 1022.

REFORMATION OF INSTRUMENTS.

See Cancellation of Instruments.

REGISTRATION.

Of deed, see Deeds, § 88.

REHEARING.

See New Trial.

On appeal or writ of error, see Criminal Law, § 1131.

REISSUE.

Of note, see Bills and Notes, § 440.

RELEASE.

See Compromise and Settlement; Payment.

From liability on stock subscription, see Corporations, § 84.

Of chattel mortgage, see Chattel Mortgages, §§ 241, 246.

Release of liability to municipality, see Municipal Corporations, § 871.

I. REQUISITES AND VALIDITY.

§ 10. A release to consummate a settlement for a servant's injuries based on a mutual mistake of fact predicated on a doctor's medical opinion as to the employé's present condition held no defense to an action for the servant's injuries.—St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Hambright (Ark.) 803.

§ 24. A servant held not required to tender the consideration for a release as a condition of his right to sue for injuries sustained.—St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Hambright (Ark.) 803.

II. CONSTRUCTION AND OPERATION.

§ 33. A release by a lessor of coal land held not a disclaimer of his interest in future royalties accruing under the lease.—Hatfield v. Follaway (Ky.) 853.

III. PLEADING, EVIDENCE, TRIAL, AND REVIEW.

§ 57. In an action for injuries to a servant, evidence held to sustain a finding that a release of liability for plaintiff's injuries pleaded as a defense was obtained from him by fraud.—St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Hambright (Ark.) 803.

RELEVANCY.

Of evidence in civil actions, see Evidence, §§ 106-127.

Of evidence in criminal prosecutions, see Criminal Law, §§ 364, 365.

RELIGIOUS SOCIETIES.

Evidence of gift to, see Gifts, § 49.

REMAINDERS.

See Life Estates, § 23.

Pleading, § 49.

REMOVAL.

Of school buildings, see Schools and School Districts, § 69.

Of standing timber, see Logs and Logging, § 1.

REMOVAL OF CAUSES.

III. CITIZENSHIP OR ALIENAGE OF PARTIES.

(B) SEPARABLE CONTROVERSIES.

§ 57. Where an action is brought against a defendant entitled to remove the cause, and against one not entitled to remove, and judgment for the latter was not appealed from, while judgment against the defendant entitled to remove was reversed, the cause was not thereafter removable.—Huber v. Texas & P. Ry. Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 984.

REMOVAL OF CLOUD.

See Quieting Title.

RENEWAL.

Of insurance, see Insurance, § 145.

RENT.

Rights and liabilities of tenants in common. See Tenancy in Common, §§ 28, 30.

Rights of tenants in dower, see Dower, § 114.

REPEAL.

Of statute, see Statutes, § 159.

REPLEVIN.

II. JURISDICTION, VENUE, AND PARTIES.

§ 22. In replevin of a cow, the refusal to make one claiming no interest in the cow a party held proper.—Hight v. Oates (Ark.) 40.

IV. PLEADING AND EVIDENCE.

§ 58. A petition in replevin is fatally defective where it does not allege general or special ownership in plaintiff.—Donnell v. Miller (Mo. App.) 1132.

VI. TRIAL, JUDGMENT, ENFORCEMENT OF JUDGMENT, AND REVIEW.

Time of raising objection to verdict, see Trial, § 845.

Transfer of action to equity docket, see Trial, § 11.

§ 93. Under Civ. Code Prac. § 388, held that a petition of claim and delivery authorized the verdict rendered.—Gambrell v. Gambrell (Ky.) 885.

§ 93. The form of verdict in an action to detain considered.—Gambrell v. Gambrell (Ky.) 885.

REPLICATION.

See Pleading, § 180.

REQUESTS.

For instructions in civil actions, see Trial, §§ 255-268.

For instructions in criminal prosecutions. See Criminal Law, §§ 829, 834.

II. CONSTRUCTION OF CONTRACT.

§ 82. Terms of sale, "May 1st, 2 per cent., or July net," construed.—Howes & Howes v. Union Mfg. Co. (Ky.) 512.

§ 87. Testimony was admissible to show the construction given by merchants to such terms of sale as "May 1st, 2 per cent., or July net."—Howes & Howes v. Union Mfg. Co. (Ky.) 512.

III. MODIFICATION OR RESCISSION OF CONTRACT.

(C) RESCISSION BY BUYER.

§ 119. The buyer of goods of a specified quality and description may refuse to accept the entire shipment unless all of it corresponds with the contract.—Wiburg & Hannah Co. v. U. P. Walling & Co. (Ky.) 832.

IV. PERFORMANCE OF CONTRACT.

(C) DELIVERY AND ACCEPTANCE OF GOODS.

§ 166. A buyer of an electric sign held not bound to accept one containing a less number of lamps than contracted for.—Ellison Furniture & Carpet Co. v. Langever (Tex. Civ. App.) 178.

§ 177. Where the buyer of lumber agrees to accept the same on the seller's inspection, he cannot reject it for defects as to quality, unless it is substantially defective.—Wiburg & Hannah Co. v. U. P. Walling & Co. (Ky.) 832.

§ 178. Where lumber in car load lots is ordered and delivered, the purchaser does not accept the lumber by unloading it for inspection.—Wiburg & Hannah Co. v. U. P. Walling & Co. (Ky.) 832.

V. OPERATION AND EFFECT.

(A) TRANSFER OF TITLE AS BETWEEN PARTIES.

§ 200. In a sale of personalty, where specified acts are to be done to determine the price or the amount of goods, the transaction is not complete until the steps determining the price and amount of goods have been taken, and until that time the title does not pass.—McCoy v. Fraley (Ky.) 444.

VI. WARRANTIES.

§ 286. Notwithstanding a guaranty of an engine sold and existing defects, held, in view of the refusal of opportunity to the buyer to repair, it could recover the purchase price.—City of Bardwell v. Southern Engine & Boiler Works (Ky.) 97.

§ 288. Under an express warranty in the sale of machinery, held, the purchaser had no right of action for damages, having for a long time after discovery of defect continued to use the machine, without offer to return it.—J. I. Case Threshing Mach. Co. v. Harp (Ky.) 488.

VII. REMEDIES OF SELLER.

(B) LIEN.

§ 313. A seller waived the right to pursue the property and create a lien by consenting to a mortgage by the buyer.—Bell v. Old (Ark.) 1023.

§ 313. A seller's right to enforce a lien stated.—Bell v. Old (Ark.) 1023.

(E) ACTIONS FOR PRICE OR VALUE.

§ 347. One contracting to construct an electric light sign, having broken an agreement not to construct another sign of the same design, cannot compel his customer to accept the sign.—Ellison Furniture & Carpet Co. v. Langever (Tex. Civ. App.) 178.

§ 358. In an action for the contract price of an electric sign, certain evidence held not admissible on plaintiff's part.—Ellison Furniture & Carpet Co. v. Langever (Tex. Civ. App.) 178.

§ 363. Evidence in an action for goods sold and delivered failing to show that the goods were purchased from plaintiff, or that defendant promised to pay him for them, held insufficient.—Greenville Lumber Co. v. National Pressed Brick Co. (Mo. App.) 236.

VIII. REMEDIES OF BUYER.

Amendment of pleading in action to compel cancellation of notes given for purchase price so as to set up breach of warranty, see Pleading, § 248.

(C) ACTIONS FOR BREACH OF CONTRACT.

§ 407. An agreement by the buyer of lumber to accept the same on the seller's inspection and measurement did not estop the buyer from suing for breach of contract as to quality of the lumber.—Wiburg & Hannah Co. v. U. P. Walling & Co. (Ky.) 832.

(D) ACTIONS AND COUNTERCLAIMS FOR BREACH OF WARRANTY.

§ 427. A seller, having received the amount of the buyer's notes from a transferee, held properly compelled to indemnify the buyer for the loss sustained from the seller's breach of warranty.—Pennebaker Bros. v. Bell City Mfg. Co. (Ky.) 829.

§ 441. In an action for breach of warranty in the sale of a machine, evidence held insufficient to sustain a finding that the machine was sold to B., and not to plaintiffs.—Pennebaker Bros. v. Bell City Mfg. Co. (Ky.) 829.

§ 442. A buyer of a machine under a warranty, having executed notes for the price which were transferred to a bona fide purchaser or failure of the warranty, held entitled to recover the amount of the notes and freight paid from the seller.—Pennebaker Bros. v. Bell City Mfg. Co. (Ky.) 829.

IX. CONDITIONAL SALES.

Mortgages distinguished from conditional sales see Mortgages, § 6.

§ 477. A seller waived a reservation of title, by consenting to a mortgage by the buyer, as to the mortgagee and those claiming under the mortgage.—Bell v. Old (Ark.) 1023.

§ 479. Remedies of a seller, who has reserved title until payment of the purchase price on the buyer's default, stated.—Bell v. Old (Ark.) 1023.

SATISFACTION.

See Compromise and Settlement; Payment; Release.

Of judgment, see Judgment, § 874.

Of mortgage, see Chattel Mortgages, §§ 241, 246.

SCHOOLS AND SCHOOL DISTRICTS.

I. PRIVATE SCHOOLS AND ACADEMIES.

Exemption from taxation, see Taxation, § 262.

II. PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

(A) ESTABLISHMENT, SCHOOL LANDS AND FUNDS, AND REGULATION IN GENERAL.

Liability of municipality to school board for amount of taxes levied but not actually collected, see Municipal Corporations, § 966.

protects the officer or the purchaser at the sale.—Roettger v. Riefkin (Ky.) 88.

§ 98. Where a judgment is satisfied when execution issues, the writ, being fair on its face, protects the officer in case the judgment is afterwards satisfied.—Davis v. Gott (Ky.) 826; Crump v. Davis, Id.

SHIPPING.

Situs of vessel for purposes of taxation, see Taxation, § 262.

SIDEWALKS.

See Municipal Corporations, § 764.

SIGNALS.

From trains duty of railroad to employé, see Master and Servant, § 187.

SIGNATURES.

To affidavit for attachment, see Attachment, § 91.

SISTERS.

Right of sister to sue for damages for unlawful sale of liquor to minor brother, see Intoxicating Liquors, § 297.

SLANDER.

See Libel and Slander.

SMUGGLING.

See Customs Duties, § 125.

Libel in charging plaintiff with smuggling, see Libel and Slander, §§ 7, 48, 89, 103, 119, 120, 124.

SPECIAL LAWS.

See Statutes, §§ 71-93.

SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.

II. CONTRACTS ENFORCEABLE.

§ 43. Improvements made and part payment of the price of land held to entitle the purchaser to specific performance of an oral contract of sale.—Babcock v. Lewis (Tex. Civ. App.) 584.

§ 43. Expenditures and improvements by a purchaser of land under a parol contract held not so insignificant as to warrant a refusal of specific performance, though they did not equal in value what the purchaser had gained by his occupancy of the land.—Babcock v. Lewis (Tex. Civ. App.) 584.

§ 46. A purchaser of land held in such exclusive possession as to warrant specific performance of a parol contract of sale.—Babcock v. Lewis (Tex. Civ. App.) 584.

§ 58. A vendor held entitled to enforce specific performance of a contract for the purchase of real estate.—Moss & Raley v. Wren (Tex.) 739.

III. GOOD FAITH AND DILIGENCE.

§ 93. Specific performance of a contract to employ counsel and pay the expenses of litigation, in consideration of a conveyance of a portion of the land involved, denied, where such party did not pay the expenses as they accrued, although he offered to reimburse the other party after the litigation had terminated.—Abernathy v. Florence (Tex. Civ. App.) 161.

§ 97. The vendor of land held to have repudiated the contract so as to render unnecessary formal tender of the balance due thereon as a condition precedent to suit for specific performance.—Babcock v. Lewis (Tex. Civ. App.) 584.

IV. PROCEEDINGS AND RELIEF.

Instructions assuming facts, see Trial, § 192.

§ 121. In a suit for specific performance evidence held not to show that the purchaser ceased making improvements, nor that materials and labor furnished by the vendor constituted improvements by him and a charge against the land and the purchaser.—Babcock v. Lewis (Tex. Civ. App.) 584.

SPEED.

Negligence in driving team of horses rapidly on streets, see Municipal Corporations, § 708.

SPIRITUOUS LIQUORS.

See Intoxicating Liquors.

STATEMENT.

By witness inconsistent with testimony, see Witnesses, §§ 383-396.

Of case or facts for purpose of review, see Appeal and Error, §§ 543, 564, 571, 601, 644, 664, 701, 1156; Criminal Law, §§ 1090, 1110. Of plaintiff's claim, see Pleading, §§ 49-67.

STATES.

Courts, see Courts.

Interstate extradition, see Extradition, §§ 24-86.

Legislative power, see Constitutional Law, §§ 50, 63.

Pendency of action in state as not ground for abatement of action in another state, see Abatement and Revival, § 13.

Public lands, see Public Lands, §§ 151, 173.

II. GOVERNMENT AND OFFICERS.

Authority of governor to offer reward for arrest of offender, see Rewards, § 4.

§ 50. The private secretary of the Governor, authorized by Acts 1906, p. 260, c. 30, held not empowered to discharge the duties of the Governor in his absence.—Hager v. Sidebottom (Ky.) 870.

III. PROPERTY, CONTRACTS, AND LIABILITIES.

§ 110. The prerogative right of the sovereign to priority of payment of demands due it in its sovereign capacity held a part of the common law transmitted to Tennessee from North Carolina.—United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Rainey (Tenn.) 397.

§ 110. The state held entitled to priority over other creditors of a defaulting public officer in the collection of its delinquent revenue on his bond.—United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Rainey (Tenn.) 397.

V. CLAIMS AGAINST STATE.

§ 181. Claims against the state treasury cannot arise by implication, and he who demands money from the treasury must show that his claim is warranted by law.—Hager v. Sidebottom (Ky.) 870.

VI. ACTIONS.

§ 201. Mandamus to compel the Auditor of State to issue a warrant to pay a claim held an action against the state, and a meritorious defense must be allowed, though not tendered in time fixed by Civ. Code Prac. § 474.—Hager v. Sidebottom (Ky.) 870.

STATISTICS.

Judicial notice of, see Evidence, § 12.

STATUTES.

Judicial notice of, see Evidence, §§ 29, 34, 35.

Provisions relating to particular subjects.

See Acknowledgment, § 47; Adverse Possession, §§ 19, 112; Appeal and Error, §§ 71, 387, 601, 644, 672, 780, 1156, 1165, 1178; Arrest, § 65; Attachment, § 91; Bills and Notes, §§ 241, 394; Bridges, § 20; Carriers, §§ 12, 177, 182; Corporations, §§ 13, 641; Criminal Law, § 429; Descent and Distribution; Exemptions, § 76; Fish; Insurance, §§ 500, 675; Intoxicating Liquors; Jury, § 12; Limitation of Actions, §§ 1-41; Lis Pendens, § 16; Mandamus, § 1; Master and Servant, §§ 73, 95; Mechanics' Liens; Monopolies, § 17; Municipal Corporations, § 986; Physicians and Surgeons, § 2; Public Lands, § 58; Quieting Title, § 14; Railroads, § 803; Rape, § 15; Replevin, § 93; Rewards, § 4; Schools and School Districts, § 81; Street Railroads, § 74; Wills, § 28.

Admissions by accused as evidence, see Criminal Law, § 406.

Advancements, see Descent and Distribution, § 98.

Appointment of administrator, see Executors and Administrators, § 29.

Authentication of bill of exceptions by bystanders, see Exceptions, Bill of, § 54.

Costs and attorney's fees in actions on insurance policies, see Insurance, § 675.

Designation of agent for service of process in action against foreign corporation, see Corporations, § 641.

Failure of accused to testify, consideration of or comment on by counsel, see Criminal Law, § 721.

Foreign corporations, see Corporations, § 643. Instructions by court on weight of evidence, see Trial, § 191.

Investments by trustees, see Trusts, § 217.

Probate of foreign will, see Wills, § 245.

Swamp land grants, see Public Lands, § 58.

Venue of actions against connecting carriers, see Carriers, § 182.

Venue of actions against corporations, see Corporations, § 503.

Verdict in criminal prosecution, see Criminal Law, § 880.

II. GENERAL AND SPECIAL OR LOCAL LAWS.

§ 71. General laws, under Const. art. 3, § 56, prohibiting local or special laws where a general law can be made applicable, defined.—Smith v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 289.

§ 77. A statute relating to particular person or things of a class is special.—Smith v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 289.

§ 85. Acts 30th Leg. (Laws 1907) p. 269, 139, providing for the drawing of jurors, as a general law within Const. art. 3, § 56 Smith v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 289.

§ 93. Acts 30th Leg. (Laws 1907) p. 269, 139, regulating the summoning of jurors counties containing cities of 30,000 population etc., held not unconstitutional as a local law. Pate v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 759.

III. SUBJECTS AND TITLES OF ACT

§ 109. Rule as to sufficiency of titles of statutes, as affected by Const. art. 3, § 35, stated. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. State (Tex.) 916.

§ 110½. Act March 25, 1907 (Laws 30 Leg. pp. 92, 93), held invalid under Const. a 3, § 35, for insufficiency of its title.—Missouri K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. State (Tex.) 916.

§ 124. The title of Acts 30th Leg. c. 24 (Laws 1907, p. 509), approved May 25, 1907 providing for the appointment of official stenographers for district courts, etc., held not to contain more than one subject, in contravention Const. art. 3, § 35.—Texas & P. Ry. Co. v. State (Tex.) 3.

V. REPEAL, SUSPENSION, EXPIRATION, AND REVIVAL.

Laws relating to designation of agent for service of process in action against foreign corporation, see Corporations, § 641.

Statutes relating to damages for sale of intoxicating liquors, see Intoxicating Liquors, 283.

Statutes relating to killing fish, see Fish, §

§ 159. Rev. St. 1899, § 3162, as amended 1903 (Laws 1903, p. 195 [Ann. St. 1906, 1797]), and section 4327a, enacted in 1903 (Laws 1903, p. 240 [Ann. St. 1906, p. 2376]), relating to exemptions, held not inconsistent so as impliedly repeal section 4327a (Ann. St. 1906 2376), because its enactment was approved before that of section 3162.—Anderson v. Norv Shapleigh Hardware Co. (Mo. App.) 733.

VI. CONSTRUCTION AND OPERATION.

(B) PARTICULAR CLASSES OF STATUTES.

Statutes regulating sale of intoxicating liquors, see Intoxicating Liquors, § 34.

§ 239. A statute will not be construed to alter the common law further than it expressly declares or than is necessarily implied from the fact that it covers the whole subject-matter.—State v. Cooper (Tenn.) 1048.

STATUTES CONSTRUED.

UNITED STATES.		REVISED STATUTES.		Art. 16, §§ 5-7
CONSTITUTION.		§§ 4046, 4053 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, pp. 2752, 2755) 961		KIRBY'S DIGEST.
Amend. 14.....	1054	COMPILED STATUTES 1901.		§§ 661-675
STATUTES AT LARGE.		Page 3154	352	§§ 849, 853
1850, Sept. 28, ch. 84, 9		Page 3450	948	1493
Stat. 519.....	340	§§ 4046, 4053, pp. 2752,		2385
1887, Feb. 4, ch. 104, 24		2755	961	§§ 4337-4339, 4303
Stat. 379 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3154)	352	ARKANSAS.		5028
1898, July 1, ch. 541, § 68a, 30 Stat. 565 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 8450)	948	CONSTITUTION.		5694
		Art. 12, §§ 2, 6	796	§§ 6079, 6148
				6226
				6773
				§§ 6872, 6873, 6902, 6906
				6910, 6936, 7004

For cases in Dec. Dig. & Amer. Digs. 1907 to date & Indexes see same topic & section (§) NUMBER

LAWS.
1905, p. 538	340
1905, p. 798	808
1907, p. 162	796
1907, p. 746, § 3	34

KENTUCKY.

CONSTITUTION.

29	61
52	855
156	507
157	824
158	97
164	855
171	61
180	824
181	61

CIVIL CODE OF PRACTICE.

18, 21	69
51, 72	829
78, 79	131
90	127, 447
96	447
98	127
134	104
278	906
386	456
388	885
429	73
461	88
463, 464	895
474	870
477	855
692	73
755	851
757	108

CRIMINAL CODE OF PRACTICE.

87, 38	76
124, 135	140
240	850
281	846

STANTON'S REVISED STATUTES.

Ch. 24, §§ 15, 23	445
-------------------------	-----

GENERAL STATUTES 1888.

Ch. 52, art. 11, § 2	814
Ch. 70, art. 1, §§ 1, 4 ..	814

STATUTES 1903.

10	485
11	109, 880
130	69
469	490
571	829
712	841
1162	859
1202	140
1403, subsec. 5	118
1407	67
1581	835
1596a	485
1709, 1713	826
1784	415
1907a	93
1932, 1933	870
2032-2034, 2039	419
2138	908
2355	835
2358a, subd. 2	445
2361	51
2522	490
2548	52
2611-2643	415
2834, 2839	125
2069	883
3058, subsec. 2	467

§ 3704	507
3760	870
§§ 3848, 3882, 3896, 3897 ..	82
4077	468
4122	892
§ 4422-4424	69
4700	138
§§ 4856-4861	490

STATUTES 1908.

§ 3941a	907
---------------	-----

LAWS.

1871, (Sp. Sess.) p. 4, ch. 1073	814
1891-92-93, p. 748, ch. 179. Repealed by Laws ..
1904, p. 100, ch. 34	415
1904, p. 100, ch. 34	415
1906, p. 88, ch. 22	468
1906, p. 240, ch. 22, art. 19, § 1	61
1906, p. 260, ch. 30	870
1906, p. 429, ch. 117. Amended by St. 1908, § 3941a	907

MISSOURI.

CONSTITUTION.

Art. 4, § 53 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 197)	1054, 1074
Art. 6, § 12 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 218)	1093
Art. 10, § 6 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 280)	1083

REVISED STATUTES 1899.

§ 691 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 700)	225
§ 764 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 743)	1
§ 899 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 832)	726
§ 1025. Amended by Laws 1903, p. 121 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 888)	690, 735
§ 1085 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 933)	1099
§ 1105 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 945)	1136
§ 1136 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 975)	1099
§ 1180 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 995)	713
§ 1837 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1271)	1116
§ 1911 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1304)	221
§ 2522 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1503)	1057
§§ 2778, 2836 (Ann. St. 1906, pp. 1612, 1628) ..	668
§ 2924 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1682)	1157
§§ 3011, 3013 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1726)	1074
§§ 3027, 3029 (Ann. St. 1906, pp. 1733, 1736) ..	660
§ 3162. Amended by Laws 1903, p. 195 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1797)	733
§ 4160 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 2253)	1157
§ 4327a (Ann. St. 1906, p. 2376)	733
§ 4335 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 2378)	700
§ 4565 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 2480)	1093
§ 5222 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 2718)	233
§§ 5761, 6130 (Ann. St. 1906, pp. 2931, 3077) ..	682

§ 6433 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 3217)	1108
§ 6434 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 3217)	708
§ 6759 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 3327)	1077
§§ 7456, 7464 (Ann. St. 1906, pp. 3593, 3595) ..	1072
§ 7979 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 3794)	704
§ 8012 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 3808)	663
§§ 8861, 8862, 8868 (Ann. St. 1906, pp. 4118-4120)	1054
§ 9119 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 4199)	1083
§ 9674 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 4415)	652

ANNOTATED STATUTES 1906.

Page 197	1054, 1074
Page 218	1093
Page 280	1083
Page 1726	1074
Pages 4820, 4839, 4890 ..	1077
§ 463-60	735
691	225
764	1
899	726
1025	690, 735
1085	1099
1105	1136
1136	1099
1180	713
1837	1116
1911	221
2522	1057
§§ 2778, 2836	668
2924	1157
3011	1074
§§ 3027, 3029	660
3162	733
4160	1157
4327a	733
4335	700
4565	1093
5222	233
§ 5761, 6130	682
6433	1108
6434	706
6759	1077
§§ 7456, 7464, 7500-29 ..	1072
7979	704
8012	663
§§ 8861, 8862, 8868	1054
9119	1083
9674	652

CITY CHARTERS.

St. Louis, art. 3, § 31 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 4820) ..	1077
St. Louis, art. 5, § 14 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 4839) ..	1077
St. Louis, art. 16, § 7 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 4890) ..	1077

LAWS.

1903, p. 121 (Ann. St. 1906, § 1025)	735
1903, pp. 195, 240 (Ann. St. 1906, §§ 3162, 4327a)	733
1905, p. 163, § 29 (Ann. St. 1906, § 7500-29) ..	1072
1905, p. 250, § 60 (Ann. St. 1906, § 463-60)	735

TENNESSEE.

CONSTITUTION.

Art. 1, § 21	410
--------------------	-----

which a street car is operated, though it be the part of the street used by the railroad company.—San Antonio Traction Co. v. Levyson (Tex. Civ. App.) 569.

§ 93. It is the duty of those operating street cars, when fog or rain and snow obscure the view, to proceed cautiously, so as to insure the safety of others on a public thoroughfare, and to warn them of danger.—Engelman v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co. (Mo. App.) 700.

§ 93. Where a street railway company had provided a bench for waiting passengers, its operators were bound to regard the act of a prospective passenger crossing from one corner to the other as a signal to stop that he might take passage.—San Antonio Traction Co. v. Levyson (Tex. Civ. App.) 569.

§ 93. A street railway company must exercise ordinary care to prevent injuring those on the street or crossing its tracks to take passage.—San Antonio Traction Co. v. Levyson (Tex. Civ. App.) 569.

§ 98. While a traveler on a street car track is not a trespasser, he must exercise care commensurate with the danger of his position, and if he can, by looking, see the approach of a car, and fails to look, and is struck, his negligence precludes his recovery.—Engelman v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co. (Mo. App.) 700.

§ 102. A street railway company held liable for injuries to pedestrian occasioned by the negligence of the motorman operating the car at a dangerous rate of speed, thereby preventing him from avoiding the accident by the exercise of ordinary care.—Louisville Ry. Co. v. Buckner's Adm'r (Ky.) 90.

§ 103. The negligence of a person injured in a collision with a street car held not to defeat a recovery on the ground of the failure of the motorman to perform his humanitarian duty.—Cole v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co. (Mo. App.) 684.

§ 103. If those in charge of a street car discovered, or should by the exercise of ordinary care have discovered, plaintiff's peril while driving a wagon on the track in time to have avoided a collision, and did not do so, plaintiff's negligence in failing to look back for an approaching car would not preclude his recovery.—Funch v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co. (Mo. App.) 694.

§ 114. In an action against a street railway company for the death of a person struck by a car, evidence held to support a finding of negligence by defendant.—Louisville Ry. Co. v. Buckner's Adm'r (Ky.) 90.

§ 114. Weight of the evidence in an action for death of a pedestrian struck by a street car held to show that the car was moving at an unusual and dangerous speed.—Louisville Ry. Co. v. Byer's Adm'r (Ky.) 463.

§ 114. Evidence held to tend to show that a motorman did not maintain a lookout before his car struck a pedestrian.—Louisville Ry. Co. v. Byer's Adm'r (Ky.) 463.

§ 114. In an action against a street railway company for injuries in a collision with a car, the ownership of the car may be shown by reasonable inferences drawn from the facts of the case.—Frisby v. St. Louis Transit Co. (Mo.) 1059.

§ 114. In an action against a street railway company for injuries in a collision with a car, evidence held not to establish defendant's ownership of the car essential to a recovery.—Frisby v. St. Louis Transit Co. (Mo.) 1059.

§ 114. In an action against a street railway company for injuries in a street car collision, the evidence must support the allegations as to defendant's ownership and operation of the car and road at the time of the accident.—Frisby v. St. Louis Transit Co. (Mo.) 1059.

§ 114. Evidence held to warrant a finding that defendant's motorman was negligent in failing to keep a lookout for people on and at the intersection of streets where intestate was struck and killed.—San Antonio Traction Co. v. Levyson (Tex. Civ. App.) 569.

§ 114. In an action for death of a pedestrian in a collision with a street car at a street intersection, evidence held to warrant a finding that the motorman's negligence in failing to keep a proper lookout was the proximate cause of the death.—San Antonio Traction Co. v. Levyson (Tex. Civ. App.) 569.

§ 117. In an action for injuries in a street car collision, the refusal to direct a verdict for defendant held proper under the evidence.—Cole v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co. (Mo. App.) 684.

§ 117. Whether defendant's motorman in charge of a street car which collided with plaintiff's vehicle made proper efforts to avoid the collision after he saw, or could by the exercise of ordinary care have seen, plaintiff's peril, held, under the facts, to be for the jury.—Funch v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co. (Mo. App.) 694.

§ 117. In an action for injuries to a traveler on a street car track, questions as to plaintiff's exercise of due care and the speed of the car held for the jury.—Engelman v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co. (Mo. App.) 700.

§ 117. In an action for injuries to the driver of a wagon in a collision with a street car, evidence held to require submission of defendant's negligence and plaintiff's contributory negligence to the jury.—Fleddermann v. St. Louis Transit Co. (Mo. App.) 1143.

§ 117. In an action for death of a pedestrian by being run over by a street car, decedent held not negligent as a matter of law.—San Antonio Traction Co. v. Levyson (Tex. Civ. App.) 569.

§ 117. Deceased held not necessarily negligent, as a matter of law, because he stepped immediately in front of a moving street car.—San Antonio Traction Co. v. Levyson (Tex. Civ. App.) 569.

§ 118. In an action for injury to a pedestrian struck by a street car, held proper to instruct that the motorman was bound to maintain a lookout in approaching the crossing, whether there was evidence of his failure to keep a lookout or not.—Louisville Ry. Co. v. Byer's Adm'r (Ky.) 463.

§ 118. In an action for death of a pedestrian struck by a street car, refusal of an instruction held prejudicial error.—Louisville Ry. Co. v. Byer's Adm'r (Ky.) 463.

§ 118. A charge, permitting recovery for injuries inflicted by a street car if those operating it failed to use due care in giving "proper" warning of its approach, held not erroneous because of the use of the word "proper."—Engelman v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co. (Mo. App.) 700.

§ 118. A charge predicated on certain allegations of the petition held not erroneous because not applicable to other averments.—Engelman v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co. (Mo. App.) 700.

§ 118. An instruction held not objectionable as requiring a street railway motorman to keep a lookout for a particular person, nor as assuming that there was evidence that deceased was walking along the track at the time he was struck.—San Antonio Traction Co. v. Levyson (Tex. Civ. App.) 569.

STREETS.

See Highways; Municipal Corporations. §§ 657-706, 757-822.

Adverse possession of as against mortgagor. see Adverse Possession, §§ 8, 42.

§ 202. For the purpose of taxation, vessels may acquire an actual situs, and the place of enrollment and registration is not controlling, if the actual situs is elsewhere.—City of Galveston v. J. M. Guffey Petroleum Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 585.

V. LEVY AND ASSESSMENT.

(B) ASSESSORS AND PROCEEDINGS FOR ASSESSMENT.

§ 317. A valid assessment is essential to the validity of a tax.—Sullivan v. Bitter (Tex. Civ. App.) 193.

(C) MODE OF ASSESSMENT IN GENERAL.

§ 331. Insurance companies, not being required to file tax schedules required of other corporations by Kirby's Dig. § 6936, are required to file the schedule specified by sections 6906, 6910.—Dallas County v. Banks (Ark.) 37.

§ 335. An assessment of land held not invalid because of the owner's noncompliance with the statute as to listing.—Ward v. Wentz (Ky.) 892; Commonwealth v. Same, Id.

(E) ASSESSMENT ROLLS OR BOOKS.

Alteration of tax bill, see Alteration of Instruments, §§ 16, 24.

Reception of tax bill in evidence, see Trial, § 51.

§ 406. An assessment of property for taxes involves a listing of the property to be taxed and an estimation of the sums to guide the apportionment.—Sullivan v. Bitter (Tex. Civ. App.) 193.

§ 446. Tax books and the delinquent list prior to the taxes becoming delinquent held not to constitute a judgment and execution against the taxpayer.—Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Hamilton County (Tenn.) 361.

(G) REVIEW, CORRECTION, OR SETTING ASIDE OF ASSESSMENT.

§ 467. Under Kirby's Dig. § 7004, a board of equalization was authorized to add the value of stock, owned by petitioner in insurance companies, to his personal assessment, if the stock was taxable against him.—Dallas County v. Banks (Ark.) 37.

§ 467. There having been a valid assessment of land, held, it cannot be assessed for the same year as omitted property.—Ward v. Wentz (Ky.) 892; Commonwealth v. Same, Id.

§ 467. Under Rev. St. 1895, tit. 104, c. 3, the commissioners' court sitting as a board of equalization has no power to assess property for taxes.—Sullivan v. Bitter (Tex. Civ. App.) 193.

§ 467. In the absence of statutory authority, a board of equalization cannot assess property not listed and valued by the assessor.—Sullivan v. Bitter (Tex. Civ. App.) 193.

§ 467. Under Rev. St. 1895, art. 5124, as amended by Acts 1907, p. 459, c. 11, board of equalization has not power to add property not previously assessed or to strike property embraced in the rolls.—Sullivan v. Bitter (Tex. Civ. App.) 193.

§ 482. Notice of raise in assessment by the board of supervisors held required to be given as provided by Ky. St. 1903, § 4122, to give them jurisdiction.—Ward v. Wentz (Ky.) 892; Commonwealth v. Same, Id.

§ 482. Mere knowledge by owner of land, without appearance, of raise in assessment by the board of supervisors, held not to dispense with the notice which the statute requires them to give.—Ward v. Wentz (Ky.) 892; Commonwealth v. Same, Id.

VII. PAYMENT AND REPAYMENT OR RECOVERY OF TAX PAID.

§ 538. Payment of illegal taxes before they became delinquent held voluntary, so that no recovery could be had thereof.—Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Hamilton County (Tenn.) 361.

§ 538. Payment of taxes to be involuntary, so as to authorize a recovery thereof, must be made on compulsion to prevent the immediate seizure of the taxpayer's goods or the arrest of his person.—Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Hamilton County (Tenn.) 361.

VIII. COLLECTION AND ENFORCEMENT AGAINST PERSONS OR PERSONAL PROPERTY.

Compensation of county attorney additional to salary for services in suits to collect taxes, see District and Prosecuting Attorneys, § 5.

(C) REMEDIES FOR WRONGFUL ENFORCEMENT.

§ 609. Where an assessment of property to plaintiff by a board of equalization was void, he was not bound to apply to the board for relief before suing to have the assessment annulled and the tax enjoined.—Sullivan v. Bitter (Tex. Civ. App.) 193.

§ 611. Statement as to burden of proof as to notice, where it is sought to enjoin collection of a tax because the assessment was raised by the board of supervisors without the notice required by Ky. St. 1903, § 4122.—Ward v. Wentz (Ky.) 892; Commonwealth v. Same, Id.

XI. TAX TITLES.

(C) ACTIONS TO CONFIRM OR TRY TITLE.

§ 809. Complaint held to state a cause of action to quiet title under the general equity jurisdiction of the court, irrespective of whether plaintiff was entitled to a general decree for confirmation of a tax sale, under Kirby's Dig. §§ 661-675.—Knauff v. National Cooperage & Woodenware Co. (Ark.) 23.

XIII. LEGACY, INHERITANCE, AND TRANSFER TAXES.

§ 856. The power to tax held incident to the legislative power, and not required to be given by the Constitution.—Booth's Ex'r v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 61; Allen's Ex'rs v. McElroy (Ky.) 66; Barrett v. Continental Realty Co., Id.

§ 856. The right to take property by inheritance or bequest held not an absolute right of property, so that it may be subject to a tax as an incident.—Booth's Ex'r v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 61; Allen's Ex'rs v. McElroy (Ky.) 66; Barrett v. Continental Realty Co., Id.

§ 859. An inheritance tax held not one on property, within Const. § 171, requiring uniformity and equality of taxation of property.—Booth's Ex'r v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 61; Allen's Ex'rs v. McElroy (Ky.) 66; Barrett v. Continental Realty Co., Id.

§ 859. Revenue Act 1906 (Acts 1906, p. 240, c. 22) art. 19, § 1, imposing an inheritance tax, held to satisfy any requirement as to uniformity (Const. § 181).—Booth's Ex'r v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 61; Allen's Ex'rs v. McElroy (Ky.) 66; Barrett v. Continental Realty Co., Id.

§ 873. Revenue Act 1906 (Acts 1906, p. 240, c. 22) art. 19, § 1, construed as to exemption from the inheritance tax.—Booth's Ex'r v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 61; Allen's Ex'rs v. McElroy (Ky.) 66; Barrett v. Continental Realty Co., Id.

TAXATION OF COSTS.

See Costs, § 216.

TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES.

Mutual rights and liabilities of partners engaging in telephone business, see Partnership, § 90.

Telephone booth as reasonable safe appliance for use of servant, see Master and Servant, §§ 107, 233, 285.

I. ESTABLISHMENT, CONSTRUCTION, AND MAINTENANCE.

Excessive damages for injuries from negligent construction, see Damages, § 131.

Injuries from negligent construction of lines across navigable waters, see Navigable Waters, §§ 22, 26.

Ordinance for public sale of telephone franchise to owner of existing franchise, as creating monopoly, see Monopolies, § 6.

Ordinance modifying terms of franchise, invalidity as releasing indebtedness to municipality, see Municipal Corporations, § 871.

Power of city council to charge board of public works with duty of advertising and selling telephone franchise, see Municipal Corporations, § 680.

Power of municipal corporation to sell telephone franchise, see Municipal Corporations, § 680.

Punitive damages for injuries from driving against telephone pole located in road, see Damages, § 91.

Res gestæ in action for injuries from negligent construction, see Evidence, § 119.

§ 7. A franchise to operate a telephone system is not necessary, but one may construct and operate telephone lines on any street subject to municipal regulation.—Bishop v. Riddle (Tex. Civ. App.) 151.

II. REGULATION AND OPERATION.

Applicability of instructions to case in action for failure to transmit telegram, see Trial, § 251.

Argument and conduct of counsel in action for damages from delay, see Trial, § 125.

§ 38. That a telegram company accepted and transmitted a death message implied an obligation to make prompt delivery.—Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Moran (Tex. Civ. App.) 625.

§ 38. That a person whose name was signed to a death message by his agent was in another state held not to prevent the addressee from recovering for a delay in its delivery.—Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Moran (Tex. Civ. App.) 625.

§ 53. In an action to recover damages for failure to promptly transmit a telegram to plaintiff's brother, the failure to transmit promptly held not the proximate cause of the brother's failure to arrive by a particular train.—Landry v. Western Union Tel. Co. (Tex.) 10.

§ 56. Nature of the right of action for delay in delivering a telegram stated.—Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Potts (Tenn.) 789.

§ 56. Action for delay in delivering a telegram may be brought by one whose name appears in the message as the beneficiary thereof, though he be neither sender nor addressee, or in the name of an undisclosed principal of the sender.—Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Potts (Tenn.) 789.

§ 59. An action for breach of a telegram company's statutory duty to promptly deliver a message is in effect one for negligence.—Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Potts (Tenn.) 789.

§ 60. In an action for damages for failure to deliver a telegram announcing the serious illness of plaintiff's daughter, whereby she was prevented from being with her daughter at the latter's death, there is a presumption of mental anguish, and it need not be affirmatively proved.—Western Union Tel. Co. v. Blair (Tex. Civ. App.) 164.

§ 66. Evidence held admissible in an action for delay in delivering a death message based on the addressee being prevented from delaying the burial by a reply telegram.—Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Moran (Tex. Civ. App.) 625.

§ 66. Evidence held to show that, if a death message had been received without delay, the addressee would have telegraphed the sender to delay burial.—Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Moran (Tex. Civ. App.) 625.

§ 67. Measure of damages for wrongful delay in delivering death messages stated.—Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Potts (Tenn.) 789.

§ 67. A telegram company may learn the grounds on which it may base an estimate of, or anticipate, damages resulting from a failure to properly deliver a message, either from facts communicated to its agents dehors the message or from the face of the message itself.—Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Potts (Tenn.) 789.

§ 68. Damages for failure to deliver a telegram announcing death of a relative cannot be recovered, unless the relationship between the parties is that of parent and child, husband and wife, sister and brother, or grandparent and grandchild.—Lee v. Western Union Tel. Co. (Ky.) 55.

§ 68. Mental anguish is an element of damage recoverable for delay in delivering a social telegram.—Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Potts (Tenn.) 789.

§ 68. Measure of recovery of the undisclosed principal of both the sender and the addressee of a death message stated.—Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Potts (Tenn.) 789.

§ 73. In an action for damages for a failure to deliver a telegram announcing the serious illness of plaintiff's daughter, whereby she was prevented from being with her daughter at the latter's death, evidence held at most to raise a question for the jury whether plaintiff did suffer mental anguish.—Western Union Tel. Co. v. Blair (Tex. Civ. App.) 164.

§ 74. Allegations in an action for delay in delivering a death message preventing the addressee from attending the funeral, held to authorize submission of an issue whether if she had sent a reply message the burial would have been postponed.—Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Moran (Tex. Civ. App.) 625.

TENANCY IN COMMON.

Merger of estates, see Estates, § 10.

I. CREATION AND EXISTENCE.

§ 3. Where one of co-tenants conveyed her undivided one-half interest to a railroad, the latter became a tenant in common with her.—Hellbron v. St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. of Texas (Tex. Civ. App.) 610, 979.

§ 3. One holding the title of one of the heirs of a deceased ancestor is a tenant in common with the other heirs, and is not a mere trespasser so as to authorize some of the heirs to recover from him.—Hess v. Webb (Tex. Civ. App.) 618.

II. MUTUAL RIGHTS, DUTIES, AND LIABILITIES OF CO-TENANTS.

Application of general statutes, of limitation to actions for accounting for rents, see Limitation of Actions, § 51.

1202 THE SOUTHWESTERN REPORTER
§ 15. Under the facts, held, a tenant in common acquired title by adverse possession against a co-tenant.—Frey v. Myers (Tex. Civ. App.) 592.

§ 15. A purchaser of an interest of an heir in a tract of land of a deceased ancestor held not to hold the possession adversely to the other heirs, unless notice was brought home that he claimed the entire tract.—Hess v. Webb (Tex. Civ. App.) 618.

§ 28. A tenant in common held accountable for rents to co-tenants ousted by her.—Starks v. Kirchgraber (Mo. App.) 1149.

§ 30. A tenant in common ousting co-tenants may set off against their claim for rents taxes paid by her.—Starks v. Kirchgraber (Mo. App.) 1149.

III. RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES OF CO-TENANTS AS TO THIRD PERSONS.

§ 39. No one could complain of the exclusive use of the joint property by one tenant in common, except his co-tenant.—Heilbron v. St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. of Texas (Tex. Civ. App.) 610, 979.

§ 40. A railroad being co-tenant of a part of land, the other co-tenant could not dedicate any part thereof as a highway without the railroad's consent.—Heilbron v. St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. of Texas (Tex. Civ. App.) 610, 979.

TENDER.

Of amount received from insurer on setting aside compromise of claim, see Insurance, § 579.
Of mortgage debt in proceedings to have deed declared to be a mortgage, see Mortgages, § 608½.

TERMINATION.

Of easement, see Easements, § 26.
Of trust, see Trusts, § 61.

TERMS.

Of leases, see Landlord and Tenant, §§ 76-112.

TESTAMENT.

See Wills.

TESTAMENTARY CAPACITY.

See Wills, §§ 28-30.

TEXT-BOOKS.

Bonds of dealers in, see Schools and School Districts, § 81.

THEFT.

See Larceny.

THEORY.

Nature and theory of cause on appeal or writ of error, see Appeal and Error, § 171.

THREATS.

See Extortion.

By party to assault, see Assault and Battery, § 88.

Evidence of in homicide prosecution, see Homicide, §§ 167, 190.

TIMBER.

See Logs and Logging.

Cutting of as trespass, see Trespass, § 68.

TIME.

For particular acts in or incidental to judicial proceedings.

Demand for jury, see Jury, § 25.

Filing bill of exceptions, see Exceptions, Bill of, § 36.

Filing bill of exceptions on appeal or writ of error, see Appeal and Error, § 537.

Filing bond on appeal or writ of error, see Appeal and Error, § 337.

Filing statement of case or facts for purpose of review, see Appeal and Error, § 564; Criminal Law, § 1099.

Payment of fees of clerk of court, see Clerk of Courts, § 32.

Raising constitutional questions, see Constitutional Law, § 43.

For particular acts not judicial.

Local option election, see Intoxicating Liquors, § 34.

Payment of interest, see Interest, § 39.

Performance of contract, see Contracts, § 214.

§ 10. Under Civ. Code Prac. § 461, providing that, if the party against whom the inquisition is found in a case of forcible detainer fails to file a traverse on or before the third day after the finding of the inquest, the judge or justice shall on request issue execution, Sunday must be excluded in computing the three days.—Roetger v. Riefkin (Ky.) 88.

TITLE.

Color of title, see Adverse Possession.

Jurisdiction of questions involving title to real property, see Courts, § 231.

Removal of cloud, see Quieting Title.

Tax titles, see Taxation, § 809.

Particular matters affecting title.

See Adverse Possession, § 106; Dedication, § 48.

Estoppel to assert title, see Estoppel, § 44.

Foreign will as passing title to realty, see Wills, § 245.

Probate of nonresident's will, see Wills, § 494.

Particular species of property or rights.

Fee of highway, see Highways, §§ 35, 87.

Title necessary to maintain particular actions.

See Trespass to Try Title, § 6.

Titles of particular acts or proceedings.

Statutes, see Statutes, §§ 109-124.

TITLE INSURANCE.

See Insurance, § 500.

TORTS.

Liabilities of particular classes of persons.

See Landlord and Tenant, § 331; Municipal Corporations, §§ 757-845.

Agents, see Principal and Agent, § 158.

Employés, see Master and Servant, §§ 300-322.

Particular torts.

See Conspiracy, §§ 20, 21; False Imprisonment, § 15; Libel and Slander; Negligence; Nuisance; Trespass; Trover and Conversion.

Civil damages from sale of liquors, see Intoxicating Liquors, §§ 283-317.

Eviction of tenant renting on shares, see Landlord and Tenant, § 331.

Remedies for torts.

See Trespass; Trover and Conversion, § 39.

Measure of damages, see Damages, §§ 95, 101, 109.

III. DAMAGES, USE AND OCCUPATION, IMPROVEMENTS, AND TAXES.

§ 56. One held entitled to allowance for improvements in good faith without deduction for timber taken from the land and put in the improvements.—Fain v. Nelms (Tex. Civ. App.) 1002.

§ 59. In an action to recover real estate, certain proof held some evidence that the value of the land was actually enhanced by reason of improvements to the amount as found by the court, as authorized by Rev. St. 1895, art. 5278, subd. 1.—Haney v. Gartin (Tex. Civ. App.) 166.

TRIAL.

See New Trial; Witnesses.

Proceedings incident to trials.

See Continuance.

Entry of judgment after trial of issues, see Judgment, §§ 199-252.

Summoning and impaneling jury, see Jury, § 70.

Trial of actions by or against particular classes of persons.

See Carriers, §§ 136, 230, 321; Landlord and Tenant, § 318; Railroads, §§ 282, 350.

Trial of particular civil actions or proceedings.

See Conspiracy, § 21; Libel and Slander, § 124; Negligence, §§ 136-141; Partition, § 70; Replevin, § 93; Trespass, § 68; Trespass to Try Title, § 44.

For breach of contract, see Contracts, § 353.

For breach of contract to devise or bequeath, see Wills, § 68.

For compensation of broker, see Brokers, § 88.

For conversion of mortgaged chattels, see Chattel Mortgages, § 176.

For delay in delivery of telegram, see Telegraphs and Telephones, § 74.

For injuries from obstruction of navigable stream, see Navigable Waters, § 26.

For injuries to live stock in transportation, see Carriers, § 230.

For injuries to passenger, see Carriers, § 321.

For injuries to property caused by defective railroad crossings, see Railroads, § 350.

For loss of or injuries to shipment, see Carriers, §§ 136, 187.

For obstruction of navigable waters, see Navigable Waters, § 26.

For obstruction of water course, see Waters and Water Courses, § 126.

For wrongful dispossession of tenant, see Landlord and Tenant, § 318.

On bill or note, see Bills and Notes, § 538.

On insurance policy, see Insurance, §§ 668, 825.

On liquor dealer's bond, see Intoxicating Liquors, § 317.

Trial of criminal prosecutions.

See Abduction, § 16; Criminal Law, §§ 594-614, 634-889; Homicide, §§ 271-310; Rape, § 59.

For carrying weapon, see Weapons, § 17.

For offenses against liquor laws, see Intoxicating Liquors, § 238.

II. DOCKETS, LISTS, AND CALENDARS.

§ 11. The answer in replevin held not to present a matter of purely equitable cognizance, so as to entitle defendant to a transfer to equity.—Ayer & Lord Tie Co. v. Greer (Ark.) 209.

§ 11. The answer in an action on notes held to state no cause for an equitable accounting, so

IV. DAMAGES, USE AND OCCUPATION, IMPROVEMENTS, AND TAXES.

Harmless error in rulings relating to right to open and close, see Appeal and Error, § 1046.

§ 25. An answer held to be an affirmative denial of the allegations of the petition leaving the burden of proof on plaintiff, and giving him the right to close the argument.—Stringfield v. Louisville Ry. Co. (Ky.) 513.

§ 25. Defendant, in an action on a note, held not entitled to open and close as an absolute right.—Oexner v. Loehr (Mo. App.) 727.

§ 25. Rule as to the right to open and close stated.—Oexner v. Loehr (Mo. App.) 727.

§ 25. Plaintiff's title being admitted, and the only issue left being that of improvements, held, that defendants had the burden of proof, and so, under Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 126, the right to open and conclude the argument.—Fain v. Nelms (Tex. Civ. App.) 1002.

IV. RECEPTION OF EVIDENCE.

(A) INTRODUCTION, OFFER, AND ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE IN GENERAL.

§ 33. Since state courts take judicial notice of the laws of the United States, the testimony of federal officers, such as revenue agents, is not admissible to prove such laws.—San Antonio Light Pub. Co. v. Lewy, (Tex. Civ. App.) 574.

§ 35. Admissions for purpose of the suit by the attorneys of record held conclusive.—Frey v. Myers (Tex. Civ. App.) 592.

§ 41. Allowing one witness to stay in court while others were excluded held to be in the discretion of the trial court.—Matthew's Adm'r v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (Ky.) 459.

§ 51. A tax bill admitted subject to objection, and not afterwards excluded, must be treated as in evidence.—German-American Bank v. Manning (Mo. App.) 251.

(B) ORDER OF PROOF, REBUTTAL, AND REOPENING CASE.

§ 62. In an action for injuries to a passenger by derailment caused by a defective track, evidence of defective ties 100 yards from the place of the accident held admissible in rebuttal.—Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Cheatham (Tex. Civ. App.) 777.

(C) OBJECTIONS, MOTIONS TO STRIKE OUT, AND EXCEPTIONS.

§ 84. An objection to evidence which rests rather to its sufficiency than to its admissibility does not raise a question of the admissibility thereof.—Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Cunningham (Tex. Civ. App.) 767.

§ 105. Admission of incompetent evidence held waived where no objection was interposed or exception saved.—Heiberger v. Missouri & Kansas Telephone Co. (Mo. App.) 730.

V. ARGUMENTS AND CONDUCT OF COUNSEL.

Review of opening statement of counsel as dependent on preservation in bill of exceptions, see Appeal and Error, § 688.

§ 109. The opening statement of counsel for defendant in an action against a street railway company for injuries in a collision with a car held, when preserved in the record, sufficient to carry the issue of ownership of the car to the jury.—Frisby v. St. Louis Transit Co. (Mo.) 1059.

dence was conflicting.—St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Boshear (Tex.) 6.

§ 191. In an action for a broker's commission, an instruction held properly refused because assuming a fact in dispute.—Hansen v. Williams (Tex. Civ. App.) 812.

§ 191. Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 1317, prohibiting instructions on the weight of the evidence, is mandatory.—Orange Lumber Co. v. Thompson (Tex. Civ. App.) 563.

§ 191. An instruction in partition held erroneous as assuming that plaintiffs were the only heirs of the deceased ancestor.—Hess v. Webb (Tex. Civ. App.) 618.

§ 192. Failure to assume as true an undisputed fact is not error, where the charge does not authorize a finding against the complaining party if the fact is not found.—Parham v. Ft. Worth & D. C. Ry. Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 154.

§ 192. In an action to specifically perform a contract, an instruction was not erroneous for assuming that a contract was made, where that fact was undisputed.—Alexander v. Brillhart (Tex. Civ. App.) 184.

§ 192. Where the undisputed evidence showed that the alleged libelous article was published by defendant as alleged, and its publication was not denied, the court could assume in its charge that defendant published the article.—San Antonio Light Pub. Co. v. Lewy (Tex. Civ. App.) 574.

§ 194. A charge held not to be on the weight of evidence.—Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. House (Tex. Civ. App.) 154.

§ 194. A requested instruction, in an action for conversion, held on weight of evidence.—Crouch Hardware Co. v. Walker (Tex. Civ. App.) 163.

§ 194. An instruction, assuming the navigability of certain waters in a suit for obstructing them, held incorrect.—Orange Lumber Co. v. Thompson (Tex. Civ. App.) 563.

§ 194. In an action for contribution between partners, an instruction held erroneous as on the weight of the evidence.—Doty v. Moore (Tex. Civ. App.) 955.

§ 194. In an action between partners for contribution, an instruction that if the jury found that a division agreement had been made, etc., they should find for defendants, held erroneous as on the weight of the evidence.—Doty v. Moore (Tex. Civ. App.) 955.

§ 194. An instruction, in an action to recover notes and mortgages assigned by decedent to her son and by him to plaintiff, defended by decedent's other children on the ground of fraud, held erroneous as a charge upon the weight of the evidence, and as giving undue prominence to certain evidence.—McKay v. Peterson (Tex. Civ. App.) 981.

(B) NECESSITY AND SUBJECT-MATTER.

§ 207. Failure to limit certain evidence to its impeaching effect held error, which was accentuated by a limitation placed on the witness' subsequent statements that the former transaction never occurred.—Georgia Home Ins. Co. v. Kelley (Ky.) 882.

(C) FORM, REQUISITES, AND SUFFICIENCY.

§ 235. An instruction in an action on a note held properly refused as commenting on the evidence.—International Bank v. Enderle (Mo. App.) 262.

§ 235. An instruction that certain facts constituted a "prima case" of negligence held not objectionable because of clerical error.—St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. of Texas v. Wilbanks (Tex. Civ. App.) 318.

§ 244. An instruction, in an action to recover notes and mortgages assigned by decedent to her son and by him to plaintiff, defended on the ground of the son's fraud, held erroneous as emphasizing the circumstances relied upon by defendants.—McKay v. Peterson (Tex. Civ. App.) 981.

§ 244. Instructions held erroneous as giving too much prominence to the issue of contributory negligence.—Huber v. Texas & P. Ry. Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 984.

(D) APPLICABILITY TO PLEADINGS AND EVIDENCE.

§ 251. In an action for injuries to a servant, the court's failure to instruct for defendant B. because of plaintiff's failure to connect him with the accident held not error.—Lorts & Frey Planing Mill Co. v. Weil (Ky.) 474.

§ 251. An instruction, in a personal injury action, submitting a hypothesis not authorized by the petition, held properly refused.—Atchison v. City of St. Joseph (Mo. App.) 679.

§ 251. In an action for failure to promptly transmit a telegram to plaintiff's brother S., there being no allegations that another brother would have come to plaintiff had the message been delivered, or of any damage from the failure of any one to come except S., it was error to submit the issue of damages for the failure of her other brother to come.—Landry v. Western Union Tel. Co. (Tex.) 10.

§ 251. In libel for charging plaintiff with smuggling, the truth of the alleged libelous article not having been pleaded, a charge submitting whether plaintiff was guilty of the offense of smuggling was properly refused.—San Antonio Light Pub. Co. v. Lewy (Tex. Civ. App.) 574.

§ 251. Defendant, not having pleaded the truth of the alleged libelous matter, cannot complain that the court did not instruct upon the truth of the publication as a defense.—San Antonio Light Pub. Co. v. Lewy (Tex. Civ. App.) 574.

§ 251. Instructions, based on a theory not deducible from the petition, are properly refused.—Fordtran v. Stowers (Tex. Civ. App.) 631.

§ 251. Charge in an action on a retail liquor dealer's bond held erroneous as presenting a defense not made by the answer.—Farenthold v. Tell (Tex. Civ. App.) 635.

§ 251. Where, in an action on a retail liquor dealer's bond, the charge presented a defense not made by the answer, upon which the verdict for the defense might have been founded, a reversal is required.—Farenthold v. Tell (Tex. Civ. App.) 635.

§ 251. Where, in an action on a retail liquor dealer's bond, the answer did not present the defense of good faith, held, that a charge thereon could not be sustained, even if evidence of a sale in good faith was admitted without objection.—Farenthold v. Tell (Tex. Civ. App.) 635.

§ 251. In an action against a carrier for injury to goods in transit, an instruction as to inherent defects in the goods shipped was properly refused, where defendant did not raise that issue in its pleading or proof.—International & G. N. R. Co. v. Welbourne (Tex. Civ. App.) 780.

§ 252. In an action for injuries to plaintiff at a public crossing held improper to submit an issue as to whether it appeared that plaintiff would see or hear the train in time to avoid injury.—Little Rock & M. Ry. Co. v. Russell (Ark.) 1021.

§ 252. In an action for the death of a person struck by a car, an instruction held prejudicial because submitting an issue not supported by the evidence.—Louisville Ry. Co. v. Backner's Adm'r (Ky.) 90.

struck by a train, held not cured by another instruction.—Burton's Adm'r v. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. Ry. Co. (Ky.) 442.

§ 296. In an action on a note, refusal of an instruction substantially covered held not reversible error.—International Bank v. Enderle (Mo. App.) 262.

§ 296. The error of including financial injury as one of the results of the publication in defining libel, in an action for injury to the reputation alone, was harmless, where the court only submitted such matters contained in its definition of libel as were pleaded and proved, and instructed that in estimating plaintiff's damages they should not consider any financial injury suffered by her.—San Antonio Light Pub. Co. v. Lewy (Tex. Civ. App.) 574.

IX. VERDICT.

(A) GENERAL VERDICT.

§ 331. A verdict held free from ambiguity.—Beaumont Rice Mills v. Campbell (Tex. Civ. App.) 971.

§ 333. In an action on a note and on a guaranty of its payment, a general verdict for plaintiff was not insufficient for not stating the amount of recovery, where the amount was not in dispute.—Bell v. Old (Ark.) 1023.

§ 345. Where the verdict in an action of claim and delivery fails to award the property alleged to be in defendant's possession, he should move to have the jury make a more complete verdict, and he cannot wait until the jury is dismissed, and then avail himself of the error.—Gambrell v. Gambrell (Ky.) 885.

X. TRIAL BY COURT.

(A) HEARING AND DETERMINATION OF CAUSE.

§ 386. A request for a declaration of law that an alteration of a tax bill was not material held an application for a declaration on an issue of fact.—German-American Bank v. Manning (Mo. App.) 251.

XI. WAIVER AND CORRECTION OF IRREGULARITIES AND ERRORS.

§ 412. A party waives the conditions precedent to the admissibility of secondary evidence by the adverse party by itself introducing similar secondary evidence.—Mullins v. Columbia County Bank (Ark.) 206.

TROVER AND CONVERSION.

Conversion of mortgaged chattels, see Chattel Mortgages, §§ 176, 228.

II. ACTIONS.

(A) RIGHT OF ACTION AND DEFENSES.

Waiver of tort so as to sue in assumpsit, see Action, § 28.

(C) EVIDENCE.

§ 39. The admission of certain evidence by plaintiff in trover held not error, as her other testimony tended to show that the value given of the property converted was the cash market value.—Crouch Hardware Co. v. Walker (Tex. Civ. App.) 163.

(E) TRIAL, JUDGMENT, AND REVIEW.

Instructions on weight and sufficiency of evidence, see Trial, § 194.

Reversal of judgment for failure of findings to show value of property converted, see Appeal and Error, § 1177.

TRUST DEEDS.

See Mortgages.

Topics, divisions, & section (§) NUMBERS in this index, & Dec. & Amer. Digs. & Reporter Indexes agree

TRUSTEE PROCESS.

See Garnishment.

TRUSTS.

Combinations to monopolize trade, see Monopolies, § 17.

I. CREATION, EXISTENCE, AND VALIDITY.

(A) EXPRESS TRUSTS.

§ 61. A trust held not a simple or dry trust which could be limited or ended by the beneficiaries.—Nunn v. Peak (Ky.) 493.

(B) RESULTING TRUSTS.

Vendor in executory contract for sale of land as trustee for vendee, see Vendor and Purchaser, § 54.

IV. MANAGEMENT AND DISPOSAL OF TRUST PROPERTY.

§ 189. Trustee held to have power to sell premises prior to life tenant's death.—Riffe v. Liddell's Trustee (Ky.) 106.

§ 191. A trust deed held to vest power of sale in the trustee and his appointees only.—United States Trust Co. v. Poutch (Ky.) 107.

§ 195. Under a trust deed and an agreement for the establishment of a townsite, the trustee held entitled to sell tracts by acre.—Harr v. Fordyce (Ark.) 1033.

§ 203. A purchaser of trust property who is not connected with the trust, and who deals with the trustee at arms' length, in the absence of fraudulent collusion, may buy as cheap as he can, unless the difference between the actual value and the price paid is so great as to raise the presumption of fraud.—Nunn v. Peak (Ky.) 493.

§ 217. Under Ky. St. 1903, § 4706, a trustee cannot invest trust funds in bank stock unless the bank has been in operation for more than 10 years.—Robertson v. Robertson's Trustee (Ky.) 138.

§ 218. In the absence of a statute a trustee investing trust funds in bank stock is liable for the loss sustained by the depreciation of the stock.—Robertson v. Robertson's Trustee (Ky.) 138.

§ 235. Trustees held liable as such for maintenance of public nuisance.—Ireland v. Brown & Cockrell (Ky.) 56.

UNDERTAKINGS.

See Bonds.

UNDUE INFLUENCE.

Procuring making of deed, see Deeds, §§ 72, 194.
Procuring making of will, see Wills, §§ 163-166.

UNITED STATES.

See Post Office.

Courts, see Removal of Causes.
Judicial notice of laws of, see Evidence, § 34.
Public lands, see Public Lands, §§ 25-108.

UNKNOWN HEIRS.

Service of process by publication on unknown heirs in partition, see Partition, § 51.

USAGES.

See Customs and Usages.

of his purchased title.—Thompson v. Bowen (Ark.) 26.

§ 231. Facts held to charge defendants with notice of a deed to the land from F. to S.—McDonald v. Hanks (Tex. Civ. App.) 604.

§ 233. The question whether a subsequent purchaser was a bona fide purchaser of property conveyed by a prior unrecorded deed held not to arise.—Davidson v. Jenkins (Ky.) 901.

§ 238. A subsequent purchaser with notice, acquiring title from a former purchaser for value and without notice, succeeds to all the rights of his grantor.—Thomason v. Berwick (Tex. Civ. App.) 567.

§ 242. The burden is on the party asserting equitable title against a legal title to show that at the time the legal title was acquired the purchaser had notice of the equity sought to be asserted against it.—Louisiana & T. Lumber Co. v. Dupuy (Tex. Civ. App.) 973.

VI. REMEDIES OF VENDOR.

(A) LIEN AND RECOVERY OF LAND.

Priority between vendor's lien and mortgage, see Mortgages, § 151.

§ 253. Where land and chattels are sold for a gross amount, the reservation of a vendor's lien for the entire amount binds the land for the amount of the notes, with interest and attorney's fees provided for therein.—Honaker v. Jones (Tex.) 748.

§ 254. A vendor who has delivered possession has an equitable lien upon the land for the unpaid purchase money, though he has taken no distinct agreement or separate security for it, and though the deed recites full payment.—Springman v. Hawkins (Tex. Civ. App.) 966.

§ 257. A deed reserving a vendor's lien has the effect of a mortgage, and renders the transaction executory.—Honaker v. Jones (Tex.) 748.

§ 261. The legal title, on the death of a vendor, expressly reserving a lien, held to vest in his heir in trust for the holder of the purchase-money note and for the purchaser on his paying the note.—Atteberry v. Burnett (Tex.) 526.

§ 266. Waiver of a vendor's equitable lien is not shown merely because the clause in the form used providing for the retention of a lien was eliminated in drawing the deed.—Springman v. Hawkins (Tex. Civ. App.) 966.

§ 281. In a suit to enforce a vendor's equitable lien, the burden is on the purchaser to show waiver of the lien.—Springman v. Hawkins (Tex. Civ. App.) 966.

§ 285. Particular judgment enforcing an equitable lien for unpaid purchase money held proper.—Norton Iron Works v. Moreland (Ky.) 481.

VII. REMEDIES OF PURCHASER.

(A) RECOVERY OF PURCHASE MONEY PAID.

§ 337. Under a contract of sale of land, the sum advanced as a part of the purchase price held a lien on the land to secure its repayment, if good title could not be made.—Delano v. Saylor (Ky.) 888.

§ 341. Evidence in action by purchasers of land to recover the part paid of the price because good title could not be made held not to show fraud or mistake in the execution of the contract.—Delano v. Saylor (Ky.) 888.

VENUE.

See Jury, § 70.

Of particular actions or proceedings.

Against corporation, see Corporations, § 503.

Against foreign corporation, see Corporations, § 666.

For loss of or injuries to shipment, see Carriers, § 182.

To foreclose chattel mortgage, see Chattel Mortgages, § 273.

I. NATURE OR SUBJECT OF ACTION.

§ 4. An action of assumpsit for cutting and removing timber is a transitory one, and is governed by Civ. Code Prac. §§ 78, 79, providing for the venue of transitory actions.—Asher v. Cornett (Ky.) 131.

II. DOMICILE OR RESIDENCE OF PARTIES.

§ 21. The court held without jurisdiction of the person of defendant in an action in assumpsit.—Asher v. Cornett (Ky.) 131.

§ 26. That an attorney to whom part of a claim was assigned for his services in collecting the claim was a resident did not prevent suit in another state, where the original creditor resided.—Greer v. Cook (Ark.) 1009.

VERDICT.

Directing verdict in civil action, see Trial, § 169.

In civil actions, see Trial, §§ 331-345.

Operation and effect as curing defects in pleadings, see Pleading, § 433.

Review on appeal or writ of error, see Appeal and Error, §§ 994-1022.

VESSELS.

Situs of vessel for taxation, see Taxation, § 262.

VESTED RIGHTS.

Protection, see Constitutional Law, §§ 92, 109.

VEXATIOUS SUIT.

Restraining, see Injunction, § 83.

VICE PRINCIPALS.

See Master and Servant, §§ 100-201.

VILLAGES.

See Municipal Corporations.

VOTERS.

See Elections.

WAGES.

See Master and Servant, §§ 73, 83.

WAIVER.

See Estoppel.

Of objections to particular acts, instruments or proceedings.

See Appearance; Trial, § 412.

Contracts in general, see Contracts, § 305.

Defects in pleading, see Pleading, §§ 406-433.

Errors on appeal or writ of error, see Appeal and Error, § 882.

Jurisdiction of courts in general, see Courts, § 37.

Reception of evidence at trial, see Trial, § 106.

Of rights or remedies.

Exemption of homestead, see Homestead, § 168.

Forfeiture for nonpayment of price of land, see Vendor and Purchaser, § 95.

Forfeiture of insurance, see Insurance, §§ 373-392.

power of a married woman to dispose of her property by will.—Williford v. Phelan (Tenn.) 365.

§ 29. Independently of assent of the husband, a married woman may dispose of her separate property by will.—Williford v. Phelan (Tenn.) 365.

§ 30. At common law a married woman could make a will of property not yet reduced to the husband's possession with the husband's assent to the particular will.—Williford v. Phelan (Tenn.) 365.

III. CONTRACTS TO DEVISE OR BEQUEATH.

§ 58. A contract to devise one-half of decedent's estate to the other party's wife in consideration of support held valid.—McAllister's Adm'r v. Bronaugh (Ky.) 821.

§ 68. Instruction in an action for breach of a contract to devise one-half of decedent's estate to the other party's wife in consideration of support held to fairly present the only issue.—McAllister's Adm'r v. Bronaugh (Ky.) 821.

§ 68. Evidence in an action for breach of contract to make a will held to establish the contract sued upon.—McAllister's Adm'r v. Bronaugh (Ky.) 821.

IV. REQUISITES AND VALIDITY.

(F) MISTAKE, UNDUE INFLUENCE, AND FRAUD.

Declarations by legatee as evidence against co-legatees, see Evidence, § 226.

§ 163. That a daughter of testatrix did not receive as much through the will as she thought she should raises no presumption of undue influence.—Helsley v. Moss (Tex. Civ. App.) 599.

§ 164. In an action to set aside a will, testimony as to a transaction between plaintiff and testatrix 15 years before the will was executed and 18 years before the death of testatrix held inadmissible as being too remote.—Helsley v. Moss (Tex. Civ. App.) 599.

§ 164. In an action to set aside a will, testimony that the husband of testatrix was a very determined man held immaterial, in the absence of evidence tending to show that he had exercised undue influence on testatrix.—Helsley v. Moss (Tex. Civ. App.) 599.

§ 165. In an action to annul a will for mental incapacity and undue influence, testimony held properly excluded as not within the issues.—Helsley v. Moss (Tex. Civ. App.) 599.

§ 165. In an action to set aside a will for mental incompetency and undue influence on the part of the husband of testatrix, statements made by him nine years before the execution of the will held too remote to be admissible.—Helsley v. Moss (Tex. Civ. App.) 599.

§ 165. In an action to set aside a will, evidence that testatrix said that, if she ever made a will, each of her children should share alike, and that she would never leave out one of her children, was properly excluded.—Helsley v. Moss (Tex. Civ. App.) 599.

§ 165. In an action to set aside a will for mental incapacity and undue influence, testimony as to declarations by testatrix prior to making the will held inadmissible.—Helsley v. Moss (Tex. Civ. App.) 599.

§ 166. To show undue influence, the evidence must be direct, or the circumstances showing it must be of a reasonably satisfactory and convincing character.—Helsley v. Moss (Tex. Civ. App.) 599.

V. PROBATE, ESTABLISHMENT, AND ANNULMENT.

(B) ACTIONS TO ESTABLISH OR DETERMINE VALIDITY IN GENERAL.

§ 229. Purchasers from an heir of a testator may resist the probate of his will, being "persons interested," within Ky. St. 1903, §§ 4856-4861.—Foster v. Jordan (Ky.) 490.

(D) PROBATE OR RECORD OF FOREIGN WILLS.

§ 245. Under Rev. St. 1895, arts. 5353, 5355, a foreign will, disposing of real estate in Texas, held to confer the title on the devisee on the death of the testator; and its probate in a sister state and record in Texas are but legal formalities to evidence that right.—Haney v. Gartin (Tex. Civ. App.) 166.

(E) JURISDICTION, LIMITATIONS, AND LACHES.

Proceeding to probate nonresident's will as an action for relief not otherwise provided for within general statutes of limitation, see Limitation of Actions, § 39.

(M) OPERATION AND EFFECT.

§ 423. Probate of a wife's will held not to preclude the husband in a proceeding against him by the wife's administrator with the will annexed from denying her right to dispose by will of personal property belonging to him by right of the marriage or defeat his right to administer her estate.—Williford v. Phelan (Tenn.) 365.

§ 423. A husband held entitled to ignore a will of his deceased wife attempting to dispose of personal property not her separate estate.—Williford v. Phelan (Tenn.) 365.

§ 434. The probate of a nonresident's will in the state of his domicile, held to have no legal effect on the title to his land in Kentucky.—Foster v. Jordan (Ky.) 490.

VI. CONSTRUCTION.

(A) GENERAL RULES.

§ 467. Will held to contain a valid restriction against alienation for a specified period, though the property devised was subject to the payment of devisees' debts, under St. 1903, §§ 1581, 2355.—Girdler v. Girdler (Ky.) 835.

(B) DESIGNATION OF DEVISEES AND LEGATEES AND THEIR RESPECTIVE SHARES.

§ 502. Provision in a will that any note owing testator by any of his "kin" should be canceled and the amount given to such "relative," held not to include the husband of testator's niece.—Boyd v. Perkins (Ky.) 95.

(D) DESCRIPTION OF PROPERTY.

§ 500. A will held to sufficiently describe the real estate owned by testator.—Haney v. Gartin (Tex. Civ. App.) 166.

(E) NATURE OF ESTATES AND INTERESTS CREATED.

§ 600. Effect of a devise charged with a nephew's maintenance, etc., stated.—Knight v. Collins (Ky.) 131.

§ 620. An estate created by will held to continue for life, provided only the property was not disposed of by another devisee.—West v. McDonald (Ky.) 872.

(I) ACTIONS TO CONSTRUER WILLS.

§ 608. Chancery held not to have jurisdiction of an action solely to construe a will giving purely legal titles.—Frank v. Frank (Ark.) 640.

- "Assault with intent to murder."—Olds v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 272.
- "Assessment."—Sullivan v. Bitter (Tex. Civ. App.) 193.
- "Attempt to commit rape."—Holloway v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 928.
- "Baggage."—Kansas City S. Ry. Co. v. Skinner (Ark.) 1019.
- "Building used exclusively for school purposes."—State ex rel. Spillers v. Johnston (Mo.) 1083.
- "Cannot be procured from any other source known to the defendant."—Morgan v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 934.
- "Cases involving title to real estate."—Thomas v. Scott (Mo.) 1093.
- "Charter."—Ozan Lumber Co. v. Biddie (Ark.) 796.
- "Children."—Wilson v. Shumate (Ky.) 851.
- "Class legislation."—State v. Grossman (Mo.) 1074.
- "Concubinage."—State v. Baldwin (Mo.) 1123.
- "Conditional sale."—Tucker v. Witherbee (Ky.) 123.
- "Contract."—Luckey v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. (Mo. App.) 703.
- "Copy."—McDonald v. Hanks (Tex. Civ. App.) 604.
- "Course of employment."—Robards v. P. Bannon Sewer Pipe Co. (Ky.) 429.
- "Damaging of private property."—Heilbron v. St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. of Texas (Tex. Civ. App.) 610.
- "Dedication."—Heilbron v. St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. of Texas (Tex. Civ. App.) 610.
- "Direct and special interest."—Louisville Home Telephone Co. v. City of Louisville (Ky.) 855.
- "Due course of business."—Hamiter v. Brown (Ark.) 1014.
- "Duty."—Taylor v. White (Tex. Civ. App.) 554.
- "Dwelling."—Tate v. Jasper County Farmers' Mut. Ins. Co. (Mo. App.) 659.
- "Embezzlement."—Griffin v. Zuber (Tex. Civ. App.) 961.
- "Error apparent upon the face of the record."—Applebaum v. Bass (Tex. Civ. App.) 173.
- "Estate."—Booth's Ex'r v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 61.
- "Excise."—Booth's Ex'r v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 61.
- "Exclusively used."—State ex rel. Spillers v. Johnston (Mo.) 1083.
- "Executed deed."—Creamer v. Bivert (Mo.) 1118.
- "Express contract."—Fordtran v. Stowers (Tex. Civ. App.) 631.
- "Extortion."—State v. Cooper (Tenn.) 1048.
- "Family arrangement."—State ex rel. Spillers v. Johnston (Mo.) 1083.
- "Fire insurance policy."—American Steam Laundry Co. v. Hamburg Bremen Fire Ins. Co. (Tenn.) 394.
- "Force."—Holloway v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 928.
- "Forestalling."—Dutton v. City of Knoxville (Tenn.) 381.
- "Franchise."—James v. Kentucky Refining Co. (Ky.) 468; Louisville Home Telephone Co. v. City of Louisville (Ky.) 855.
- "Fugitive from justice."—Ex parte Coleman (Tex. Cr. App.) 17.
- "General."—Smith v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 289.
- "General law."—Pate v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 759; Smith v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 289.
- "Gift causa mortis."—Stark v. Kelly (Ky.) 498.
- "Gift inter vivos."—Stark v. Kelly (Ky.) 498.
- "Good name."—San Antonio Light Pub. Co. v. Lewy (Tex. Civ. App.) 574.
- "Heir."—Templeman v. McFerrin (Tex. Civ. App.) 333.
- "Holder for value."—Hamiter v. Brown (Ark.) 1014.
- "Implied contract."—Fordtran v. Stowers (Tex. Civ. App.) 631.
- "In person."—O'Neal v. Sovereign Woodmen of the World (Ky.) 52.
- "Interstate commerce."—St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. State (Ark.) 203.
- "Involuntary payment."—Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Hamilton County (Tenn.) 361.
- "Judicial confessions."—Skaggs v. State (Ark.) 346.
- "Jurisdictional question."—Applebaum v. Bass (Tex. Civ. App.) 173.
- "Kin."—Boyd v. Perkins (Ky.) 95.
- "Larceny."—State v. James (Mo. App.) 232.
- "Legislative power."—Booth's Ex'r v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 61.
- "Limb."—Lorts & Frey Planing Mill Co. v. Weil (Ky.) 474.
- "Maintenance."—Knight v. Collins (Ky.) 131.
- "Mandamus."—Louisville Home Telephone Co. v. City of Louisville (Ky.) 855.
- "Manslaughter."—Holcomb v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 754.
- "May 1st, 2 per cent., or July net."—Howes & Howes v. Union Mfg. Co. (Ky.) 512.
- "Mortgage."—Tucker v. Witherbee (Ky.) 123.
- "Mother."—Thaxton's Guardian v. Walter's Adm'r (Ky.) 118.
- "Navigable stream."—Orange Lumber Co. v. Thompson (Tex. Civ. App.) 563.
- "Original."—McDonald v. Hanks (Tex. Civ. App.) 604.
- "Other expenses."—State ex rel. Gavigan v. Dierkes (Mo.) 1074.
- "Partnership."—Baum v. Stephenson (Mo. App.) 225.
- "Peddler."—State v. Webber (Mo.) 1054.
- "Person."—Dallas County v. Banks (Ark.) 37.
- "Person aggrieved."—Saunders v. Alvido & Lasarre (Tex. Civ. App.) 992.
- "Persons interested."—Foster v. Jordan (Ky.) 490.
- "Property."—Kellogg v. German American Ins. Co. (Mo. App.) 663.
- "Proximate cause."—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Keiffer (Ky.) 433.
- "Public highway."—Heilbron v. St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 610.
- "Records."—Bayless v. State (Tenn.) 1039.
- "Regrating."—Dutton v. City of Knoxville (Tenn.) 381.
- "Relative."—Boyd v. Perkins (Ky.) 95.
- "Residence in state."—Stone v. Stone (Mo. App.) 1157.
- "Residence purposes."—Highland Realty Co. v. Groves (Ky.) 420.
- "Scope of authority."—Robards v. P. Bannon Sewer Pipe Co. (Ky.) 429.
- "Settled."—Troendle v. Highlevman (Ky.) 812.
- "Smuggling."—San Antonio Light Pub. Co. v. Lewy (Tex. Civ. App.) 574.
- "Special laws."—Smith v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 289.
- "Tax on property."—Booth's Ex'r v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 61.
- "Townships."—Little v. Williams (Ark.) 340.
- "Trust."—Redland Fruit Co. v. Sargent (Tex. Civ. App.) 330.
- "Until."—Akins v. City of Humansville (Mo. App.) 687.
- "Voluntary payment."—Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Hamilton County (Tenn.) 113.
- "Warning."—Engelman v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co. (Mo. App.) 700.
- "Widow."—Thaxton's Guardian v. Walter's Adm'r (Ky.) 118.
- "Will."—Girdler v. Girdler (Ky.) 835.

WORK AND LABOR.

Liens for work and materials, see Mechanics' Liens.

§ 7. Where the relationship of persons raises the presumption that they lived together for mutual convenience, the law will not imply a

Albin Co. v. Commonwealth (108 S. W. 299).....	367	Chapman v. Commonwealth (112 S. W. 587).....	965
Aldridge v. Aldridge (109 S. W. 873).....	246	Charles v. Hurley (109 S. W. 320).....	78
Alsip v. Morgan (109 S. W. 312).....	72	Chesapeake, O. & S. W. R. Co. v. Commonwealth (111 S. W. 334).....	882
American German Nat. Bank v. Gray & Dudley Hardware Co. (110 S. W. 393).....	547	Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Baxter (110 S. W. 248).....	306
Arnett v. Pinson (108 S. W. 862).....	36	Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Evans (110 S. W. 844).....	586
Asher v. Ford Lumber & Mfg. Co. (109 S. W. 899).....	222	Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Lorton (110 S. W. 867).....	689
Asher & Hensley v. Howard (110 S. W. 895).....	696	Citizens' Sav. Bank v. Leigh (112 S. W. 628).....	1061
Attay v. Knox Gem Coal Co. (110 S. W. 346).....	327	City of Covington v. District of Highlands (110 S. W. 385).....	323
Baker v. Best (107 S. W. 1192).....	1	City of Covington v. Regenthal (109 S. W. 341).....	127
Baker v. Cooper (109 S. W. 900).....	263	City of Covington v. Renshaw (111 S. W. 1007).....	890
Ballard's Adm'r v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (110 S. W. 296).....	301	City of Covington v. Webster (110 S. W. 878).....	649
Ballard's Adm'r v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (110 S. W. 296).....	423	City of Glasgow v. Crisp (111 S. W. 279).....	702
Balthaser v. Illinois Life Ins. Co. (110 S. W. 258).....	283	City of Latonia v. Latonia Agricultural Ass'n (109 S. W. 356).....	138
Bankers' Fraternal Union v. Donahue (109 S. W. 878).....	196	City of Lexington v. Walby (109 S. W. 299).....	116
Barbee v. Stokes (110 S. W. 341).....	439	City of Middlesboro v. Coal & Iron Bank (110 S. W. 355).....	469
Barnes v. Johnson (111 S. W. 372).....	903	City of Middlesboro v. Coal & Iron Bank (111 S. W. 335).....	961
Baugh v. Baugh's Adm'r (109 S. W. 845).....	148	City of Newport v. Ebert (111 S. W. 330).....	820
Berea College v. Burnell (111 S. W. 332).....	706	City of Owensboro v. Hope (108 S. W. 873).....	375
Bibb v. Commonwealth (112 S. W. 401).....	726	City of Owensboro v. Hope (110 S. W. 272).....	426
Bindell v. Kenton County Assessment Fire Ins. Co. (108 S. W. 325).....	336	City of Owensboro v. Lossie (110 S. W. 272).....	426
Bingham v. Hager (110 S. W. 246).....	278	City of Owensboro v. Singleton (111 S. W. 284).....	776
Bittier v. Myer's Guardian (109 S. W. 1181).....	380	City of Owensboro v. Sweeney (111 S. W. 364).....	823
Black Diamond Coal & Mining Co. v. Price (108 S. W. 345).....	334	City of Owensboro v. Sweeney (111 S. W. 364).....	930
Black Raven Coal Co. v. Edmonson (108 S. W. 955).....	3	City of Richmond v. Bennett (109 S. W. 904).....	279
Bland v. Cumberland Telephone & Telegraph Co. (109 S. W. 1180).....	399	Clark v. Commonwealth (109 S. W. 301).....	72
Blanton v. Commonwealth (112 S. W. 594).....	1022	Clark v. Commonwealth (112 S. W. 571).....	974
Blocker v. City of Owensboro (110 S. W. 369).....	478	Clark v. Northern Coal & Coke Co. (112 S. W. 629).....	1047
Blodgett v. Miller (110 S. W. 864).....	682	Clarke v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (111 S. W. 344).....	797
Board of Aldermen of City of Covington v. City of Covington (111 S. W. 1007).....	880	Clarke v. McDowell's Adm'r (109 S. W. 887).....	177
Board of Councilmen of City of Frankfort v. Morgan (110 S. W. 286).....	297	Cleveland, O., C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Louisville Tin & Stove Co. (111 S. W. 359).....	924
Board of Equalization of Campbell County v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (109 S. W. 303).....	78	Clinger's Adm'r v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. of Kentucky (109 S. W. 315).....	86
Bolton v. Ayers (110 S. W. 385).....	591	Coleman v. Grimes (110 S. W. 349).....	453
Borders v. Allen (110 S. W. 240).....	194	Columbia Bldg. Loan & Savings Ass'n Assignee v. Gregory (112 S. W. 608).....	1011
Boreing v. Wilson & Moss (108 S. W. 914).....	14	Combs v. Bonnell (109 S. W. 808).....	219
Bowe v. Richmond (109 S. W. 359).....	173	Combs v. Commonwealth (112 S. W. 658).....	1058
Brackett's Adm'r v. Boreing's Adm'r (110 S. W. 276).....	292	Cominger v. Louisville Trust Co. (108 S. W. 950).....	53
Brackett's Adm'r v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (111 S. W. 710).....	921	Cominger v. Louisville Trust Co. (111 S. W. 681).....	884
Bradley & Gilbert v. Jacques (110 S. W. 836).....	618	Commonwealth v. Alexander (112 S. W. 586).....	971
Bradshaw v. Butler (110 S. W. 420).....	531	Commonwealth v. Boyd (112 S. W. 606).....	96
Brandenburgh v. Rose (110 S. W. 376).....	585	Commonwealth v. Byers (109 S. W. 895).....	232
Brashears v. Brashears (110 S. W. 303).....	233	Commonwealth v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. (110 S. W. 253).....	92
Brashears v. Brashears (111 S. W. 326).....	893	Commonwealth v. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. (112 S. W. 613).....	1078
Brashears v. Frazier (110 S. W. 826).....	662	Commonwealth v. Conway (112 S. W. 575).....	988
Brock v. Commonwealth (110 S. W. 878).....	630	Commonwealth v. Landis (112 S. W. 581).....	983
Broughton v. Saylor (110 S. W. 866).....	611	Commonwealth v. Ledford (110 S. W. 889).....	624
Brown v. Brown's Adm'r (110 S. W. 831).....	601	Commonwealth v. Louisville Property Co. (109 S. W. 1183).....	235
Brummett v. Commonwealth (108 S. W. 861).....	355	Commonwealth v. Morris (112 S. W. 580).....	987
Buckner's Ex'r v. Kirkland's Ex'r (110 S. W. 399).....	603	Commonwealth v. Murphy (109 S. W. 353).....	141
Burchett v. Clarke (109 S. W. 889).....	240	Commonwealth v. Standard Oil Co. (112 S. W. 632).....	1074
Burdett v. Mullins' Ex'r (110 S. W. 855).....	691	Commonwealth v. Wells (112 S. W. 648).....	964
Burton v. Monticello & Burnside Turnpike Co. (109 S. W. 319).....	85	Commonwealth v. White (109 S. W. 324).....	70
Burt & Brabb Lumber Co. v. Hurst (110 S. W. 242).....	270
Butler v. Commonwealth (110 S. W. 275).....	510
Caine v. Rich (110 S. W. 289).....	261
Calor Oil & Gas Co. v. Franzell (109 S. W. 328).....	98
Campbell v. Dreher (110 S. W. 353).....	444
Carlton v. Smith (110 S. W. 873).....	647

33 KY. LAW REP.—Continued. Page		Page
Landy v. Moritz (109 S. W. 897).....	223	May v. May (109 S. W. 352).....	193
Lane v. Lloyd (110 S. W. 401).....	570	May v. May (110 S. W. 808).....	638
Latham v. Lindsay (112 S. W. 584).....	985	Mayfield Water & Light Co. v. Webb's
Lawson v. Todd (110 S. W. 412).....	557	Adm'r (111 S. W. 712).....	909
Leach v. Commonwealth (112 S. W. 595).....	1016	Maypothor v. Gast (110 S. W. 808).....	395
Lee v. Wheat (111 S. W. 307).....	724	Merchants' Ice & Cold Storage Co. v. Barg-
Lee v. Wheat (112 S. W. 565).....	993	holt (110 S. W. 364).....	488
Lockhart v. Buckner (110 S. W. 850).....	678	Middlesboro Town & Land Co. v. City of
Logan v. Vanarsdall (110 S. W. 821).....	508	Middlesboro (110 S. W. 355).....	469
Louisville Cooperage Co. v. Farmer (109		Milam v. Stanley (111 S. W. 296).....	783
S. W. 893).....	180	Miller v. Commonwealth (112 S. W. 598).....	1001
Louisville Fertilizer Co. v. Lorton (110 S.		Miller v. Jones (111 S. W. 295).....	848
W. 870).....	676	Miller v. N. W. Ritter Lumber Co. (110 S.
Louisville Gas Co. v. Kentucky Heating Co.		W. 869).....	696
(111 S. W. 374).....	912	Miller Supply Co. v. Louisa Water Co.'s
Louisville, H. & St. L. R. Co. v. McDonald		Assignees (108 S. W. 870).....	388
(111 S. W. 289).....	762	Mitchell v. Odewalt's Ex'r (112 S. W.
Louisville R. Co. v. Boutellier (110 S. W.		612).....	1007
357).....	484	Modern Woodmen of America v. Neeley
Louisville R. Co. v. Ellerhorst (110 S. W.		(111 S. W. 282).....	758
823).....	605	Moore v. Terrell (111 S. W. 297).....	822
Louisville R. Co. v. Williams (109 S. W.		Morgan v. Combs (111 S. W. 294).....	817
874).....	168	Morgan, Oates & Co. v. Commonwealth
Louisville Veneer Mills Co. v. Clements		(109 S. W. 907).....	281
(109 S. W. 308).....	106	Morse v. Commonwealth (111 S. W. 714).....	831
Louisville & I. R. Co. v. Bailey (109 S.		Morse v. Commonwealth (111 S. W. 714).....	894
W. 336).....	179	Moseley's Adm'r v. Black Diamond Coal
Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Berry (111 S.		& Min. Co. (109 S. W. 306).....	110
W. 370).....	850	Murphy's Adm'r v. Wilson & Muir (110
Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Blackaby (111		S. W. 893).....	716
S. W. 317).....	885	Murray's Adm'r v. Louisville & N. R. Co.
Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Commonwealth		(110 S. W. 334).....	545
(111 S. W. 333).....	855	Mutual Ben. Life Ins. Co. v. Common-
Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Commonwealth		wealth (107 S. W. 802).....	338
(112 S. W. 573).....	991	Myers v. Brown (110 S. W. 402).....	525
Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Gilmore's Adm'r
(109 S. W. 321).....	74	Napier v. Commonwealth (110 S. W. 842).....	635
Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Gormley (109 S.		Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Bean's
W. 346).....	188	Ex'r (109 S. W. 323).....	114
Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Gormley (111 S.		Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Bean's
W. 289).....	802	Ex'r (110 S. W. 328).....	308
Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Joshlin (110 S.		Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Russell
W. 382).....	513	(110 S. W. 317).....	447
Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Lambert (110 S.		National Bank of Cynthia v. Hume's
W. 305).....	199	Ex'r (109 S. W. 364).....	162
Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Lawler (109 S.		Nelson v. Commonwealth (109 S. W. 337).....	143
W. 908).....	302	Newcomb v. Fidelity Trust Co. (108 S. W.
Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Marshall (110 S.		911).....	41
W. 885).....	639	New Galt House Co. v. City of Louisville
Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Melton (110 S. W.		(111 S. W. 351).....	869
233).....	321	Nickels v. Board of Councilmen of City of Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Melton (112 S.		Frankfort (111 S. W. 706).....	918
W. 618).....	1042	Nioum v. Commonwealth (108 S. W. 945).....	62
Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Onan's Adm'r (110		Nolan's Adm'r v. Standard Sanitary Mfg.
S. W. 380).....	462	Co. (111 S. W. 290).....	745
Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Robbins (111 S.		Noland v. Stacy (110 S. W. 264).....	321
W. 283).....	778	Northwestern Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Com-
Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Scalf (110 S. W.		monwealth (107 S. W. 802).....	338
862).....	721
Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Schmidt (107		O'Bannon's Adm'r v. Southern R. Co. in
S. W. 745).....	346	Kentucky (110 S. W. 329).....	315
Lowe v. Commonwealth (112 S. W. 647).....	1078	O'Bannon's Adm'r v. Southern R. Co. in
Lowry & Goebel v. Hitch's Assignee (110		Kentucky (110 S. W. 329).....	436
S. W. 833).....	573	O'Bryan v. Highland Apartment Co. (108
Lynch v. Commonwealth (112 S. W. 1135).....	963	S. W. 257).....	349
		Ochsner v. Commonwealth (109 S. W. 326).....	119
McCandless v. McCandless' Adm'rs, (111 S.		Overton v. Perry (111 S. W. 369).....	931
W. 302).....	790	Owensboro Stave & Barrel Co. v. Daugh-
McCauley v. Twyman (110 S. W. 892).....	692	erty (110 S. W. 319).....	323
McCormack v. City of Henderson (111 S.
W. 368).....	854	Pace v. Cawood (110 S. W. 414).....	592
McDonald v. Parker (110 S. W. 810).....	805	Pack v. Stepp (110 S. W. 887).....	677
McGlone v. Womack (111 S. W. 688).....	811	Paducah Traction Co. v. Sine (111 S. W.
McGlone v. Womack (111 S. W. 688).....	864	356).....	792
McGoodwin v. Lusterine Mining & Polish-		Paracamp Co. v. Commonwealth (112 S. ing Co. (110 S. W. 409).....	521	W. 587).....	961
Majors v. Continental Casualty Co. (111 S.		Parson v. Commonwealth (112 S. W.
W. 299).....	728	617).....	1051
Mann v. Commonwealth (110 S. W. 243).....	269	Payne v. Commonwealth (110 S. W. 311).....	229
Mann v. Reigler (111 S. W. 300).....	774	Phillips v. Hoskins (108 S. W. 283).....	378
Mann Bros. v. Jenkins (110 S. W. 387).....	589	Phillipsburg, O., C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Dar-
Martin v. Ferguson (111 S. W. 281).....	761	lington's Adm'r (111 S. W. 360).....	815
Martin v. Smith (110 S. W. 413).....	582	Poole v. Slayton (108 S. W. 903).....	373
Martin v. Stewart (111 S. W. 281).....	729	Poor v. New South Brewery & Ice Co.
Maupin v. Maupin's Guardian (110 S. W.		(112 S. W. 618).....	1088
840).....	658

VOL. 211, MISSOURI REPORTS.

Mo. Rep.	S. W. Rep.	Mo. Rep.	S. W. Rep.	Mo. Rep.	S. W. Rep.	Mo. Rep.	S. W. Rep.	Mo. Rep.	S. W. Rep.	Mo. Rep.	S. W. Rep.	Mo. Rep.	S. W. Rep.	Mo. Rep.	S. W. Rep.
Pg.	Vol.	Pg.	Vol.	Pg.	Vol.	Pg.	Vol.	Pg.	Vol.	Pg.	Vol.	Pg.	Vol.	Pg.	Vol.
1	109	671	68	109	682	129	109	13	306	109	574	419	111	109	498
18	109	715	88	109	661	158	109	560	320	109	583	444	111	20	524
45	109	641	99	109	668	181	109	675	364	109	641	460	111	102	536
48	109	723	105	109	559	199	109	750	411	109	663	483	110	700	588
64	109	728	112	109	730	227	109	769

VOL. 211, MISSOURI REPORTS.

	Page		Page
Alple-Hemmelmann Real Estate Co. v. Spelbrink (111 S. W. 480).....	671	King v. Wabash R. Co. (109 S. W. 671)...	1
Aley v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. (111 S. W. 102).....	460	Kirkpatrick v. Metropolitan St. R. Co. (109 S. W. 682).....	68
Attorney General, State ex rel. v. Kansas City Live Stock Exchange (109 S. W. 675).....	181	Meissner v. Standard Ry. Equipment Co. (109 S. W. 730).....	112
Barry v. Calvary Cemetery Ass'n (109 S. W. 559).....	105	Meriwether v. Publishers: George Knapp & Co. (109 S. W. 750).....	199
Berry v. St. Louis Transit Co. (109 S. W. 661).....	88	Peterson v. Metropolitan St. R. Co. (111 S. W. 37).....	495
Brewington v. Brewington (109 S. W. 723).....	48	Phillips v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. (111 S. W. 109).....	419
Burridge v. New York Life Ins. Co. (109 S. W. 560).....	158	St. Louis, City of, v. Terminal R. Ass'n (109 S. W. 641).....	364
City of Centralia, State ex rel., v. Wilder (109 S. W. 574).....	305	Scott, State ex rel., v. Dirckx (111 S. W. 1).....	568
City of St. Louis v. Terminal R. Ass'n (109 S. W. 641).....	364	Skrainka Const. Co., State ex rel., v. City of St. Louis (111 S. W. 89).....	591
Corrigan v. Kansas City (111 S. W. 115).....	608	State ex rel. City of Centralia v. Wilder (109 S. W. 574).....	365
Davidson v. St. Louis Transit Co. (109 S. W. 583).....	320	State ex rel. Hadley v. Kansas City Live Stock Exchange (109 S. W. 675).....	181
Dickerson v. Dickerson (110 S. W. 700).....	483	State ex rel. Scott v. Dirckx (111 S. W. 1).....	568
Field v. Kansas City (111 S. W. 129).....	662	State ex rel. Skrainka Const. Co. v. City of St. Louis (111 S. W. 89).....	591
Fruin-Bambrick Const. Co. v. St. Louis Shovel Co. (111 S. W. 86).....	524	State ex rel. Thompson v. Payne (109 S. W. 728).....	64
Gage v. St. Louis Transit Co. (109 S. W. 13).....	139	Stid v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. (109 S. W. 663).....	411
Green v. Terminal R. Ass'n of St. Louis (109 S. W. 715).....	18	Strottman v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. (109 S. W. 769).....	227
Hadley, State ex rel., v. Kansas City Live Stock Exchange (109 S. W. 675).....	181	Sullivan v. Holbrook (109 S. W. 668).....	99
Hendricks v. Calloway (111 S. W. 60).....	536	Thompson, State ex rel., v. Payne (109 S. W. 728).....	64
Jones v. Hogan (109 S. W. 641).....	45	Younger v. Hoge (111 S. W. 20).....	444

VOL. 212, MISSOURI REPORTS.

Mo. Rep.	S. W. Rep.	Mo. Rep.	S. W. Rep.	Mo. Rep.	S. W. Rep.	Mo. Rep.	S. W. Rep.	Mo. Rep.	S. W. Rep.	Mo. Rep.	S. W. Rep.	Mo. Rep.	S. W. Rep.	Mo. Rep.	S. W. Rep.
Pg.	Vol.	Pg.	Vol.	Pg.	Vol.	Pg.	Vol.	Pg.	Vol.	Pg.	Vol.	Pg.	Vol.	Pg.	Vol.
1	110	711	111	111	24	176	111	69	280	111	95	415	111	30	524
59	110	705	130	111	29	208	110	1078	309	111	79	437	110	1084	540
73	111	18	132	110	696	215	110	1072	331	111	52	445	110	1086	551
80	110	1082	138	110	729	224	110	1057	359	110	1062	472	111	7	562
88	110	709	150	110	1067	244	110	697	377	110	1076	481	111	8	578
95	110	699	170	110	695	248	111	44	385	111	14	484	111	475	589
101	110	1079	173	110	695	275	110	1074	398	111	10	506	111	574	611

VOL. 212, MISSOURI REPORTS.

Ahnefeld v. Wabash R. Co. (111 S. W. 95).....	280	Broadwater v. Wabash R. Co. (110 S. W. 1084).....	437
Beave v. St. Louis Transit Co. (111 S. W. 52).....	331	City of St. Louis v. Klausmeier (111 S. W. 507).....	724
Bowland, State ex rel., v. Cloud (111 S. W. 8).....	481	Crocker v. Barteau (110 S. W. 1062).....	330

Tex. Cv.A. Rep.	S. W. Rep.	Tex. Cv.A. Rep.	S. W. Rep.	Tex. Cv.A. Rep.	S. W. Rep.	Tex. Cv.A. Rep.	S. W. Rep.	Tex. Cv.A. Rep.	S. W. Rep.	Tex. Cv.A. Rep.	S. W. Rep.	Tex. Cv.A. Rep.	S. W. Rep.	Tex. Cv.A. Rep.	S. W. Rep.	Tex. Cv.A. Rep.	S. W. Rep.
Pg.	Vol.	Pg.	Vol.	Pg.	Vol.	Pg.	Vol.	Pg.	Vol.	Pg.	Vol.	Pg.	Vol.	Pg.	Vol.	Pg.	Vol.
1	94	443	99	95	628	216	95	694	313	95	675	393	93	1096	490	93	1082
5	94	338	104	91	1150	222	94	111	318	95	663	400	93	1099	492	94	138
22	91	597	106	95	547	234	94	205	321	100	969	407	93	1063	495	94	272
24	91	594	113	94	450	226	98	235	323	93	1023	407	96	760	502	94	153
26	91	596	115	93	473	229	95	691	331	98	450	430	94	102	504	94	153
30	94	1062	118	95	558	234	95	691	335	95	651	423	94	110	511	94	185
38	94	447	125	95	656	235	93	516	337	93	478	427	93	532	514	94	178
42	93	225	133	93	1014	241	94	147	340	94	173	431	94	428	515	98	233
43	93	1005	138	94	451	250	94	136	344	93	1003	437	94	94	519	93	706
47	93	230	147	94	454	252	95	688	346	94	115	441	93	531	530	94	136
49	93	1003	152	98	490	254	95	632	348	94	131	443	94	365	534	94	106
52	93	221	154	93	189	256	93	477	354	93	479	450	94	145	528	95	587
55	93	222	163	98	481	258	93	1040	355	93	496	455	94	104	532	94	214
60	93	1024	167	94	439	260	93	476	360	93	1021	460	94	107	536	94	908
66	93	187	171	94	95	262	95	679	364	95	643	462	93	1065	536	95	1101
69	93	215	182	93	1080	270	93	1093	365	93	1077	465	93	1102	543	92	1067
71	93	245	185	95	622	274	114	453	373	93	1076	470	93	1107	545	94	148
74	93	211	196	94	458	280	98	489	374	114	648	478	92	1040	549	93	500
76	94	436	202	94	457	282	92	1046	380	92	1054	483	94	103	556	94	411
78	91	800	205	94	411	292	93	1027	381	94	206	486	92	1063	558	94	430
83	94	427	210	95	649	297	92	1048	393	94	134	488	92	1067	565	93	710
85	94	407	213	92	1026	306	93	469

VOL. 42, TEXAS CIVIL APPEALS REPORTS.

	Page		Page
Anson v. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. (94 S. W. 94).....	437	Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Washington (92 S. W. 1054).....	390
Ball v. Carroll (92 S. W. 1023).....	323	Gardell v. Gardell (94 S. W. 457).....	262
Bigham v. Clubb (95 S. W. 675).....	312	German Fire Ins. Co. of Freeport Ill. v. Gibbs, Wilson & Co. (92 S. W. 1068; 96 S. W. 760).....	407
Breck v. Coffield (91 S. W. 594).....	24	Guaranty Trust Co. v. Diltz (91 S. W. 506).....	26
Brown v. Texas Cent. R. Co. (94 S. W. 134).....	392	Guffey Petroleum Co. v. Hamill (94 S. W. 458).....	196
Byers v. Thacker (94 S. W. 138).....	492	Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Funk (92 S. W. 1032).....	490
Caplen v. Cox (92 S. W. 1048).....	297	Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Gibson (93 S. W. 469).....	306
Carrera v. Dibrell (95 S. W. 628).....	99	Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Looney (95 S. W. 691).....	234
City of Austin v. Nueces (94 S. W. 336).....	5	Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Minter (93 S. W. 516).....	235
City of Houston v. Richardson & Sutherland (94 S. W. 454).....	147	Haas v. American Nat. Bank of Austin (94 S. W. 439).....	167
Colorado Canal Co. v. Sims (94 S. W. 865).....	442	Hahl v. Deutsch (94 S. W. 443).....	1
Corrigan v. State (94 S. W. 95).....	171	Hahl v. Kellogg (94 S. W. 389).....	636
C. R. Cummings & Co. v. Masterson (93 S. W. 500).....	549	Hahl v. Laux (93 S. W. 1080).....	182
Cummings & Co. v. Masterson (93 S. W. 500).....	549	Halbert v. Jackson (91 S. W. 1150).....	104
Dallas Consol. Electric St. R. Co. v. English (93 S. W. 1096).....	393	Haney v. Atwood (93 S. W. 1093).....	270
Davidson v. Oberthier (93 S. W. 478).....	337	Harris County Irr. Co. v. Hornberger (94 S. W. 145).....	450
Davis v. Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. (93 S. W. 222).....	35	Hickman v. Galveston Dry Goods Co. (94 S. W. 157).....	582
Davis v. Ragland (93 S. W. 1099).....	400	Holland v. Coutts (93 S. W. 233).....	515
De Castillo v. Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. (95 S. W. 547).....	108	Holliday v. Sampson (93 S. W. 643).....	364
Denman v. Coffee (91 S. W. 800).....	78	House v. Holland (94 S. W. 153).....	502
Dorsey v. Olive Sternberg & Co. (94 S. W. 413).....	568	Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Beard (93 S. W. 532).....	427
Douglas v. Walker (92 S. W. 1026).....	213	Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Buchanan (94 S. W. 199).....	620
Dunn v. State (94 S. W. 95).....	171	Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Craig (92 S. W. 1033).....	496
Dunn v. Taylor (94 S. W. 347).....	241	Howard v. Fabj (93 S. W. 225).....	42
Eastham Bros. v. Blanchette (94 S. W. 441).....	205	Hudgins & Bro. v. Low (94 S. W. 411).....	536
Ellis v. National City Bank of Waco (94 S. W. 437).....	83	Inglish v. Johnson (95 S. W. 558).....	118
Evans v. Groesbeck (93 S. W. 1005).....	43	International & G. N. R. Co. v. Gonzales (91 S. W. 597).....	22
Feagan v. Barton-Parker Mfg. Co. (96 S. W. 1076).....	373	International & G. N. R. Co. v. Heitner (94 S. W. 189).....	617
First Nat. Bank of Morgan v. Brown (92 S. W. 1052).....	584	International & G. N. R. Co. v. Slusher (95 S. W. 717).....	631
Flint v. Bowman (93 S. W. 479).....	364	International & G. N. R. Co. v. Startz (94 S. W. 207).....	85
Ft. Worth & R. G. R. Co. v. McCarty (94 S. W. 178).....	514	International & G. N. R. Co. v. Trump (94 S. W. 903; 98 S. W. 1101).....	536
Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Allen (94 S. W. 417).....	576
Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Mohrmann (114 S. W. 648).....	374

Wolfe v. Willingham (94 S. W. 362).....	167
Wood v. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. of Texas (97 S. W. 323).....	590
Worsham v. Dyer (94 S. W. 1080).....	43

Wright v. Isaacks (95 S. W. 55).....	223
Young v. Trahan (97 S. W. 147).....	611
Zollars v. Snyder & Lacey (94 S. W. 1096).....	120

VOL. 44, TEXAS CIVIL APPEALS REPORTS.

Tex. Cv.A. Rep.	S. W. Rep.	Tex. Cv.A. Rep.	S. W. Rep.	Tex. Cv.A. Rep.	S. W. Rep.	Tex. Cv.A. Rep.	S. W. Rep.	Tex. Cv.A. Rep.	S. W. Rep.	Tex. Cv.A. Rep.	S. W. Rep.	Tex. Cv.A. Rep.	S. W. Rep.	Tex. Cv.A. Rep.	S. W. Rep.
Pg.	Vol.	Pg.	Vol.	Pg.	Vol.	Pg.	Vol.	Pg.	Vol.	Pg.	Vol.	Pg.	Vol.	Pg.	Vol.
1	97	139	95	97	833	187	97	712	299	97	836	386	98	653	472
6	98	207	100	97	858	189	98	192	303	97	1092	394	98	440	474
8	101	1014	105	98	1064	206	98	643	308	97	832	397	99	212	477
13	97	531	108	97	1075	207	99	746	311	97	1070	406	98	932	480
18	97	511	110	98	658	214	90	681	315	98	1077	413	98	417	488
21	97	321	125	97	1063	217	99	130	321	98	455	420	99	439	492
25	97	111	128	97	1078	218	99	166	325	98	416	423	99	1052	500
29	97	506	132	98	209	220	99	120	327	99	157	424	99	443	503
31	97	318	135	98	410	221	98	1066	334	98	214	426	99	571	509
33	97	710	139	98	213	224	99	168	340	98	431	428	98	889	513
42	97	1066	141	99	123	229	97	708	344	98	898	431	98	1063	517
43	97	227	144	97	541	232	97	712	352	98	929	432	98	904	523
47	100	808	150	97	1060	238	98	198	358	98	1074	436	98	406	530
55	98	411	152	97	504	247	98	573	363	99	110	436	98	415	534
58	99	124	155	98	408	250	97	856	367	98	387	439	98	428	544
60	98	218	159	97	847	254	98	665	369	99	409	443	100	953	553
63	97	1084	162	97	1083	272	97	849	372	99	436	446	98	906	555
68	98	1070	185	99	156	277	97	1090	374	99	869	448	99	135	567
76	97	838	168	99	141	280	98	445	379	99	1069	455	98	931	560
80	97	1061	172	99	967	282	98	222	381	98	487	462	98	911	564
84	98	228	177	105	1129	296	99	176	383	99	133	467	98	913	565
87	97	543	131	98	423	238	99	127

VOL. 44, TEXAS CIVIL APPEALS REPORTS.

Allen v. Houston Ice & Brewing Co. (97 S. W. 1063).....	125	Cohen Bros. v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. of Texas (98 S. W. 437).....	357
American Surety Co. of New York v. Lyons (97 S. W. 1080).....	150	Creel v. Cordon (98 S. W. 387).....	367
Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Seeger (98 S. W. 892).....	534	C. W. Hahl & Co. v. Wickes (97 S. W. 838).....	79
Bandy v. Cates (97 S. W. 710).....	38	Dashiell v. W. L. Moody & Co. (97 S. W. 843).....	87
Barber Asphalt Pav. Co. v. Loughlin (98 S. W. 948).....	580	Davis v. Davis (98 S. W. 193).....	29
Barlow v. Frederick Stearns & Co. (98 S. W. 455).....	321	Dietrich v. Heintz (99 S. W. 417).....	602
Baugh v. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. (100 S. W. 953).....	443	Duerler Mfg. Co. v. Eichhorn (99 S. W. 715).....	638
Berry v. Spivey (97 S. W. 511).....	18	English v. International & G. N. R. Co. (98 S. W. 913).....	467
Bridgeport Coal Co. v. Wise County Coal Co. (99 S. W. 409).....	369	Faison v. Meyenberg (98 S. W. 1066).....	53
Brigance v. Horlock (97 S. W. 1060).....	277	Fentiman v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. (98 S. W. 939).....	47
Brooks v. Hibbard, Spencer, Bartlett & Co. (99 S. W. 718).....	610	Freeman v. Collier Racket Co. (105 S. W. 1129).....	177
Brunson v. Blair (97 S. W. 337).....	43	G. A. Duerler Mfg. Co. v. Eichhorn (99 S. W. 715).....	638
Burke-Mobray v. Ellis (97 S. W. 321).....	21	Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Bonn (99 S. W. 413).....	63
Cable Co. v. Rogers (99 S. W. 736).....	620	Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Cherry (98 S. W. 898).....	344
Cain v. Corley (99 S. W. 168).....	224	Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Fink (99 S. W. 204).....	544
Cane Belt R. Co. v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. of Texas (98 S. W. 1066).....	221	Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Garrett (98 S. W. 932).....	40
Cane Belt R. Co. v. Turner (97 S. W. 1066).....	42	Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Stoy (99 S. W. 135).....	44
Carlisle v. Gibbs (98 S. W. 192).....	180	Garrett & Co. v. Josey (97 S. W. 139).....	24
Carter v. Clifton (98 S. W. 209).....	132	Gorham v. Settegast (98 S. W. 665).....	24
Causey v. Handley (98 S. W. 431).....	340	Groesbeck Cotton Oil & Compress Co. v. Oliver (97 S. W. 1092).....	30
Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Birk (99 S. W. 753).....	615	Guarantee, Savings, Loan & Investment Co. v. Mitchell (99 S. W. 156).....	16
Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Hiltbrand (99 S. W. 707).....	614	Hagan v. Snider (98 S. W. 213).....	13
Chicago, R. I. & T. R. Co. v. Williams (99 S. W. 141).....	168	Hahl & Co. v. Wickes (97 S. W. 838).....	7
City Council of City of Crockett v. Board of Trustees for Independent School Dist. of City of Crockett (98 S. W. 889).....	428	Hahn Packing Co. v. Shaw (97 S. W. 712).....	157
City of Ft. Worth v. Mansfield (99 S. W. 436).....	372	Haight & Co. v. Turner & Pierce (99 S. W. 196).....	566
City of Paris v. Cabiness (98 S. W. 925).....	587
City of Tyler v. Story (97 S. W. 856).....	250
Clement v. Clement (99 S. W. 138).....	574
Cockrell v. Walkup (99 S. W. 443).....	564

44 TEX. CIV. APP.—Cont'd.		Page
Western Union Tel. Co. v. Craige (90 S. W. 681).....	214
Western Union Tel. Co. v. Rowe (98 S. W. 228).....	84
Williams v. Barnes (99 S. W. 127).....	298

Page
Williams v. Claunch (97 S. W. 111).....	25
Wolfe v. Houston Land & Irrigation Co. (98 S. W. 1069).....	379
W. R. Morris & Co. v. Southern Shoe Co. (99 S. W. 178).....	498

VOL. 52, TEXAS CRIMINAL REPORTS.

Tex. Cr. Rep.	S. W. Rep.	Tex. Cr. Rep.	S. W. Rep.	Tex. Cr. Rep.	S. W. Rep.	Tex. Cr. Rep.	S. W. Rep.	Tex. Cr. Rep.	S. W. Rep.	Tex. Cr. Rep.	S. W. Rep.	Tex. Cr. Rep.	S. W. Rep.	Tex. Cr. Rep.	S. W. Rep.	Tex. Cr. Rep.	S. W. Rep.
Pg.	Vol.	Pg.	Vol.	Pg.	Vol.	Pg.	Vol.	Pg.	Vol.	Pg.	Vol.	Pg.	Vol.	Pg.	Vol.	Pg.	Vol.
1	104	908	103	105	791	206	106	128	311	106	392	399	107	351	465	107	839
7	104	901	105	105	1119	208	106	130	314	106	1168	402	107	383	467	107	1181
8	104	897	118	106	801	212	106	371	316	106	355	403	107	550	474	107	817
11	105	189	123	106	804	218	106	132	318	106	1158	407	107	823	475	107	835
13	105	197	131	106	508	220	106	337	321	106	365	409	107	350	477	107	842
17	105	178	133	106	785	226	106	336	323	106	361	410	108	661	480	108	693
20	105	194	137	106	496	228	106	1126	324	106	1157	412	107	314	485	107	836
21	105	179	138	106	507	231	106	135	326	106	357	417	107	354	486	107	1115
23	105	181	140	106	138	232	106	1127	327	106	384	418	107	821	488	107	829
24	105	200	149	106	144	235	106	184	331	106	359	420	107	547	491	108	678
27	105	182	151	106	792	238	106	352	332	107	855	422	107	837	493	108	689
23	105	180	153	106	820	241	106	145	336	107	540	424	107	346	499	107	837
25	105	192	154	106	143	247	106	378	342	107	55	426	108	698	500	107	1127
37	106	124	156	106	803	250	106	379	344	106	1161	429	108	686	505	108	685
41	106	185	158	106	798	255	106	389	353	106	1160	430	107	825	507	107	819
42	105	201	160	106	812	262	106	374	353	106	1160	432	107	346	508	107	824
44	105	205	162	106	793	265	106	365	355	107	59	438	107	350	510	107	845
46	105	202	164	106	796	267	106	368	357	107	353	439	107	352	513	107	819
53	105	190	166	106	136	271	106	363	359	107	832	440	108	660	514	107	829
55	105	185	167	106	821	273	106	685	360	107	838	441	107	819	516	108	667
58	105	199	169	106	817	286	106	387	361	107	831	442	108	666	519	107	849
59	106	128	173	106	1028	288	106	383	362	107	548	444	108	680	522	108	678
65	105	513	177	106	813	289	106	386	364	107	365	447	108	662	524	107	848
72	105	502	182	106	342	293	106	376	368	106	695	449	106	675	527	107	844
80	105	501	185	107	55	296	106	374	369	107	546	451	107	857	528	107	840
82	105	499	190	107	58	297	106	357	371	107	1121	452	106	687	532	109	123
84	105	791	193	106	1167	299	106	387	381	107	826	455	107	852	541	107	889
85	105	509	195	106	149	303	106	345	383	107	549	458	107	857	543	107	822
91	106	347	198	107	851	307	106	356	387	107	1116	460	107	859	544	109	193
100	106	308	201	107	52	309	107	831	398	107	348	464	107	823	545	107	858

VOL. 52, TEXAS CRIMINAL REPORTS.

	Page		Page
Abernathy v. State (105 S. W. 185).....	41	Colson v. State (105 S. W. 507).....	138
Adams v. State (105 S. W. 197).....	13	Combs v. State (108 S. W. 649).....	135
Alford v. State (108 S. W. 364).....	621	Cooper v. State (105 S. W. 1126).....	25
Anglin v. State (107 S. W. 835).....	475	Cotton v. State (105 S. W. 185).....	2
Arnold v. State (108 S. W. 666).....	429	Countryman v. State (105 S. W. 181).....	2
Bailey v. State (105 S. W. 792).....	151	Crouch v. State (107 S. W. 859).....	49
Ballentine v. State (107 S. W. 546).....	369	Cunningham v. State (108 S. W. 678).....	32
Banks v. State (105 S. W. 821).....	167	Curtis v. State (108 S. W. 380).....	67
Banks v. State (108 S. W. 693).....	480	Curtis v. State (108 S. W. 380).....	67
Barnes v. State (107 S. W. 823).....	407	Davis v. State (106 S. W. 144).....	14
Batterton v. State (107 S. W. 826).....	381	Davis v. State (107 S. W. 851).....	16
Beavers v. State (108 S. W. 682).....	598	Davis v. State (107 S. W. 855).....	12
Benge v. State (107 S. W. 831).....	361	Davis v. State (107 S. W. 828).....	12
Benton v. State (107 S. W. 838).....	360	Davis v. State (108 S. W. 667).....	12
Benton v. State (107 S. W. 837).....	422	Denny v. State (105 S. W. 798).....	15
Biddy v. State (107 S. W. 814).....	412	Denton v. State (105 S. W. 199).....	26
Black v. State (104 S. W. 897).....	8	Dodson v. State (106 S. W. 378).....	26
Blue v. State (106 S. W. 1157).....	324	Dooley v. State (108 S. W. 676).....	49
Booth v. State (108 S. W. 687).....	452	Dowd v. State (108 S. W. 389).....	50
Braumbaugh, Ex parte (105 S. W. 180).....	33	Duke v. State (Holland v. State, 105 S. W. 812).....	10
Britain v. State (105 S. W. 817).....	169	Dulin v. State (108 S. W. 696).....	42
Brooks v. State (107 S. W. 354).....	417	Earles v. State (106 S. W. 138).....	14
Brown v. State (106 S. W. 368).....	267	Elsworth v. State (104 S. W. 903).....	1
Buchanan v. State (106 S. W. 134).....	235	Fay v. State (107 S. W. 55).....	15
Buckner v. State (106 S. W. 363).....	271	Fields v. State (107 S. W. 857).....	47
Bunton v. State (108 S. W. 373).....	618	Fitzgerald v. State (106 S. W. 365).....	21
Bush v. State (107 S. W. 348).....	398	Floyd v. State (105 S. W. 791).....	15
Butler v. State (107 S. W. 840).....	528	Foster v. State (105 S. W. 498).....	15
Cagle v. State (106 S. W. 356).....	307	Frazier v. State (105 S. W. 508).....	15
Campbell v. State (106 S. W. 130).....	208	Freeman v. State (107 S. W. 1127).....	49
Caruthers v. State (107 S. W. 857).....	458	Fretwell v. State (107 S. W. 837).....	49
Cason v. State (106 S. W. 337).....	220	Garrett v. State (106 S. W. 389).....	25
Cervantes v. State (105 S. W. 499).....	82	Goad v. State (108 S. W. 680).....	41
Chancellor v. State (107 S. W. 823).....	464	Goodsoe v. State (108 S. W. 388).....	25
Choice v. State (106 S. W. 387).....	285	Gorman v. State (105 S. W. 200).....	21
Clay v. State (107 S. W. 1129).....	555
Colbert v. State (107 S. W. 1115).....	486
Collins v. State (107 S. W. 852).....	455

